tions to which his name was signed, but did truthfully answer the agent, the company which employed the agent should suffer, rather than the applicant. From the opinion in that case we quote: "It was his duty to read the application he signed. He knew that upon it the policy would be issued, if issued at all. It would introduce great uncertainty in all business transactions if a party making written proposals for a contract, with representations to induce its execution, should be allowed to show, after it had been obtained, that he did not know the contents of his proposals, and to enforce it, notwithstanding their falsity as to matters essential to its obligation and validity. Contracts could not be made or business fairly conducted if such a rule should prevail, and there is no reason why it should be applied merely to contracts of insurance. There is nothing in their nature which distinguishes them in this particular from others. But here the right is asserted to prove, not only that the assured did not make the statements contained in his answers, but that he never read the application, and to recover upon a contract obtained by representations admitted to be false, just as though they were true."

The Maier Case, 24 C. C. A. 239, 47 U. S. App. 322, 78 Fed. 566, has already been briefly referred to; and other reference to it will not be had, except to say that the contention of the plaintiff in that case was that the questions were propounded and answers written by an agent of the insurance company who knew all of the facts, but suppressed them when preparing the answers, and that hence the company was estopped from denying that it possessed the knowledge which he had. But the court held that the insured, having contracted otherwise, should be bound by his contract, in a very careful opinion written by Mr. Justice Harlan, in which he cites, among other cases, in support of the decision made, the Fletcher Case, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837. This position is followed in a carefully considered opinion by the appellate division of the first department, in Bernard v. United L. Ins. Asso. 14 App. Div. 142, 43 N. Y. Supp. 527, and by the Fourth department in Hamilton v. Fidelity Mut. L. Asso. 27 App. Div. 480, 50 N. Y. Supp. 526, and there are no later authorities in this court or in the United States Supreme Court to which our attention has been called, which are in conflict with the decisions to which reference has been made.

Appellant's counsel cites Sprague v. Holland Purchase Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 128, and Whited v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 330. The Sprague Case, the opinion in which was written by Judge Folger, who also wrote in the Rohrbach Case, is distinguishable from the latter in two respects, which will be sufficiently pointed out by taking extracts from the opinion. The first is: "Nor will the defendant's position hold, that Bowers was the agent of the plaintiff therein. There is the clause, to be sure, in the policy, that he who procures the insurance from the defendants shall be held by contract to be the agent of the plaintiff. There is, however, the other condition, hostile thereto, imposed by the defendants themselves, that the application must be made out by an authorized agent of them. And the referee finds, and so is the proof, that Bowers was the agent of the defendant." And the second extract is: "This defense of the defendant rests entirely upon the statement in the paper called the application. There is no finding of fact which permits us to call that the application of the plaintiff, and hence his warranty. There is no breach of warranty, therefore, by him, for he has made no warranty. The case is entirely without findings of fact to sustain the position of the defendants." The opinion in the Whited Case (Judge Folger again writing) distinctly approves of the Rohrbach Case, which is controlling in the case at bar. After saying that it would be fatuous to deny that Harmon was the agent of the defendant, were it not for a clause in the policy upon which the defendant builds, the opinion continues: "The clause is in this wise: That any person other than the assured, who may have procured the insurance to be taken, shall be deemed to be the agent of the assured, and not of the company, under any circumstances whatever, or in any transaction relating to this insurance. That clause we have held to be forceful in Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451, and Alexander v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 464, 23 Am. Rep. 76. We have not held it so, as yet, further than the scope of the facts in those cases. . . . That case [referring to the Rohrbach Case] dealt with matters before the issue of the policy,"—meaning thereby that the stipulation by which the plaintiff agreed that the answers were true and were made by him, and that, if written out by another, that other was his agent, and not the agent of the company, was incorporated into the application upon which the company acted in determining whether to issue a policy, in the Rohrbach Case, whereas in the Whited Case the policy was not issued on the strength of a partly written and partly printed application, and the provision as to agency was merely incorporated in the policy, which was procured through one Harmon, who countersigned it as defendant's agent. That policy was renewed twice, each renewal receipt being signed by the defendant's president, and each containing this clause: "Not valid unless countersigned by the duly authorized agent of the company." Each receipt was countersigned by Harmon, who received the premiums and forwarded them to the defendant. On applying for a third renewal, plaintiff informed Harmon that he had sold the premises, and that his interest was as mortgagee. Harmon received the premium, gave another renewal receipt, and said he would make it all right. The court held that in the renewal of the policy, not in obtaining it, Harmon was the agent for the defendant, and it was bound by his acts. If there are any other authorities in this court, which, even as a matter of first impression, appear to militate against the position taken by this court and the United States courts in the cases cited supra, they have not been brought to my attention. The Grattan Cases, 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617, and 92 N. Y. 274, 44 Am. Rep. 372, and Flynn v. Equitable L. Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 568, 34 Am. Rep. 561, and O'Brien v. Home Benefit Society, 117 N. Y. 310, 22 N. E. 954, certainly do not, for they have not even the merit of being in point. The question presented in this case was not raised in those cases, and could not have been, because in none of them did the contract contain a stipulation that the medical examiner or other representative of the company should be deemed to be the agent of the insured.

Since the foregoing was written I have found the case of Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, decided by the United States Supreme Court less than two months ago, which contains an exhaustive review of the cases both in England and this country which have grown out of attempts, through one device or another, to break down the written contract by parol evidence. In that case the attempt was made to show knowledge in the company's agent of a fact denied in the policy, and because of such agency to charge the company with knowledge. The court, in repudiating the plaintiff's contention, pays critical attention to some of the authorities in this state, and demonstrates, as I think, that both on principle and on the authority of nearly all jurisdictions in this country, as well as England, the stipulations of this contract should control.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Gray, J., concurs with Parker, Ch. J.

Rehearing denied April 1, 1902.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

James T. TAYLOR
v.

ANCHOR MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. An insurance company cannot defeat liability on its policy because of misrepresentations in the application as to the title to the property or the encumbrances thereon, if they were correctly stated to the agent and he failed to make out the application in accordance with the information given.

2. Entirety of premium in a policy im-

NOTE.—As to effect of agent's knowledge of falsity of answers in application, see the preceding case of Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. and footnote thereto.
57 L. R. A.

ceding case of Sternaman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. and footnote thereto.

surging a dwelling house and live stock as separate items, with a specified amount on each, will not prevent the policy from being severable; but a recovery may be had for loss on the house, although the policy has been avoided as to the live stock by placing encumbrances thereon, where the property is so situated that both classes are not exposed to the same risks.

(January 22, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Mills County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

Statement by McClain, J.:

Action to recover for a loss within the terms of a policy of fire insurance. Defendant relied upon misrepresentation in the application as to plaintiff's title, and encumbrance of the insured property subsequent to the making of the contract of insurance, and in violation of its terms; also that there was a failure to furnish proofs of loss. There was a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

Messrs. Sullivan & Sullivan, for appellant:

The instructions, whether right or wrong, are the law for the jury; and if the verdict is in conflict with the instructions a new trial will be granted.

Reynolds v. Keokuk, 72 Iowa, 371, 34 N. W. 167; Way v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 73 Iowa, 463, 35 N. W. 525; State v. Moore, 81 Iowa, 578, 47 N. W. 772; Fisk v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 253, 48 N. W. 1081; Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 744, 49 N. W. 77.

The court is under no obligations to instruct the jury in regard to a theory not raised by the pleadings, or claimed to be true by either party, or sustained by the testimony of any witness.

George v. Swafford, 75 Iowa, 491, 39 N. W. 804; Storrs v. Emerson, 72 Iowa, 390, 34 N. W. 176; Negley v. Cowell, 91 Iowa, 256, 59 N. W. 48.

The making of the chattel mortgage was a violation of the contract.

This policy is the contract of the parties. It is not for this court or any other person to make a different contract, so long as the contract in suit is not against public policy or against any statute of the state of Iowa.

Lee v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 79 Iowa, 379, 44 N. W. 683; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

If the policy is void in part it is void in all.

Geiss v. Franklin Ins. Co. 123 Ind. 172, 24 N. E. 99; Baldwin v. Hartford Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 422, 49 Am. Rep. 324; Gore Dist. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Samo, 2 Can. S. C. 411; Plath v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697; Bowman v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 40 Md. 620; 57 L. R. A.

Bloakley v. Niagara Dist. Mut. Ins. Co. 16 Grant Ch. 198; Barnes v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110, 81 Am. Dec. 562; Day v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 91; Gould v. York County Mut. Ins. Co. 47 Me. 403, 74 Am. Dec. 494; Kimball v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 8 Gray, 33; Lee v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 3 Gray, 583; Associated Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Assum, 5 Md. 165; Friesmuth v. Agarcam Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 587; Etina Ins. Co. v. Resh, 44 Mich. 55, 38 Am. Rep. 228, 6 N. W. 114; Gottzman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 56 Pa. 210, 94 Am. Dec. 55; Moore v. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. 28 Gratt. 508, 28 Am. Rep. 373; Bryan v. Peabody Ins. Co. 8 W. Va. 605; Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 202, 28 N. W. 555; Kahler v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 380, 76 N. W. 734.

Messrs. O. R. Patrick and Shirley Gilliland for appellee.

McClain, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The application on which the policy was issued represented that insured owned 93 acres of land, "on which the property to be insured is located," of the value of $35 per acre; that there was $900 encumbrance thereon; that he had a fee-simple title to the land "on which the above-described property to be insured is situated;" and that his title was undisputed to the property proposed for insurance; and these representations were, in the policy, warranted to be correct. The policy specifies the risk assumed as follows: "$250 on frame dwelling house; $250 on household furniture, beds, and bedding while therein; $50 on family wearing apparel therein; $25 on sewing machines while therein; $50 on silver and plated ware while therein, and family jewelry, books, pictures, picture frames; $100 on work horses, mules, and colts on premises, and against loss by lightning, at large or in use, not to exceed $75 on each; $100 on cattle on premises; $100 on grain in building; $25 on wagons, carriages, and harness." It is provided in the policy, not only that it shall be void in case of false representations in the application, or in case of change in title or possession, but also that it shall be void after any sale, conveyance, or encumbrance of the property insured, without the consent of the company.

1. It appears that the 93 acres described as the premises on which the buildings and other property insured were located consisted, in fact, of two tracts,—one of 80 acres, and another adjoining of 13 acres,—and that the property was all located on the latter of these two tracts. There was some contention as to breach of warranty with reference to the title of, and encumbrance upon, the 80-acre tract; but it is shown that the true condition of the property with reference to title and encumbrance was truly stated to the agent, and that, if the application had been made out in accordance with the information given, there would have been no falsity in the statements. Therefore no defense is made out as to the title of, or encumbrance upon, the real estate.

2. Subsequently to the issuance of the policy the insured gave a chattel mortgage on some of the cows and horses covered by the policy, and this is relied on by defendant as a breach of condition, avoiding the entire policy, and therefore preventing recovery for the loss, which was of the dwelling house and furniture therein. We may concede that the giving of the chattel mortgage was a breach of the condition of the policy as to the property covered by the mortgage, and we are therefore at once confronted with the question whether a breach of condition as to a part of the property covered by the policy will avoid the policy as to other property enumerated and covered by a separate stipulation thereof, as to the amount of the risk assumed on such property. It will be seen at once that if the house and furniture had been included in one policy, and the animals in another, a breach of the condition of the policy covering the animals would not prevent recovery under the policy covering the dwelling house and furniture; but it is contended that, where an insurance on different classes of property is effected by a policy which states a gross premium, the contract is entire, although the risks assumed on the different classes of property are distinct and separate. On this question the authorities are in hopeless confusion, and there are cases holding, without qualification, to the rule that the entirety of the premium is conclusive as to the entirety of the contract, so that a breach of condition as to one class of property will avoid the policy as to all, notwithstanding the two classes are included in separate clauses as to the amount of loss to be paid. On the other hand, there are cases in which it is held that if the risks are separately enumerated the policy is divisible, notwithstanding the entirety of the premium. We think, however, the great weight of authority at the present time is to the effect that the question is one of the intention of the parties, and that, if the condition of the property is such that the risk as to one class of property would be affected by the destruction of the other, then it must be presumed that the breach of condition as to one class is a violation of the contract also as to the other class, because the company would not have insured the one except upon the condition imposed as to the other; while, if the loss of the one class of property could not affect the risk as to the other, then it must be presumed that there was no intention that the conditions as to one should apply to the risk as to the other. In support of this construction we find the following pertinent language used by the supreme court of New York in the case of Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 452, 29 Am. Rep. 184: "When there are several subjects of insurance (as there are fourteen here), separately valued, on which a gross sum is insured, not exceeding the aggregate of that valuation, for the insurance of which a premium in gross is paid, it is easy to see what is the rate of premium on the whole valuation, and what is the amount of premium on each subject insured. This being so, it seems fanciful to say that, if the facts thus easily reached were stated in detail in the contract, it would be severable, while, not being specifically spread out, it is entire. If there were anything in the terms or nature of the particular contract, or in the circumstances of the case, or in the nature of the different subjects of the insurance, from which it was to be inferred that the insurer would not have been likely to have assumed the risk on one or several of them unless induced by the advantage and profit of having a risk on all, that would be a rational cause for deeming the contract entire. But when, for aught that appears, when, indeed, it is as likely that, the insurer would have taken a risk upon any one or any few of the subjects insured at the same rate of premium as upon the whole, and has in the policy so separated the subjects, and so singled them out by a specific valuation, as that there is no difficulty in distinguishing one of the subjects from the rest, and closing the contract as to that separately, and carrying forward the contract as to the rest, it does result that the contract is severable in practical operation, and hence in law. And so, also, that though there may have been some conduct of the insured as to some of the property, not evil in itself, but working a breach of a condition in its letter, the effect of that breach may be confined to the insurance upon that property; the contract as to that may be held avoided, and as to the other subjects held valid. There is another rule, that in construing the consideration as entire or distributed the law will be guided by a respect to general convenience and equity, and by the good sense and reasonableness of the particular case; for it must be supposed that it was the intention of the parties that such construction should take place, in the occurrence of contingencies not contemplated and provided for at the making of the contract." In Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 155, 21 N. E. 546, the court uses this language: "In this case we are unable to see how the risk on the house named in the second and third paragraphs of the answer could affect the risk on the barn or the personal property, for the destruction of which the suit was prosecuted. The risks on the different items of property named in this policy are many of them separate and distinct. It is true that the risk on the household goods in the house would be affected by whatever would affect the risk on the house; so the risk on the grain in the barn would be affected by whatever would affect the risk on the barn; but we think it impossible to conceive how the risk on the barn could affect the risk on the house, or vice versa." And it was accordingly held in another action between the same parties (Pickel v. Phenix Ins. Co. 119 Ind. 291, 21 N. E. 898) that while, under the former case, the policy should be treated as several with reference to the different buildings, it was indivisible with reference to the risk on the house and personal property contained therein, although they were enumerated under separate clauses in describing the loss to be paid; and the doctrine of these cases is reiterated by the same court in Geiss v. Franklin Ins. Co. 123 Ind. 172, 24 N. E. 89, where it was held that although different classes of personal property, involving the same risk, were separately enumerated, a breach of condition as to one would be a breach as to all. To the same effect it was held in Loomis v. Rockford Ins. Co. 77 Wis. 87, 8 L. R. A. 834, 45 N. W. 813, that, "although the insurance is distributed to the different items of insured property, the contract is indivisible if the breach of contract as to an item of the property affects, or may reasonably be supposed to affect, the other items by increasing the risk thereon." In support of the same general proposition, see Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247; Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 126, 97 Am. Dec. 325; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Crawford, 121 Ala. 258, 25 So. 912; Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Glenn, 13 Ind. App. 365, 40 N. E. 928, 41 N. E. 847. A recent case strongly supporting the proposition that the contract is indivisible, and a breach of condition as to one class of property will avoid it as to all the property covered, is Southern F. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 622, 52 L. R. A. 70, 36 S. E. 821. But it is unnecessary to elaborate by quotations from or citations of the many cases in which this question has been considered. The citations found in several of the recent cases above referred to cover the whole ground. It may be said, further, that several cases in which the courts have announced the unqualified rule that a breach of condition as to one class or item of property covered by the policy will constitute a breach of the contract as to all the property covered are cases where the different classes or items of property were so situated with reference to each other that the risk as to one constituted a risk as to all, and in these cases the same result might have been reached by adopting the rule which we have above announced as supported by the weight of authority. See, as illustration, Lee v. Howard F. Ins. Co. 3 Gray, 583; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. Williams, 26 Pa. 196; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hemilton, 82 Md. 88, 30 L. R. A. 633, 33 Atl. 429; Cuthbertson v. Carolina Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480, 2 S. E. 258. It may be noted, also, that the North Carolina court in a later case than that last cited, 67 L. & A.

although not involving the same question, has held that where the policy classifies and specifies numerous items of property, and the sums of money for which they are severally insured, the contract is not single, but severable. Pioneer Mfg. Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 110 N. C. 176, 14 S. E. 731. The question has not been fully discussed in any cases which have been decided by this court. In Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 202, 28 N. W. 555, the proposition is broadly laid down that where the premium is in gross the contract is not divisible, and a breach of warranty as to a part of the property will vitiate the policy as to the whole. But it is to be noticed that there the policy covered a barn and certain horses, and the court might well have held that the risk, so far as the horses were concerned, was involved in any risk affecting the barn; and the conclusion was therefore in accordance with the rule which we think to be the proper one, although we do not regard the reason given as satisfactory. In Kahler v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 380, 76 N. W. 734, the view expressed in the Garver Case was qualified so as to leave the way open for adopting the position which we now take. We therefore hold on this question, as involved in the case before us, that entirety of premium does not necessarily prove that the contract is indivisible, and that where it appears from the terms of the policy that distinct items or classes of property were separately insured the policy may be valid as to one item or class, although it is invalid as to another item or class by reason of breach of conditions of the policy with reference thereto, provided it appears, also, that the risk which it was intended to exclude by the condition which is broken does not apply to the other items or classes of property. In this case a chattel mortgage on the cows and horses could not in any way affect the nature of the risk as to the dwelling house and contents, and therefore we find that a breach of a condition in the policy as to the one class of property did not invalidate the insurance as to the other.

3. As to failure to furnish proofs of loss, the plaintiff relied upon a waiver contained in a letter from an officer of the company to the plaintiff with reference to an adjustment of the loss, and subsequent conduct of the adjuster with reference to the loss. Under the issues, the question of waiver was properly submitted to the jury, and their finding is conclusive upon us.

Affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

A. T. COTTRELL et al.

v.

George C. GRIFFITTS et al., Appts.

(.....Tenn.....)

Including the husband as grantee in a deed to partition to the wife her share of property in which she has an undivided interest will give him no greater interest than though the deed had been to the wife alone.

(November 23, 1901.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Chancery Appeals rendered upon appeal from a decree of the NOTE.—Effect of deed in partition, as distinguished from ordinary deeds.

- I. Deed to person other than cotenant, 332.
- II. Warranty.
 - a. In general, 333.
 - b. Implied warranty between those holding by descent, 334.
 - c. Implied warranty between those holding by purchase, 336.
- III. Estoppel to set up after-acquired title, 337.
- IV. Estates acquired by partition deed between parties holding different estates, 337.
- V. Words of inheritance as necessary to vest fee, 338.
- VI. Rights of subsequent purchasers, 338.
- VII. Changing title from descent to purchase, 339.
- VIII. Effect as revoking previous will, 339.
- IX. Failure of wife to join in deed, 340.
- X. Deed by person under disability, 340.
- XI. Execution of deed.
 - a. Deed not executed by all the parties to it, 340.
 - b. Defective execution, 340.
- XII. Effect on judgment and mortgage liens, 340.
- XIII. Parol evidence to show nature of deed, 341.

I. Deed to person other than cotenant.

In the following cases involving partition deeds between coparceners and tenants in common holding by descent, it was held that a partition deed conveys no title, but merely severs the unity of possession, and the husband or wife of a cotenant named as a grantee in the partition deed acquires thereby no greater title or interest in the property than he or she had before the partition. Palmer v. Alexander, 182 Mo. 127, 62 S. W. 691; Davis v. Davis, 46 Pa. 342; Stehman v. Huber, 21 Pa. 260; Carson v. Carson, 122 N. C. 645, 30 S. E. 4; Whitsett v. Wamack, 159 Mo. 14, 59 S. W. 961.

In another case, where, prior to the partition, one of the heirs had conveyed her undivided share to her husband, it was held that she acquired no title by reason of the fact that she, instead of her husband, was named as grantee in the partition deed executed by her husband and the cotenants. Gouldie v. Northampton Water Co. 7 Pa. 238.

In Trimble v. Reis, 87 Pa. 448, where the deed was executed to a cotenant and her husband jointly, it was held that the fact that the Chancery Court for Knox County, which judgment disallowed the claim of defendant to certain land which had been deeded to himself and wife in partition proceedings to divide her undivided interest in certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. C. Ford and Webb & McClung for appellants.

Messrs. De Armond & Ford and Green & Shields, for appellees:

At the time the deed was made to Griffiths and wife, Mrs. Griffiths already owned by inheritance a one-third interest in the lands covered by this deed, and she, not having joined in the said deed or made any other conveyance thereof, still remained grantees had agreed to pay an annuity to the widow of the ancestor in lieu of her dower did not give the husband any rights under the deed.

But in Stehman v. Huber, 21 Pa. 260, where the husband, who was named as a grantee in the deed, had paid a sum of money for equality of partition, it was held that he acquired an interest in the property to that extent.

A partition deed naming one of the tenants in common and her husband as grantees does not deprive her of exclusive title to the portion conveyed, or invest the husband with any title unless it is affirmatively shown that she made a gift to her husband of a joint interest in her share of the land. Dexter v. Billings, 110 Pa. 135, 1 Atl. 180.

In Harrison v. Ray, 108 N. C. 215, 11 L. R. A. 722, 12 S. E. 993, it was held that this is so, even though the conveyance is so made at the direction of the heir; the court saying that the grantors conveyed no part of their shares, and had no interest in the share embraced in the deed to the grantees; it belonged to the husband by conveyance from his father, and, the title being already in him, the deed merely designated his share by metes and bounds, and allotted it to be held in severalty.

A similar question was involved in Yancey v. Radford, 86 Va. 638, 10 S. E. 972, where it was held that a deed executed to a cotenant and her husband grants no estate to the husband, even though it constitutes a family settlement, and was executed with the intention of conveying to the husband his wife's share in the land, as the grantors had no title to the share granted, the title being in the wife. It was hers by descent, and the grantors could not convey it away. The wife's title could only be divested by a deed from her in the mode prescribed by law.

But in Schellinger v. Selover (N. J. Eq.) 46 Atl. 1058, where an attempt was made, after the expiration of forty years and after the death of both the cotenant and her husband, to have the husband's title declared to have been held as trustee for the wife, the court decided that the transaction must be regarded as a family settlement, and the presumption indulged in that the conveyance of the wife's share to the husband was a gift.

Some of the decisions, while reaching the same result as that attained in the above cases, are founded on different grounds, as in Rogers v. Turley, 4 Bibb, 355, where it was held that a release executed by coparceners to one of the coparceners and her husband passed no title to the husband, as a release will not pass an estate unless there exists a privity between the the owner of the one-third interest. So that at most the deed to Griffiths and wife merely conveyed a two-thirds undivided interest.

It would be a legal anomaly to hold that Mrs. Griffiths owned a one-third interest in the lands in dispute as tenant in common, while she and her husband owned the other two-thirds interest therein as tenants by the entireties; and the effect of this holding would be that she is a tenant in common in her own right with herself and her husband in their joint right.

A tenancy by entireties is created when husband and wife take an estate to themselves jointly by grant or devise or limitation of use made to them during the coverture. The essential thing is, that the title or interest is devolved upon husband and wife at the same time and during coverture.

releasor and the releasee,—that is to say, one of the estates must be so related to the other as to make but one estate in law.

And in the following cases it was held that where a partition deed is executed to the husband of one of the cotenants he holds the title in trust for his wife; the consideration of the conveyance having proceeded from the wife, and consisting of her release to the other cotenant. Weeks v. Haas, 3 Watts & S. 520, 39 Am. Dec. 89; Nichols v. Nichols, 149 Pa. 172, 24 Atl. 194. In these cases no reference was made to any of the above cases, or to the doctrine supported by them.

In *Wade v. Dera*y, 50 Cal. 376, it was held that the parties executing partition deeds do not convey to the others any portion of their own interest in the land, but merely sever the unity of possession, and that hence, where, previous to the partition, one of the parties to it had conveyed to a stranger all his right, title, and interest in and to the portion of the premises conveyed to him by the partition deeds, and was no longer a cotenant, he acquired by the deed no title or interest other than that which he had conveyed to his grantee, and that the allotment of such portion to him inured to the benefit of such grantee.

There are two cases which arrive at conclusions different from those sustained in any of the above cases, and which are based on reasoning in conflict with the doctrine that a partition deed conveys no title, though that doctrine was not discussed, and apparently not considered, in either of the cases.

One of the cases is Webb v. Nease, 66 Ark. 155, 49 S. W. 1081, where there had been a partition between two heirs, and the widow of the ancestor was named as a grantee with one of the heirs in the deed conveying his share. After her death her cognatee brought an action to reform the deed, claiming that the words of inheritance used therein were not intended to apply to her portion. The court denied this relief on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence of mistake, but held that the widow was entitled to a one-fourth, and not a one-half, interest in the land conveyed to her and her son. This was on the ground that the son had an undivided half interest in the land prior to the partition, and that all the coheirs could convey to him and his mother was the other undivided half interest.

The other case was Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17, where tenants in common, owning two separate farms, partitioned them by each taking a farm and executing a deed of his undivided half in the other farm. The deed of one of Tindell v. Tindell (Tenn. Ch. App.) 37 S. W. 1107.

The deed to Griffiths and wife did not convey title to Mrs. Griffiths, because she already owned it. This deed was simply a separation between the tenants in common of their interests, and the setting apart of the same in severalty, and it would have been good if made in parol.

Meacham v. Meacham, 91 Tenn. 535, 19 S. W. 757; Palmer v. Alexander, 162 Mo. 127, 62 S. W. 691.

Snodgrass, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question involved in this case is, What is the legal effect of a partition deed executed by two tenants in common to a third tenant, a married woman, where the deed includes the husband as joint grantee, the farms was executed to the cotenant's wife and daughter, and at his request it was held that a judgment against the cotenant, which was a lien on his undivided half at the time of the partition, did not extend to the undivided half conveyed to his wife and daughter, and that he had no title to it; the court saying that if he had voluntarily conveyed the property to his wife and daughter he could not have set the conveyance aside, and that the same rule would apply in this case where his cotenant had conveyed it to them at his request.

In Yancey v. Radford, 86 Va. 638, 10 S. E. 972, it was held that tenants in common, who have executed a partition deed to their cotenant's husband, are not thereby estopped from subsequently claiming title as heirs of the cotenant.

And the fact that a tenant in common accepted and registered a partition deed, naming his wife as grantee, did not estop his heirs from claiming title, as the deed did not convey title. Harrison v. Ray, 108 N. C. 215, 11 L. R. A. 722, 12 S. E. 993.

It was also held in the above case that it was not necessary to reform the deed by striking out the wife's name, as its insertion had no effect.

And in Carson v. Carson, 122 N. C. 645, 30 S. E. 4, it was held that where a partition deed, conveying the share of a cotenant to her husband, shows on its face that it is only a partition deed, it does not constitute color of title so as to entitle the husband to claim under it adversely to the heirs.

II. Warranty.

a. In general.

Where a partition deed contains an express covenant of warranty the law will not imply any other warranty. Rogers v. Turley, 4 Bibb, 355; Morris v. Harris, 9 Gill, 19; James v. Adams, 64 Tex. 196.

An implied warranty in partition between coparceners extends only to the parties and their privies,—that is to say, their heirs,—and does not extend to a devisee of one of the parties to the deed, so as to entitle him or his representatives to maintain an action. Weiser v. Weiser, 5 Watts, 279, 30 Am. Dec. 313.

A quitclaim partition deed by which the grantor transfers to his cotenant his share of the common property, passes with it the covenants of warranty contained in the deed under which the grantor claims title, and on failure of the title to the share so assigned, the though no agreement upon any consideration was made for such conveyance, or in fact made at all, but deed was executed under the following circumstances, and upon the facts so showing, found by the court of chancery appeals? Jesse Wells, father of Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Cottrell, and Mrs. Griffiths, was the owner of the land in controversy. He died, and it descended to these married ladies as tenants in common. Mrs. Griffiths and Mrs. Ford conveyed to Mrs. Cottrell her share of the land, and later undertook to have the remainder of the land partitioned between them. A surveyor and notary was employed to partition, and draw deeds to be executed by the parties, each to the other, for the shares so surveyed and partitioned. This was done, but in drawing the deeds, without direction from the parties, and not in accord with their intention, the notary named the husbands of the two married women as conveyees. The parties were all dissatisfied with this form of conveyance; the husbands setting up no claim of right or agreement upon any consideration, or without consideration, to have it done. The draftsman was consulted, and he said the deeds conveyed no interests to the husbands as matter of law, but that he would insert a clause removing any supposed difficulty on this point; and thereon be interlined a clause showing that the deeds were in division of the lands of Jesse Wells, deceased,—as already stated, the father of the married women attempting the partition. This was not altogether satisfactory, but they agreed to keep the deeds from record until they could take advice and look further into the matter. The husbands and wives concurred in this, and so grantee may proceed under such covenants for indemnity. Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185, 33 Am. Dec. 193.

Where the lands of two joint tenants holding with warranty are partitioned by writ under the statute of 31 Henry VIII. chap. 1, the warranty remains because by the King's writ they are compellable by statute to make partition; and the party having pursued his remedy according to the act should not be injured by its operation. But it was said that if the partition had been by deed, instead of pursuing the statute, the partition would remain as at common law, and the warranty would be gone. Morrice's Case, 6 Coke, 12.

As, at common law, a deed intended as a release between tenants in common will not pass a fee without the word "heirs," although a release between joint tenants and coparceners would pass a fee without such word, a warranty contained in such a deed becomes extinct on the death of the grantee. Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13, 57 Am. Dec. 251.

b. Implied warranty between those holding by descent.

At common law, upon a partition between coparceners there is an implied warranty that if either loses any of his share by eviction on account of defect of title in the ancestor, the party evicted may defeat the partition, or by proper proceedings may call upon his former cotenants for contribution. Dugan v. Hollins, 4 Md. Ch. 139.

In Welser v. Welser, 5 Watts, 279, 30 Am. Dec. 313, infra, where it was held that the law did not imply a warranty, the deed involved was executed by tenants in common holding under a will, so that the decision did not affect the question whether a warranty would be implied in case of partition between tenants in common holding by descent; but that question arose in the latter case of Patterson v. Lanning, 10 Watts, 135, 36 Am. Dec. 154, where it was held that by analogy the warranty implied in a voluntary partition between coparceners should be implied between tenants in common holding by descent. This was on the ground that when the law bestows an estate it provides the party with whatever may be requisite, not only to relieve him from any inconvenience which may attend his enjoying the estate, but also to secure him against any loss, so far as may be practicable, which may occur in consequence of the relief granted.

In Morris v. Harris, 9 Gill, 19, the court said that at common law a partition between coparceners had annexed to it an implied warranty that if, by defect of title in the ancestor, either loses any part or his share by eviction, the party affected may defeat the partition or obtain compensation for the part so lost. And in Maryland the same rule applies to a partition by deed between coheirs, as they are assimilated to coparceners.

Though partition deeds exchanged between cotenants holding by descent are only quitclaim deeds, there is an implied warranty that each tenant will make good to the other any loss sustained by an eviction under a superior title. Huntley v. Cline, 93 N. C. 458.

In addition to the above cases, the cases hereinafter referred to (infra, II. c), which hold that the warranty is to be implied in cases involving deeds executed by persons holding by purchase, are, of course, authority in favor of the application of the same doctrine to voluntary partitions between those holding by descent. The reasoning applied in those cases is not only equally applicable to the cases herein considered, but is reinforced by the analogy existing between parcceners and tenants in common holding by descent.

In Davidson v. Coon, 125 Ind. 497, 9 L. R. A. 584, 25 N. E. 601, the court held against the doctrine of implied warranty, saying that the rule established by the decisions of the American courts is that a voluntary partition of land made by tenants in common, although evidenced by quitclaim deeds, does not imply a warranty. Though, as the court said, the question of implied warranty was not involved, the court deciding the case on another point, and reaching the same result as though an implied warranty had been found. The court cited, in favor of its holding, the cases hereinafter referred to, in which the effect of the statutes 31 & 32 Henry VIII. are discussed, and a case in which it was held that the execution of a partition deed did not prevent the parties from subsequently setting up an after-acquired title; the court saying that the rule has been asserted in cases where there has been an attempt to estop one of the cotenants from asserting an after-acquired title.

The cases involving the latter doctrine are not authority on the question of implied warranty, as the result would have been the same even though there had been an implied warranty. In fact, some of the cases holding that a cotenant is not estopped from setting up an after-acquired title are cases in which the partition deed contained covenants of warranty. See infra, III. The theory on which these cases were decided was that, even though they the matter ended. The deeds were taken and kept by each, without registration or further action, until four days after the death of Mrs. Griffiths, which occurred on the 16th of February, 1901. The deeds were dated and put in possession of the parties on the 4th of October, 1892. There were no children born to Mr. and Mrs. Griffiths, and hence no estate by curtesy, if the partition vested no title either as tenant by the entirety or tenant in common with his wife in him. It was denied by the sisters of Mrs. Griffiths that any estate did so vest, and they insisted on their right to present possession of the land as heirs of their deceased sister. This claim was not admitted, and thereupon, on the 14th of March, 1901, they filed the bill in this cause, in connection with their husbands, to assert their right to recover the land of Griffiths, and have his claim declared a cloud on their title thereto. The answer denied their right, and insisted that the deeds were delivered or made without question, and all parties had held and claimed under them since their date to the filing of the bill.

The main contention in the proof was as to the delivery of the deeds. The court of chancery appeals found upon the facts hereinbefore partly stated, and others not necessary to more fully recite, that there was no complete, unqualified delivery, which made the deeds take effect in favor of the husbands, as it was neither so intended nor understood by them, and that they therefore took no interest. The court therefore did not pass upon the legal effect of the deeds had they been in fact unqualifiedly delivered, and without other intent of operation contain covenants of warranty, either express or implied, the covenants only extend to the title and interest owned by the parties at the time of the partition, and therefore do not prevent them from subsequently acquiring and setting up a paramount title.

The court also cited, as supporting its ruling, the cases of Dawson v. Lawrence, 13 Ohio, 546, 42 Am. Dec. 210, and Picot v. Page, 26 Mo. 422, infra, which, in fact, support the contrary doctrine. The case of Welser v. Welser, 5 Watts, 280, 30 Am. Dec. 313, supra, which was afterwards limited by Patterson v. Lanning, 10 Watts, 135, 36 Am. Dec. 154, to cases of partition between tenants holding by purchase, was also cited.

Effect of statutes 31 & 32 Henry VIII.

In Sawyers v. Cator, 8 Humph. 256, 47 Am. Dec. 608, where there had been a compulsory partition between tenants in common holding by descent, the court in holding that the statutes 31 & 32 Henry VIII. were in force in Tennessee, and that an implied warranty accompanied a partition under the statute, said that, as to a voluntary partition between such parties, they stood as they did before the statute,—that the implied warranty only attached where the partition had been compulsory. And in Welser v. Welser, 5 Watts, 279, 30 Am. Dec. 313, infra, it was held that a warranty would not be implied in the case of a voluntary partition, as the statute must be limited in its effect to cases of compulsory partition. This case was distinguished in Patterson v. Lanning, 10 Watts, 135, 36 Am. Dec. 154, supra, and limited in its effect to cases of voluntary partition between tenants in common holding by purchase.

In Morrice's Case, 6 Coke, 12, supra, the same view as to the effect of the statute was expressed, though the question of implied warranty was not involved there.

And in Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522, 18 N. W. 518, the court expressed the same opinion though the question was not involved, as the deed in that case contained express covenants. This view of the statute was not followed in Stroecker v. Housel, 3 Clark (Pa.) 379, infra, the court there holding that it applied to voluntary, as well as compulsory, partitions.

Conclusions.

From the above it will be seen that the implied warranty existing at common law on a voluntary partition between parceners has, by analogy, been applied to partition deeds between tenants in common holding by descent. The decisions are uniform on this question, 57 L. R. A.

with the exception of Davidson v. Coon, 125 Ind. 497, 9 L. R. A. 584, 25 N. E. 601, supra, and the dicta found in the cases involving the statutes 31 & 32 Henry VIII.

There are cases holding that a warranty will not be implied (infra, II. c), but they involve partition deeds executed between tenants in common holding by purchase, and, while they make no distinction between the different kinds of tenancy, they must, in view of the fact that the cases involving tenancy by descent make the distinction, be limited in their effect to partition deeds executed by tenants in common holding by purchase.

Some of the text writers have been influenced by the language of the statute 31 & 32 Henry VIII. and the dicta above noted into attempting to distinguish between voluntary and compulsory partitions; but the cases in which the question of implied warranty was actually involved will not support any such distinction. Neither can such a distinction be founded on reason so far as cases of partition between tenants in common holding by descent are concerned.

The statute 31 & 32 Henry VIII., authorizing compulsory partition between tenants in common, and giving them the benefit of the implied warranty existing at common law in favor of parceners, did not thereby exclude from the benefit of such warranty those voluntarily doing what they could have been compelled to do, pursuant to the statute. A different question would be presented had the statute expressly limited the warranty to cases of partition made pursuant to it. Ought the parties to be placed in a worse position because they voluntarily do that which the law would have compelled them to do?

The courts, in deciding questions arising out of voluntary partitions, have held that where the parties voluntarily do that which the law would have compelled them to do their acts are of the same force and effect as though done compulsorily. See infra, IX., X., XI.

The warranty is derived by analogy from that existing at common law, on a partition between parceners; and whether that warranty was implied by reason of the fact that a partition could have been compelled at law, or whether it was based on the ground that, the estate having come to the parties by an act of law, the law will relieve them from any inconvenience which may attend the enjoyment of the estate,—that is, it will permit a partition, and secure him against any loss resulting from the relief given,—is immaterial; as the analogy in either case is complete.

than that which appeared on their face. The assignment of errors raises the question that upon the facts found such delivery must be legally presumed, and defendant held to be the owner as survivor of his wife, the joint grantee, or at least to a one-half interest as tenant in common. This question need not be discussed at length. While we are satisfied with the conclusion of the court of chancery appeals that what occurred did not bind the conveyee Mrs. Griffiths to a release of her interest, in whole or in part, to her husband, yet we hold that such would not have been the effect of the deed had it been to the satisfaction of the parties, and unqualifiedly delivered. We think the proposition of law is soundly settled, in the best-reasoned cases, that partition or partition deeds between tenants in common, when they are married women, and the decree or deed includes husbands, with their wives, as decratal parties or joint conveyees, carry no other or more interest to the husband than if such decree or partition deed had been made to the wife alone. Such decree or deed only adjusts the rights of the interested parties to the possession. It makes no new title, or change in degree of title. Each does not take the allotment by purchase, but is as much seized of it by descent from the common ancestor as of the undivided share before partition. The deed of partition destroys the unity of possession, and henceforth each holds her share in severalty; but such deed confers no new title or additional estate in the land, or, we may add, less estate than that descended. The title being already in her, the deed merely designated her share by metes and bounds, and allotted it to be held in severalty. Whitsett v. Wamack, 159 Mo. 14, 59 S. W. 961, and authorities cited. This being the law, it makes no difference whether deed of partition was made to Mr. and Mrs. Griffiths, or to her alone, or, if made to both, was in fact delivered, as the result would have been the same, so far as the rights of both or either were concerned. The husband could, under such deed, take no more interest than he could under one made to his wife alone.

It follows that in any event the decree of the Court of Chancery Appeals, holding that complainants were entitled to the relief sought, is correct, and it is affirmed, with cost.

c. Implied warranty between those holding by purchase.

In James v. Adams, 64 Tex. 196, where the tenants in common held by purchase, it was decided that on a partition by deed between them, a covenant of general warranty would be implied; the statutes having abolished the common-law distinction between estates held by joint tenants, tenants in common, and parceners, and given them the rights and remedies which appertain to parceners at common law.

An implied warranty accompanies a partition deed, which at least estops each tenant from evicting the other by adverse title, and binds him to repartition in case of such eviction by a stranger. Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Dana, 321, 28 Am. Dec. 74; Picot v. Pate, 26 Mo. 398.

In Dawson v. Lawrence, 13 Ohio, 543, 42 Am. Dec. 210, the tenants in common had exchanged deeds of bargain, sale, and release, whereby they divided between them the lands held in common. Subsequently a third person established his right to a portion of the undivided interest previously claimed by one of the grantors in the partition deeds. It was claimed that the deeds were positive, affirmative conveyances by which each grantor transferred his title to the other, and that each grantee must stand the loss arising from a defect in his grantor's title. But the court held that, notwithstanding the form of the deed and its recital of a nominal money consideration, it merely operated as a partition deed, and neither party acquired any better title in the part allotted to him than he previously had to his undivided share; that the cotenant whose original title was defective must stand the loss, and not the cotenant to whom he had conveyed.

But in Beardsley v. Knight, 10 Vt. 185, 33 Am. Dec. 193, it was held that where cotenants for the purpose of partition convey to each other specific portions in the land, the partition is not invalidated by failure of title on the part of one of the grantors, and the loss must fall on the grantee. In so holding, the court said that in the old law of exchange something similar to the right claimed did exist, but that that species of conveyance resulting from the feudal tenures never existed in Vermont. And he inferentially limited the doctrine of implied warranty to partition deeds as distinguished from mutual deeds executed by each tenant and conveying specific portions of the land; saying that the division of estates in Vermont has not been by partition, but that the usual method of division has been that adopted in the present case, viz., by deeds from each to the other of his portion; that if a cotenant recognizes another as his cotenant, and exchanges quitclaim deeds of partition with him, there is no reason why such deeds should be treated differently from other conveyances, in the absence of fraud.

And in Welser v. Welser, 5 Watts, 279, 30 Am. Dec. 813, it was held that a warranty would not be implied in case of a voluntary partition, the court saying that if the statute of 31 Henry VIII., giving to tenants in common the right to compel partition, can be considered as annexing to a partition an implied warranty such as exists in the case of coparceners, it would be limited to partitions made pursuant to statute, and would not extend to voluntary deeds executed by the tenants in common.

In Morrice's Case, 6 Coke, 12, supra, and in Sawyers v. Cator, 8 Humph. 256, 47 Am. Dec. 608, supra, the court took the same view of the statute, though the question involved here was not in issue in those cases.

And in Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522, 18 N. W. 518, where the deed contained covenants of warranty, the court said that the statute only applied to compulsory partitions, and that, in the absence of express covenants, the parties are without relief.

And in Patterson v. Lanning, 10 Watts, 135, 36 Am. Dec. 154, where it was held that there was an implied warranty annexed to a partition deed between tenants in common holding by descent, the same as between coparceners, Kennedy, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, distinguished between tenants in common holding by descent and those holding by purchase, saying that when the law bestows an estate it provides the party with whatever may be requisite, not only to relieve him from any inconvenience which may attend his enjoying the estate, but also to secure him against any loss, as far as may be practicable, which may occur in consequence of the relief granted; whereas in an estate acquired by purchase the law leaves the party to seek relief from such inconvenience as shall be necessarily incident to his purchase by his own exertion or act, and in doing so to provide, if he wishes it, against any future loss which may occur to him from the relief which he has gained. Thus, for instance, the common law enabled a coparcener to compel a partition of the land, but in the case of joint tenants or tenants in common, they, having become such by their own act, could not compel a partition. It was competent for them, however, to make partition by agreement, but if they did so the law would not imply a warranty of title, as it would in the case of parceners who became vested of their title to land by right of law.

As will be seen from the above cases, the doctrine of implied warranty as applied to the voluntary execution of partition deeds between those holding by purchase is not so free from doubt as when applied to cases arising out of such partitions between those holding by descent. Some of the cases hold that such a warranty exists, while others, distinguishing between those holding by descent and purchase, hold that the warranty is not to be implied in cases of the latter class.

III. Estoppel to set up after-acquired title.

Where a partition deed merely divides the property between the tenants in common so that they thereafter hold in severalty the portions allotted to each, and does not purport to convey anything, the grantors are not thereby estopped from claiming under an after-acquired title. Townsend v. Outten, 95 Va. 536, 28 S. E. 958.

As a partition deed does not confer upon the grantee any greater title to the portion allotted to him than he had in the undivided estate, a clause of warranty contained in the deed will not by estoppel confer any greater title. Chace v. Gregg, 88 Tex. 552, 32 S. W. 520.

A partition deed executed by tenants in common, conveying only their interest in the land, does not estop them from afterward claiming a portion of such land as heirs of one of the cotenants. Carson v. Carson, 122 N. C. 645, 30 S. E. 4.

A covenant in a partition deed wherein the tenant agrees to warrant and forever defend said premises does not estop him from claiming under an after-acquired title, where the deed only purports to convey all his estate, right, title, and interest in the premises, and contains no description whatever of any particular interest owned or possessed by him; this is on the ground that the warranty is coextensive with the grant, and binds only the vested interest of the grantor at the time. White v. Brocaw, 14 Ohio St. 339.

A partition deed containing a qualified covenant wherein the parties covenant that each shall hold his share in severalty, free and discharged of all right, title, or claim of the others, does not estop either of the parties from subsequently acquiring a paramount title held at the time of the partition by a third person, as such covenant only applies to the title and interest which the parties had in the premises at the time of the partition. Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray, 328, 66 Am. Dec. 369.

Where a tenant in common held her share of an estate in fee on the condition that upon her death without issue the share was to go to her cotenant, or his heirs in case of his death, such cotenant's heirs are not estopped from claiming the land upon her death without issue, by the fact that their father, the cotenant, had previously executed a partition deed conveying to her her share of the estate in fee with warranty, as the children, taking the property as heirs of the original testator, and not as heirs of the cotenant, are not bound by his warranty. Chace v. Gregg, 88 Tex. 552, 32 S. W. 520.

But where the tenant at the time of executing the partition deed containing covenants of warranty had no title, having previously conveyed his interest to another, he is estopped from afterwards claiming under a title acquired by a reconveyance from such grantee. Rountree v. Denson, 59 Wis. 522, 18 N. W. 518.

And, in Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Dana, 321, 28 Am. Dec. 74, it was held that a tenant in common cannot, after the execution of partition deeds between such tenants, purchase an outstanding title for the purpose of using it against his former cotenant. This was on the ground that an implied warranty accompanies a partition deed, and that the parties to it cannot afterwards assert an adverse title for the purpose of ousting the other from the portion allotted to him.

And in Tewksbury v. Provizzo, 12 Cal. 20, it was held that where cotenants execute a partition deed, each receiving a several portion of the common estate, the deed, founded as it is upon mutual releases, is such an affirmation of interest in title on the part of each as to estop him from afterwards denying such interest and disputing his grantee's title or claiming under a title paramount to that which he conveyed.

IV. Estates acquired by partition deed between parties holding different estates.

Where a tenant in common owning an estate in fee in a moiety of the common property, and a contingent remainder in fee in the other moiety, entered into a partition, by the execution of partition deeds, with the other tenant, who owned a conditional estate in fee in the other moiety, no new title or estate was created thereby, and the other tenant held the portion set apart to her in the partition under the same condition that she had held the undivided moiety. Chace v. Gregg, 88 Tex. 552, 32 S. W. 520.

But in Re Coates Street, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 12, where the tenants in common held under a devise to them, share and share alike, with a limitation over to the surviving heirs in case of the death of either of them without issue, it was held that they might, by their deed of partition, release and discharge their respective purparts of the limitation imposed by the law; and, upon their so doing, each would take title in fee simple to his share.

And in Snyder v. Grandstaff, 96 Va. 473, 31 S. E. 647, where the parties, holding under a similar devise, executed a partition deed which recited the provisions of the will and expressed a desire to vest exclusive title to the parcels of land allotted to the several parties, it was held that the deed conveyed an absolute title, and the right of survivorship passed under it. In this case the court said that the cases which hold that a partition deed should not be so strictly construed as other deeds were decided prior to the Code, at a time when the law permitted partition to be made by parol, and, no deed being necessary, the title vested, not by operation of the deed, but by the original grant; and that subsequently, when the Code made a deed necessary, the reason no longer existed.

In Buxton v. Uxbridge, 10 Met. 87, where two tenants in common, one owning an undivided estate in fee and the other an estate tail, made partition, the court held that the partition could not bind the heir in tail, and that consequently the tenant in tail took an estate in fee in an undivided half only of the portion conveyed to him by his cotenant, who, in return, took but a life estate in an undivided half of the premises conveyed to him. It would seem from this decision that where tenants in common, holding different estates in the common property, make partition, neither can impress the character of his estate on more than an undivided half of the portion conveyed by him.

In Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 516, the question involved was whether the marital rights of the husband in his wife's property, as fixed by the common law at the time his wife acquired the property, were lost by his joining in a deed to a trustee for the purpose of partitioning the land held by them in common, and the court held that whatever interest the husband had passed by the deed to the trustee, and that when the title to the share allotted to the wife became again vested in her, his rights accrued under the law as it then stood. The court, in so holding, said that the decisions which hold that no new title is created by a partition apply to partition proceedings, and do not affect a deliberate conveyance by the parties,—especially where there is an independent consideration for such conveyances, as in this case, where the wife released her inchoate right of dower in the land conveyed to the husband.

Where a husband of a tenant in common joins in a partition deed, he is not thereby estopped from afterwards claiming a right of way over the land owned by him at the time of the partition, as the deed does not affect rights held by him independent of a title under which the partition was made. Bauer v. Lohr, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 427, 8 Am. Law Rec. 426.

Where tenants in common made partition of their lands, and executed to each other releases in fee, and at the time of such partition one of the tenants had but a life estate in her portion of the property so that her grantee took but a life estate in the portion allotted to him, her conveyance of the portion allotted to her amounts to a confirmation of the partition, and estops her from making any claim to the premises allotted to her cotenant. Baker v. Lorillard, 4 N. Y. 257.

Where a husband owning a parcel of land adjoining the tract owned by his wife and another as coparceners joins his wife in a partition deed which includes the parcel owned by him, and which parcel is by the deed transferred to him and his wife jointly as a portion of her share, so that they take by entirety, the husband is thereby estopped from afterwards claiming such parcel of land under his original title, and his wife and he become joint tenants in it. And upon his death she takes the entirety, and his heirs are likewise estopped. Simmons v. Logan, 1 Harr. (Del.) 110.

Where a legacy is made a charge on land of which the legatee was also a residuary devisee, the lien of the legacy becomes merged in his title as owner, and upon his executing a partition deed the lien of the legacy passes with it, and he cannot, after waiting twenty years, during which the rights of innocent purchasers have intervened, invoke the doctrine that equity will not suffer a merger to take place where injustice would result. Davidson v. Coon, 125 Ind. 497, 9 L. R. A. 584, 25 N. E. 601.

V. Words of inheritance as necessary to vest fee.

While the case of McKinney v. Stacks, 6 57 L. R. A.

Heisk. 286, was not strictly one of partition, but related to a conveyance from one cotenant to the other of the grantor's undivided interest in the land, it did involve the nature of the relation existing between them and the necessity for the use of the word "heirs" in the conveyance from one to the other for the purpose of passing a title in fee. The court held that while coparceners could convey from one to the other a title in fee without using words of inheritance, such could not be done by tenants in common, and that the statute of Tennessee made those holding by descent tenants in common, and not coparceners. Hence, the conveyance from one tenant to the other of his undivided interest in the land without words of inheritance passed only a life estate.

In Rector v. Waugh, 17 Mo. 13, 57 Am. Dec. 251, it was held that a partition deed between tenants in common did not pass the fee without words of inheritance.

Where tenants in common made partition by one releasing to the other all his right in the western half of the land, together with the right of digging and carrying off the plaster from the quarries on the eastern half, and the other releasing to him all his right in the eastern half of the land, except the plaster therein, it was held that under the deed the one to whom the western half of the land was conveyed did not part with his right as owner in fee of the plaster in the eastern half, and that such right on his death vested in his heirs, though no words of inheritance were used in the exception. Prince of Wales Coal Co. v. Osman, 22 N. B. Rep. 115.

VI. Rights of subsequent purchasers.

Where cotenants execute mutual releases for the purpose of partition, one of which is executed to the husband of the cotenant, it cannot operate as a release, as there is not the proper privity between the parties; but where there is a pecuniary consideration stated in it, it becomes, in substance, a deed of bargain and sale, and it is not sufficient to give notice to a purchaser from the grantee named therein that it is a partition deed, and such purchaser takes an absolute estate. Weeks v. Haas, 3 Watts & S. 520, 39 Am. Dec. 39.

In Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974, where the partition deed was executed to the cotenant and her husband, the court held that the grantee from the husband took no title. The partition deed expressed a money consideration, and did not show upon its face to have been a partition deed. On the question of the rights of the husband's grantee as a bona fide purchaser the court said, in referring to the hardship cast upon him by the decision, that the hardship would be greater if the wife and her heirs were to be deprived of the land simply because such purchaser chose to take a conveyance of it without sufficiently investigating the title; that the recorded partition deed did not help him, as that was no conveyance at all. The court further called attention to the fact that there was no record title in the cotenants who executed the partition deed, they having taken by descent, saying that that was sufficient to have put the purchaser on inquiry.

But in Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 152, 12 N. E. 439, the tenants in common holding by descent had exchanged quitclaim deeds for the purpose of partitioning the land, and the deed to one of the tenants was executed to her and her husband jointly and showed a money consideration, and did not show upon its face that it was executed for purposes of partition. The court held that the record of the deed would not bring home to a grantee from the husband notice of any latent equity of the wife independent of her rights as joint grantee with her husband, and that such a grantee, having no other knowledge, was justified in relying upon evidence furnished by the records, and was entitled to be protected to the extent of the husband's undivided moiety in the parcel conveyed to himself and wife.

Where mutual deeds of bargain, sale, and release executed between tenants in common recite their common ownership in the land conveyed, and that the purpose of their execution is a partition, their character as partition deeds is not destroyed, even as against a subsequent purchaser, by the fact that they recite a nominal money consideration, and such purchaser acquires no different title than that possessed by his vendor. Dawson v. Lawrence, 13 Ohio, 546, 42 Am. Dec. 210.

In Buxton v. Uxbridge, 10 Met. 87, where, after a partition by deed between tenants in common, one holding an estate in fee and the other an estate tail, the tenant in fee conveyed the portion assigned him, it was held that the heir in tail could not affirm the partition, and upon the death of the tenant in tail claim the premises so conveyed as against the purchaser, but that he would be restricted to an undivided half of the premises.

VII. Changing title from descent to purchase.

A partition deed executed by tenants in common, holding by descent, does not change the grantee's title from that of descent to one of purchase, so as to change the course of descent, and on the death of the grantee intestate such of his heirs as are not of the blood of his ancestor are excluded. Conkling v. Brown, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 348, 57 Barb. 265; Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974; Smith v. Carver, 36 Ohio L. J. 189; Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 51 N. E. 967.

The principle embodied in these cases is well stated in Doe ex dem. Crosthwaite v. Dixon, 5 Ad. & El. 834, 1 Nev. & P. 255, 2 Har. & W. 364, where one of two parceners alienated his share in the realty, and subsequently the alienee and the other coparcener executed a deed of partition. In this case it was admitted that if the partition had been between the parceners themselves the descent would not have been broken, but it was claimed that, inasmuch as one of the parties to the deed was a stranger in blood, whatever was taken must be taken by purchase. But the court, speaking through Lord Denman, Ch. J., said that nothing was taken by the parcener from the alienee under the deed, the effect of which was only that the parcener had by it a divided moiety in severalty discharged from any right in the alienee, instead of an undivided moiety in common. He had the same estate in the land as before.

The case of Wilson v. Hall, 6 Ohio C. C. 570, is apparently in conflict with the above cases. The opinion is somewhat obscure, saying that, under the facts of the case, the question is settled by Brower v. Hunt, 18 Ohio St. 312, without stating all the facts. The Brower case did not relate to the effect of a partition deed: the question involved there was whether the parties trading with each other the parcels assigned them by the partition took the portion received on the exchange by descent or purchase. If the facts in the Wilson Case are in accord with those presented in the Brower Case, the decision is not in point, and does not conflict with the other cases on this question. If, in fact, it was the partition deed that was being considered, then the decision must be considered as overruled by the later case of Car- ter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 51 N. E. 967, supra, where it was held by the supreme court of Ohio that a partition deed between tenants in common holding by descent does not change their title to that of purchase.
57 L. R. A.

In Hershizer v. Florence, 39 Ohio St. 516, 525, a case relating to the separate property of a married woman, the question involved was whether the marital rights of the husband in the wife's property should be governed by the common law in force at the time of her inheritance of an undivided interest in the property, or by the statutes in operation at the time of the partition, whereby her share of the property was conveyed to her; it being claimed that she acquired no new title by the partition, and that the common law in force at the time of her inheritance should govern. The court held against such contention upon the ground that the conveyance to the wife was based upon an independent consideration, she having released her inchoate right of dower in the remainder of the land, and that the rights of the husband must be determined under the law as it stood at the time of the conveyance to her under the partition.

VIII. Effect as revoking previous will.

In the following cases it was held that a deed executed solely for the purpose of partition was an exception to the common-law rule that a conveyance of land operated as a revocation of a former will devising the land conveyed, even though the title was reinvested in the grantor by the same conveyance. Swift ex dem. Neale v. Roberts, 3 Burr. 1490, Amb. 617, 1 W. Bl. 467; Barton v. Croxall, Tamlyn, 164, 7 L. J. Ch. 188; Risley v. Baltinglass, T. Raym. 240.

In Luther v. Kidby, 3 P. Wm. 169n, 8 Vin. Abr. 148, it was certified by the judges of the King's bench, to whom the case had been sent for their opinion, that a will made by a tenant in common, devising his undivided moiety, is not revoked by a subsequent partition between the cotenants. But in Tickner v. Tickner, cited in 3 Atk. 742, where one of the parceners in gavelkind, being possessed of an undivided moiety, executed with his coparcener a deed of partition by which the gavelkind estate which he had devised was allotted entirely to him to such uses as he should appoint by deed or writing, and in default of such appointment to him in fee, it was held that the deed amounted to a revocation of the will. This case was distinguished by the Lord Chancellor in Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. Jr. 256, 264, on the ground that the object of the Luther Case was a mere partition; while in the Tickner Case the deed accomplished more than a mere partition, and affected the nature of the estate conveyed.

In Atty. Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. Jr. 281, where the question was not as to the effect of a partition, but whether an exchange of land devised worked a revocation, the Lord Chancellor said, in speaking of partition cases, that they are to be considered as special in their nature. Each party can compel the other to make partition; the estate is the same, enjoyed afterwards in a different quality and in another mode. And upon a principle compounded a little of these two reasons it had been established that a partition deed does not revoke a prior will provided nothing more is done than mere partition. That it had been long established that if the object is to do anything beyond the partition, it will be a revocation; and it is tried by the fact, whether the act demonstrates any intention to go beyond the mere partition; and, notwithstanding the expression of the judges in some of the reports that Luther

v. Kidby, 3 P. Wms. 169n, 8 Vin. Abr. 148, and Tickner v. Tickner, cited in 3 Atk. 742, cannot stand together, they have stood together, and are perfectly reconcilable.

This distinction was recognized in Grant v. Bridger, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 377, L. R. 8 Eq. 347, 15 Week. Rep. 610, where the deed which went beyond that of a simple partition extinguishing various rights of pasturage in common, and providing for the construction of roads, ditches, and fences, was held to have worked a revocation of a prior will of one of the cotenants devising his interest in the land.

In Duffel v. Burton, 4 Harr. (Del.) 290, 295, one of the tenants in common made a will devising his undivided moiety in the estate, and subsequently instituted proceedings for partition; and, it being determined that the land could not be divided without prejudice and injury, the entire tract was set off to him at a fixed valuation, he covenanting to pay his co-heirs their proportionate share. The court held that these proceedings did not produce a revocation of the will, although the devisee could not take more than the undivided moiety devised to him. The court in this case charged the jury that partition proceedings effect the same object as a partition deed between the parties, and that each tenant holds in severalty the estate which he before held in common; and that this mere severance of possession will not revoke a prior will.

And in Knollys v. Alcock, 5 Ves. Jr. 648, it was held that where a tenant in common in several separate parcels of land entered into a partition with her cotenant and conveyed to her one of the entire tracts of land as her share, she thereby revoked a will devising her undivided interest in that tract of land.

IX. Failure of wife to join in deed.

In the following cases it was held that inasmuch as partition is an absolute right, to which inchoate dower rights are subordinate, and it can be compelled by law, a partition deed is valid where the partition is just and equal, even though not executed by the wife of the tenant, her dower rights being thereby transferred to the portion assigned to the husband. Huntington v. Huntington, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 182; Napper v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 791, 53 S. W. 28; Totten v. Stuyvesant, 3 Edw. Ch. 503; Potter v. Wheeler, 13 Mass. 506.

But in Rauk v. Hanna, 6 Ind. 20, where a tenant in common conveyed his undivided interest in the land to a third person without his wife's joining in the deed, it was held that on a subsequent partition between the husband's grantee and the other tenant, her right to dower was not restricted to the portion set off to such grantee.

And in Mosher v. Mosher, 32 Me. 414, where one tenant in common was indebted to the other at the time they executed deeds of partition, and for the purpose of paying the indebtedness conveyed to him a greater share of the estate than he would otherwise have been entitled to, it was held that such partition did not restrict the widow of either tenant to dower to the share assigned or conveyed to her husband, as a partition to have such effect must be equal and unaffected by extraneous considerations.

X. Deed by person under disability.

In the following cases it was held that the execution of a partition deed by a tenant in common is not an alienation of the land within the meaning of a statute prohibiting a widow under subsequent coverture from alienating 57 L. R. A.

land inherited from her former husband. Mickels v. Ellsesser, 149 Ind. 415, 49 N. E. 373; Bumgardner v. Edwards, 85 Ind. 117.

In Mickels v. Ellsesser, 149 Ind. 415, 49 N. E. 373, it was held that a partition deed made by a cotenant during coverture will be upheld as binding when fairly and equally made, and free from fraud, as parties may voluntarily do that which the law would have compelled them to do had an action been brought for that purpose.

To the same effect was Amey v. Cockey, 73 Md. 297, 20 Atl. 1071, where the court refused to disturb a partition deed in the absence of evidence to impeach its fairness and equality, although one of the parties was, at the time of executing it, under the disability of infancy and coverture.

In Ernst v. Zerbe, 2 Legal Chron. 129, it was held that a partition among heirs is not a conveyance of real estate within the meaning of the statute requiring the husband of a feme covert to join in a conveyance of her real estate.

A voluntary partition creates no new or additional title, and the restrictions of a statute prohibiting a widow during subsequent coverture from alienating the land acquired from her deceased husband, applies with the same force to the share in such land conveyed to her by her cotenant on the partition, as it did to her undivided share prior to the partition. Mickels v. Ellsesser, 149 Ind. 415, 49 N. E. 373.

Deed between husband and wife.

A partition deed executed between a husband and wife is void. Frissell v. Rozler, 19 Mo. 448.

XI. Execution of deed.

a. Deed not executed by all the parties to it.

A partition deed is not binding upon any of the parties to it unless executed by all of them. Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 Pac. 418; Tewksbury v. O'Connell, 21 Cal. 60; Stuart v. Baker, 17 Tex. 417.

And the fact that the parties who neglected to execute it have so acted in relation to the property since the partition as to estop them from denying it will not validate it so as to make it enforceable against those who executed the deed. Tewksbury v. O'Connell, 21 Cal. 60.

b. Defective execution.

In a Texas case it was held that, a parol partition being valid, a partition deed executed by a married woman is valid, though not properly acknowledged by her. Ikard v. Thompson, 51 Tex. 235, 16 S. W. 1019.

The reasoning in the above case would apply to all partition deeds executed in those states which hold a parol partition to be valid.

And where one of the cotenants is a married woman, a partition deed executed by her is valid, when followed by possession in severalty, though no certificate of the privy examination of such wife is annexed to the deed. Bryan v. Stump, 8 Gratt. 241, 56 Am. Dec. 139.

In Rhoad's Estate, 3 Rawle, 420, where it was held that a partition deed executed by a feme covert is binding without a separate examination and acknowledgment, the decision was on the ground that, had the partition been made by proceedings in court, the wife would not have been a necessary party, as in such proceedings the order is made on a petition by the husband in right of his wife.

XII. Effect on judgment and mortgage liens.

Where one holding a mortgage on an undivided half interest in a tract of land joins with his mortgagor in a partition deed, for the purpose of releasing the portion conveyed to the mortgagor's cotenant from the lien of the mortgage, he does not thereby discharge any part of the mortgagor's estate from the mortgage, but the lien attaches to the entire portion set off to the mortgagor. Torrey v. Cook, 116 Mass. 163; Bradley v. Fuller, 23 Pick. 1.

In Port v. Parfit, 4 Wash. 369, 30 Pac. 328, it was held that a provision of the Code, that where lands are partitioned by judicial proceedings a lien on the undivided interest is thereby transferred to the share assigned to the one holding such interest, applies to a case where the partition is by act of the parties.

In the absence of fraud the mortgagee of the undivided share of a tenant in common in realty is bound by a partition deed executed by the cotenants, and his mortgage follows the separation, and attaches to the share allotted to the mortgagor. Long's Appeal, 77 Pa. 151.

The lien of a judgment upon the undivided share of a tenant in common in land is not affected by a voluntary partition of the land. In this case an attempt was made to apply to the lien of the judgment the rule applicable to the inchoate right of the wife to dower in partitioned lands. Emson v. Polhemus, 28 N. J. Eq. 439.

In Sharpe v. Davis, 76 Ind. 17, where tenants in common in two separate farms located in different counties partitioned the same by each taking a farm, one tenant conveying to the other his undivided half interest in the farm allotted to his cotenant, while that tenant conveyed his undivided half interest in the other farm to the wife and daughter of his cotenant, the court held that a judgment recovered against the husband, and which was a lien upon his undivided half interest at the time of the partition, did not attach to the undivided half conveyed to his wife and daughter. This was on the ground that the tenant took no title under the deed, but that the title vested in his wife and daughter. As to the soundness of this ruling, see supra, I.

XIII. Parol evidence to show nature of deed.

Where a partition deed to one of the tenants in common, conveying his share of the estate, recites a money consideration, evidence is admissible to show that in fact no money was paid, and that the deed was merely for the purpose of dividing the land. Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 51 N. E. 967.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a deed which is apparently an absolute one is, in reality, a partition deed between coparceners, as such a deed is not a conveyance within the meaning of the rule declaring that the declarations of a grantee in an absolute deed are not admissible for the purpose of showing an estate less than a fee. Dooley v. Baynes, 86 Va. 644, 10 S. E. 974. C. W. P.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

John DRINKALL, Respt.,
v.
MOVIUS STATE BANK, Appt.

(.....N. D.....)

- *1. A cashier's check, being merely a bill of exchange drawn by a bank upon itself, and accepted in advance by the act of its issuance, is not subject to countermand, like an ordinary check, and the relations of the parties to such an instrument are analogous to those of the parties to a negotiable promissory note payable on demand.
2. Both under elementary principles of the law of contracts and by the provisions of § 59 of chapter 100 of the Civil Code (Rev. Codes 1899), the title of an indorser of a negotiable note is defective when the consideration for the indorsement is unlawful, or where the indorsement is procured by unlawful means.
3. Payment of a negotiable instrument, to effect a discharge, must be made to the rightful holder or his authorized agent; but the mere possession of such an instrument indorsed by the payee in blank is prima facie evidence of the holder's right to demand and receive payment, and payment

*Headnotes by YOUNG, J.

NOTE.—For another case holding that cashier's check is a negotiable instrument, see Henry v. Allen (N. Y.) 36 L. R. A. 658.

As to effect of cashier's check to give preference to depositor in funds in hands of receiver, see Clark v. Chicago Title & T. Co. (Ill.) 53 L. R. A. 232.

As to right to recover on gambling contracts, 57 L. R. A.

to such holder will discharge the instrument, when made in good faith, and in ignorance of facts which impair the holder's title.

4. Under the statutes of this state gambling is expressly prohibited. It is accordingly held, that the indorsement and delivery of a cashier's check by the payee to a gambler in payment for chips to be used in a gambling game does not make such gambler a holder in due course, and his title so acquired is defective.
5. The rule that courts of law and equity will leave the parties to prohibited transactions where their unlawful acts have placed them, so far as the same are executed, does not authorize an indorsee who has procured the indorsement of a negotiable instrument in a gambling transaction to rely upon the indorsement so procured, either against the indorser or the maker of the instrument. Neither will it prevent the payee of the instrument which has been so indorsed from enforcing payment against the maker, for the obvious reason that the contract which the latter enforces is not tainted with the unlawful transaction.
6. The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover on a cashier's check issued to him by the defendant which check he indorsed and delivered to a gambler in payment for chips to be used in playing a roulette wheel. The check was thereafter paid to the gambler by the defendant. We find there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the jury that the defendant had notice of the defect in the gambler's title prior to making such payment, and therefore hold that it was not error for the trial court to overrule defendant's motion for a new trial, based upon the insufficiency of the evidence as to notice.

see, in this series, Sprague v. Warren (Neb.) 3 L. R. A. 679, and note; Harvey v. Merrill (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 200; Snoddy v. American Nat. Bank (Tenn.) 7 L. R. A. 705; Jackson v. City Nat. Bank (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 657; White v. Wilson (Ky.) 37 L. R. A. 197; Olson v. Sawyer Goodman Co. (Wis.) 53 L. R. A. 648; and Appleton v. Maxwell (N. M.) 55 L. R. A. 93.

(October 26, 1901.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Richland County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a cashier's check issued by defendant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Purcell & Bradley, for appellant:

It was plaintiff's duty to disclose to the bank every reason known to him for asking the bank to refuse to pay the check, and if he did not do so, and the bank would have been bound not to pay the check if he had done so, plaintiff is suffering the result of his own laches and neglect.

Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471; Hatch v. White, 22 Pick. 518; Lamphere v. Cowen, 42 Vt. 175.

The burden of proof was on him to show that Maxwell was not a bona fide holder.

Penn Bank v. Frankish, 91 Pa. 339.

The cashier's check in controversy is a bill of exchange drawn by the drawer upon itself, and this is equivalent to acceptance.

1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 444; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 288; 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, 588; Hassey v. White Pigeon Beet Sugar Co. 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 193; Cunningham v. Wardwell, 12 Me. 406.

A bank issuing a cashier's check has accepted it in advance, and is liable to pay it to the payee, or to any person to whom the payee has transferred it by indorsement.

Byles, Bills, 198; Chitty, Bills, 347; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 452; Thornton v. Dick, 4 Esp. 270; Andressen v. First Nat. Bank, 1 McCrary, 252.

It stood on the same basis as a certified check.

Morse, Banks & Banking, § 399.

The contract which arose in the gambling transaction and upon which the rights of the parties to this action must be determined was an executed, and not an unexecuted, contract.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 824, note 3.

If the contract is still executory, the promisor is left undisturbed in the possession of the money or other property which he agreed to pay or transfer; if the contract is executed, the promisee is left undisturbed in the possession of the money or other property which has been paid or transferred to him.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 939; Myers v. Meinrath, 101 Mass. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 368; Kerr v. Birnie, 25 Ark. 225; Ager v. Duncan, 50 Cal. 325; Houell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 176, 46 57 L. R. A.

Am. Dec. 415; Morris v. Philpot, 11 Ind. 447; Nudd v. Burnett, 14 Ind. 25; Dumont v. Dufore, 27 Ind. 263; Worcester v. Eaton, 11 Mass. 368; Clarke v. Omaha & S. W. R. Co. 5 Neb. 314; Blystone v. Blystone, 51 Pa. 373; Hill v. Freeman, 73 Ala. 200, 49 Am. Rep. 48; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Leveroos v. Reis, 52 Minn. 259, 53 N. W. 1155; Reed v. Bond, 96 Mich. 134, 55 N. W. 619; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203; Cowles v. Raguet, 14 Ohio, 38; Thomas v. Cronise, 16 Ohio, 54.

On petition for rehearing.

Neither party to an illegal contract will be aided by the courts either to set it aside or to enforce it.

Rosenbaum v. Hayes, 10 N. D. 311, 86 N. W. 973; Reed v. Bond, 96 Mich. 134, 55 N. W. 619; Jackson ex dem. Malin v. Garnsey, 16 Johns. 189; Ager v. Duncan, 50 Cal. 325; Ybarra v. Lorenzana, 53 Cal. 197.

Messrs. Freerks & Freerks, for respondent:

The bare indorsement or assignment of the check did not operate as an assignment of the $200 in funds against which it was drawn, in the bank's possession.

2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1623.

Not operating as an assignment of the funds, the indorsement and delivery of the paper delivered nothing of value, until the money was paid thereon by the bank, and the contract in this sense was executory.

Rev. Code, § 3919.

While in an intoxicated condition the plaintiff was induced to gamble, and to indorse and deliver the check in question to Maxwell, for gambling chips received and lost to the amount of $200. This transaction was wholly void, being against the statutes of this state, and against public morals, and entirely without legal consideration, and his right of action against the defendant was not affected thereby.

Rev. Codes, 3873.

Wagering contracts are void.

Dows v. Glaspel, 4 N. D. 251, 60 N. W. 60.

The courts, being established to conserve the law, good morals, and the due order of society, cannot lend their aid to parties conspiring to impede these objects. Therefore, a consideration immoral, illegal, or contrary to public policy, will not support a contract.

Widoe v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 431, 5 Am. Rep. 664; Stoutenburg v. Lybrand, 13 Ohio St. 228; Stornburg v. Bouman, 103 Mass. 325; Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455; Hennessey v. Hill, 52 Ill. 281; Ives v. Bosley, 35 Md. 262, 6 Am. Rep. 411; Harwood v. Knapper, 50 Mo. 456; Porter v. Jones, 52 Mo. 399.

All contracts which provide that anything shall be done which is distinctly prohibited by law, or morality, or public policy, are void.

2 Parsons, Contr. p. 746; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 50, 26 L. ed. 347.

If money has been paid, or goods have been delivered, under an unlawful contract, which remains in other respects executory, the party paying the money or delivering the goods may repudiate the transaction, and recover back his money or goods. The action is then founded, not upon the unlawful agreement, but upon its disaffirmance.

Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U. S. 50, 26 L. ed. 347; Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 23; Jennings v. Reynolds, 4 Kan. 110; Reynolds v. McKinney, 4 Kan. 94, 89 Am. Dec. 602; Cleveland v. Wolff, 7 Kan. 185; 2 Parsons, Contr. p. 139; Stacy v. Foss, 19 Me. 335, 36 Am. Dec. 755; Tarleton v. Baker, 18 Vt. 9, 44 Am. Dec. 358; Wheeler v. Spencer, 15 Conn. 28; Moore v. Trippe, 20 N. J. L. 263; McAllister v. Hoffman, 16 Serg. & R. 147, 16 Am. Dec. 556; Forrest v. Hart, 7 N. C. (3 Murph.) 458; Wood v. Wood, 7 N. C. (3 Murph.) 172; Bates v. Lancaster, 10 Humph. 134, 51 Am. Dec. 696; Perkins v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. 288; Shackleford v. Ward, 3 Ala. 37, 36 Am. Dec. 435; Wood v. Duncan, 9 Port. (Ala.) 227; Jeffrey v. Ficklin, 3 Ark. 227, 36 Am. Dec. 456; Humphreys v. Magee, 13 Mo. 435; Barrett v. Neill, Wright (Ohio) 472; Morgan v. Groff, 4 Barb. 527.

Young, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in the action, John Drinkall, seeks to recover from the defendant, the Movius State Bank, a state banking corporation organized under the banking laws of this state, and doing business in the village of Lidgerwood, the sum of $200 and interest, as due and unpaid, on a certain cashier's check or certificate of deposit issued by the defendant to the plaintiff on the 18th day of December, 1899. The defense interposed is payment to the holder and owner thereof in due course of business. The case was tried to a jury, and a verdict returned for plaintiff for the full amount claimed. Defendant moved for a new trial. This was denied, and judgment was entered on the verdict. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and assigns for review in this court the same errors which were relied upon in the trial court in its motion for a new trial.

The complaint, in substance, alleges that on the 18th day of December, 1899, the plaintiff deposited with the defendant bank in Lidgerwood the sum of $200; that the defendant issued therefor and delivered to plaintiff its certificate of deposit or cashier's check, dated on that day, and payable to plaintiff on demand; that on the 30th day of December thereafter he duly demanded of defendant the payment of the sum of $200 represented by said certificate of deposit or cashier's check; that defendant refused, and still refuses, to pay the same, and has not paid the same, or any part thereof. The complaint further alleges that after receiving said check, and on the same day, he went to the place of business of Ralph Maxwell and William Van Dorn, in Lidgerwood, where he became intoxicated, and while so intoxicated he was induced by said Maxwell and Van Dorn to gamble and take part in a game of chance played by means of an instrument known as a "roulette wheel;" that he played at said game of chance, and wagered large sums of money thereon; that for the purpose of playing the same he was induced to indorse and did indorse the check in question, and delivered the same to the said Maxwell for the purpose of paying money lost by plaintiff, and claimed to have been won by said Maxwell and Van Dorn, in said gambling transaction; that on the following day, to wit, December 19, 1899, and prior to the presentation of said check to defendant for payment, the plaintiff notified the defendant of the facts in reference to the loss of said check and of the possession thereof by Maxwell and Van Dorn, and instructed said defendant not to pay the same when presented. The answer admits the deposit of the money by plaintiff, and the issuance of the cashier's check as alleged in the complaint, but by a denial places in issue the facts as to the loss and notice of loss of the check alleged in the complaint, and alleges that "said cashier's check was, on or about the 19th day of December, 1899, presented to the defendant in the usual course of business for payment, by the then holder and owner of said check, properly indorsed by the signature of plaintiff upon the back of said check, and was, by said defendant, in the usual course of business, paid to the holder of said check." This appeal presents for review the order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, which involves a consideration of the grounds upon which the motion was based. The errors specified in the statement of case on which the motion was made are eighteen in number. They need not be discussed separately. So far as they are important to a review of the order denying the motion for a new trial they are disposed of by our conclusion on the questions which we shall hereafter discuss.

Before taking up the consideration of the questions presented by the assignments of error, a brief statement of facts is necessary. It is established by undisputed evidence that on the 18th day of December, 1899, the plaintiff, Drinkall, deposited in the defendant bank in Lidgerwood the sum of $200, and received therefor the cashier's check in suit, which check was signed by the assistant cashier of the bank, drawn on said bank, and made payable in terms to the plaintiff. Thereafter, and in the evening of the same day, Drinkall went to a gambling house in Lidgerwood, which was operated by Ralph Maxwell and William Van Dorn, which is known in the record as "Maxwell's Blind Pig," where he drank sufficient liquor to render him intoxicated, and while so intoxicated he was invited into a rear room in the building by Van Dorn, and there engaged in the gambling game operated by the gambling device known as a "roulette wheel." When he entered their place of business, he had in his possession $28 in money and the cashier's check in question. During the progress of the game he exchanged his ready cash for chips, and when they were exhausted, which was at about 11 o'clock P. M., at the request of Van Dorn, he signed his name upon the back of the check in question, and delivered the same to said Maxwell in exchange for more chips and some money to be used in playing said game. At 2 o'clock in the morning Drinkall was without money, check, or chips. The wheel was stopped, and Drinkall, whose condition was unsteady from frequent libations during the progress of the game, was, at Maxwell's request, given another drink, and led upstairs, and put to bed. Before doing this, Maxwell had him again write his name on the check, his former signature not being satisfactory. On the morning of the 19th, Maxwell presented the check at the bank's office, duly indorsed by himself, and the same was paid in full by the defendant. As to the foregoing facts there is no controversy. They establish the deposit by plaintiff, the issuance to him of the check in question, the transfer of the check by indorsement to Maxwell and Van Dorn in a gambling transaction, and the payment of the same to said Maxwell by the defendant.

One of appellant's contentions is that "the evidence is insufficient to show that the bank had knowledge or notice of sufficient facts to put it on inquiry as to the invalidity of plaintiff's indorsement of the cashier's check or of the illegality or insufficiency of the consideration upon which such indorsement was made," and that, therefore, it was error to deny the motion for a new trial on this ground alone. Before referring to the evidence as to notice to the defendant, it is important to determine the legal rights and obligations of the parties to the instrument, and with that end in view we will consider in order (1) the character of the cashier's check upon which the plaintiff bases his cause of action; (2) the legal effect of the indorsement made in the gambling transaction, and (3) the duty of the defendant as to payment of the cashier's check.

A cashier's check, so called, differs radically from an ordinary check. The latter is merely a bill of exchange drawn by an individual on a bank, payable on demand; or, in other words, it is an order upon a bank purporting to be drawn upon a deposit of funds, for the payment of a certain sum of money to a person named, or to order or bearer, on demand. As between himself and the bank, the drawer of the check has the power of countermanding his order of payment at any time before the bank has paid it, or committed itself to pay it. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1079, and cases cited. When the check, however, is certified by the bank, the power of revocation by the drawer ceases, and the bank becomes the debtor. 1 Morse, Banks & Banking, §§ 398, 399. A cashier's check is of an entirely different nature. It is a bill of exchange, drawn by the bank upon itself, and is accepted by the act of issuance; and, of course, the right of countermand, as applied to ordinary checks, does not exist as 57 L. R. A.

to it. 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 588; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 444; 1 Parsons, Notes & Bills, 288. The bank, in such case, is the debtor, and its obligation to pay the cashier's check is like that of the maker of any other negotiable instrument payable on demand. As applied to the case under consideration, the rights and obligations of the plaintiff and defendant as to the cashier's check in question were those of a payee and maker of a negotiable promissory note payable on demand.

What was the legal effect of plaintiff's indorsement, being based upon a gambling transaction? The solution of this question, under the authorities, is difficult, by reason of the difference in statutes on the subject, and also because of the conflict in the common law, both in England and the United States. At early common law in England, gambling contracts, when fair and free from cheating, were assumed by the courts, without discussion, to be valid. Later the courts were disinclined to entertain actions based on gambling contracts; but still later they returned to the original rule that such contracts were valid and actionable, excepting therefrom, however, certain classes of wagering contracts. In the United States, in a number of the states it is held that the common law of England upon gambling contracts is unsuited to the conditions and institutions, and that all gambling contracts are void by their common law. In others it is held that the English statutes against gambling passed prior to the American Revolution are in force in their jurisdiction as common law, or as adopted by statute in general terms. Still another class of states hold that the common law of England on the subject of gambling contracts is in force, and that gambling contracts not of the forbidden classes are valid, and enforceable by their common law. See cases cited in 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 586-590. In Illinois, under the peculiar statute of that state, it has been held that an indorsement of commercial paper on a gambling consideration is void, and, although in the hands of an innocent holder for value, the legal consequence of such an indorsement is of no more effect than a forged indorsement (Chapin v. Duke, 57 Ill. 295, 11 Am. Rep. 15); and the property in the instrument remains in the payee unaffected by such indorsement (Commercial Nat. Bank v. Spaid, 8 Ill. App. 493). So, also, under the statutes of Mississippi declaring all gambling contracts utterly void, the maker of a note payable to an individual named or bearer, when sued by another than the party named as payee, may successfully defend by showing that the plaintiff won the note on a wager. Holman v. Ringo, 36 Miss. 690; McAuley v. Mardis, Walk. (Miss.) 307; Adams v. Rowan, 8 Smedes & M. 624; Lucas v. Waul, 12 Smedes & M. 157; Martin v. Terrell, 12 Smedes & M. 571; Smither v. Keys, 30 Miss. 179. The same is true under the Iowa statute, and a promissory note so given is void even in the hands of an innocent holder for value. Traders' Bank v. Alsop, 64 Iowa, 97, 19 N. W. 863. See also Conklin v. Roberts, 36 Conn. 461; Suinn v. Edwards, 8 Wyo. 54, 55 Pac. 306. In this state there is no statute declaring in express terms that all contracts in furtherance of gambling are void, as in the above states. But gaming itself is made unlawful by chapter 37 of the Penal Code (Rev. Codes 1899), which chapter, in its prohibitions, extends to the game at which the plaintiff herein lost the check in suit. It is entirely clear, and, indeed, it is not controverted, that the transaction in which the indorsement of the note by plaintiff to Maxwell was made was one prohibited by express law, and that the consideration for such indorsement was illegal. Of what legal effect, then, we may ask, was the indorsement? Did it have the effect of transferring the check to Maxwell as to an innocent purchaser, and enable him to legally enforce payment from defendant, notwithstanding the unlawful means by which the possession and indorsement were obtained? Defendant's counsel contend that it did have such effect, and that, had the defendant refused to pay him, it could, under the law, have been compelled to do so, even though it had notice of the entire gambling transaction. This contention we cannot sustain. It is not, however, without specious reason and respectable authority to support it. The well-settled rule of law and equity is invoked by the defendant, In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, under which neither party to an illegal contract may be aided by the courts, either to set it aside or enforce it; or, as was said in Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio, 400, 22 Am. Dec. 759: "Whenever an agreement appears to be illegal, immoral, or against public policy, a court of justice leaves the parties as it finds them; if the agreement be executed, the court will not rescind it; if executory, the court will not aid in its execution." And in Atwood v. Fisk, 101 Mass. 363, 100 Am. Dec. 124: "It will not recognize a right of action founded on the illegal contract in favor of either party against the other." This court had occasion to apply the rule to a Sunday transaction, which was alleged to have been illegal, in Rosenbaum v. Hayes, 10 N. D. 311, 86 N. W. 973, and we there held that, so far as the transaction was executed, the law leaves the parties where their unlawful acts have placed them. In addition to the cases cited in the opinion in that case, see also, Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203; Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Knoultton, 103 U. S. 49, 26 L. ed. 347; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 145 U. S. 393, 36 L. ed. 748, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 953, 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 999. Under the same authorities, and for the same reasons, so far as it is executory, the contract is not enforceable. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 939. It is contended that the indorsement and delivery of the check in this case was an executed transaction, and that, accordingly, under the foregoing rule, the plaintiff lost all of his rights in the check, and that Maxwell acquired the same. In support of this position counsel for appellant cite Reed v. Bond, 96 Mich. 134, 55 N. W. 619, and Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203. Reed v. Bond is similar to the case at bar, and is squarely in point, and upholds counsel's view. It rests, however, upon the declaration that the gaming contract was fully executed. The unsoundness of this contention lies in the assumption that the contract of indorsement was valid and complete. "An indorsement is a written contract, the terms of which, though usually omitted for the convenience of commerce, are certain, fixed, and definite, and not the less perfectly understood because not expressed in words." It, "like any other written promise or agreement, requires two things besides the mere writing to constitute a contract, viz., a delivery and a consideration," and "the delivery and the consideration are always open to impeachment" (4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 485, 487, and cases cited); and the general rule that parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict, vary, or add to a written contract does not preclude the admissibility of such evidence to show the illegality of a contract. In such case the evidence is not admitted to vary or control the contract, but to show that in contemplation of law, in consequence of the proven illegality, no contract at all ever had any existence; that it was void ab initio." And it is further held that "when the defendant does not set up the defense of illegality, but such illegality appears from the case as made by either the plaintiff or the defendant, it becomes the duty of the court sua sponte to refuse to entertain the action." 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1015, and notes; Johnson v. Williard, 83 Wis. 420, 53 N. W. 776. It is clearly the plain policy of the law not to extend aid to either party to an unlawful transaction, and to refuse to recognize rights or entertain actions which arise from acts which are under its condemnation.

Does the application of these principles to the facts of this case make Maxwell an indorsee in due course, and clothe him with all of the rights of a good-faith purchaser for value? A negative answer to this question must be given. In the first place, the contract of indorsement was defective, and subject to impeachment, by reason of the admitted illegality of the consideration,—this upon elementary principles of the law of contracts. The defective indorsement did not, in our opinion, constitute a contract to which the principle invoked could apply. It is clear that Maxwell could not successfully maintain an action against the plaintiff upon the indorsement; and it would seem that the courts would not aid him to enforce payment from defendant for the sufficient reason that his right of action would arise out of the indorsement made in the unlawful gambling transaction. On the other hand, plaintiff is not seeking the aid of the court in this action to enforce a gambling contract, or of any right growing out of the indorsement, but is merely attempting to enforce the defendant's promise to him contained in the cashier's check, which is not tainted by any illegality whatever. His cause of action does not arise in the gambling transaction; whereas the defense of payment, which is relied upon to defeat a recovery by plaintiff, rests entirely upon an affirmation of the transfer of the check in the gambling transaction, for on no other ground could Maxwell, after notice, have the right to receive or enforce payment. As has been already stated, the courts will not recognize and enforce rights arising on illgotten title. Kirkpatrick v. Clark, 132 Ill. 342, 8 L. R. A. 511, 24 N. E. 71; Miller v. Marckle, 21 Ill. 152; Riedle v. Mulhausen, 20 Ill. App. 68; Cochran v. Strong, 44 Ga. 636; Southern Exp. Co. v. Duffey, 48 Ga. 358. On principle therefore, we have reached the conclusion that the title, rights, and possession of the check by Maxwell, under the facts as they appear, are directly analogous to those of the finder of a lost note which has been indorsed by the payee, or of such an instrument in the hands of one who has stolen it. Prima facie, every holder of a negotiable instrument is deemed a holder in due course, both under the law merchant and under the statute of this state. See § 59 of chapter 100 of the Civil Code (Rev. Codes 1899), which is the chapter governing negotiable instruments executed after July 1, 1899; 2 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 730; Million v. Ohnsorg, 10 Mo. App. 432. And "the mere possession of a negotiable instrument which is payable to the order of the payee, and is indorsed by him in blank, or of a negotiable instrument payable to bearer, is in itself sufficient evidence of his right to present it, and to demand payment thereof. And payment to such person will always be valid, unless he is known to the payor to have acquired possession wrongfully." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 573, and cases cited in notes. If any doubt could exist as to the correctness of our conclusion that Maxwell's title to the check was imperfect, and the contract of indorsement legally unenforceable either against the indorsee or the payor, it is set at rest by § 55 of the act above referred to, which reads as follows: "The title of a person who negotiates an instrument is defective within the meaning of this act when he obtained the instrument, or any signature thereto, by fraud, duress, or force and fear or other unlawful means, or for an illegal consideration, or when he negotiates it in breach of faith, or under such circumstances as amount to a fraud." The above statute was in force when the transaction in question took place, and is controlling. Under said section Maxwell's title was defective for two reasons: First, he procured the signature of plaintiff by unlawful means; and, second, he obtained the check for an illegal consideration. Further, the fact is established that he was not a holder in due course, and had not the rights of such a holder, for the reason that he did not take the instrument in good faith and for value, which is one of the requirements to render a holder a holder in due course under § 52 of the chapter above referred to.

The rule as to the payment and discharge of negotiable instruments is that payment of the bill or note must be made to the rightful holder or his authorized agent. "In general, a payment is valid as against other parties when made in good faith, and in ignorance of all facts which impair the holder's title. . . . If . . . payment is made to one who holds under a blank indorsement, his possession will be presumptive evidence of his title and right to receive the money. Anyone in possession is entitled prima facie to receive payment of a note payable to bearer, or to 'A., or bearer.' If it is so payable, even a payment made in good faith to a thief or finder who is in actual possession will be good. . . . But a payment made through negligence to one who is neither the rightful holder nor a bona fide purchaser before maturity, after notice of loss, will not be sufficient." 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1444, and cases cited. And the same author says in § 1467 that, "if . . . the indorsement is for an illegal consideration, such as a gambling debt [and that is this case], payment made to the indorsee after notice of that fact will be of no avail as against the indorser;" citing Commercial Nat. Bank v. Spaid, 8 Ill. App. 493, and Wheeler v. Winn, 38 Vt. 122. Under the above doctrine, which appeals to us as both just and sound, it is apparent that the defense of payment to Maxwell, the indorsee,—which is the only defense in the case,—turns entirely upon the question as to whether such payment was made in good faith, and without notice of the defect in Maxwell's title; for, as before stated, payment by the maker to a party who claims to be a bona fide holder is not sufficient to protect the maker against the claim of the real owner, when made after notice. Bainbridge v. Louisville, 83 Ky. 285.

The remaining question relates to the sufficiency of the evidence as to defendant's notice. The jury found that the defendant had notice, and the trial court refused to grant a new trial upon the ground of the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain such finding. Our inquiry is limited to ascertaining whether there is any legal evidence in the record fairly tending to sustain this finding. "Under an established rule of practice, this court will not ordinarily disturb a verdict upon a question of mere fact, where there is substantial evidence upon which the verdict may rest." Heyrock v. McKenzie, 8 N. D. 601, 80 N. W. 762; Taylor v. Jones, 3 N. D. 235, 55 N. W. 593; Black v. Walker, 7 N. D. 414, 75 N. W. 787; also, Flath v. Casselman, 10 N. D. 419, 87 N. W. 988. We find the evidence contained in the record sufficient to support the finding of the jury on this point. It discloses that plaintiff went to defendant's place of business in the morning of the 19th, —the next day after he had made the deposit,—and before the bank opened for the day. Maxwell and Mr. Movius, the president of the bank, were then on the inside of the building. After entering, the plaintiff called Maxwell aside, and tried to induce him to return the check, or all or a part of the money, telling him that he had made him sign the check, and had practically stolen it. Maxwell refused. The paying teller's window was opened just at this time, and Maxwell stepped up, and presented the check to Nellie Sanders, the paying teller, for payment. The plaintiff said to her: "Madam, I cancel that check. I don't want you to pay it." Plaintiff testifies: "When I demanded the cancelation of the check, she took the check, and asked if that was my name, and I said, 'Yes,' and she said . . . I would have to go and see Mr. Movius. . . . I went and called him, and he came out, and she had paid the money to Maxwell, and he was going out the door. I asked him [Movius] why that money was paid, and he said, 'Because your name was on the back; and I said, 'I shall have to try and get that money back.' 'Well,' he said, 'you go ahead, and find a way to get it back.'" Nellie Sanders, in narrating the circumstances under which the payment was made, says: "Mr. Maxwell came in a little before nine in the morning. The outside door was open. We had not yet opened the curtain. E. A. Movius, the president of the bank, came in, and told Miss Movius [the assistant cashier] that she had better open up; that it was not quite nine, but she had better open up, as he thought Ralph Maxwell wanted something. . . . As soon as the curtain was up, Maxwell pushed the check through the cashier's window. It was already indorsed by himself and John Drinkall. . . . I turned, and took up the signature book, to see that it was properly indorsed, and as I did so Maxwell said: 'It is all right. I have indorsed it. I am good for it.' Drinkall stood right by Maxwell, and said, before it was paid, 'I demand it canceled.' Maxwell replied, 'That is all right.' After seeing that the signature was correct, I proceeded to count out the money. While I was doing this, Drinkall several times said, 'I demand it canceled.' To each such statement Maxwell replied, 'That is all right,' or some such answer. I supposed he was talking to Maxwell, and because he was under the influence of liquor I paid less attention to him. Maxwell said to him, 'You can go and see Emil' (meaning Movius). He was in the private office. He went in there, and when he returned I had paid the check to Maxwell." E. A. Movius testifies in part: "After the bank had opened, Drinkall and Maxwell were standing together in the office. I don't know what they were talking about. As soon as Drinkall came in, he said to me, 'I want that canceled;' and I said, 'What do you want canceled?' and he said, 'I want that check or money.' . . . I stepped out to him, and Maxwell was standing in front of the bank window, and had the money counted. . . . I said, 'Is that your signature on the back?' and he said, 'Yes.' 'Well,' I said, 'I don't know how I can help you. It is paid;' and I passed it back." There is other testimony in the record going more into the details of payment, but that above quoted is sufficient for the purpose of this decision. We have reached the conclusion that the facts as detailed were sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that defendant had notice of the defect in Maxwell's title, and to make its act in paying the check to him an act of bad faith. Section 5113, Rev. Codes, provides that "every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself." The plaintiff had deposited this money only the day before. Movius admits that he knew Maxwell conducted a gambling establishment. It appears that he ordered the bank opened before the regular time to accommodate Maxwell, and, further, that the check was paid to Maxwell in open defiance of the plaintiff's personal and repeated protests against its payment to him. These facts and circumstances might well be held by the jury to be sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to how Maxwell had obtained the check, and that an inquiry made with reasonable diligence would have disclosed the entire transaction is entirely apparent. A simple inquiry by the bank's officers for his reasons for demanding that Maxwell should not be paid would have made known the specific defect in the latter's title.

But we are also of opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain a finding by the jury that defendant had not only constructive notice, but actual notice, that plaintiff, and not Maxwell, was the owner of the note, and entitled to payment. It is true, the language he used, "I cancel that check; I don't want you to pay it," would be more appropriate to a countermand by the maker of a check, in which case the language would be strictly within the legal right of the party countermanding payment. But in considering the question of notice we are not controlled by the technical language used. The question here is whether Drinkall brought home to the bank knowledge of Maxwell's defective title before it parted with its money. We are constrained to hold the evidence sufficient for that purpose. The language of his demand, when taken in connection with the other circumstances, would fairly mean that plaintiff claimed that he, and not Maxwell, was the owner of the check. Prima facie, Maxwell was entitled to receive payment; but when his title was challenged by the plaintiff, as it was, the defendant paid it at the peril of having to pay the rightful owner.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

All concur.

Wallin, Ch. J.:

I concur in the result. Upon the question of notice to the bank, I am of the opinion that there was competent evidence tending to show notice, and that the question of notice was properly submitted to the jury.

Petition for rehearing denied January 18, 1902.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania to Use of City of TITUSVILLE

v.

L. S. CLARK, Appt.

(195 Pa. 634.)

1. The exemption of real-estate dealers and contractors, whose business does not amount to $1,000 per annum, from the operation of an ordinance imposing a license tax for the privilege of transacting business is unconstitutional and void as class legislation, where such contractors and dealers are classified with other persons effecting sales, to whom a similar exemption is not allowed.
2. The unconstitutionality of a portion of an ordinance does not render the entire ordinance void. The unconstitutional part falls, but the act stands.
3. The provision in an ordinance requiring a license tax from all dealers or vendors of merchandise, that no manufacturer who is a citizen of the municipality shall be considered a dealer or vendor unless he sells goods not of his own manufacture, is a proper classification and a valid exercise of legislative power.
4. An ordinance authorizing a license tax for revenue purposes, which classifies the different subjects of taxation according to the amount of business transacted, providing a graduated rate for the various classes, and which places wholesalers in a separate class from retailers, and imposes on them a lower rate, is not in violation of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., or Pa. Const. art. 9, § 1, providing that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, where no discrimination is made between the different members of the same class.

(May 7, 1900.)

NOTE.—For another case in this series similar to the one above, holding that classification of dealers into wholesalers and retailers and the imposition of taxes on these classes at different rates does not constitute an unconstitutional discrimination, see Kniesly v. Cotterel (Pa.) 50 L. R. A. 86.

As to necessity of uniformity in license or privilege tax generally, see Chaddock v. Day (Mich.) 4 L. R. A. 809, and note; Simrall v. Covington (Ky.) 9 L. R. A. 556; Magenau v. Fremont (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786; Sayre v. Phillips (Pa.) 16 L. R. A. 49; Ex parte Williams (Tex. Crim. App.) 21 L. R. A. 783; Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (Colo.) 29 L. R. A. 808; Ottumwa v. Zekind (Iowa) 29 L. R. A. 734; State ex rel. Tol v. French (Mont.) 30 L. R. A. 415, 57 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court affirming a judgment of the Quarter Sessions for Crawford County convicting him of violation of a municipal ordinance requiring him to procure a license to carry on the grocery business. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court of Quarter Sessions, which was as follows:

"By agreement of counsel this case is tried upon a case stated for the opinion of the court in the nature of a special verdict. The city of Titusville is, and has been since 1876, a city of the third class, and on June 25, 1888, the legislative body of the said city duly and regularly passed, and the mayor of said city duly approved of, the ordinance by virtue of which the license tax under consideration is imposed. The ordinance was evidently enacted by virtue of the unconstitutional act of May 24, 1887, but the municipal actions had under and based upon said act were legally ratified by the act of May 13, 1889. Melick v. Williamsport, 162 Pa. 408, 29 Atl. 917; Chester v. Pennell, 169 Pa. 300, 32 Atl. 408. Nor is there any contention of the parties upon this point, but defendant denies the legality of the ordinance upon two grounds, viz.: First, because certain of the merchants and business men of Titusville are exempt from any taxation whatever; and, second, the tax imposed is not uniform, and the classification adopted is prohibited by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The tax imposed, being authorized by cl. 4, § 3, art. 5, of the act of May 23, 1889, is for general revenue purposes, and by virtue of the general taxing powers of the municipality, and not through or by virtue of its police powers. Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 173, 33 Atl. 544; Oil City v. Oil City Trust Co. 151 Pa. 459, 25 Atl. 124. Section 3 of the ordinance classifies those who make and effect annual sales of divers amounts. Section 4 provides 'that contractors whose business and real estate agents whose sales exceed $1,000 per annum, shall be classified and rated as provided for in § 3 of this ordinance, and shall pay a license according to said section.' By § 3 no exemption is allowed to persons doing an annual business of less than $1,000, and, as contractors and real-estate agents are otherwise classified with the persons making and effecting sales, to thus exempt a part of the class doing an annual business of less than $1,000 and impose a tax upon others belonging to the same class is clearly violative of §§ 1 and 2, art. 9, of the Constitution of this commonwealth. Com. v. Germania Brewing Co. 145 Pa. 84, 22 Atl. 240; Com. v. Sharon Coal Co. 164 Pa. 305, 30 Atl. 127, 128; Fox's Appeal, 112 Pa. 337, 4 Atl. 149; Pittsburgh v. Coyle, 165 Pa. 64, 30 Atl. 452. This exemption is class legislation, which is forbidden by the Constitution, and not in any way or under any guise to be tolerated. This portion of the ordinance must fall, but this defect alone does not render the entire ordinance void. As was said by our supreme court in Fox's Appeal, 112 Pa. 337, 4 Atl. 149, in declaring unconstitutional that part of the act of 1885 which excepted from taxation notes or bills for work or labor done: 'But for this vice we are not required to declare the act of 1885 void. The 2d section of article 9 of the Constitution provides: "All laws exempting property from taxation, other than the property above enumerated shall be void." The exemption of "notes or bills for work or labor done" is void under this provision, and drops out of the act of 1885. The exception falls, but the act stands. It will be the duty of the assessors to assess and return such bills or notes the same as other moneyed securities in the hands of individuals.' Section 16 of said ordinance provides 'that no manufacturer who is a citizen of the city of Titusville shall be considered a dealer or vender of merchandise within the spirit of this ordinance unless he sells goods not of his own manufacture.' We think that distinguishing such persons from the ones classified in said ordinance is a valid exercise of the power of the legislative body of said city. We can readily understand how and why manufacturers who regularly have taxable capital invested in a plant, and whose chief item of profit consists in converting the raw material into the finished product, should not be classified with vendors of merchandise, whose chief capital consists of their stock in trade, and whose profits are derived from selling at retail at an advanced price over that of the wholesale purchase. If the entire classification in this ordinance rested on as good, valid, and reasonable grounds as does this distinction or classification, if we may so term it, we would see little to complain of. Whether or not the merchant tailors, tinsmiths, or tombstone dealers referred to in the case stated come under the manufacturers provided for by § 16 need not now be decided, nor need we decide in this action the rights of defendant against the city for a failure of its officials to enforce the ordinance against others who may properly come under its provisions. Even were the said 16th section unconstitutional and void, we do not think that would invalidate the entire ordinance. Fox's Appeal, 112 Pa. 337, 4 Atl. 149.

with note on limit of amount of license fees: Carrollton v. Bazsette (Ill.) 31 L. R. A. 522; Re Haskell (Cal.) 32 L. R. A. 527; State v. Harrington (Vt.) 34 L. R. A. 100; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright (Ga.) 35 L. R. A. 497; Banta v. Chicago (Ill.) 40 L. R. A. 611; State v. Gardner (Ohio) 41 L. R. A. 689; Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Montgomery Fire Department (Ala.) 42 L. R. A. 468; Fleetwood v. Read (Wash.) 47 L. R. A. 205; Lasher v. People (Ill.) 47 L. R. A. 802; State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 48 L. R. A. 266; Williams v. Fears (Ga.) 50 L. R. A. 086; Stull v. De Mattos (Wash.) 51 L. R. A. 892; Harrodsburg v. Renfro (Ky.) 51 L. R. A. 897; and State v. Willingham (Wyo.) 52 L. R. A. 198.

57 L. R. A.

"Let us, then, examine the second objection to the validity of this ordinance, and, bearing in mind that it is a tax levied for general revenue purposes, determine whether the taxes levied by virtue thereof, and under the classification therein adopted, are forbidden by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, or whether they lack that uniformity imposed by the Constitution of this commonwealth. The said amendment provides: 'Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.' It is true, as urged, that the equal protection of the laws herein enjoined is a pledge of the protection of equal laws (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 369, 30 L. ed. 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064); but it does not forbid a classification of persons or property for various purposes, nor enjoin upon the legislative authorities the impossible duty of making the same or equal laws for the several classes. It does compel the equal application of the laws to all members of the same class, allowing classification, which should be based upon reasonable grounds, and is not a mere arbitrary selection. Gulf, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 165, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. Such classification is not only allowed, but it is recognized as necessary, in order that uniformity and equality of taxation, and of the just adaptation of property to its burdens, may be accomplished. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Indiana, 165 U. S. 304, 41 L. ed. 725, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 351, 35 L. ed. 1039, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250. In all cases where classification for purposes of taxation has been recognized, it has been held that the requirements of the Federal Constitution have been fulfilled if the rates, though different for separate classes, operate uniformly on each class. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 164, sub nom. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 24 L. ed. 94; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Com. v. Sharon Coal Co. 164 Pa. 305, 30 Atl. 127, 128; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 606, 33 L. ed. 1031, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 322, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 20 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57. If the ordinance passed and the classification made therein is not in conflict with the Federal Constitution or some valid act of Congress, the court may not say whether the law is the best that could have been enacted, or whether the common good demands or requires such a law. We can only determine whether, in such a case, the legislative body, acting under the laws and Constitution of this commonwealth, had the power and authority to enact such a law. The responsibility of the legislative body for so acting, if they had the power so to do, is not to the court, but to the people whom they represent. And for a construction of the Federal laws and Constitution we must look to our Federal courts, while the construction of the Constitution and laws of the commonwealth, so far as they do not conflict with those of the nation, is determined by our own courts. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 164, sub nom. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 24 L. ed. 946; Memphis Gaslight Co. v. Shelby County Tazing Dist. 109 U. S. 400, 27 L. ed. 976, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; United States v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 225; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355, 31 L. ed. 767, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921, and the cases therein cited; Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 669, 33 L. ed. 770, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 155, 41 L. ed. 387, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Lewis v. Monson, 151 U. S. 549, 38 L. ed. 266, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 393, 40 L. ed. 469, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 109, 40 L. ed. 94, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80.

"No objection is raised in this case as to the method of making the assessments, or arriving at valuations. The principal contention is that, by virtue of the classification made, unequal burdens and rates are imposed upon the several members of different classes; but it is not alleged, with the exceptions heretofore noted, that the ordinance applies to or is enforced differently against the same members of any class. We therefore conclude that the ordinance in question does not violate the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and we must determine whether or not it is in conflict with the Constitution and laws of this commonwealth. Article 9, § 1, of our Constitution declares that 'all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.' We herein have a recognition of the classification of subjects for taxation, and a provision that said taxes must be uniform as to each class. The Constitution of this commonwealth, as well as the Federal Constitution, not only permits classification of subjects of taxation on a proper basis, and in the approved manner, but the several classes thereby constituted may be taxed independently and differently. Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Com. 85 Pa. 519; Com. v. Delaware Division Canal Co. 123 Pa. 620, 2 L. R. A. 798, 16 Atl. 584; Pittsburgh v. Coyle, 165 Pa. 64, 30 Atl. 452; 57 L. R. A.

Com. v. Germania Brewing Co. 145 Pa. 36, 22 Atl. 240; Com. v. Sharon Coal Co. 164 Pa. 305, 30 Atl. 127, 128. We must therefore consider whether the classification herein made produces the result of special legislation; whether taxes imposed are uniform, as required by the Constitution; and whether the classification is made upon such basis as is by law required. It is complained that wholesalers are made a distinct and separate class from retailers, and that the ordinance specially legislates in favor of the wholesalers. This is true, so far as separately classifying the wholesale dealers is concerned, but each member of the subclass of wholesalers is treated alike, and the tax is uniform upon each member of said division or subclass. We see no objection to classifying wholesalers and retailers separately. The same principle is involved in the subdivision of the wholesalers, as maintains in the general classification under § 3 of the ordinance, and what is said in relation thereto equally applies to the subdivision of wholesalers. If special legislation is produced in this ordinance, it is a result of the mode of classification adopted. The several members of the respective classes and subclasses with the exception heretofore noted are treated alike, and the taxes imposed upon them are uniform throughout their class. Is the classification herein made legal? In Ayars's Appeal, 122 Pa. 277, 2 L. R. A. 584, 16 Atl. 363, the court says: 'On the contrary, the underlying principle of all the cases is that classification, with the view of legislating for either class separately, is essentially unconstitutional, unless a necessity therefor exists,—a necessity springing from manifest peculiarities, clearly distinguishing those of one class from each of the other classes, and imperatively demanding legislation for each class separately that would be useless and detrimental to others.' This is as near to a definition of the requirements for classification as our courts have attempted. It is true this refers to classification for legislative purposes, but we know of no reason why the same does not obtain in the classification for the purposes of taxation. Each class should have purposes to subserve peculiar to itself, and all its members local functions to perform which differentiates them from the members of each and every other class. When such a state of facts exists, classification is not only permissible, but is necessary to subserve the purposes of the members, as a part of the body politic, as well as of their individual classes, and may be the only means whereby uniformity of taxation can be accomplished. The 'classification should be made according to some reasonable, practical rule, drawn from experience, which would prevent a gross inequality in the burdens of taxation.' Com. v. Delaware Division Canal Co. 123 Pa. 620, 2 L. R. A. 798, 16 Atl. 584; Weinman v. Wilkesburg & E. L. Pass. R. Co. 118 Pa. 202, 12 Atl. 288. It is the legislative authority that must determine what difference in situation, circumstances, and needs calls for a classification, subject, however, to the supervision of the courts, as the final interpreters of the Constitution, and to see that the same is really classification, and not special legislation. Lloyd v. Smith, 176 Pa. 218, 35 Atl. 199.

"The classification made by this ordinance is as follows:

Retail.		Tax.
Class.	Business.
1	Over $60,000	$100
2	$50,000 to 60,000	80
3	40,000 to 50,000	70
4	30,000 to 40,000	60
5	20,000 to 30,000	50
6	10,000 to 20,000	35
7	5,000 to 10,000	25
8	2,500 to 5,000	15
9	1,000 to 2,000	10
10	1,000 and less	5

Wholesale.		Tax.
Class.	Business.
1	$100,000 and upwards	$60
2	60,000 to $100,000	50
3	50,000 to 60,000	40
4	40,000 to 50,000	35
5	30,000 to 40,000	30
6	20,000 to 30,000	25
7	10,000 to 20,000	20
8	5,000 to 10,000	15
9	2,500 to 5,000	10
10	2,500	5

"Is this classification, made by the proper legislative authority, such as is reasonable, just, and proper, or was it passed for the purpose of, or does it produce the result of, special legislation for any of the respective classes? It is urged that it is unequal and unjust. We again repeat that this may be true, as in most cases of assessments we find like results to a greater or less extent; but unless it is grossly so, or the ordinance enacted with a view or effect of producing such results contrary to law, the place to seek relief is with the legislative authority. It is as impossible to produce exact uniformity in levying taxes as it is to give universal satisfaction, but, if no legal principles have been violated, we are powerless to adjust all of the inequalities complained of. The knowledge or judgment of the judiciary, under given circumstances, as to what is equitable taxation is no better than that of the legislative authority; and, as this is the department upon whom is imposed the duty of making the adjustment, there it must rest, so long as they act within their authority. It may be true that the results produced of advantage to the dealers from the sources to which this general tax is applied may be in the exact, or at least approximate, ratio of the burdens imposed by this license tax, and that the expense to the municipality in rendering such protection and producing such results is in like proportion. For example, we certainly could not say that the expense to the city of furnishing police and fire protection to the man who does $100,000 worth of business is 100 times as great as for that of him who does $1,000 worth. We know of no better authority to determine the proper ratio and 57 L. R. A.

adjust the burdens of taxation in proportion to the expense imposed and benefits received by the various subjects than the one upon which the law now imposes it. Classification according to the amount of business done has been frequently recognized in this commonwealth and by our Federal courts. (Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 690, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 164, sub nom. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 24 L. ed. 96; Allentown v. Gross, 132 Pa. 322, 19 Atl. 269; Hadtner v. Williamsport, 15 W. N. C. 138; Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 173, 33 Atl. 544, the last of which cases was very much like the case at bar); and a classification there adopted, very similar, though not so justly discriminating as to the smaller dealers, was held to be a valid exercise of the powers of the city council. It is argued, however, that in the case of Williamsport v. Wenner the initial class was composed of those doing a business of $1,000 or less, and paid $1, and every multiple of that amount of business paid a similar multiple of that amount of tax, and that this was fair and equitable. We do not find that the classification thus adopted produced any 'fairer' results than does the one at bar. What was argued is true as to the maximum of each class only, and why the man doing $1,000 worth of business and paying the same tax as the one doing $5,000 worth can be considered any more of a fair and equitable proportionate adjustment than the one at bar we do not clearly comprehend. The right to make such classification seems to be settled by our courts. We are not unfamiliar with a similar classification as to sales, with different rates as to different classes in the state mercantile tax, imposed upon vendors of merchandise. True, the act by virtue of which this is made was passed prior to the adoption of our present Constitution. The right to make the classification being determined, we have no doubt as to the legislative authority to impose different 'rates' upon the several classes. And now, July 11, 1898, it is ordered that the defendant pay a fine of $72 to the commonwealth for the use of the city of Titusville, and the cost of prosecution, or give security therefor within ten days from this date; and in default thereof he shall stand committed to the county jail for a period of twenty days."

Messrs. Julius Byles and Eugene Mackey for appellant.

Mr. George Frank Brown, for appellee:

A license tax levied under the act of 1889, governing municipalities, is an act of general taxation, being for "general revenue purposes."

Oil City v. Oil City Trust Co. 151 Pa. 454, 25 Atl. 124; Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 181, 33 Atl. 544.

The mercantile license tax has been set apart as a tax on "property estimated by the volume of the annual sales."

Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 173, 33

Atl. 544; Allentown v. Gross, 132 Pa. 319, 19 Atl. 269.

Our courts have construed the Constitution as permitting classification of taxables, and allowing the several classes to be taxed independently and differently.

Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Com. 85 Pa. 519; Com. v. Delaware Division Canal Co. 123 Pa. 620, 2 L. R. A. 798, 16 Atl. 584; Kittanning Coal Co. v. Com. 79 Pa. 100; Kitty Roup's Case, 81* Pa. 211; Williamsport v. Brown, 84 Pa. 439; Coal Ridge Improv. & Coal Co. v. Jennings, 127 Pa. 397, 17 Atl. 986; Pittsburg v. Coyle, 105 Pa. 61, 30 Atl. 452; Com. v. Sharon Coal Co. 164 Pa. 305, 30 Atl. 127, 128; Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 173, 33 Atl. 544; Com. v. Germania Brewing Co. 145 Pa. 87, 22 Atl. 240.

In the Federal courts, in construing the 1st section of the 14th Amendment, classification of taxables has been permitted in a numerous line of decisions.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, sub nom. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 24 L. ed. 94; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

Absolute equality is of course unattainable; a mere approximate equality is all that can reasonably be expected.

Com. v. Delaware Division Canal Co. 123 Pa. 620, 2 L. R. A. 798, 16 Atl. 584; Fow's Appeal, 112 Pa. 353, 4 Atl. 149; Hunter's Appeal, 18 W. N. C. 411; Loughlin's Appeal, 19 W. N. C. 517.

The moment we concede the power to classify we have disposed of the question of uniformity, for then all that is required by the Constitution is that the taxes shall be uniform upon the members of a class.

Kittanning Coal Co. v. Com. 79 Pa. 105.

Classification according to the amount of business done, or volume of business, has been recognized as a proper classification by both the courts of this commonwealth and the Federal courts.

Williamsport v. Wenner, 172 Pa. 173, 33 Atl. 544; Allentown v. Gross, 132 Pa. 322, 19 Atl. 269; Com. v. Delaware Division, 57 L. R. A.

Canal Co. 123 Pa. 620, 2 L. R. A. 798, 16 Atl. 584; Hadtner v. Williamsport, 15 W. N. C. 138; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 164, sub nom. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts, 24 L. ed. 96.

The equal protection of the laws has been authoritatively held to mean that all persons subject to legislation shall be treated alike, under like circumstances and conditions, both in the privileges conferred and in the liabilities imposed.

Guthrie, The Fourteenth Amendment, p. 111; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Fire Asso. of Philadelphia v. New York, 119 U. S. 120, 30 L. ed. 347, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Hallinger v. Davis, 146 U. S. 314, 36 L. ed. 986, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

The subject of classification is legislative in the first instance, as legislative power is necessarily exercised through a classification of subjects (for a law operating at once and alike upon all subjects is inconceivable). A legislative classification is presumed to be valid and to have been made in the exercise of a wise discretion and for sufficient and proper reasons, unless an infringement of some provisions of the state or Federal Constitution appears.

Sanderson, Validity of Statutes, p. 137; McCarthy v. Com. ex rel. Griffiths, 110 Pa. 243, 2 Atl. 423.

Per Curiam:

We concur entirely with the views expressed in the opinion of the learned judge of the Court of Quarter Sessions in this case, and on that opinion the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States March 3, 1902.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

Fred P. RUSH et al., Appts.,

v.

Franklin LANDERS.

Martha E. LANDERS, Intervener.

(107 La. 549.)

- *1. Where immovable property in this state purports to have been sold by a husband to his wife for a certain sum of money, the title is invalid on its face, the apparent consideration not being within the exceptions provided by Civil Code, art. 2446, as essential to the validity of a sale in such case; and the property is liable to seizure by the creditors of the husband.
- *2. Where property so situated is seized upon a claim against the husband,

*Headnotes by MONROE, J.

NOTE.—Conflict of laws as to matrimonial property.

- I. Introduction, 353.
- II. When lex domicilii is opposed to the lex rei sitæ or lex fori.
- a. Real estate, or immovables, 353.
 - b. Personal property, or movables, 354.
 - c. What law determines character of property as real or personal, 359.
- III. When law of matrimonial domicile is opposed to that of place where marriage celebrated, 359.
- IV. How original matrimonial domicile ascertained, 360.
- V. Change of matrimonial domicile.
- a. Property acquired prior to change, 363.
 - b. Property acquired after the change, 366.
 - c. Tacit mortgages or liens, 367.
- VI. Marriage settlements, 368.
- VII. Summary, 373.

I. Introduction.

It is important, in the consideration of any subject relating to conflict of laws, to bear in mind that all principles of private international law, however well established, are subject to alteration or abrogation by the statutes of any state or country, so far as their enforcement in its courts is concerned. Courts are undoubtedly loath to give to a statute a construction which will bring it in conflict with the principles of international law, but, in the absence of vested rights protected by the Federal or state Constitution, the statutes must prevail over such principles if the former are not susceptible of a construction which will harmonize them with the latter. Again, the courts of any state or country may refuse to recognize or enforce rights arising under the laws of another state or country which, according to the established principles of international law, ought ordinarily to govern, if they are opposed to the distinctive public policy of the forum. It is obvious, however, that the distinctive policy of the forum is not necessarily violated by the recognition or enforcement of rights created by the laws of another state or country operating upon facts and conditions, which, by the principles of international law, are within the legitimate sphere of their operation, although a different result would be produced by the laws of the forum operating upon similar facts and conditions, which, by such principles, are with-band, and the wife intervenes, setting up title, and the seizing creditor propounds to her interrogatories on facts and articles, her answers thereto are entitled to no greater effect, as against such creditor, than her testimony, or that of any other witness, given orally.

57 L. R. A.

- *3. Where the seizing creditor, in propounding such interrogatories, takes the initiative, and attempts to show that the consideration of the putative sale was other than as stated, either in the intervenor's title or in her intervention, and thereafter falls, in this court, to ask for any ruling upon his objection, made during the trial, to the introduction of parol evidence to show the real consideration of such sale, it will be presumed that the objection is abandoned.
- *4. Where the answers to such interrogatories show that property in an-

in the legitimate sphere of their operation. The existence of such differences creates the very condition which calls for the application of the principles of international law. It follows, from what has been said, that all rules of international law with respect to the effect of marriage upon property rights are subject to the qualification that they have not been altered or abrogated by a statute of the forum, and that they do not require the recognition or enforcement of rights that are contrary to the distinctive public policy of the forum. There is another circumstance which sometimes interferes with the application of these rules, without, however, at all detracting from their universality, viz., the failure to prove the law of the place which according to these rules should determine the rights of the parties. In that case the lex fori is frequently applied, sometimes on the presumption that the law of the other place on the point in question is the same, and sometimes on the theory that the court must apply the lex fori when no other law is proved. The question here suggested, as to what course the court should adopt when the appropriate law is not proved, is broader than the subject of this note, and is only referred to incidentally.

II. When lex domicilii is opposed to the lex rei sitæ or lex fori.

a. Real estate, or immovables.

It is a settled principle of very extensive operation that real property is governed by the lex rei sitæ. In accordance with this principle, it is well established that the respective rights of husband and wife in real property, in the absence of an antenuptial contract, are determined by the law of the place where the property is situated, irrespective of the domicile of the parties, or of the place where the marriage was celebrated. McCollum v. Smith, Meigs, 342, 33 Am. Dec. 147; Nelson v. Goree, 34 Ala. 565; Vertner v. Humphreys, 14 Smedes & M. 130; Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297, 58 Am. Dec. 717; Heldenheimer v. Loring, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 28 S. W. 99.

Thus, the legal status of a husband and wife domiciled in Pennsylvania with reference to land situated in Michigan, is governed by the law of Michigan. Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 284, 73 N. W. 363. In this case a conveyance of land from the wife to her husband, executed in Pennsylvania, was upheld upon the ground other state had been conveyed by the husband to the wife, for a particular consideration arising under the laws of that state, this court will not assume, even though it should be made to appear that such consideration was inadequate, that a different consideration, testified to as moving in the matter of the conveyance of the Louisiana property, was therefore included and exhausted for the purposes of the conveyance in such other state.

5. The validity of the conveyance of immovable property in Louisiana, and the capacity of a husband and wife to deal with each other with respect thereto, are to be determined by the law of Louisiana.

6. A sale of such property between husband and wife can be made only in the cases and for the consideration as provided in Civil Code, art. 2446, and if apparently made for some other consideration is invalid on its face; and if attacked by a party showing sufficient interest, the burden of proof, if proof be admitted, rests upon the party seeking to maintain the validity of such sale to show that the real consideration was within the exceptions provided in said article.

7. If in such case the claim be that the consideration was an indebtedness of the husband to the wife for money said to have belonged to the wife, and to have been received and used by the husband, it must be shown, where the parties are domiciled in another state, that by reason of such receipt and use the husband became the debtor of the wife, that the debt existed at the time of the conveyance, and that the property was conveyed in satisfaction or in part satisfaction of such debt.

8. Whether, in such case, the husband becomes the debtor of his wife, depends upon the law of their domicil.

9. The courts of Louisiana will take that by the law of Michigan the land was her separate property, and might be lawfully conveyed by her, either directly or indirectly, to her husband.

A distinction is, however, to be observed in this connection. It may be that the location of the domicil or residence, within or without the state or country in which the property is situated, will affect the question which of two or more rules of law in force in that state or country is applicable to the facts, and is therefore to govern. This distinction, however, does not at all detract from the universality of the rule previously stated, since in any case it is the lex rei sitæ that is applied. Thus, it has been held that, prior to the Louisiana act of March, 1852, by which the community of property was extended to nonresident married persons with respect to property thereafter acquired in the state, real property acquired by nonresidents who were not married within the state did not fall into the community. Waterer's Succession, 25 La. Ann. 210; Wolfe v. Gilmer, 7 La. Ann. 583; Huff v. Borland, 6 La. Ann. 436; Leech v. Guild, 15 La. Ann. 349; Dohan v. Murdock, 41 La. Ann. 494, 6 So. 131. And it was held in Conner v. Elliott, 18 How. 591, 15 L. ed. 497, that, the distinction being based on the place of the marriage or the residence of the parties, and not on their citizenship, there was no violation of the provision of the Federal Constitution that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states. In these cases there was no question of conflict between the law of Louisiana and that of the domicil of the parties, but it was simply a question as to which law of Louisiana was applicable to the facts.

In Depas v. Mayo, 11 Mo. 314, 49 Am. Dec. 88, the court, while conceding that the existence of an equity in favor of the wife in land in Missouri, the legal title of which is vested in the husband, must be determined by the law of Missouri, and not by the law of Louisiana, held that such an equity arose in favor of a wife on account of the use, in the purchase of the property, of money which, by the law of Louisiana (the matrimonial domicil at the time of its acquisition), was a part of the community property of the husband and wife.

Real estate in Washington, which, though standing in the name of the wife, is the community property of herself and husband, is subject to a debt incurred by the husband in Wisconsin, under circumstances which would have made it a charge upon the community property 57 L. R. A.

in Washington if it had been incurred in the latter state, it appearing that, according to the law of Wisconsin, the property, if situated in that state, would have belonged to the husband, and would have thus been subject to his debts. LaSelle v. Woolery, 11 Wash. 337, 32 L. R. A. 73, 39 Pac. 663.

b. Personal property, or movables.

With respect to personal property, the general rule of international law, in the absence of any statute changing it, is that the respective rights of husband and wife and their creditors are determined by the law of the matrimonial domicil, irrespective of the place where the property is acquired, found, located, or seized. Nelson v. Goree, 34 Ala. 565; Birmingham Waterworks Co. v. Hume, 121 Ala. 168, 25 So. 806; Davis v. Zimmerman, 67 Pa. 70; Hicks v. Pope, 8 La. 556, 28 Am. Dec. 142; Young v. Young, 5 La. Ann. 611; Worthington v. Hanna, 23 Mich. 530; Steers's Succession, 47 La. Ann. 1551, 18 So. 503; Pearl v. Hansborough, 9 Humph. 433; Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548; Cahalan v. Monroe, 70 Ala. 271.

It is obvious that the application of this principle will sometimes operate to the advantage, and sometimes to the disadvantage, of the wife, according to whether the lex domicilii is more or less favorable to her than the lex rei sitæ or lex fori.

Thus, the mere transportation of cotton from the domicil of a married woman, by the law of which it is her separate property, into Alabama, does not change its status so as to constitute it her separate statutory estate under the laws of the latter state, and it is therefore necessary to join her husband with her as coplaintiff in an action of trover for the property. Bush v. Garner, 73 Ala. 162.

Slaves inherited by a married woman in Mississippi, where the common law prevails, according to the principles of which they became the property of the husband, are liable for his debts when brought into Louisiana. Slocumb v. Breedlove, 8 La. 143, 28 Am. Dec. 135. In this case the husband and wife were domiciled in Mississippi at the time the slaves were acquired, and also at the time they were seized for the husband's debts.

In Quigly v. Muse, 15 La. Ann. 197, it was held that the nature and effect of a purchase of a slave by a married woman must be determined by the law of Mississippi, where the purchase was made, and that, in accordance with that law, the title acquired vested absolutely judicial cognizance of the prevalence of the common law in a sister state, and of the rule of the common law that a married woman cannot possess personal property independently of her husband except where a trust has been created for her separate benefit. But statutory modifications of the common law, or the creation of such trust, must be proved, if either be relied on.

(April 14, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Vermilion in favor of intervener in a suit to subject property to the payment of a debt of Franklin Landers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. B. White and W. W. Edwards, for Messrs. Wilson & Townley, for appellants.

in her husband, and she had no power to make a gift of the slave. In this case the parties were apparently domiciled in Mississippi at the time of the purchase.

Moneys of a wife domiciled in Mississippi, though received in Louisiana, belong to her as a citizen of the former state, and do not acquire the character or incidents of paraphernal funds under the law of Louisiana, and, if converted by her husband, she has no mortgage on his property in the latter state for their restitution, nor can she receive from him a dation en paiement to the prejudice of attaching creditors who are citizens of that state. Hyman v. Schlenker, 44 La. Ann. 108, 10 So. 623.

It has long been settled by the jurisprudence of this country that, notwithstanding marriages may have been contracted in other states, the rights of the married persons after being domiciled in this are governed by its laws in relation to all property acquired during their residence here,—so far, at least, as they have reference to acquets and gains which form the matrimonial community. If a husband and wife were placed in this category, and the first should acquire personal property by purchase in another state, it would, perhaps, at the moment of acquisition, form a part of the matrimonial community, even before it was brought into the place of the domicile of the partners. Hicks v. Pope, 8 La. 556, 28 Am. Dec. 142.

So, the marital rights of the husband, domiciled in Texas, to personal property given to the wife during a temporary sojourn in Tennessee, are governed by the law of Texas, and not by the law of Tennessee (Edrington v. Mayfield, 5 Tex. 363); and, as between the law of Tennessee and that of Texas, the latter was held, in State v. Barrow, 14 Tex. 180, 65 Am. Dec. 109, to govern the marital rights to personal property given to the wife, during their temporary sojourn in Tennessee while on their way from Mississippi, their original matrimonial domicile, to Texas, where they contemplated establishing their domicile, though there was no decision as between the law of Texas and that of Mississippi.

So, though it is a well-established rule of international law that the distribution of the personal property of a decedent is governed by the law of his last domicile, and that law, therefore, determines whether either husband or wife is entitled to take, when the right to take is established in either, their respective rights in the property, as between themselves and their privies, is determined by the law of their domicile, and not by that of decedent's unless

Mr. Walter Augustus White for appellee.

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Fred P. Rush and George E. Townley, residents of Indiana, and original plaintiffs herein, in February, 1900, obtained judgment in the circuit court of Marion county, Indiana, against the defendant Franklin Landers, also a resident of that state, in the sum of $4,745.58, representing the principal and interest of a debt said to have been contracted in 1895; upon which judgment, in March, 1900, they instituted suit in the district court for the parish of Vermilion, and caused to be seized, by attachment, a rice farm lying in that parish, which they alleged belonged to the defendant. The defendant, appearing through the curator ad the two happen to be the same. McCollum v. Smith, Meigs, 342, 33 Am. Dec. 147; McLean v. Hardin, 58 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 294; Muns v. Muns, 29 Minn. 115, 12 N. W. 343; Hicks v. Pope, 8 La. 556, 28 Am. Dec. 142.

So, the law of the matrimonial domicile at the time of the death of the wife governs the disposition of, and succession to, her distributive share of her father's estate, although he was domiciled in another state at the time of his death and the administration of his estate was still open at the time of the wife's death. Nocnan v. Kemp, 34 Md. 73, 6 Am. Rep. 307. In this case it was held that the distributive share should go to the surviving husband, that being the law of Kentucky, where the matrimonial domicile was established.

The capacity of a married woman domiciled in France, separated in bed and board from her husband, to compromise her rights in the succession of property, is to be determined by reference to the law of France, and not by that of Louisiana, where the succession is pending. Garnier v. Poydras, 13 La. 182.

In McCormick v. Garnett, 5 DeG. M. & G. 278, 18 Jur. 412, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 777, the court ordered the payment of the wife's legacy to an assignee of the husband, the husband and wife being domiciled in Scotland, in which country a wife had no right to a settlement of the fund upon her.

So, in Dues v. Smith, Jac. 544, money belonging to a wife was paid out of court to the husband without requiring him to settle the property upon the wife, it appearing that they were subjects of Denmark, and that according to the Danish law he was entitled to receive her property without making such a settlement.

The law of the matrimonial domicile prevails over that of the forum with reference to the marital rights of husband and wife in a fund administered at the forum. DeSerre v. Clarke, L. R. 18 Eq. 587, 43 L. J. Ch. N. S. 821, 31 L. T. N. S. 161, 23 Week. Rep. 8.

But the law of Louisiana respecting the rights of a married woman to slaves inherited by her during the marriage governs in the absence of proof of the law of the matrimonial domicile at the time. Allen v. Allen, 6 Rob. (La.) 104, 39 Am. Dec. 553.

The tenure by which personal property acquired in another state and brought here is held as between husband and wife will depend upon the laws of the state where acquired. Shumway v. Leakey, 67 Cal. 458, 8 Pac. 12. This language, if literally construed, would make the law of the place where the property hoc appointed by the court to represent him, answered, disclaiming title. Thereupon Martha E. Landers, his wife, intervened, claiming to be the owner of the seized property by virtue of a conveyance made by her husband in January, 1894, in part satisfaction of an alleged debt for a larger amount, said to be due for separate funds belonging to her, which had been delivered to and used by him, and praying that her title be recognized, and the attachment dissolved. About the time that this intervention was filed, George E. Townley died, and Morris M. Townley, his administrator, was made party plaintiff in his stead, and he and Rush answered the intervention in effect as follows, to wit: That the property seized belonged to the community between Landers and his wife, and that the transfer of title to the wife, as set up by the intervener, was null and void, because not within any exception to the prohibition contained in the law of this state against sales between husband and wife, because the property was worth $10,000, whereas the cash consideration of the alleged conveyance purports to have been $2,000, and for the balance the wife undertook to bind herself with respect to certain mortgages bearing upon the property in the name of her husband, or, if it be held that she did not so undertake, then that the price is "vile;" and that the debt claimed by plaintiffs is a debt of the community, for which said property remains liable. The answer concludes with a prayer that interrogatories on facts and articles be propounded to the intervener, and for judgment etc. Interrogatories were accordingly propounded to and answered by the intervener under a commission executed at her was acquired govern, rather than that of the matrimonial domicile at that time; but it is probable that the two were the same, though it does not expressly so appear. In the result, the law of California (lex fori and lex rei sitæ) was applied upon the presumption that the law of Nevada (where the property was acquired and where the matrimonial domicile was probably established at the time of its acquisition) was the same, that law not being proved.

In Keyser v. Pilgrim, 25 Tex. Supp. 217, infra, V. a., it was held that the marital rights of husband and wife in a slave acquired by the wife from the estate of her father in Tennessee were governed by the law of Tennessee, and not by that of Kentucky, although they were domiciled in the latter state at the time the slave was received; but it will be observed that the decision is upon the ground that at the time of the father's death the matrimonial domicile was in Tennessee.

In Smith v. McAtee, 27 Md. 420, 92 Am. Dec. 641, it was held that the wife's share of the proceeds of a sale in partition of real property in Maryland was not subject to attachment for a debt of the husband, notwithstanding that the parties were domiciled in Illinois, by the law of which a husband was entitled to all the personal property of the wife. In this case, however, it was expressly provided in the decree directing a sale of the real property, that the wife's portion of the proceeds should be deemed her separate estate for her sole and separate use and benefit, free from any claim or control of her husband or of his creditors. The court said: "The courts of our state have perfect jurisdiction over all personal property, as well as real, within its limits, belonging to the wife, and they have a right to protect both from the debts of the husband. If, therefore, our legislative enactment in regard to the property of the wife and the laws of Illinois conflict, it cannot be made a question in our own courts which shall prevail. 'Where there is no constitutional barrier, we are bound to observe and enforce the statutory provisions of our own state.'"

The conflict here referred to undoubtedly means a conflict with reference to the very property in question after giving due consideration to the fact that the parties are domiciled in another state. That is, in order to raise such a conflict as is here contemplated, there must be a statute which requires a construction making it applicable to a case where the parties were domiciled in another state, and which, therefore, abrogates, so far as the 57 L. R. A.

forum is concerned, the rule of international law that makes the matrimonial domicile prevail in such a case. The court cannot have contemplated the ordinary conflict which arises between statutes of different jurisdictions which are susceptible of a construction confining them to cases where the parties are domiciled within the state where they were enacted, thus bringing them into harmony with the general principle of international law that the law of the domicile governs. The very necessity for international rules on any subject is created by the existence of a conflict of laws in the sense last referred to.

The law of the domicile also governs with respect to the substantial rights of husband and wife, as between themselves and their privies, in choses in action accruing to either, though the law of the forum may affect the right of either to bring an action thereon without joining the other. Thus:

In Craycroft v. Morehead, 67 N. C. 422, a judgment entered in North Carolina in favor of a wife against her husband on judgment notes given before the intermarriage of the parties was upheld as against the other creditors of the husband, upon the ground that the rights of parties were governed by the law of Pennsylvania where the husband and wife were domiciled, which provides that the property owned by a single woman continues to be hers after marriage.

An action may be maintained in the District of Columbia by a married woman domiciled in New York to recover money earned by her in New York, according to the law of which it constituted a part of her separate estate, and loaned by her to the defendant, although such earnings, under the law of the District of Columbia, would belong to her husband. Frank v. Hirsch, 3 App. D. C. 491. In this case the loan was made in New York, but the court said if it had been made in the District of Columbia it would not have affected the decision. The court admitted that the necessity, or otherwise, of joining the husband as a plaintiff was to be determined by the law of the District of Columbia, irrespective of the law of New York, but that the substantive right was to be determined by the law of New York.

In Jones v. Aetna Ins. Co. 14 Conn. 508, the court expressed a doubt whether an action in Connecticut upon a chose of action belonging to a married woman domiciled in Canada, according to the law of which it constituted a part of her separate estate, must be brought by the husband, although, if she were domiciled residence in Indiana, and the commission was duly returned, and made part of the record. The intervener was also sworn as a witness in her own behalf, and testified orally. Other evidence was adduced, and the case was argued and submitted, and decided in favor of the intervener on the question of title and in favor of the defendant by judgment of nonsuit, and from the judgment so rendered the plaintiffs prosecute this appeal. In the course of the execution of the commission under which the intervener answered the interrogatories on facts and articles, the point was reserved on behalf of the plaintiffs that the answers were read from a paper which had been prepared in advance, and that the intervener declined to answer in any other way, and declined to state by whom the paper had been prepared. The point thus reserved was not, however, insisted upon in the district court, and has not been referred to by counsel for plaintiffs, who rely in their argument before this court upon their ability to show that the answers given by the intervener to the interrogatories and in her oral testimony are self-destructive, and are overborne by other testimony. We take it, therefore, that the answers to the interrogatories on facts and articles are to be accepted subject to the conditions last mentioned, since they can hardly be used for the purposes of an attack upon the oral testimony given by the intervener if they are to be excluded from the record. As to the effect of those answers, counsel for the intervener contends that it can be destroyed only by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness and strong corroborating circumstances, which, he claims, have not been produced; in Connecticut, it would have to be brought by him. The court was inclined to the opinion, but did not decide the question, that, since the Connecticut rule requiring the action to be brought by the husband was based on the principle that the chose in action was vested in him, it did not apply where, according to the law of the domicile of the wife, the chose in action was a part of her separate estate. The court held that, whatever the law might be on that subject, the fruits of such an action, even if brought by the husband, could not be taken for his debt.

In Williams v. Pope Mfg. Co. 52 La. Ann. 1417, 50 L. R. A. 816, 27 So. 851, it was held that a married woman, whose matrimonial domicile was in Mississippi, might maintain an action in Louisiana, in her own name, to recover damages ex delicto for a tort committed against her while temporarily sojourning in the latter state, and which by the law of Mississippi would constitute a part of her separate estate, notwithstanding the Louisiana statute, which provides that "all property acquired in this state by nonresident married persons . . . shall be subject to the same provisions of law which regulate the community of acquets and gains between citizens of this state." The decision is upon the ground that the statute is a real, rather than a personal, statute, i. e., deals with and regulates property within the state, and not with the personal rights or conditions of the spouses, and that the legal situs of the chose in action, if it is to be treated and considered as personal property, was at the matrimonial domicile of the plaintiff in the state of Mississippi.

In Howard v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 11 App. D. C. 300, the release of a claim for personal injuries executed by a married woman in the District of Columbia was held invalid in the absence of proof of the law of Kentucky (where the injury was received), or of Indiana (where she was domiciled), regarding the property rights of married women. The decision is upon the ground that the presumption must be indulged, either that the rule of the common law, or that in force in the District of Columbia, prevailed in those states, and that under either rule the release would be invalid. The court said that it was unnecessary to consider whether the wife's right of property in a cause of action for personal injury accruing in another state must be determined by the law of the forum, of the domicile of the injured party, or of the place of the contract and injury.

In Snashall v. Metropolitan R. Co. 8 Mackey, 57 L. R. A.

399, 10 L. R. A. 746, however, it was held that a married woman could not give a valid release of a cause of action for personal injuries sustained by her in the District, which, by the law of the District, would not constitute a part of her separate property, even if it would be her separate property under the law of Wisconsin, where she was domiciled. The decision is upon the ground that, even if the cause of action for personal injuries is to be regarded as property within the statute of the domicile regulating the property rights of married women, it cannot be regarded as property—at least not as movables—within the rule of international law that the rights of husband and wife to movables are governed by the law of the domicile, irrespective of their actual situation.

A distinction, somewhat analogous to that already alluded to, between the right of husband or wife to share in the distribution of a decedent's estate, and their respective rights in the property when acquired, is pointed out by the following case.

The effect of the payment to the husband of dividends upon shares of stock in a Virginia corporation as a payment to the wife, to whom the stock was issued, is to be determined by the law of Virginia rather than the law of Maryland, where the husband and wife are domiciled. Graham v. First Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 393, 38 Am. Rep. 528. It was proved in this case that the common-law rule with reference to husband and wife prevailed in Virginia, and that within that jurisdiction the husband had the absolute right to reduce to his own possession, and use for his own benefit, the personal property of the wife. It was accordingly held that the payment to the husband was good, notwithstanding that according to the law of Maryland (lex domicilii) the stock was a part of the wife's separate property. The decision is upon the ground that the contract out of which the right to dividends grew was both made, and to be performed, in Virginia. It was admitted that the respective rights of the husband and wife to the property, as between themselves, would be determined by the lex domicilii, and a distinction was made between their rights inter se and their rights as against the debtor in another state.

So, in Pearl v. Hansborough, 9 Humph. 433, supra, the court held that the validity of a contract of purchase of personal property in Tennessee by a married woman domiciled in Mississippi must be determined by the law of Tennessee, though it conceded that if the contract while counsel for plaintiffs insist that such effect should be determined in this case by the rules applicable to ordinary testimony, for the reasons: (1) That the law governing the answers of the defendant in a case is inapplicable where interrogatories "are answered by one who, as intervener, has the burden of proof;" (2) that certain of the answers of the intervener as to the value of the real estate in Indiana transferred to her by her husband are merely expressions of opinion upon matters concerning which it does not appear that she was qualified to judge; and they further insist that as to certain mortgages, which are said to have borne upon the Indiana property at the time of its transfer, the answers are contradicted by official certificates from the mortgage records; and, finally, that they are over-borne throughout either by the testimony of two witnesses or its equivalent.

The Code of Practice provides that "both plaintiff and defendant" may propound interrogatories on facts and articles (art. 347), and the answers are given the same effect whether made by the one or the other, and irrespective of the burden of proof. The plaintiffs correctly assumed that, as they occupied the position of defendants quoad the claim set up by the intervener, they were entitled to propound such interrogatories to her; and, if this be true, there can be no reason why her answers should not be given the effect that would be accorded to those of a person occupying the position of plaintiff eo nomine. Prior to 1870 article 354 of the Code of Practice read as follows: "The answers of the party interrogated are evidence, but do not exclude had been valid the respective rights of the husband and wife in the property acquired would have been determined by reference to the law of Mississippi, and not by that of Tennessee.

It is apparent, for reasons stated in subdivision I., supra, that the rule that the rights of the parties are governed by the law of their domicile, rather than that of the place where the property is found, may be changed by statute so far as its applicability in any particular state or country is concerned. This was done, to a limited extent, in Louisiana by the act of 1852 (art. 2400 of the Code), which provides that all property acquired in the state by nonresident married persons shall be subject to the same provisions of law which regulate the community of acquets and gains between citizens of Louisiana. This provision is impliedly held in Williams v. Pope Mfg. Co. 52 La. Ann. 1417, 50 L. R. A. 816, 27 So. 851, supra, to subject to the community personal property or movables situated in Louisiana belonging to a married woman domiciled with her husband in another state, though, as already seen, it was held not to apply to a mere right of action for a personal injury sustained in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in another state by the law of which it constituted a part of her separate property, because, if such a right of action could be regarded as personal property at all, its situs was at her domicile. Before the passage of the statute referred to the supreme court of Louisiana adopted the doctrine, which was in reality a rule of statutory construction, that the statute which regulated the rights of husband and wife was real, not personal,—that is, it operated on property within the limits of the state, and not on persons. The terms in which this rule of statutory construction was expressed are calculated to induce the belief that it would accomplish the same result that was afterwards provided for by the express terms of the statute already alluded to, viz., the subjection of personal property acquired in Louisiana to the community, although both husband and wife were nonresidents; but prior to that statute such result seems to have been avoided by the adoption of the view that the situs of personal property, even of chattels, was at the matrimonial domicile, and if that domicile were in another state the property was not, in a legal sense, to be regarded as located in Louisiana. The doctrine was first promulgated in Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. 563, 16 Am. Dec. 212, and it was there applied simply for the purpose of subjecting to the community property acquired in Louisiana after the removal of the domicile of the husband and wife to that state from the place where the marriage was celebrated and the original matrimonial domicile established, upon the idea that where the personal statute of the domicile is in opposition to a real statute of situation the real statute will prevail. In Cole v. His Executors, 7 Mart. N. S. 41, 18 Am. Dec. 241, the rule was applied for the purpose of subjecting to the community personal property acquired by the husband while domiciled in Louisiana, although the wife, who was claiming the benefit of the community, had never been a resident of Louisiana. The court did say in this case that property within the limits of the state must, on the dissolution of the marriage, be distributed according to the laws of Louisiana, "no matter where the parties reside;" but it is obvious that the court merely meant that the residence of the claimant was immaterial if the property was located in Louisiana, that is, was there physically and had its situs there, for it immediately adds: "Because, viewing the statute as real, it is the thing on which it operates that gives it application, not the residence of the person who may profit by the rule it contains." It will be observed that in both these cases the property was not only physically in Louisiana, but its situs was also there in any view, since the husband was domiciled there. In Packwood's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 438, 41 Am. Dec. 341, however (which was also decided before the act of 1852), it was held that personal property acquired in Louisiana after the removal of the husband and wife to New York, did not fall into the community, but was governed by the law of New York. In this case, upon the theory that situs of the property was at the domicile, it would not be regarded as properly located in Louisiana, although it was acquired there and was physically there. It is thus distinguishable from the last two cases. Of course, it would have come within the terms of the act of 1852 if the property had been acquired before the passage of that act. It was also held in Armorer v. Case, 9 La. Ann. 289, 61 Am. Dec. 209; Cooper v. Cotton, 6 La. Ann. 256, and McGill's Succession, 6 La. Ann. 327, that, prior to the act of 1852, personal property acquired within the state by nonresident married persons did not fall into the community. In Robinson's Succession, 23 La. Ann. 174, the court, evidently proceeding on the theory that the community law was a real statute operating only on prop-adverse testimony, and may be destroyed by the oath of two witnesses or of one single witness corroborated by strong circumstantial evidence, or by written proof." Fuqua, Code Prac. art. 354. And the case of Hynson v. Tzada, 19 La. Ann. 470, to which we are referred, was decided under the law as thus expressed. The present article 354 reads: "The answers of the party interrogated are evidence, but do not exclude adverse testimony, and shall be weighed by the judge as other testimony." And for general purposes, to which the article applies, there can be no doubt that the answers referred to are to be dealt with as therein provided. It is true that under the Code of Practice as now written it is well settled, as it was well settled before the amendment, that, as between the parties to a sale of real estate, there are but two ways of impeaching the title, which is required to be in writing,—the one, by means of a counter letter, and the other by interrogatories on facts and articles,—and that, when answers to such interrogatories are substituted for the counter letter, the title thus established can no more be impeached by parol testimony than if established in any other written form. Semere v. Semere, 10 La. Ann. 704; Godwin v. Neustadt, 42 La. Ann. 735, 7 So. 744. This rule of exclusion applies, however, only to the parties to the instrument attacked, and does not apply to third persons. Westholz v. Retaud, 18 La. Ann. 287; Blake v. Hall, 19 La. Ann. 52; Finley v. Bogan, 20 La. Ann. 444; Cary v. Richardson, 35 La. Ann. 505. We conclude, therefore, that for the purpose of this case the answers of the intervenor to the interrogatories on facts and articles are erty within the state, held that revenues of a plantation situated in Mississippi did not fall into the community, although the parties were domiciled in Louisiana.

c. What law determines character of property as real or personal.

The rule stated in subd. II. b, supra, that the lex domicilii is to govern without reference to the location of personal property, needs this explanation or qualification, that the character of property as real or personal is to be determined by reference to the law of the place where it is found, and not by the law of the domicile, or by the ius gentium, or even by the law of nature. Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297, 56 Am. Dec. 717; Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 420, 32 Am. Dec. 168.

In the latter case it was held that the law of Tennessee, where the matrimonial domicile was established, by which the husband acquires an absolute right to the movable property of his wife, governed with respect to all movable property acquired by the wife from a decedent domiciled in Louisiana, where a different rule obtained; but it was also held that the law of Louisiana must be looked to in determining what was movable, and what was immovable, property, and it was accordingly held that the law of Louisiana governed with respect to the marital rights in slaves, cattle intended for cultivation, implements of husbandry, and other things ordinarily regarded as movable property, but which the law of Louisiana regarded as immovable.

See further, on this point, infra, V. a.

III. When law of matrimonial domicile is opposed to that of place where marriage celebrated.

While it is a general principle of international law, subject to some exceptions, that the validity of a marriage depends upon the law of the place where it was celebrated, that law does not necessarily determine the effect of the marriage upon the property rights of the parties. With respect to real property owned by either party at the time of the marriage, or subsequently acquired, the law of the place where it is situated governs, in the absence of any antenuptial contract. See supra, II. a. With respect to personal property owned by either party at the time of the marriage, or subsequently acquired by one or both before a change of domicile, the law of the matrimonial domicil, which may or may not be the place of marriage, governs. Thus:

A marriage celebrated according to rites and ceremony recognised by the laws of the country where it takes place is valid everywhere; and, as a general rule (not without exceptions), by that law the capacity of the parties to contract a marriage is determined. But with respect to the property rights of husband or wife in the personal property of either, derived from the marriage relation, the place where the marriage was celebrated is not decisive; these rights, at least as to property in esse at the time of the marriage, depend upon what is known in law as the matrimonial domicile. Harral v. Harral, 39 N. J. Eq. 279, 51 Am. Rep. 17.

Although the lex loci contractus is to be observed in determining the marriage contract, its formation and validity, the rights consequential to and arising out of the contract when formed may have to be determined and ruled according to the laws of the domicile of the contracting parties if they were domiciled in a place not the lex loci contractus. Steele v. Braddell, Millw. Const. 1.

The rights of spouses are not to be regulated by the laws of the state in which the marriage is celebrated, when it appears they intend immediately to remove and fix their residence in another country. Allen v. Allen, 6 Rob. (La.) 104, 39 Am. Dec. 553.

The contract of marriage has not been made an exception to the well-understood rule of common law that the law of the place where contracts are entered into, unless they are made with reference to performance in another place, is to regulate and determine the relative rights and obligations of the parties making them; although other important exceptions have been engrafted upon the rule. Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548.

Where there is no express marriage contract, the law of the matrimonial domicile will govern, as to all the rights of the parties to their present property in that place, and as to all personal property everywhere upon the principle that movables have no situs, and that they accompany the person. As to immovable property, the lex rei sitæ will prevail. Where there is no change of domicile, the same rule will apply to future acquisitions as to present property. Newcomer v. Orem, 2 Md. 297, 56 Am. Dec. 717. In this case the place of celebration of the marriage and the matrimonial domicile were the same.

In Noonan v. Kemp, 34 Md. 73, 6 Am. Rep. 307, Robinson, J., said: "If there be a prinentitled to no greater effect than her oral testimony given in her own behalf.

Counsel for plaintiffs also objected in the course of the trial to the proof of any other consideration for the conveyance to the intervenor of the property in controversy than that evidenced by the written instrument, and the objection was overruled. But as the counsel themselves appear to have opened the door to such proof by their interrogatories on facts and articles, and as they do not refer to the matter in their argument before this court, we assume that the objection in question, like the other, has been abandoned, and for this reason we make no ruling concerning it.

Proceeding upon the basis thus established, it appears that in January, 1894, Franklin Landers, the husband of the intervenor, conveyed to his wife a number of pieces of real estate in Indiana, consisting of farms, town lots, etc., concerning which it is claimed on behalf of plaintiffs that the aggregate value was $158,051, and that the mortgages with which they were burdened amounted to $86,865, leaving a margin of value, carried by the conveyance to his wife, of $71,186; while the intervenor claims that the property was worth $119,080, and that the mortgages equaled or exceeded its value, and the defendant also, upon January 22, 1894, conveyed to his wife the farm seized in this case, which is said to be worth $10,000, and which was then burdened with mortgages amounting to $7,500, exclusive of interest, etc. These different conveyances, evidenced by written instruments, duly recorded, purport to have been sales for money in hand paid. But the interrogatories on facts and articles were propounded by the plainciple of international law settled beyond dispute, it is that the succession to personalty is governed and regulated by the law of the domicile, and, in the absence of a marriage contract, the law of the matrimonial domicile governs as to all rights of the parties to their present property in that place, and as to all personal property wherever it may be situated."

In Townes v. Durbin, 3 Met. (Ky.) 357, 77 Am. Dec. 176, also, the court said that the law of the matrimonial domicile determines the respective rights of husband and wife with regard to movables owned by either at the time of the marriage, though in this case the marriage was celebrated in the state where the parties were domiciled, so that the lex loci and lex domicilii were the same.

The court in Doss v. Campbell, 19 Ala. 590, 54 Am. Dec. 198, said that the lex loci contractus must govern, not only as to the validity of the marriage itself, but also in ascertaining the rights which each party takes in the property of the other, and which either owned at the time of the marriage. In this case, however, both parties to the marriage were domiciled in the state where the marriage took place, and the question was not whether the lex loci contractus or the lex domicilii ought to govern, but as to whether rights already acquired in personal property were affected by a change of the matrimonial domicile and the removal of the property into another state.

In Frank v. Hirsch, 3 App. D. C. 491, the court said that it was a generally admitted rule of law that the law of the place of the marriage governs the rights of the parties in respect to all personal, movable property, wherever situated. In this case the question was simply whether the lex fori or the lex domicilii ought to govern, and there was no conflict between the lex loci of the marriage, and the lex domicilii.

In addition to the above cases which expressly contrast the law of the place where the marriage was celebrated and the law of the matrimonial domicile and hold that the latter governs, that is assumed to be the rule by the cases cited in subdivision IV. infra, and, though they are chiefly concerned with the question as to what place is to be deemed the matrimonial domicile, it will be observed that most of them, having fixed the matrimonial domicile at a place other than that where the marriage was celebrated, apply the law of such domicile to the determination of the rights of the parties, although they would have equally applied the law of the place where the marriage was celebrated if that had happened to coincide with the matrimonial domicile.

IV. How original matrimonial domicile ascertained.

The question as to what place is to be regarded as the matrimonial domicile, the law of which will determine the effect of the marriage upon personal property owned by either party at the time, or subsequently acquired by either or both during the continuance of such domicile, is in its last analysis one of the intention of the parties at the time of the marriage as to where they shall establish their residence, assuming that such intention is carried out within a reasonable time. The various rules that have been adopted on the subject are really rules for ascertaining that intention, or for supplying, by presumption, the lack of any evidence or other circumstances which will reveal it. It follows that one rule yields to another when the existence of an additional fact or circumstance makes the latter a surer guide than the former to the intention of the parties. Thus:

If there be no determinate domicile of either the husband or wife at the time of the marriage the lex loci contractus governs the husband's rights to movable property of his wife at the time of the contract, and the lex rei sitæ to the immovable. Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 620, 33 Am. Dec. 168. This is obviously not because the lex loci will prevail over the lex domicilii, but because, under the circumstances, the matrimonial domicile must be presumed to have been established in the state where the marriage took place. When, however, the previous domicile of the husband is shown, that is to be regarded as the matrimonial domicile in the absence of anything showing a contrary intention, though the marriage was celebrated elsewhere. Ford v. Ford, 2 Mart. N. S. 574, 14 Am. Dec. 201; Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 620, 33 Am. Dec. 168; Layne v. Pardee, 2 Swan, 234; Parrett v. Palmer, 8 Ind. App. 356, 35 N. E. 713; Mason v. Homer, 105 Mass. 116; Land v. Land, 14 Smedes & M. 99; Corrie's Case, 2 Bland, Ch. 488.

In Brien Dit Desrochers v. Marchildon, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 15 C. S. 318, the community of property obtaining in Quebec (the domicile of the husband at the time of the marriage) was applied to the property of the wife, rather than the law of New Hampshire, where the marriage was celebrated and where the parties were residing at the time of its celebration. The de-tiffs for the purpose of enabling them to show that the consideration for the conveyance of the Indiana property was something other than cash, and that it must have included and have extinguished the alleged debt, if any such debt existed, in part payment of which the intervener alleges that the Louisiana farm was conveyed to her. In her answers to those interrogatories, however, and also in her oral examination, the intervener states that the Indiana property was conveyed to her in fulfillment of the verbal promise of her husband that he would in that way make good an interest in that and other property, which interest, secured to her by the law of Indiana, she had parted with at his request, and in order to facilitate him in paying his debts. And in her oral testimony she also states that the Louisiana farm was so conveyed in part satisfaction of her claim against her husband, represented by his note of $10,324.87, for personal funds belonging to her, which had been delivered to and used by him, together with accumulations of interest. As to the consideration for the conveyance of the Indiana property, it appears that by the law of Indiana, which plaintiffs have proved, tenancies by curtesy and in dower have been abolished, and a married woman is given one inchoate one-third, one-fourth, or one-fifth interest, varying, quoad the creditors of her husband, with the value of the property, in all real estate acquired by her husband during the marriage, or in which he may have an equitable interest at the moment of his death, which inchoate interest becomes absolute upon the death of the husband, or upon the forced alienation of the property during his life, unless the wife has previously cision is upon the ground that the husband had not lost his domicile in Quebec, and that the law of the domicile prevails over the law of the place where the husband was temporarily residing and where the marriage was celebrated.

In the foregoing cases the husband's previous domicile was held to fix the matrimonial domicile, and therefore to furnish the law which determined the rights of the parties to the personal property, even though it did not expressly appear that it was the intention of the parties at the time of the marriage to establish it there. It is to be observed, however, that there was nothing to negative such an intention, and it is expressly stated or assumed that the marital home was in fact established there within a reasonable time after the marriage.

A fortiori, the husband's previous domicile will fix the matrimonial domicile and furnish the law by which to determine the rights in personal property, when it expressly appears that at the time of the marriage the parties intended to establish their home there and did so within a reasonable time. It was so held in the following cases, though the husband's domicile was in a state different from "that" in which the marriage was celebrated, and in which the previous domicile of the wife was established: Glenn v. Glenn, 47 Ala. 204; Mason v. Fuller, 36 Conn. 162; Jaffrey v. McGough, 83 Ala. 202, 3 So. 594; Vertner v. Humphreys, 14 Smedes & M. 130; Walker v. Duverger, 4 La. Ann. 569; Ford v. Ford, 2 Mart. N. S. 574, 14 Am. Dec. 201; Routh v. Routh, 9 Rob. (La.) 224, 41 Am. Dec. 326; Connor v. Connor, 10 La. Ann. 440; Arendell v. Arendell, 10 La. Ann. 566; Percy v. Percy, 9 La. Ann. 185; Fisher v. Fisher, 2 La. Ann. 774.

In LeBreton v. Nouchet, 3 Mart. (La.) 60, 5 Am. Dec. 736, it was held that the effect upon property rights of the marriage of a girl thirteen years of age, residing in Louisiana, who, without the consent of her widowed mother, went into Mississippi and was there married, and thereafter, in pursuance of a previous intent, returned to Louisiana with her husband, and there resided with him, was governed by the laws of Louisiana (the lex domicilii, rather than the law of Mississippi (the lex loci contractus). The decision was upon two grounds: First, that the parties intended to and did make Louisiana the matrimonial domicile; and second, even if they did not originally intend to make their domicile in that state, yet the personal incapacity of the minor, under the Louisiana statute, to give her property to her husband, followed her into Mississippi, and 57 L. R. A.

that by the law of nations even a court sitting in Mississippi would recognise her incapacity under the law of her domicile.

While it is true that in the foregoing cases the place which was held to be the matrimonial domicile was in each instance the previous domicile of the husband, yet that fact was regarded as a mere coincidence, or, at most, as one of the circumstances showing the intention of the parties to establish the matrimonial domicile there, and, as already shown, that fact, in the absence of any other circumstances, will be sufficient, of itself, to raise a presumption that such was their intention. In all of these cases, however, it was the intention of the parties at the time of the marriage, followed by its fulfillment within a reasonable time thereafter, that was held to fix the matrimonial domicile, and the principle which governs the decisions would seem to be equally available to fix the matrimonial domicile at a place different from that where the marriage was celebrated, or where either party was previously domiciled. It was held in Harral v. Harral, 39 N. J. Eq. 279, 51 Am. Rep. 17, that the matrimonial domicile must be regarded as established in France so as to subject the personal property in esse at the time of the marriage to its law, although the husband was an American and had never obtained the authorization from the French government which was necessary to enable him to acquire a personal domicile in France. The decision was upon the ground that it was the intention of the parties to make their habitation there. It is true that in this case the marriage was celebrated in France, and the wife was previously domiciled there, but these facts do not appear to have been regarded as important, except, perhaps, for the purpose of illustrating the intent of the parties.

Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 620, 33 Am. Dec. 168, states the principles of international law on the subject as follows:

1. If there be no determinate domicile of either the husband or wife, at the time of the marriage, the lex loci contractus governs the husband's right to the movable property of the wife at the time of the contract, and the lex rei sitæ to the immovable.

2. If the husband and wife have different domiciles, the law of that of the husband is to prevail as to the wife's movable property, because the wife is presumed to follow the domicile of the husband.

3. If the parties at the time of the contract had reference to another state than the one joined him in such alienation, or in imposing encumbrances importing the right to alienate; provided that the wife may elect to take under the will of her husband, if there be one, and provided, also, that in case of judicial sales of such real estate where the value exceeds $20,000 her interest becomes absolute only up to that value. Ind. Rev. Stat. §§ 2482, 2483, 2491, 2499, 2508, 2509. As to the consideration for the conveyance of the Louisiana property, it is shown that the intervener was first married to Washington Conduitt, who died in 1862, leaving her $4,000 by his will, together with $1,400, which he had given her shortly before his death; that in 1865 the $5,400 thus received had increased to $7,200, and that she then married Franklin Landers, to whom, at one time or another, she turned over the whole of that amount, taking his notes therefor; that by reason of the accumulation of the interest allowed by Landers the $7,200 had increased by January, 1883, to $10,324.87; that he then substituted a note for that amount in place of the notes previously given; and that, while interest had been paid on said note from time to time, little or nothing had been paid in reduction of the principal amount up to the date of the conveyance of said Louisiana property, and that said property was conveyed to her in part satisfaction—that is to say, up to the sum of $2,000—of the claim represented by said note. It is admitted by the argument that the intervener had a valuable interest, under the law of Indiana, as above recited, and it is not denied that she parted with it in joining her husband in mortgaging or selling the property to which it attached. Nor is it denied that it was where it was made, as the place where they intended to live, the law of the place of intended residence, if it become the actual residence, will govern the right of the husband to the movable property of the wife, and not the lex loci contractus.

The third principle is clearly broad enough to cover a case where the intention was to establish the marital residence at a place other than the place of the marriage or of the domicile of either party, though the case was apparently disposed of on the second principle.

In McIntyre v. Chappell, 4 Tex. 187, however, the Texas supreme court, though the decision of the point was not necessary to the disposition of the case, held that the mere intention of the parties at the time of a marriage celebrated in Tennessee, where both were previously domiciled, to remove to Texas did not make the latter state their matrimonial domicile, but that Tennessee must be regarded as such domicile, and its law determined the respective rights of the parties to the personal property owned by the wife at the time of the marriage, notwithstanding that the husband left for Texas within two weeks after the marriage and within a little over a year was joined by his wife, and the parties subsequently resided there. The court cited Ford v. Ford, 2 Mart. N. S. 574, 14 Am. Dec. 201, supra, but attempted to distinguish it upon the ground that in that case the husband was previously domiciled in Louisiana, where the matrimonial domicile was held to be fixed, and that that fact materially influenced the court's decision. That was true, but it is to be observed that in that case no express intention was shown, and the decision is referable to the second of the principles stated in Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 620, 38 Am. Dec. 168, supra, the presumption being, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the parties intended to establish the matrimonial domicile at the previous domicile of the husband. In later Louisiana cases, which have been cited above, where the intention expressly appeared, it is clear that that intention governed, though, as already stated, it happened in these cases that the intention coincided with the husband's previous domicile. The Texas supreme court, in a subsequent case (State v. Barrow, 11 Tex. 179, 65 Am. Dec. 109), questioned the correctness of the decision in McIntyre v. Chappell, 4 Tex. 187, on the point, and, while it did not overrule it, it said that it was open for re-examination whenever the necessity arose. It further said that its means of investigating the subject at the time of the first decision were very limited, and admitted that later decisions in Louisiana assert the principle that the intention governs in terms which do not admit of the qualification that the intended domicile shall coincide with the husband's previous domicile.

In Layne v. Pardee, 2 Swan, 234, it was held that the law of Tennessee, the previous domicile of the husband, governed as to the personal property of the wife, although the marriage was celebrated in Texas, where she was domiciled, and notwithstanding that he entertained a floating idea of making his home in Texas at some time or other, it appearing as a fact that the matrimonial domicile was established in Tennessee and continued there until his death. The court questioned whether even his actual agreement at the time of the marriage to establish the home in Texas would make the law of that state govern, but it was found that there was no such actual promise.

The last case suggests a qualification, which is also implied in the cases previously cited, of the rule that the intention of the parties at the time of the marriage determines the matrimonial domicile, viz., that the domicile actually established after the marriage must coincide with the intended domicile, otherwise the law of the intended domicile will not govern. It would seem to follow, as a necessary corollary, that if the intention is abandoned after the marriage the law of the intended domicile will not govern, though even in that case it might be plausibly urged, by those who adopt the theory that the law by which the parties intended to be governed constitutes a tacit contract, that it should still govern, in reply to which, however, it might be said that by abandoning the intention the parties abandoned the tacit contract, if there was any such. But it is not necessary that the intention of the parties should be carried out immediately after the marriage. In the cases above cited it will be observed that the qualification is that the intention must be carried out within a reasonable time. In Fisher v. Fisher, 2 La. Ann. 774, where the intention prevailed, nearly a year elapsed before the parties went to Louisiana (the intended domicile) to reside. So far as concerns property which is acquired after the domicile is actually established, it would seem to be immaterial whether it be regarded as the original matrimonial domicile or not, since, even upon the theory of a change of domicile, its law would govern as to such property. See infra, V. b. But with respect to property owned at the time of the marriage, or acquired before competent, under the law of Indiana, for the husband to make that interest good by the conveyance to the wife of real estate there situated. It is also virtually admitted that this court will be justified, from the evidence in the record, in holding that the intervenor had placed in the hands of her present husband $5,400, with the accretion thereto, which she had received from her first husband and his estate, and that the same had not been returned to her, or otherwise accounted for, prior to the month of January, 1894. And from these premises counsel for the plaintiffs present an argument involving several propositions of law, which may be conceded with certain modifications not material to the plaintiffs' case. Thus, it is conceded that the validity of a conveyance of real estate lying in Louisiana is to be determined by the law of Louisiana, and that the capacity of persons occupying the relation of husband and wife to deal with each other with respect thereto is to be determined by the same law. It is also conceded that under the law of Louisiana a sale between husband and wife can take place only for the considerations stated in the law itself; that, where such sale purports to have been made for some other consideration, it is invalid upon its face, and, if attacked by a party having sufficient interest, the burden of proof, whenever such proof is admissible, rests upon the party seeking to maintain its validity to show that the real consideration was within the exceptions provided by law; and, if the claim be that the real consideration was indebtedness by the husband to the wife on account of money said to have belonged to the wife and to have been received and used by the husband, it must be the parties have actually established their residence at the place of the intended domicil, that place must be regarded as the original matrimonial domicil if its law is to govern. And it is to be observed that the cases heretofore cited have applied the law of the intended domicil indifferently to property acquired before, and to that acquired after, the actual establishment of the marital residence there, and without reference to where the property was received.

V. Change of matrimonial domicil.

a. Property acquired prior to change.

As the marital rights with respect to real property are determined by the lex rei sitæ, supra, II. a, they cannot be affected by the removal of the matrimonial domicil.

With respect to personal property, the rule, established by the great weight of authority is that the rights of the respective parties in such property owned at the time of the marriage or acquired prior to the change are not affected by the removal of the domicil and of the property to a place where a different law obtains. Thus, rights acquired by the husband, by virtue of the common-law rule that obtains at the matrimonial domicil, in personal property owned by the wife at the time of the marriage or acquired prior to the removal, are not affected by a change of the domicil to a place, by the law of which such property remains the separate property of the wife or becomes the common property of the husband and wife. Jaffrey v. McGough, 83 Ala. 202, 3 So. 594; Calahan v. Monroe, 70 Ala. 271; Kraemer v. Kraemer, 82 Cal. 302; Dye v. Dye, 11 Cal. 163; Thorn v. Weatherly, 50 Ark. 237, 7 S. W. 33; Lichtenberger v. Graham, 50 Ind. 288; Oliver v. Robertson, 41 Tex. 422; McIntyre v. Chappell, 4 Tex. 187; Stokes v. Macken, 62 Barb. 145; Vardeman v. Lawson, 17 Tex. 10; Cressey v. Tatom, 9 Or. 541; Henderson v. Trousdale, 10 La. Ann. 548.

So, personal property purchased by a wife from her husband while they were domiciled in a country where she could not thus acquire title remains subject to the claims of the husband's creditors after the removal of the domicil and the property to Maine. Bond v. Cummings, 70 Me. 125.

And personal property of a married woman, which, by the common-law rule in force at the place where the matrimonial domicil was established when the property was acquired, became the property of the husband, does not lose its character as such, or become a part of her paraphernal property, upon the subsequent removal of the domicil to Louisiana, they not having originally intended to establish their domicil there. Hayden v. Nutt, 4 La. Ann. 65.

The removal of the matrimonial domicil and the personal property does not affect the marital rights as fixed by the law of the matrimonial domicil at the time the property was acquired, if that law is proved. Hill v. M'Dermot, Dallam (Tex.) 419. In this case, however, the law of Texas, which was the new domicil, was applied, not because it was the law of the new domicil, but because it was the law of the forum, and there was no proof of the law of the original domicil, the court holding that it could not be presumed that the common law was in force there.

So, in Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298, property given to a wife by her mother during the marriage was treated as her separate property under the New York married woman's act of 1848, even upon the assumption that the parties were married, and the property was received. In Russia. The decision, however, is upon the ground that, as the law of Russia on the subject was not proved, and as it could not be presumed that the common-law rule on the subject obtained there, the law of New York (lex fori) furnished the rule for the determination of the rights of the parties.

The removal of the matrimonial domicil from Louisiana to a state where the community of property does not exist does not vest in the wife any distinct and separate title to one half the community property acquired while the domicil was in Louisiana; but the husband retains the right of administering such property, and will continue to be entitled to enjoy the fruits of the total property. Packwood's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 438, 41 Am. Dec. 341.

In Schurman v. Marley, 29 Ind. 458, it was assumed that if the husband, prior to the removal of the domicil from North Carolina, where the common-law rule was, presumptively, in force, had reduced his wife's personal property to his possession, his right thereto would not have been affected by the subsequent removal of the domicil and property to Indiana, and the decision denying the right of his creditors to the property is upon the ground that prior to the removal to Indiana he had treated the property as the separate property of the wife, and that after that time it was protected as her separate property by the Indiana statute.

On the other hand, personal property which shown, where the parties reside in another state, that by reason of such receipt and conversion the husband became the debtor of the wife, that the debt existed at the time of the conveyance of the property, and that such conveyance was made in satisfaction, or part satisfaction, thereof. It is further conceded that, the intervener and her husband having been residents of Indiana, the question as to whether the husband became indebted to his wife by reason of his receipt and conversion of money said to have belonged to her prior to his conveyance to her of the real estate in Louisiana must be determined by the law of Indiana. The learned counsel then proceed as follows: "(1) It having been shown that the common law has been adopted in Indiana, and it not having been shown that it has, in that respect, been modified by statute, this court will assume, agreeably to the common-law rule, that the husband of the intervener owed her nothing on account of any money belonging, or said to have belonged, to her, which may have been received and converted by him; and hence that there was no consideration, which the law of Louisiana will recognize, to validate the conveyance of the property here situated. (2) If the position, as thus stated, be not sustained, then that the verbal promise of the husband to make good, by conveyance of real estate in Indiana, the interest of which the intervener had divested herself for his accommodation, was not enforceable, in view of the provisions of the Indiana statute of frauds (which the counsel have offered in evidence) on the subject of verbal contracts relating to real estate. And (3) that the net value, after deducting the mortgage debt, of the Indiana property con-by the law of the place where the matrimonial domicile was established at the time of the marriage, or at the time the property was acquired, if it was acquired after the marriage, remained the separate property of the wife, does not lose its character as such by the removal of the domicile to a place where a different rule obtains. Drake v. Glover, 30 Ala. 382; Parrott v. Nimmo, 28 Ark. 351; Grote v. Pace, 71 Ga. 231; Powell v. DeBlane, 23 Tex. 66.

The marital rights of husband and wife in a slave descended to the wife upon the death of her father are governed by the law of Tennessee, where the parties were married in that state without any intention at the time of removing to another state, and were domiciled there at the time the descent was cast upon the wife, although the property was not received until after they had removed to Kentucky. Keyser v. Pilgrim, 25 Tex. Supp. 217. It was so held upon the assumption that by the law of Tennessee the property would be the separate property of the wife, while under the law of Kentucky it would not.

Where a husband, while residing in Alabama, converts personal property of his wife, and thereby, according to the law of that state, becomes her debtor, that debt is not extinguished or merged into the property of the husband upon their removal to Tennessee, and it will constitute a valid consideration for a conveyance by the husband to the wife in preference to his other creditors. Bank of Columbia v. Walker, 14 Lea, 299. The court admitted that rights arising under the law of Alabama could not be enforced in Tennessee if such law were repugnant to the policy and spirit of the law of Tennessee, but held that there was no such repugnancy between the statutes of the two states.

So, the removal of the matrimonial domicile from Louisiana to Missouri does not change the community character of personal property acquired in Louisiana before the removal of the domicile. DePas v. Mayo, 11 Mo. 314, 49 Am. Dec. 88; and a similar decision, mutatis mutandis, is made in Drake v. Glover, 30 Ala. 382, though in the latter case it was held that the mode of transferring the title after its removal, and the change of domicile, to Alabama, must be governed by the law of that state.

The rights and powers of a married woman with respect to personal property acquired before the removal of the matrimonial domicile and the property to Mississippi are governed by the law of the original matrimonial domicile, and not by that of Mississippi. Block v. Cross, 36 Miss. 549. 57 L. R. A.

Slaves secured to a wife in Virginia by deed of trust executed while the matrimonial domicile was established there do not become subject to the debts of the husband after their removal, and the removal of the matrimonial domicile to Louisiana. Jeter v. Deslonde, 6 La. Ann. 379.

In Gilkey v. Pollock, 82 Ala. 503, 3 So. 99, it was held that the obligation of a husband to pay his wife the income and profits received by him from the latter's property, and appropriated while domiciled in Mississippi, was to be determined by the laws of that state, notwithstanding the removal of the domicile to Alabama; but that the liability of the husband for income and profits accruing after the change of domicile was governed by the laws of Alabama, the new domicile. It is to be observed, however, that the Mississippi statute, by virtue of which the income and profits were claimed, did not create an equitable separate estate in the wife, such as equity creates independently of statute, with all its powers, rights, and incidents, but was merely an enabling statute.

Personal property belonging to the wife at the time of the marriage, and which, according to the law of Texas, where the parties were domiciled and the marriage was celebrated, did not vest in the husband, does not become subject to his debts by a change of domicile to another state and the removal of the property to that state. Doss v. Campbell, 19 Ala. 590, 54 Am. Dec. 198.

The removal of a married woman from New York to New Jersey does not divest her of a title to a fund which she held as trustee in New York, although by the law of New Jersey a married woman is incompetent to act as trustee; and the trust may still be enforced in New York after such removal. Schluter v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 117 N. Y. 125, 5 L. R. A. 541, 22 N. E. 572.

But it has been held that when property acquired by a married woman at her domicile in another state, and claimed by her as a part of her separate estate, is brought by herself and husband into Arkansas upon their removal to that state, in order to protect her title to it against persons dealing with her husband with reference to it she must show that she acquired a perfect title to the property according to the law of the state where it was acquired, and that her title is recorded either in that state or in Arkansas, under the law of the latter state. Hydrick v. Burke, 30 Ark. 124.

It is to be observed that the rule that the law of the original matrimonial domicile governs as veyed to the intervener exceeded the value of the interest which she claims it was intended to make good, and hence that it should be held that such conveyance also operated to extinguish the claim for money received and converted."

The propositions 2 and 3 will first be considered in their order as stated above. In support of proposition 2 we are referred to the case of Worth v. Patton, 5 Ind. App. 272, 31 N. E. 1130, in which it appeared that the husband desired to convey certain lands to the children of a former wife, and that he verbally promised the wife that, if she would join him in such conveyance, thus releasing her inchoate interest, he would convey to her certain other real estate, which promise was accepted and acted on by the wife; but that the husband died without fulfillment on his part. It further appeared that the widow then made a claim against the estate of the deceased, asking to be made good with respect to the interest with which she had thus parted, which claim was resisted on the ground that the promise was void under the statute of frauds. It was held by the court that, if the action had been brought for specific performance, or for damages for breach of contract, the defense might have prevailed, but that the widow was entitled to recover the fair value of the interest with which she had parted upon the faith of a promise which had not been fulfilled, and which could not be enforced. This decision appears to us to be equally sound in law and in morals, but we are unable to perceive in what way it supports the proposition of the learned counsel. It was not held that the husband could not, under the statute of frauds, have complied with his

to the rights of husband and wife, as between themselves, in personal property acquired before the change of domicile, is strictly limited to rights which were vested in one or the other at the time of the change. As so limited this rule does not conflict with the well-established rule that the law of the last domicile of deceased governs the distribution of his personal estate. The latter rule, of course, only operates upon property which the decedent owned at the time of his death, and only to the extent of his title. A mere statute of distribution of the original domicile, by which either spouse is to share in the other's personal estate upon the latter's death, creates no vested rights which survive the removal of the domicile, and therefore offers no obstacle to the application of the statute of distribution of the new domicile if that was the domicile of the deceased spouse at time of death. When, however, a statute of the original domicile creates a right in either spouse which, though its enjoyment is postponed until the death of the other spouse, is nevertheless a vested right, it survives the removal of the domicile, and operates to withdraw the property, to the extent of the right, from the assets of the deceased upon which the law of the new domicile may operate.

Thus, in Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548, it was held that the right of a husband under the statute of Mississippi, where the marriage was celebrated and the original matrimonial domicile was established, to slaves owned by the wife at the time of the marriage, in the event of her death without issue, was a vested right which was not defeated by the removal of the matrimonial domicile and the slaves to Texas, and that upon the death of the wife, while the matrimonial domicile was established in Texas, his rights under the Mississippi statute would prevail over the rights of her next of kin under the Texas statute of distribution. The decision with reference to the vested character of the husband's right was upon the ground that at common law marriage operated as an absolute gift to the husband of the personal property of the wife in her possession at the time of the marriage, and that such right of the husband was not to be considered as restricted or abrogated to any greater extent than was required by the express and positive language of the statute, or by necessary implication.

But it was held by the same court in Hairston v. Hairston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530, that a statute of the original matrimonial domicile which prevents a husband, by testamentary disposition, from depriving the wife of her statutory portion of the effects of which he may die possessed, does not create a vested right in the wife with respect to personal property owned by the husband before the removal of the matrimonial domicile to another state, and does not govern the distribution of the estate of the husband, where, at the time of the death, the matrimonial domicile was established at another place where a different law prevailed.

The Texas supreme court, in Powell v. DeBlane, 23 Tex. 66, followed the construction of the Mississippi statute involved in Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548, which was adopted in the latter case, and accordingly held that the right of the husband to take the slaves in the event contemplated by the statute was a vested one, and was not affected by the removal of the matrimonial domicile and the death of the wife in a state, by the laws of which the slaves would go to the parents, or brothers, or sisters of deceased. The court was very much inclined to doubt whether, as an independent proposition, the right could be regarded as a vested one; but held that it would adopt the views of the Mississippi supreme court upon the construction of a statute of that state.

In State ex rel. Cunningham v. Carroll, 6 Mo. App. 263, it was held that where a married woman has acquired personal property which, by the law of the matrimonial domicile at the time of its acquisition, was a part of her separate estate, and the matrimonial domicile and property are subsequently removed to a state which forbids the recognition of the wife's separate right to property, the property will become liable to her husband's debts. In this case, however, it was held that there was in reality no conflict between the law of Ohio, the original matrimonial domicile, and the law of Missouri, to which the matrimonial domicile was removed, because a rule of equity in force in the latter state protected the separate estate of a married woman without the intervention of a nominal trustee, the husband becoming the wife's trustee by operation of law. The assumption in this case that the law of Missouri (the new domicile) would prevail over the law of Ohio (the original domicile) as to property acquired in Ohio is against the great weight of authority.

It was pointed out in subd. II. c. supra, that in general the character of property as real or personal is determined by the lex rei sitæ; but in neither of those cases did it appear that the property had been removed from a state where it bore a different character. It would seem promise, nor was it held that, if he had complied with it, a creditor to whom he contracted a debt eighteen months later could have successfully attacked the conveyance upon the ground that the consideration was inadequate.

Proposition No. 3 appears to us to involve a non sequitur, since, assuming that the net value of the Indiana property conveyed to the intervener exceeded that of the interest which she claims it was intended to make good, it would not follow that the parties intended the excess in value to be attributed to the extinguishment of the claim for personal funds had and converted by the husband. There are other hypotheses to be taken into account. Landers may have intended to convey the property to his wife for an inadequate consideration, or he may have believed—the opinions of the witnesses who have been examined in this case, or the fact, if it be a fact, or both the opinions and the fact, to the contrary notwithstanding—that the property was not worth more than the claim in satisfaction of which it was transferred. There is nothing to indicate that any creditor was left unsatisfied at the time that the conveyances in question were made, and those conveyances certainly inflicted no injury on plaintiffs, whose debt had not then been contracted, and was not contracted until a year or more later. But if the purpose had been to place the property of the husband, both in Indiana and Louisiana, beyond the reach of the husband's future creditors, it is not apparent why the claim of the wife for the restitution of her personal funds, which claim, there was reason to believe, might serve as a valid consideration for the conveyance to that where the personal character had attached to property before its removal that character would be respected so far as rights previously acquired are concerned; and in Henderson v. Trousdale, 10 La. Ann. 548, supra, the law of Georgia, where the matrimonial domicile was established at the time slaves were acquired by the wife, was held to govern after their removal and the removal of the domicile, notwithstanding that in Louisiana slaves were regarded as real property, and not as personal property as in Georgia. No question, however, seems to have been raised that the slaves should have been treated as real property.

b. Property acquired after the change.

See also Schurman v. Marley, 20 Ind. 458, supra, V. a.

The respective rights of the parties in personal property acquired subsequently to the change of domicile are governed by the law of the new domicile,—at least if that domicile is accepted by both parties; or, to put the proposition in a somewhat broader form so as to cover a case where there has been more than one change, it is the law of the actual domicile at the time the property is acquired that governs, and not that of the original matrimonial domicile, or of any intermediate domicile. Dow v. Gould & C. Silver Min. Co. 31 Cal. 629; Kneeland v. Ensley, Meigs, 620, 33 Am. Dec. 168; Halrston v. Halrston, 27 Miss. 704, 61 Am. Dec. 530; McCollum v. Smith, Meigs, 342, 33 Am. Dec. 147; State v. Barrow, 14 Tex. 180, 65 Am. Dec. 109; Castro v. Illies, 22 Tex. 479, 78 Am. Dec. 277; Saul v. His Creditors, 5 Mart. N. S. 569, 16 Am. Dec. 212; Gidney v. Moore, 86 N. C. 485; Murphy v. Murphy, 5 Mart. (La.) 83, 12 Am. Dec. 475; Packwood's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 438, 41 Am. Dec. 341; Hicks v. Pope, 8 La. 556, 28 Am. Dec. 142; Gaius v. Cannon, 42 Ark. 503; Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548.

A husband is not liable to his wife for the value of personal property, other than choses in action, owned by her prior to the removal of the matrimonial domicile from a state where the common-law rule as to the rights of husband and wife obtains, although the property was not reduced to possession by him until after the removal to Louisiana; but it is otherwise with respect to the proceeds of choses in action not reduced to possession, but collected after the removal to Louisiana, and with respect to money received after the removal of the domicile, representing the proceeds of real property of the wife situated at the former domicile. Henderson v. Trousdale, 10 La. Ann. 548. The distinction here made with reference to the different classes of property is due to the fact that the first class vested in the husband before the removal, and therefore, in accordance with the rule previously stated (supra, V. a) his right to it was not affected; while the other class never vested in him because not reduced to possession before the removal.

It will be observed that the rule relating to property acquired after a change of domicile has been stated with the qualification that both parties accept the new domicile. There is no warrant for such qualification in the cases above cited to sustain the rule. It may be remarked, however, that in none of these cases did it appear that there was any dissent by either party to the change of domicile. It has been suggested by some writers on Conflict of Laws (Wharton, § 194; Westlake, p. 64), in accordance with the views of the foreign jurists, that the rule does not apply when the change of domicile is disadvantageous to the wife, and is not accepted by her. This qualification in the broad form in which it is here stated seems to have no support from the American or English cases except as hereafter indicated. In Bonati v. Welsch, 24 N. Y. 157, which is cited by Wharton in support of it, the New York court of appeals did hold that the right of a wife, under the law of France, where the marriage was celebrated and the original matrimonial domicile established, to be reimbursed out of her husband's estate, upon his death, in preference to his legatees and creditors, for the proceeds of a sale of her immovable property in France which were appropriated by him, was not defeated by the fact that the husband was domiciled in New York at the time of his death, and that no part of the property left by him was acquired in France. The majority opinion in this case, however, proceeds upon the express assumption that the domicile of the wife, who remained in France, was not changed. It expressly said: "As a general rule the domicile of the wife follows that of the husband, and there is much force in the argument that in the absence of an express agreement defining the matrimonial rights the law of the contemplated or any future domicile should govern. But in the case now under consideration the domicile of the wife has not been changed and the rights she acquired . . . [under the law of the original] matrimonial domicile, are not, we think, lost or impaired by the change of the domicile of the husband." It does not ap-her of the Louisiana property, should have been exhausted in Indiana, when, as we infer from the fact that plaintiffs appear to have made no attack on them, the consideration for the conveyances in Indiana, as stated by the intervener, was sufficient to enable her to hold the property there conveyed.

Passing to some other questions, there is no doubt that the Louisiana farm, having been acquired during the marriage, was community property, though Landers and his wife resided in Indiana. Civil Code, art. 2400. But that did not prevent its conveyance to the wife, provided there was a consideration, which, under the law of Louisiana, would be sufficient to support a sale or dation en paiement from husband to wife. The position taken in the answer to the intervention that the intervener, as part of the price, assumed the mortgage debts resting upon the property, and due by the husband, is not sustained by the fact. The intervener did not assume the mortgage debts, but took the property subject to the mortgages, and only for its supposed value over and above the debts thus secured. So, also, with regard to the position that property worth $10,000 was conveyed to her in extinguishment of her claim to the extent of only $2,000, and that the price was "vile," etc. Such was not the fact. The property was conveyed subject to mortgages amounting to $7,500, exclusive of costs, interest, attorney's fees, etc., for which it may be liable, and hence the interest acquired by the intervener seems to bear but a just proportion to the claim for which it is said to have been given in satisfaction. Colvin v. Johnston, 104 La. Ann. 655, 29 So. 274.

pear what the circumstances were that prevented the domicil of the wife from following that of the husband in accordance with the general rule; but in view of the language quoted it is clear that this case cannot be regarded as authority for the broad proposition that in every case where the change of domicil would be disadvantageous to the wife, and she refuses to accept the new domicil, the law of the original matrimonial domicil will govern. Upon the assumption that the wife's domicil did not, under the circumstances of the case, follow that of the husband, this case would not seem to come within the terms of the rule above stated, that the respective rights of husband and wife are governed by the actual domicil, for actual domicil in this connection undoubtedly means matrimonial domicil, or (if that term be confined to the domicil acquired at the time of the marriage) the marital domicil; and if the circumstances are such as to justify the wife in retaining the original domicil, the new domicil of the husband can scarcely be regarded as the matrimonial or marital domicil, to the exclusion of that of the wife. Therefore it seems unnecessary to invoke any exception to the general rule in order to account for the decision in this case. There was a dissenting opinion in the case which expressly proceeds upon the assumption that the wife's domicil followed the husband's; and the difference in these two assumptions accounts for the difference in the results reached without imputing to either majority or minority any intention to decide that in all cases the law of the original matrimonial domicil will govern when the change is disadvantageous to the wife and she refuses to accept the new domicil. Indeed, it has been expressly held in Louisiana that property acquired by a husband after his removal to that state falls into the community although the marriage was celebrated and the original matrimonial domicil established elsewhere, and the wife never actually resided in Louisiana. Cole v. His Executors, 7 Mart. N. S. 42, 18 Am. Dec. 241; Dixon v. Dixon, 4 La. 188, 23 Am. Dec. 478. These decisions, however, were upon the ground that the Louisiana statute regulating the rights of husband and wife was real, not personal, and that it regulated things and subjected them to the laws of the country in which they were found, irrespective of the residence of the parties.

It was held in the chancery division in Re DeNicols [1898] 1 Ch. 403, 67 L. J. Ch. N. S. 274, 78 L. T. N. S. 152, that the marital rights of a native French man and woman, married 57 L. R. A.

in France, in personal property acquired after the removal of the matrimonial domicil to England, were governed by the law of France (the original matrimonial domicil) where the community of property obtains, rather than the law of England, where such property belongs to the husband. The decision is upon the ground that where there is no express matrimonial contract there is an implied contract that the law of the matrimonial domicil shall govern with respect to all property wherever acquired. This decision, however, was reversed by the court of appeal in Re DeNicols [1898] 2 Ch. 60, 78 L. T. N. S. 541, 67 L. J. Ch. N. S. 419, and it was held by that court, upon the authority of Lashley v. Hog, 4 Pat. 581, that the law of England governed so that the whole of the husband's personal estate was effectually disposed of by his will. The English doctrine is therefore in accord with the American on this point.

c. Tacit mortgages or liens.

The mortgage or privilege upon the property of the husband's estate, which the law of Louisiana gives to a wife as security for her separate property converted by the husband, does not secure the restoration of money converted by the husband before the removal of the domicil to Louisiana, although the money was, by the law of the matrimonial domicil at the time of the conversion, protected as the separate property of the wife. The wife is to be regarded only as an ordinary creditor. Arnold v. McBride, 6 La. Ann. 703.

Neither does the tacit or legal mortgage upon the property of the husband in favor of the wife, created by the law of the original matrimonial domicil, to secure to the wife the restoration of the dower which she brought to her husband or of her paraphernal property converted by the husband, follow them into a new matrimonial domicil, and attach to property subsequently acquired in such new domicil. Hall v. Harris, 11 Tex. 305; Valansart's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 848.

By the acknowledged law of comity, a paraphernal right of a married woman under the law of Louisiana, the matrimonial domicil, and the lien on the husband's estate to protect it, are as ubiquitous as the persons themselves, and follow them wherever they may afterwards settle. Kendall v. Coons, 1 Bush, 530.

A tacit mortgage upon the husband's property in favor of the wife, arising under the law of the original matrimonial domicil, to secure

The question which remains is, Was there a consideration for the conveyance of the Louisiana property from husband to wife, such as can be recognized under Louisiana law? The conveyance purports to be a sale for $2,000, and is invalid upon its face. A contract of sale between husband and wife can take place only in the three following cases: "(1) When one of the spouses makes a transfer of property to the other, who is judicially separated from him or her, in payment of his or her rights. (2) When the transfer made by the husband to his wife, even though not separated, has a legitimate cause, as the replacing of her dotal or other effects alienated. (3) When the wife makes a transfer to the husband of property, in payment of a sum promised him as dowry." Civil Code, art. 2446. The burden of proof is on the intervener to show that the conveyance, which appears upon its face to be invalid because the consideration expressed is not within the exceptions of the law, is based upon another and a different consideration, which is within those exceptions. She has undertaken to accomplish this by showing that she turned over to her husband certain funds, which, in this state, would be considered paraphernal, and that the property in question was conveyed to her by her husband in part satisfaction of the debt which he incurred in receiving and using said funds. But she has not shown that her husband thereby incurred any debt, for that is a matter which is to be determined by the law of their domicile, where the funds were received and converted. The plaintiffs have proved the adoption of the common law by the state of Indiana, — a fact of which we might have taken ju-the restoration to the wife of her paraphernal property converted by the husband, will not, even as to property acquired at the original matrimonial domicile, be allowed a preference over the claims of creditors after the removal of the matrimonial domicile, and the property, to another state. Hall v. Harrie, 11 Tex. 305. This is upon the principle that a priority or preference acquired as an incident to a foreign contract by the lex loci contractus will not be enforced against those persons who have acquired rights under contracts made after the removal of the matrimonial domicile!.

VI. Marriage settlements.

As will hereafter be shown, the question as to what law determines the validity and construction of an antenuptial contract depends upon a variety of circumstances; but when the appropriate law has been applied, and the contract has been held valid, and its construction determined, it governs with respect to all the rights of the parties that are within its scope, and to that extent supplants all laws on the subject, even those of the forum, unless it is contrary to the public policy of the forum. Thus:

Where parties contracting marriage have entered into an express antenuptial contract, that contract will, of course, furnish the rule which will govern in regard to matrimonial property, and will, upon recognized principles, be carried into effect in every jurisdiction, subject, of course, to the exceptions which are applicable to all other classes of contracts. Lyon v. Knott, 26 Miss. 548.

Where there is an express antenuptial contract, it will generally be admitted to govern all the property of the parties, not only in the matrimonial domicile, but in every other place, unless it contravenes some law or principle of public policy of the country where it is sought to be enforced. Besse v. Pellochoux, 73 Ill. 285, 24 Am. Rep. 242.

But while it has been held that the contract will act directly on personal property within its scope, wherever situated, it will, with respect to real property in a foreign country, at most, only confer a right of action to be enforced according to the jurisprudence rei sitæ. Ibid.; Ordonaux v. Rey, 2 Sandf. Ch. 33. In the latter case it was held that a provision of the French Code, which gives the wife a mortgage on the immovables of the husband to secure her demands arising under an antenuptial settlement, could not be extended so as to give 57 L. R. A.

her such a lien upon real property of the husband situated in New York.

It sometimes becomes a question what property is within the scope of the contract. This question is, in its last analysis, one as to the intention of the parties, and the rules on the subject are in reality rules for ascertaining that intention. Thus, there can ordinarily be no question but that personal property, which was in esse at the time the contract was executed, or which was acquired during the continuance of the original matrimonial domicile, was within the contemplation of the parties; and, that being so, the fact that the domicile and the property are subsequently removed to another state or country does not take the property out of the contract, or affect any rights with respect to it which have vested under the contract. De Lane v. Moore, 14 How. 253, 14 L. ed. 409; O'Neill v. Henderson, 15 Ark. 235, 60 Am. Dec. 568; Frank v. Hirsch, 3 App. D. C. 491; Young v. Templeton, 4 La. Ann. 254, 50 Am. Dec. 563; Jeter v. Deslonde, 6 La. Ann. 379; Eager v. Brown, 14 La. Ann. 695; LeBreton v. Miles, 8 Paige, 261.

And it is not even necessary to record the contract in the state to which the domicile and property are removed in order to protect the wife's rights thereunder against the husband's creditors. Frank v. Hirsch, 3 App. D. C. 491; Jeter v. Deslonde, 6 La. Ann. 379; O'Neill v. Henderson, 15 Ark. 235; Hicks v. Skinner, 71 N. C. 539, 17 Am. Rep. 16.

So, a marriage settlement or deed in favor of the wife, duly executed and recorded in one state, will be good against the creditors of the husband in another jurisdiction, although they may have had no express notice. Bank of United States v. Lee, 13 Pet. 107, 10 L. ed. 81; DeLane v. Moore, 14 How. 253, 14 L. ed. 409.

In Youngblood v. Flagg, 11 La. 337, it was assumed that if the claims of the husband's creditors had accrued before the wife's death, the law of South Carolina, where the parties were domiciled at the time of the settlement, requiring acts of settlement to be recorded in order to be good as against such claims, would have governed, and that it would have been necessary to record the settlement in order to have protected the personal property of the wife in Louisiana from the claims of such creditors; but it was held that the law did not apply because the claims did not accrue until after the wife's death and until after the trust had vested for the benefit of the children.

The contract governs, even with respect to dicial notice, as we now take judicial notice of what the common law is, though we do not take such cognizance of the statutory modifications of that law. Copley v. Sanford, 2 La. Ann. 335, 46 Am. Dec. 548; Kling v. Sejour, 4 La. Ann. 130; Ripka v. Pope, 5 La. Ann. 63, 52 Am. Dec. 579; Gates v. Gaither, 46 La. Ann. 292, 15 So. 50; Lambert v. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. 50 La. Ann. 1031, 24 So. 16; Roehl v. Porteous, 47 La. Ann. 1582, 18 So. 645; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1058. At common law a married woman cannot possess personal property independently of her husband except where a trust is created for her separate benefit, and the promise of the husband to repay money received from the wife during coverture would be without consideration. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 820; Henderson v. Trousdale, 10 La. Ann.

548; McCall v. White, 10 La. Ann. 577; Eager v. Brown, 14 La. Ann. 695; Quigly v. Muse, 15 La. Ann. 197. There is no evidence in the record that this rule has been modified by statute in Indiana, and hence we have no basis upon which to hold that the receipt of money from his wife and its conversion by Landers imposed any obligation upon him the discharge of which could serve as the consideration for the conveyance to her of property in this state. Even if it had been shown that, by reason of statutory modification in Indiana of the common law otherwise prevailing there, Landers became the debtor of his wife with respect to her personal funds received and converted by him, and that he also owed interest thereon under an agreement to that effect, such obligation would not be held, in this state, to stand upon the same footing future acquisitions, after a change of domicile, if such was the intention of the parties.

Thus, a stipulation in a marriage contract that there shall be a community of goods to be regulated by the custom of Paris wherever the parties shall go, governs the rights of the parties with respect to property acquired after their removal to a new domicile, and will be enforced by the courts of that domicile, if not incompatible with their own laws, or prejudicial to their own citizens. Murphy v. Murphy, 5 Mart. (La.) 83, 12 Am. Dec. 475.

But where an antenuptial contract applies in terms or intent only to present property, or is to be performed only in the country where made, and there is a change of domicile, the law of actual domicile will govern the rights of the parties as to all future acquisitions. Besse v. Pellochoux, 73 Ill. 285, 24 Am. Rep. 242; Fuss v. Fuss, 24 Wis. 256, 1 Am. Rep. 180.

It was held in the latter case, under the influence of this principle, that a marital contract executed in Prussia, and which was obviously made with reference to its operation and effect within the Kingdom of Prussia and upon the property of the parties there situated, and made no reference to property situated elsewhere, did not govern with respect to real property acquired in Wisconsin after the removal of the domicile to that state, but that the law of Wisconsin governed as to such property.

Where there is an antenuptial contract, and it does not expressly provide, and the intention is not manifest, that it is to apply to and govern all after-acquired property wherever the parties may reside, it will not be admitted to have that effect,—at least upon real property acquired in a country to which the matrimonial domicile is removed; but with respect to real property at least, if not personal property, acquired after such removal, the law of the new domicile governs. Castro v. Illies, 22 Tex. 479, 73 Am. Dec. 277. In this case the contract, which was made in France, provided that there should be no community of property. There was no stipulation that its provisions should govern as to property thereafter acquired in whatever country the parties might reside, but there was an express reference to the law of France, and a declaration of intention to be governed by its provisions, with certain modifications therein expressed. The court said that the inference was that the parties did not contemplate a change of domicile, and did not contract with reference to their after acquisitions in case of removal to another country.

57 L. R. A.

So, in Long v. Hess, 154 Ill. 482, 27 L. R. A. 791, 40 N. E. 335, it was held that an antenuptial contract executed in Germany did not govern with respect to real property in Illinois acquired by the husband after the removal of the matrimonial domicile to that state. The decision does not turn upon the point that the property was real property, but upon the point that the contract cannot be regarded as having contemplated future acquisitions of property after the removal of the original domicile, because, to use the language of Judge Story (Conflict of Laws, § 143), it "does not speak fully to the very point." The principle of the decision, therefore, seems equally applicable to personal, as well as to real, property.

In Tourne v. Tourne, 9 La. 457, the court held that, notwithstanding that the marriage contract was entered into at a place where no community of acquets and gains existed by law, and none were stipulated, yet when the parties removed to Louisiana such a community took place by operation of law with reference to property acquired in that state unless expressly excluded by the contract.

Having determined by the application of the principles stated in the foregoing cases whether the property is within the scope of the contract, it becomes necessary to determine the validity and construction of the contract; and to determine that question, it may be necessary to ascertain what law governs the contract. As between the law of the place where the contract was executed and that of the matrimonial domicile, the latter governs,—at least in the absence of a contrary intention,—with respect to the construction of the contract and as to its validity,—at least so far as its validity depends upon its subject-matter.

Thus, the law of the place or country which the parties contemplate as their domicile governs with respect to an antenuptial contract,—at least so far as personal property is concerned. LeBreton v. Miles, 8 Paige, 261. In this case it was held that an antenuptial contract executed in New York, where the marriage was celebrated, between natives of France, was to be construed according to the law of France, it appearing that the contract was made with reference to the law of France and to an intended residence in that country, and was, by its terms, to be afterwards drawn up in due form of a marriage contract according to the law of France, although that was not done, and although the parties subsequently changed their minds about their residence and continued to reside in New York.

as the debt of a citizen of Louisiana to his resident wife for paraphernal or dotal funds received by him. Nor would a conveyance of property, made in this state, in satisfaction of the one debt, be here given the effect which, under our law, is accorded to the dation en paiement in satisfaction of the other. Prats v. His Creditors, 2 Rob. (La.) 501; Stewart v. His Creditors, 12 La. Ann. 89; Hyman v. Schlenker, 44 La. Ann. 118, 10 So. 623. The counsel for the intervener contends, however, that a creditor can proceed by the seizure of property, the title to which is in another person than his debtor, only where such title is a pure simulation. Correctly stated, we take the rule upon this subject to be that, "when immovable property has been sold by authentic act, valid on its face, and accompanied by actual delivery, and continuous possession and control by the vendee, as owner, a creditor of the vendor cannot seize the property in disregard of the transfer; and, when enjoined by the vendee, such seizing creditor will not be allowed to allege and prove that the sale is a fraudulent simulation. . . . The title of the vendor under such circumstances can only be attacked in a direct action in avoidance of the sale. . . . And in such direct action, whether revocatory or en declaration de simulation, the plaintiff must aver and prove that the act sought to be avoided operates injuriously to him." Willis v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 1026; Cochrane v. Gibert, 41 La. Ann. 735, 6 So. 731; Thompson v. Herring, 45 La. Ann. 991, 13 So. 398. In the case last above cited the syllabus reads in part: "If the act of sale evidenced a real transaction, whatever its character, the

The question arose between the husband and wife as to their respective rights, under this contract, in the wife's share in her father's estate in New York.

An antenuptial agreement, entered into in Paris between persons residing there but domiciled in England, executed according to the formalities required by the law of France, and which was conditioned upon a marriage avant la loi, is, at least as to English property, put into effect by a marriage in Paris which is valid according to the law of England, whether it would be valid according to the law of France or not; and, with respect to such property, the validity of the agreement must be determined by reference to the law of England. Este v. Smyth, 18 Beav. 112, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 705, 18 Jur. 300.

In the two cases next cited it will be observed that the place of the contract and the place of the matrimonial domicile (determining the location of such domicile in the manner shown in supra, IV.) were the same, so that there was no conflict between the lex loci and the lex domicilii.

The validity of a marriage settlement made in England between a domiciled Turkish subject and an English woman, on faith of his promise to reside in England, is to be determined by the law of England rather than the law of Turkey. Colliss v. Hector, L. R. 19 Eq. 334, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 207, 32 L. T. N. S. 223, 23 Week. Rep. 485.

An antenuptial contract drawn in Scotch form, between parties domiciled in Scotland, is to be construed with reference to the law of Scotland in determining the respective property rights of the contracting parties. Austruther v. Adair, 2 Myl. & K. 513.

It will also be observed that in some of the cases cited below, where the place of the contract and the place of the matrimonial domicile were the same, and the conflict was between the law of that place and the law of the place where the property was situated, or the law of the forum, the law of the place of the contract is apparently held to govern; but since in these cases the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii were the same, they are authority neither for nor against the proposition that, as between the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii, the former governs.

But it was held in Wilder's Succession, 22 La. Ann. 219, 2 Am. Rep. 721, that the capacity of the parties to, and the form of, an antenuptial contract must be tested by the laws of the place where it was made, although its effect will be governed by the laws of the place where they contemplated the establishment of their matrimonial domicile and where it was intended the contract should have effect. In this case one of the parties was a minor, and it seems that by the lex loci contractus the question whether the contract was, for that reason, void, or voidable merely, would depend upon the question whether it was advantageous or otherwise to the minor. The court held that, in determining that question, the lex loci contractus alone must be considered, and that the law of the contemplated matrimonial domicile could not be considered for that purpose.

It was held in Davenport v. Karnes, 70 Ill. 465, however, that the validity of a parol antenuptial contract was to be determined by the law of Illinois, the matrimonial domicile, rather than that of Pennsylvania, where it was made.

In Este v. Smyth, 18 Beav. 112, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 705, 18 Jur. 300, the rule above stated, that, as between the lex loci and the lex domicilii, the latter governs, seems to be regarded as resting upon the presumed intention of the parties, and as yielding to a contrary intention. It was there held that persons domiciled in England may, in anticipation of an English marriage to be contracted in the country, agree that their marital rights shall be regulated according to the laws of any other country they may see fit.

In Bourcier v. Lanusse, 3 Mart. (La.) 581, however, it was held that a provision in a marriage contract entered into in Louisiana, which, so far as appears, was the matrimonial domicile, that rights of the parties should be determined according to the custom of Paris, was invalid, and that their rights must be determined according to the law of Louisiana. It was admitted that if strangers had made such a submission in a foreign country subject to that law, it would regulate the effect of their contract in Louisiana.

So, in Morales v. Marigny, 14 La. Ann. 867, it was held that, although the parties, by their marriage contract, submitted themselves to the law of Spain as to the interpretation of their rights and claims upon each other, they did not, and could not, oust the tribunals of Louisiana, the place of their intended and actual residence, of jurisdiction of their disputes, and that jurisdiction is necessarily to be exercised according to "our own" rules. In this case, also, the contract was apparently executed in Louisiana. Neither of these cases, therefore, presents the question whether parties may, by express provision to that effect, stipulate that administratrix could not ignore it, or attack it collaterally, but could only claim its judicial revocation by direct action." But in the case at bar the putative sale from husband to wife, purporting to have been made for money in hand paid, is not valid upon its face, but is distinctly invalid, as being apparently in violation of a prohibitory law. It cannot, therefore, be said to evidence a real transaction, but leaves the title to the property, apparently, in the vendor, and subject to seizure at the suit of his creditor.

Our learned brother of the district court, after a conscientious and exhaustive review of the case, concludes his opinion as follows: "It seems, so far as I am advised, that under the law of Indiana the husband and wife have almost unlimited power to contract with each other. Under our own law, restitution to the wife by the husband is looked upon with favor. . . . The sale in controversy in this case was an accomplished fact long before the plaintiffs ever became creditors of the defendant, Landers, and the intervener, by virtue of that sale, had accepted that property, and gone into actual possession of the same. For the foregoing reasons, and after a prolonged and thorough study of the question and all the law and facts bearing upon it, I am forced to conclude that the transaction or transfer in controversy vested title to the property in the intervener, and she is accordingly declared to be the true and lawful owner," etc. We infer from this that something may have been conceded in the argument in the district court as to the statutory moditheir rights shall be determined by the lex loci rather than the lex domicilii.

As between the law of the matrimonial domicile on the one side and that of the forum, or of the place where the property is situated, on the other the former governs with respect to the validity of the contract,—at least so far as matters of substance are concerned. Thus, in Townsend v. Maynard, 45 Pa. 198, the validity of a husband's settlement of property upon his wife, and of a subsequent loan from the latter to the former out of the proceeds of the property so settled upon her, was determined by the law of New York, where the parties resided at the time, and where the transactions were had, though the question arose in Pennsylvania between the wife, who had seized goods of the husband in that state in satisfaction of her debt, and his other creditors, who claimed that the settlement, being voluntary, was void as against them.

So, in Scheferling v. Huffman, 4 Ohio St. 241, 62 Am. Dec. 281, the validity of an antenuptial contract executed in Germany between persons domiciled there was determined by the law of Germany. The contract involved in this case provided, in effect, that the wife should retain title to all the property previously owned by her, and that all the property that they might mutually acquire during the marriage should belong to her. The question arose between the wife and the creditors of the husband, who seized personal property in Ohio, some of which represented the joint product of the wife's means and the husband's labor. The contract was held to protect her as against the creditors, the court saying that the enforcement of the contract according to the law of Germany would not interfere with the policy of the laws of Ohio.

So, though it yields when a contrary intention is manifest, the general rule is that the law of the matrimonial domicile, rather than that of the place where the property is situated or located, or where the question arises, governs with respect to the construction of the contract, using the term "construction" in the sense of the interpretation of the language of the contract, and the determination of its effect on property which, under the rules previously stated, is within its scope. It will be observed that in some of the cases hereafter cited to sustain this proposition the language used indicates that it is the lex loci that governs; but in these cases there was no conflict between the lex loci and the lex domicilii, and, in view of the cases previously cited in this subdivision, and those cited in subdivision III. 57 L. R. A.

supra, it seems well established that if the lex loci and the lex domicilii had been different, the latter would have been chosen.

An antenuptial contract made in France between persons domiciled there at the time will be interpreted and allowed to have the same effect in New York as it would have in France, unless it is repugnant to the laws of New York or to its public policy; and it is not so repugnant because it provides for reciprocal or mutual donation between husband and wife, a mode of acquiring property by the wife unknown to the laws of New York. Crosby v. Berger, 3 Edw. Ch. 538.

So, rights dependent upon nuptial contracts are, even in the absence of a provision to that effect, to be determined by the lex loci contractus. Découche v. Savetier, 3 Johns. Ch. 190, 8 Am. Dec. 478. The lex loci and lex domicilii were the same in this case.

In Carroll v. Renich, 7 Smedes & M. 798, where the title to personal property in Mississippi was involved, it was held that the validity and extent of operation of an antenuptial contract executed in Tennessee, by parties resident there at the time, the marriage having taken place there, were governed by the law of Tennessee. In this case Tennessee was both the place of the contract and of the matrimonial domicile.

In LaFitte v. Lawton, 25 Ga. 305, the court said that an antenuptial contract, having been made in South Carolina by parties residing there at the time, it must be construed according to the laws of that state, and in this case the meaning of the word "issue" in the contract was determined by reference to the law of South Carolina, though the personal property, over which the controversy arose, was located in Georgia. In Brown v. Ransey, 74 Ga. 210, also, it was held that the word "heirs" in an antenuptial settlement which provided that, in case of the failure of the wife to dispose of her distributive share of an estate located in Georgia and South Carolina, it should go to her "heirs," was to be construed according to the law of South Carolina, where the contract was executed and the parties resided. The controversy in this case arose over real property in Georgia which was assigned to the wife as her share of the estate. In accordance with the law of South Carolina, it was held that the husband was not the sole heir, although by the law of Georgia he would have been.

So, in Peake v. Yeldell, 17 Ala. 636, the court held that slaves owned by the wife at the time of the marriage were protected by an antenuptial fications of the common law in Indiana in so far as that law bears upon the relation of husband and wife, but we have been unable to find in the record any proof of a modification whereby the husband becomes the debtor of the wife by reason of his receipt and conversion of her personal funds. Our conclusion, therefore, upon the case presented, is that the intervener has failed to make the proof necessary to establish her claim, and that her intervention should be dismissed as in case of nonsuit.

Since the submission of the case the death of Franklin Landers has been suggested, and his legal representatives have been made parties hereto.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment appealed from be annulled, avoided, and reversed, and that there now be judgment in favor of the plaintiffs Fred. P. Rush and Morris M. Townley, administrator of George E. Townley, deceased, and against the intervener, Mrs. Martha E. Landers, dismissing the intervention of said Mrs. Landers as in case of nonsuit, and at her cost in both courts.

Rehearing denied May 12, 1902.

tial contract from the husband's creditors, that being the effect of the contract according to the law of South Carolina, where it was executed and where the marriage was celebrated, notwithstanding that, according to the law of Alabama, to which state the parties had removed and in which they were living at the time the slaves were seized by the husband's creditors, it would not have that effect. This decision is formally put upon the ground that the construction and interpretation of the contract, as well as its validity, are governed by the law of the place where it was made. In this case, however, the place of the contract and of the domicile were the same.

In Smith v. Chapell, 31 Conn. 589, also, it was assumed that the effect of an antenuptial contract made in England, where the marriage was celebrated, would govern, after the removal of the property and domicile of the parties to Connecticut, though in this case the rule in both places seems to have been the same. Sherrod v. Callegan, 9 La. Ann. 510, is to the same effect, but the rule is stated with the qualification that the contract does not create a prohibited substitution, a fidei commissum, or new tenure of property unknown to the laws of Louisiana. In this case the wife's title to slaves purchased from the husband after they were brought into Louisiana was upheld under a settlement made in Alabama, where the parties were domiciled at the time.

So the effect of an antenuptial contract made in Mississippi, where all the parties resided and where it was intended to have effect, must be governed by the law of Mississippi. Spears v. Shropshire, 11 La. Ann. 559, 66 Am. Dec. 208.

In LePrince v. Guillemot, 1 Rich. Eq. 187, the validity and effect of stipulations in a marriage contract whereby parents of the husband and wife respectively agreed to advance a stipulated marriage portion, payable at their (the parents') pleasure, but bearing interest until paid, were determined by the law of France, where the contract was executed and the parties were domiciled. The question arose between the husband and wife on one side and the creditors of the wife's father on the other. It was held, according to the law of France, that the contract made the husband and wife creditors of the father for the marriage portion.

In McLeod v. Board, 30 Tex. 238, 94 Am. Dec. 301, the court, referring to an antenuptial settlement which provided that upon the death of the wife without having disposed of her separate estate certain slaves, which were settled upon her, should be distributed according to the law of South Carolina, where the contract was made and the original matrimonial domicile established, said: "We see no reason why the lex loci contractus may not, by positive agreement, be made the rule for determining the parties who shall take as heirs or distributees on the failure of the wife to dispose of the property by will or otherwise, as well as to govern the construction of the contract in all other respects, and especially in respect to its control in the partition and disposal of property acquired after a change of domicile from that of the marriage." This point, however, was not decided.

In Heine v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 45 La. Ann. 770, 13 So. 1, however, it was held that a provision of an antenuptial contract made in France, where the parties were domiciled, which permitted the wife to sell her property, but required that the proceeds should be reinvested in a prescribed manner, was to be construed, so far as it affected immovable property in Louisiana, with reference to the law of Louisiana, and not to the law of France; and it was held, in accordance with the law of Louisiana, that such provision of the contract did not impose any duty on the purchaser of such property with reference to reinvestment of the proceeds.

So, in Richardson v. DeGilverville, 107 Mo. 422, 17 S. W. 974, it was held that the question whether a separate estate in real property in Missouri, owned by the wife at the time of the marriage, was secured to her by an antenuptial contract executed in France, the original matrimonial domicile, was to be determined by the law of Missouri rather than the law of France. This decision was upon the ground that the contract contained no agreement as to the rights of the husband to the wife's property during the marriage, but merely provided that the property owned by her at the time of the marriage should not fall into the community, and that at her death he should, during his life, have the whole or the half of the income arising therefrom, accordingly as there should or should not be children living of the marriage. The court said that the question was whether such an agreement secured to the wife a separate estate as understood by the laws of Missouri.

And it was held in Suares v. DeMontigny, 12 Misc. 259, 33 N. Y. Supp. 292, that a marriage settlement executed in a foreign country, the matrimonial domicile, relating to real and personal property in New York, and appointing a trustee who resided in New York, would be construed according to the law of New York. This was upon the ground that it was obviously contemplated that the contract was to be performed in New York.

And in Viditz v. O'Hagan, 68 L. J. Ch. N. S. 553 [1899] 2 Ch. 560, an antenuptial contract in English form, entered into between an English woman and a foreigner outside the United Kingdom, will, relatively to property in England, be construed and enforced by the courts of England according to the English law.

In Hicks v. Skinner, 71 N. C. 539, 17 Am. Rep. 16, it was held that the necessity of registration of an antenuptial contract entered into in New York, where the marriage was celebrated, between a woman domiciled in New York and a man domiciled in North Carolina, was to be determined by the law of New York, rather than by the law of North Carolina, and it was accordingly held that registration in accordance with the laws of North Carolina was not necessary to protect personal property of the wife which, by the terms of the contract, was to continue hers notwithstanding the marriage, from the husband's creditors after its removal to North Carolina. In this case, however, it is expressly stated in the opinion that there was no evidence that the parties contemplated, or contracted in reference to, any particular domicile or place of residence after marriage, and, as a matter of fact, the parties did not go to North Carolina until about a year after the marriage. These facts are important in view of the position of the court that the exception to the rule of lex loci contractus or actus, when it is contemplated that the contract is to be performed elsewhere, is based on the supposed intent of the parties to be governed by the law of the place of performance.

In Lapice v. Gereadeau, Walk. (Miss.) 480, it was held that a mortgage executed by a husband and wife, resident in Mississippi, upon lands situated in that state, was binding, and the wife could not avoid it by setting up a marriage contract executed in Louisiana, where the marriage was celebrated, by which they agreed that the property acquired should be governed by the laws of Louisiana. The decision in this case, however, was upon the ground that the wife was estopped by the execution of the mortgage.

In McVey v. Holden, 15 La. Ann. 317, it was held that comity did not require a court of Louisiana to enforce a postnuptial contract, which was invalid according to the law of that state, executed in Mississippi, whereby a trust in certain slaves, acquired while the domicile was in Louisiana, was created for the benefit of the wife, notwithstanding that the parties were residing in Louisiana at the time of its execution. The court apparently recognized that the ordinary rules of international law would make the law of Mississippi the test of the validity of the contract, but it was evidently regarded that the facts that the property was acquired while the parties were domiciled in Louisiana, that the domicile there had been resumed before the litigation arose, and that, under the law of Mississippi, the wife at most only took an equitable interest which could not be enforced in a court of law, were sufficient to justify the court in refusing to enforce the contract. The court said that the question might possibly have been different if the rights of the parties had been fixed by the dissolution of the marriage while they were resident in Mississippi, or if the property conveyed had not belonged to the community under the law of Louisiana.

VII. Summary.

The foregoing review of the authorities seems to warrant the following propositions:

(1) In the absence of an express contract, the effect of marriage upon real property, or immovables, is determined by the law of the place where the property is situated (lex rei sitæ), irrespective of the place of the marriage, or of the matrimonial domicile. Supra, II. a.

(2) With respect to personal property, or movables, as between the law of the place where the property is found, or that of the forum, and the law of the marital domicile, the latter governs. Supra, II. b.

(3) The character of property as real or personal, within the foregoing rules, is determined by the law of the place where it is found (lex rei sitæ). Supra, II. c.

(4) With respect to personal property, or movables, in the absence of an express contract, as between the law of the matrimonial domicile (lex domicilii) and that of the place where the marriage was celebrated (lex loci), the former governs. Supra, III., IV.

(5) If there be no determinate domicile of either the husband or wife at the time of the marriage, the parties will be deemed to have contemplated the place of the marriage as the place of the matrimonial domicile, and its law will therefore govern with respect to personal property, or movables, owned at the time of the marriage, or subsequently acquired during the continuance of the matrimonial domicile at that place. Supra, IV. If the husband and wife have different domiciles at the time of the marriage, the parties will be deemed to have contemplated the husband's domicile as the matrimonial domicile in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intent; and the law of that place will therefore govern with respect to personal property, or movables, owned at the time of the marriage, or acquired during the continuance of the domicile at that place. Supra, IV. If the parties at the time of the marriage intended to establish the marital home at a place different from that where the marriage was celebrated, or that where either of the parties was previously domiciled, and that intention was carried out in a reasonable time, the place so chosen will be regarded as the matrimonial domicile, whose law will, in the absence of a marital contract, govern with respect to personal property or movables owned at the time of the marriage or acquired prior to a change of domicile. Supra, IV.

(6) Personal property, or movables, owned at the time of the marriage, or acquired before a change of the matrimonial domicile, continue, so far as the respective rights of husband and wife are concerned, subject to the law of the original domicile after the change, although removed to the new domicile. Supra, V. a.

(7) But personal property, or movables, acquired after the change, are, in the absence of an express contract to the contrary, governed by the law of the new domicile, that is, by the law of the place where the domicile was established at the time the property was acquired. Supra, V. b.

(8) When there is an express antenuptial contract, it governs with respect both to real and personal property within its scope; but while it acts directly on personal property wherever situated, with respect to real property in a foreign country it confers only a right of action to be enforced according to the jurisprudence rei sitæ. Supra, VI.

(9) The location of the property is, except as stated in the last paragraph, immaterial if it was clearly within the contemplation of the parties in making the contract. Supra, VI.

(10) Property owned at the time of the marriage, or acquired during the continuance of the original matrimonial domicile, will be presumed to have been within the contemplation of the parties, and will therefore be governed by the contract, even after a change of domicile and the removal of the property to the new domicile. Supra, VI.

(11) But to bring future acquisitions, after a change of domicile, within the contract, it must have been expressly provided for, or the intention that it should be governed by the contract must be manifest. Supra, VI. Otherwise, the rule that prevails in the absence of contract will apply, and the property will therefore be governed by the law of the new domicile. Supra, V. b.

(12) All of the foregoing rules are subject to the qualification that they will not be enforced if their enforcement would be contrary to the law, or public policy, of the forum.

G. H. F.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

BANKERS' LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK

v.

Fred A. HOWLAND et al.

(73 Vt. 1.)

1. In computing the reserve of a life insurance company under a statute requiring it, in order to be entitled to do business in the state, to have, in addition to its capital, assets equal in amount to its outstanding liabilities, reckoning the premium reserve on its life risks based on the actuaries' tables of mortality, with interest at 4 per cent, as a liability, the expenses of securing the first year's business may be deducted from the amount it receives as premiums for that year by providing that a policy shall be valued as a term policy for one year and a life policy afterwards.
2. One taking a policy of life insurance which provides that it shall, for the purpose of computing the reserve, be valued as a term policy for one year and a life policy afterwards, is estopped from repudiating that provision of the contract.
3. Under a statute requiring insurance commissioners to issue licenses to a foreign insurance company to do business in the state, if satisfied with its statement showing its financial condition and standing, they have no authority to question the method of computing the reserve set forth in the statement, or to enter upon an independent valuation of such reserve.
4. A statute forbidding a life insurance company to discriminate between insureds of the same class in premiums, rates, dividends, other benefits or terms and conditions, does not prevent the issuing of one-year term policies with the privilege of taking a whole life policy at the end of the first year, for the purpose of appropriating a larger portion of the premium to expenses and less to the reserve fund.
5. Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel insurance commissioners to grant a license to do business in the state to a foreign insurance company which has complied with the statutory requirements, which license they refuse because they require a reserve computed on a wrong basis.

(January 30, 1901.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to grant petitioner a license to do business within the state. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. B. F. Fifield and Seneca Haselton for petitioner.

Messrs. Dillingham, Huse, & Howland and John Young for petitioners.

Taft, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In February, 1900, the Bankers' Life Insurance Company of New York applied to the insurance commissioners of Vermont for a license to do business therein. Such license was refused, and the company bring their petition for a mandamus to order and direct the commissioners to issue such license. A foreign joint-stock life insurance company cannot do business in this state unless it has paid-up capital invested in securities, readily convertible into cash, of at least $100,000, not less than one half of which is invested in cash securities other than mortgages of real estate, nor unless such company has, in addition to such capital, assets equal in amount to its outstanding liabilities, reckoning the premium reserve on its life risks based on the actuaries' tables of mortality, with interest at 4 per cent as a liability. Vt. Stat. § 4178. It cannot then transact business unless it first obtains a license of the insurance commissioners authorizing it so to do. Before receiving such license, the company shall file with the secretary of state a certified copy of its charter and by-laws, and a statement, under oath, of its president and secretary, showing its financial condition and standing. Vt. Stat. § 4181. If, upon the filing of such copies and statements, the commissioners are satisfied with them, and further satisfied that the company has complied with the title relating to insurance, they shall grant a license authorizing it to do business, etc., and such license may be renewed annually so long as the company complies with the requirements aforesaid, and the commissioners regard the company as safe and entitled to public confidence. Vt. Stat. § 4182.

Thus, under our statutes, a foreign life insurance company is entitled to do business in this state if it has the requisite capital, properly invested, and assets equal to its absolute liabilities, and the required premium reserve. Upon presentation of the petitioner's statement to the commissioners no question was made in respect to the capital stock of the petitioner, as it had the necessary amount invested in United States government bonds of the par value of $100,000, and, according to its statement, had assets equal to its capital stock, its absolute liabilities, like unadjusted death claims, etc., and its premium reserve. Upon this showing, the reserve being certified by the insurance department of New York, the petitioner was, upon the face of the statement, entitled to a license. But the petitioners contend that the petition should be dismissed. They claim that the computation of the reserve was erroneous, and was, in fact, so much larger than the amount shown by the statement that there was a deficiency of assets, under the requirements of our statutes. This depends upon the mode of computing the reserve upon the first year of the policies issued by the company. It is the disagreement upon this question that the parties wish determined by the court, and that is the only question in the case. It is claimed by the petitioners that the petition should be dismissed, for that the petitioner did not furnish them the amount of the premium reserve computed in the manner which the petitioners claim is the legal mode of calculating it. If the petitioners are correct in their claim as to the mode of valuation, the point would be well taken, but, if wrong, then that fact is immaterial; so that this point is involved in the main question, and is determined by it, and the main question is, In what manner should the premium reserve be computed? A life insurance company is chargeable with what is called "a premium reserve," representing what it must have in hand to meet its ultimate liabilities upon its policies. Under our statutes, it should have assets enough, at any time, which, invested at 4 per cent interest, reckoning the lives of its policy holders by the actuaries' tables of mortality, together with the future premiums payable to it under its policies, will enable it to meet all policy obligations. What such obligations will ultimately prove to be partakes of the nature of speculation, for a great part of the liabilities of any company are contingent. No one can foretell the time of death. Mortality tables must be constructed, and some rate of interest taken, and with all calculations and estimates the result is not certain. The premium reserve is no test of a company's actual solvency. Mr. Elizur Wright, cited by the petitioners' counsel as "the father of the net reserve valuation system and the most distinguished exponent of the principles of estate supervision of life insurance," says the net valuation system was originally incorporated into the law, not as determinant of the actual solvency of a company, which it never can be, but to compel the company to conduct its business on the lines tacitly assumed in its contracts. Equity between the members, not actual solvency, was, according to Mr. Wright, the primary object of the law. Protection against insolvency was simply a result which would naturally follow its application.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to restrictions on business of foreign insurance company, see State ex rel. Richards v. Ackerman (Ohio) 24 L. R. A. 298, and note; People ex rel. Stephens v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Ill.) 26 L. R. A. 295; Rose v. Kimberly & C. Co. (Wis.) 57 L. R. A.

27 L. R. A. 556; Hoadley v. Purifoy (Ala.) 30 L. R. A. 351; Parker v. Lamb (Iowa) 34 L. R. A. 704; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. (Mo.) 35 L. R. A. 227; and Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Fricke (Wis.) 41 L. R. A. 557.

While it is true that the valuation of a company's policies must rest substantially on the tables of mortality and the rate of interest, there are other matters proper to consider in determining the actual standing of a life insurance company. It is shown by the record that the expenses of a life insurance company in granting a policy absorb the greater part of the premium for the first year, substantially three fourths or more of it, and that the expenses the first year of a policy are ten times greater than for any subsequent year. As a witness for the petitioner stated, they "practically absorb the greater part, perhaps nearly the whole, of the first year's premium of the annual life policy." The record shows that, of the companies doing business in this state in 1899, the largest, the Mutual Life of New York, reports that it paid 68.3 per cent in commissions alone upon its first-year premiums. All the companies average over 50 per cent. One company, doing industrial business, reports that it paid 100 per cent cost of collection on new business, and still another that it paid 95.2 per cent in commissions alone on its new business. No company can successfully do business unless it pays commissions as large as the leading companies in the country, and then is often at a disadvantage from being small. As the witness Stone stated: "It is the larger companies that set the pace in such matters. Small companies have . . . to meet the competition or make no progress."
57 L. R. A.

A new company to begin business, and a small company to continue, in order to succeed, must pay "what companies in general pay." We quote Mr. Wright again, vis.: "New companies, planted within the shadow of flourishing old ones, cannot be expected to get into successful operation without expending on their machinery more than the premium receipts for one, two, or perhaps three, of the first years." Mass. Ins. Coms. Repts. (1859-65) 115. The petitioners' testimony shows that no company can organize and succeed without contributions from some source,—gifts to it from either stockholders, in case of a stock company, or from the world at large, in the case of a mutual company,—and it is well to note that the largest companies in the world were organized as mutual companies. The supposition that philanthropists are to be found to make rich gifts to a life insurance company is too absurd to be entertained. If a new company does pay the usual commissions upon its business, one of the petitioners concedes that "the company when beginning would be at once insolvent, and there can be no dispute about it." The term "solvency," in this connection, means a statutory one, viz.: A compliance with the conditions upon which it is permitted to do business.

Applying the rule of valuation contended for by the petitioners, no new company, stock or mutual, can organize and successfully begin business, and no small company can so continue without becoming at once insolvent in a statutory sense. This is conceded by the commissioners. If a company could be born with a large surplus, it might struggle for an existence, but without one its first attempt to breathe would be death. The visits of the midwife and the undertaker would be simultaneous, and their different offices might be combined. A company, like an individual, must first be an infant, and there is little hope of life when you smother it in its swaddling clothes.

Now, what construction shall be given to the statute relating to the premium reserve? It should be construed liberally, for, as said by Mr. Wright: "Insurance seeks breadth of basis, and cannot be safely cooped within narrow local limits. State laws tending to impose limits should be construed liberally, and state officials, especially, should never step beyond the law in the direction of exclusion." Mass. Ins. Coms. Repts. (1859-65) 177. The state has made no attempt to regulate the details of the insurance business, save that the companies must use, in computing the reserve, the actuaries' tables of mortality, and the 4 per cent rate of interest. A net valuation is important in determining just what a company must have in hand as a matter of equity between the old and the new members,—the past and the future. If the standard is not correct, either the past or the future members are benefited at the expense of the other class.

The premium reserve is to be computed with reference to the life of the policies. A policy may terminate in a year, and may not in four score years. Mr. Wright states, in speaking of the premium reserve: "Solvency is not the only question. . . . There is a question of equity as well. . . . The question is not how much of the past and present burden can be thrown on the future, but what will probably be as fair for one as the other." This directly recognizes the principle that the rule may be varied in the direction contended for by the petitioner. The same learned writer says that any company, if it can get on "with expenses less than the excess of its actual over its net premiums, has a future resource against a present deficiency, and is not necessarily insolvent because its cash assets do not equal the net value of its policies;" and, further: "This provision or premium reserve may have a more or less important bearing on the ultimate solvency of the company, according to the greater or less margin of the actual premiums."

The matter of expenses is a potent factor in determining the solvency or standing of a company. As Mr. Wright says: "Neither the net value of the policies by itself, nor the ratio of its cash assets to that net value, decides the condition of the company without reference to the actual premiums receivable. . . . Two companies, by a net valuation of their policies, may be found to have exactly equal liabilities, and their cash assets may be equal, and yet their prospects for the future may be different from their having different actual premiums." Mass. Ins. Coms. Repts. (1859-65) 179. Mr. Wells, actuary of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, one of the petitioners' two witnesses, in his testimony says: "If we have reference to the actual commercial solvency of the company, rather than to the statutory legal solvency, we would have to take account of the gross premiums." The object of all legislation is to produce as a result the actual commercial solvency of the company. He further states that the one-year term plan does not make the policy an unsafe one if the gross premium is large enough to leave a sufficient margin.

Is not this a plain recognition of the important part the actual premiums and the expenses play in determining the standing of a company? When these principles were first enunciated, the expenses of the first year of a policy were but twice or thrice the expenses of any subsequent year, while it appears they are now more than ten times as great. Much more, then, ought the principle to be applied in valuing the first year of the policy when the expenses absorb nearly the whole premium. In making the valuation, the rule, as claimed by the petitioners, is to let the net premium follow the gross premium, and, by the ordinary plan of computing the reserve, the net premium is generally understood to be a uniform percentage of the gross premium. What objection can there be to regarding the amount the company actually receives, less commissions, as the gross premium, and taking a uniform percentage upon that as the net? It is, in effect, what is contended for by the petitioner, and it does not appear that there is any practical objection to it. The question is not one of actuarial science, but of legislation. Tell the actuary how to compute the reserve, and he will give you the result; but the views of an actuary may be helpful in determining what the construction of a statute shall be, for an actuary can judge of the result by applying different rules to the same company. It is well to see what their views are.

Dr. Sprague, of Edinburgh, president of the British Institute of Actuaries, the petitioners show "is regarded as the highest living [actuarial] authority," and is so termed by Dr. McClintock, hereafter mentioned, and he says there is nothing unsafe nor unsound in the proposition, i. e. to let "the sum remaining in the company's hands, after the payment of the expenses of the first year and the cost of insurance, be accumulated as the reserve at that time, . . . provided the policy holder be made secure by the requirement of a sufficient reserve in the future." Dr. Emery McClintock, the actuary of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, which boasts of being the largest financial institution in the world, and who is styled by the witness Wells as "the most prominent and the leading actuary in this country," writes: "If a young company were free to compute its own reserve, and make due publication of the details, it would not impair its security by beginning its reserves on ordinary life policies the second year, or by holding reduced first-year reserves on other forms of policies." And the late Mr. Whiting, who was not only an eminent actuary, but a lawyer of the clearest judgment, indorsed the same view, i. e., that the principle was sound, and legal as well. Mr. Macaulay, an eminent actuary, and president of the Actuarial Society of America, says the principle is a sound one, and approves of the method; and so does Mr. Wolfe, an actuary employed by various state departments.* So much for the views of the leading actuaries of the world.

Such computation is permitted by all our sister states, save Massachusetts, and when it is seen that under a different ruling no new company can be organized and do business, nor any small company exist, it is not considered possible that our lawgivers ever intended such a construction as that contended for by the petitioners to be given any statute we have on the subject. It would create such monopolies that the modern trusts would blush for their departing laurels. The company has the right to compute its premium reserve in the manner contended for by the petitioner, basing it, in effect, for the first year, upon the amount it receives as premiums, deducting expenses. We have no hesitation in so holding when we fail to find that any claim is made in argument, and no reference in the record, to the fact that any company ever became insolvent for the reason that its reserve was so computed, and we do not think it possible that this method in the computation of the reserve could ever cause the failure of a company.

An important feature in the consideration of this case is brought to mind by the questions asked by the petitioners of the witnesses improved by them. There were two witnesses only, both actuaries, presumably of high standing, of companies that in amount of assets hold the sixth and seventh rank in the United States. They, in effect, were asked what was the practical objection to the reserve computation making the first year terminal. Mr. Wells, before referred to, answered that there were two,—the first, that "the public do not know upon what basis the policies are valued." How forcible is this objection? Do not the public know as much under one system as the other? The actuaries' tables of mortality and the 4 per cent rate of interest are used in both cases. What the system is that is pursued in the reserve calculation can be required by the department to accompany every statement, so that any person seeing the amount of the reserve could learn at the same time the system upon which it was calculated. The fact that the public are ignorant of the manner of computing the reserve can never affect the commercial solvency of a company, and besides equities between the insured to maintain that solvency, we consider the main object of state supervision of insurance companies. Mr. Wells's second objection was that, while that system of valuation would "increase the surplus which could be used for expenses," the old and large companies, he should expect, would increase their commissions, and so the small companies would be no better off than they are now. This is hardly a practical objection to the plan,—a conjecture that a company with a large surplus, which belongs to their policy holders, would take it and use it for improper purposes, i. e., to provide for a reserve on policies of new members, for they could not increase their commissions without doing it. The law presumes that their acts will be legal, although the presumption is rather violent, in view of the past practice of that kind, which enabled them to pay, with their surplus, commissions, far in excess of what were legitimate. Mr. Wells concedes the question in issue when he states that the reserve on an ordinary life policy might begin at the end of the third year, and the contract be made good, but that the tendency would be unsafe.

Mr. St. John, actuary of the Ætna, answers at length, and says: "The practical objection to the first-year term form of policy depends to some extent as to how you are going to employ it." That it might be admissible for a company in the successful course of business, with a desire for a greater income, "to call a halt," and ascertain what its then existing condition was, and it might be that it was expending in commissions and expenses so much it might assume it was expending all of the first premium, and ask, "Let us see where that leads?" or they might not make any assumption in the matter, but would employ a method of valuation that might correspond with the one-year term valuation. That in applying it to new companies, of unknown standing, it ought to be defined by statute what net premiums are, for you may have an indefinite number of net premiums in your gross premium. You must have a statutory standard, and adhere to it. If you accept the Englishman's doctrine, that it is every man's business to look after his own business, and not the part of the state to control, you have a different principle. And he concludes by saying he has been informed that in Germany the companies tried and dropped the practice for the alleged reasons that it led to an increase of expenses for procuring business. Whether a comparison with the German companies is useful is not clear. The witness stated he did not know what the German laws, nor the provisions of the German insurance contracts, were. Whether the American and German companies are similar or dissimilar does not appear, and a comparison between them, with all knowledge of them nothing but hearsay, is not of value. There is not a hint from either of the witnesses of a bona fide practical objection, so far as the commercial or statutory solvency of a company is concerned, to valuing a policy for the first year as a term policy. The last-named witness stated that his company, the Ætna, issued a policy for the term of ten years, with options on the part of the insured for further terms and for future insurance during life, and that the Massachusetts department valued them as term policies until converted into life policies, which was at the option of the insured,—the very principle contended for by the petitioner; the only difference in the facts being that the gross premiums in the Ætna were not level.

*By Chief Justice Taft: Since this opinion was written, our attention has been called to an article read on October 25, 1900, before the Actuarial Society of America by Walter S. Nichols, for many years an editor of the Insurance Monitor, the pioneer and leading insurance journal in America, and since its establishment editor of the Insurance Law Journal. Mr. Nichols is an able actuary, one of the old members of the Actuarial Society, and thoroughly discusses the question from an actuarial and legal standpoint, fully vindicating the first-year term valuation theory in the lines indicated herein, save that of public policy.

The petitioners argue that the policies are so framed to avoid and defeat the statute; that it is the avowed purpose on the part of the petitioner to evade the spirit of the law. No doubt the policies were framed with a provision that they should be valued as term policies for the first year in order to have them so valued; but whether it was to evade the spirit of the statute can be better determined when one knows what the statute requires. It may have been done to evade an erroneous ruling of an insurance department. It undoubtedly was to avoid a requirement of holding too heavy a reserve the first year of the policy. This must be apparent to anyone. This plan of valuation is necessary only in case of a new or small company,—one that has not accumulated a surplus. As the witness Wells stated, the plan is followed by "a few comparatively new and comparatively small companies." No company with a surplus needs the plan of valuation, and no company without a surplus can compete with one that has. Whether it is in accord with good policy to permit the accumulation of a mammoth surplus is questionable, for the reason that with it a company can enter into undue competition, and become heedlessly extravagant in the payment of commissions and salaries, and rob one class of policy holders to pay another. A large surplus permits large expenditures, and its danger was pointed out by Mr. Wright with a prophetic eye when he wrote, nearly forty years since: "The great danger of large expenditures to create business is the establishment of a permanent overpayment of the function of management, and the turning loose upon society of that unscrupulous parasitic industry which is content, or even ambitious, to live upon others without returning any equivalent benefit." Mass. Ins. Coms. Repts. (1859-65) 333. That the evils he foresaw followed is plainly seen when the salaries of some of the officials, the result of a mammoth surplus, equal that of the President of the United States.

We say but little as to the effect of the provision in the policy that it may be valued as a term policy the first year, holding that the company have the right to so value it, irrespective of the agreement, but, as Mr. Wright says, the net valuation aims to settle the equities between the old and the new members, and as, in computing the reserve, all above a quantum sufficit—a correct amount—belongs to the old members, why then cannot a new member consent to such a valuation? And is he not estopped from repudiating the contract in that respect when he has accepted it with such a provision? We hold he is, and note the policy holder is not the one complaining here.

Take a policy called a preliminary term one. The common sense and the religion of the thing is this: During the first year of the policy it is a term policy, no different from any term policy. It is true, at the end of the year the policy holder has a right to renew; so he has under a life policy. If he does not renew the preliminary term policy, he has had a term policy for one year.

"Only this and nothing more."

If he does renew, he obtains such rights as he is entitled to under his renewed contract. It is immaterial whether the premium for the first year is the same or more or less than the subsequent premiums. No state has ever attempted to regulate the amount of a premium which should be charged by a company, save indirectly, by requiring the net premium to be sufficient to produce the requisite reserve at the maturity of the policy.

To illustrate the effect of the commissioners' ruling, by their plan of computing the reserve, a new company, with $1,000,000 capital stock, issuing the first-year policies of a like amount, and saving from the business of the year only the amount of the reserve calculated upon the first-year term basis, is insolvent in the sum of $11,710, although it has more assets than the face of its policies. If this is not reductio ad absurdum, pray tell us what can be. The term "net valuation" is nowhere used in our statutes, and we have no statutory definition of it. The phrase in our law is the "premium reserve," which may be regarded as its synonym, but its generally accepted meaning is that it is the amount the company must have in hand, which, with its future premiums, will enable it to meet its policy obligations. The statute makes no attempt to regulate the manner in which the net value shall be determined, save by requiring the use of actuaries' tables of mortality and the 4 per cent rate of interest. In determining how much this amount shall be, are the lines so rigidly drawn that no consideration should be given to the expenses of the company, whether they are 10 per cent of its income or absolutely the whole? To the fact that the assets produce a 2 per cent income, or a 6 per cent one, or whether the company have millions of assets which produce no income? Does the statute intend that these two rules shall be all there is of a valuation? If so, is an asset like a 2 per cent or a 4 per cent government bond, upon which less than 4 per cent interest can be realized, or millions of assets non-income producing, a proper item to be included in the assets? Are all these considerations to be regulated by the state, or left to the management of the company?

The argument that the development of the first-year term idea might result in breaking down the statutory valuation system by giving the insurer the power to treat subsequent years of the policy in the same manner is not sound; for it entirely ignores the element of expenses, and the actual or gross premiums, and the time would soon come when the future premiums would not be sufficient to provide for the reserve,—when the gross premium will not equal the mathematical premium.

It has been the prevailing custom for the insurance department of every state, save Massachusetts, to follow the valuation of the state under which a company is organized, and this is the spirit of our law; for while the statute gives the commissioners power to compute the "reinsurance reserve," whatever that may be, of a domestic company (Vt. Stat. § 4204), it gives no like power in the case of a company from another state (Vt. Stat. § 4178). The practice is highly approved of by Mr. Wright, and he advocated an arrangement to that effect. Mass. Ins. Coms. Repts. (1859-65) 170. Comity between the states has sanctioned the custom for a generation. It would be an absolute impossibility for the commissioners to do any appreciable part of the valuation of companies doing business in Vermont, but organized under some one of our sister states, for three of such companies each have an insurance of over $1,000,000,000, with an aggregate amount of $5,682,000,000. It would be like the mouse, not going to the hillock, but to the Himalayas. No state, save Massachusetts, denies the right to the company of computing its premium reserve as claimed by the petitioner. The propriety of the right in that state is shown by their legislation when they permit certain assessment companies, upon their being converted into old-line companies, to so value their policies for a term of 3½ years. This is enough to show that there is no practical objection to the plan. Besides, equity between the members of a company, the reason of the law requiring the accumulation of a premium reserve, is for one purpose only, and that is to "enable the company to carry out its contracts, . . . to be able to fulfil its obligations according to what it has promised," or, as the witness St. John stated it, "that the company shall carry out and perform all its definite obligations."

There is nothing in the case to show, or that has any tendency to show, that valuing a policy, taking into account the expenses, and considering the actual gross premiums, ever affected the standing or solvency of a company, in any respect, in regard to its ability to carry out its contracts and to fulfil its financial obligations to the letter. § Vt. Stat. § 4182, provides that "if the commissioners are satisfied with such copies and statements, and that the company has complied with the provisions of this title 57 L. R. A.

[relating to insurance] they shall grant a license." This section does not give the commissioners power to arbitrarily refuse the license, but if the copies and statements are in accord with the statute it is their duty to issue a license. The question is not so much whether the commissioners are satisfied with such copies and statements as it is, "Ought they to be satisfied with them?"

In the case at bar, the only question they make is that the premium reserve was not calculated upon the correct basis, and that was the reason why they refused a license, and, as they erred in this respect, there was no reason why the license should not have been issued; the case showing that, with the reserve valued in the manner contended for by the petitioner, the company complied with the statutory requirements in this state. The action of the commissioners was ministerial, not judicial. It is not considered that the commissioners are invested with judicial powers in the examination of foreign insurance companies. To determine the net reserve of the companies would require a force of actuaries for months, a comparison of the valuation sheets with the policy registers, a clerical force without number, and a valuation of the assets of the companies scattered through many states, amounting to some $1,500,000,000, would be required, all to be done within the first three months of the year. To simply state what would be required of them to judicially determine the reserve and value the assets of the companies is enough to show the commissioners' duties are ministerial, and that nothing else was ever intended by the statute. Indeed, the commissioners do not claim otherwise. If it were, this court would have no power to revise their action. It was the understanding between the parties that the question should be determined in a legal way. Their position is shown by their report (1899, p. 9), when, upon a former ruling, they suggested that the company against whom the ruling was made "and the department co-operate to have the matter tested in the courts." Upon this point, however, no question is made by the petitioners. An instructive case upon the subject is State ex rel. Drake v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 162, q. v.

The precise question in the case is, Has the petitioner the right to compute its reserve by taking a sum equal to the reserve on a term policy for the first year? We hold it has, and that it was entitled to license, the case showing that their statement was a full compliance with the statute. There is no law in this state relating to the mode of computing the premium reserve for a foreign life insurance company, save that it must be based upon the actuaries' tables of mortality and interest at the rate of 4 per cent. There is nothing that forbids the company taking for the first year's reserve the premium paid, less the expense of obtaining the policy. They can value it as a term policy if they wish, not necessarily because such is the contract between the policy holder and the company, but because the company in administering its affairs can compute the reserve, taking into consideration the expenses of obtaining the policy in such a way as they deem best to work justice and equity among the members, provided they do not disregard the tables of mortality nor the rate of interest.

Taking into consideration the various views presented in regard to the construction of the statute, we are all agreed that as the words of the statute do not require the construction contended for by the petitioners; that as such construction would tend strongly to the creation of monopolies by an absolute prohibition of the establishment of new companies, either stock or mutual; that, as there is no practical objection to the one-year term plan, which, in no event, of itself, would ever affect the actual solvency of a company, and as, in the case before us, the plan is in harmony with the rights of the policy holders who have consented thereto,—we hold that the right claimed by the petitioner is in strict accord with the words and spirit of the statute.

In issuing the first-year term policy, with the privilege of taking a whole life policy at the end of the first year, there is no violation of Vt. Stat. § 4218, which forbids a company from discriminating between insureds of the same class, in premiums, rates, dividends, other benefits, or terms and conditions. The policy, although it is a term policy if not renewed, is not in its entirety the equivalent of a simple term policy. The contracts are not the same, and the insured are not of the same class.

The record shows that the petitioner had a surplus of more than $100,000; that its reserve had been computed by the insurance department of its own state in the manner contended for by the petitioner; and, as the company had the right to so compute it, its refusal to furnish the reserve upon the basis called for by the respondents was immaterial. The petitioner has no remedy, save by mandamus. The petitioners declined to grant it a license, saying, "We cannot legally do so." There is no way to compel them, except to issue the writ as prayed for. It ought not to issue in cases of doubtful right (Free Press Asso. v. Nichols, 45 Vt. 7); but it always issues if the petitioner has a clear legal right, and no other adequate remedy (Sabine v. Rounds, 50 Vt. 74). A case analogous to this in principle is Peck v. Poicell, 62 Vt. 296, 19 Atl. 227. The legal question presented was whether the petitioner was entitled to certain fees as city judge, which the petitioners, as state auditor, refused to allow. This court held that the petitioner was entitled to them, and ordered a mandamus to issue, directing the auditor to allow them. The petitioner was entitled to a license.

The judgment is that the prayer of the petition be granted, and that a mandamus issue directing the commissioners to grant the petitioner a license as prayed for in the petition, with costs.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

P. H. BOISSEAU to Use of Jennie M. ROBINSON, Appt.,

v.

Thomas J. PENN, Admr., etc., of R. T. Bass, Deceased.

(.....Va.....)

1. The interest of the assured in a twenty-year distribution policy of insurance on his life, which will cease on his failure to pay premiums, is not an estate within the meaning of a statute making an execution a lien from the time it is placed in the hands of the officer on all the personal estate of or to which the judgment debtor is, or may afterwards and before the return day of the writ become, entitled.

2. A provision in a life-insurance policy for the issuance of a paid-up policy proportioned to the premiums paid, upon its surrender before default in payments, cannot be enforced at the instance of a judgment creditor of the assured after the latter's death and the right to the proceeds has passed to his personal representative, so as to make his execution available against the policy.

(January 30, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Corporation Court of Danville in favor of defendant in an action to enforce an execution against the proceeds of a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James H. Guthrie and William Leigh, for appellant:

The court erred in deciding that the execution was not a lien on the policy of insurance.

Va. Code, § 3601.

The insurance policy is a chose in action, and is governed by the same principles applicable to other agreements involving pecuniary obligations, and is personal estate.

Bliss, Life Ins. 508, 553; Uhlman v. New York L. Ins. Co. 109 N. Y. 421, 17 N. E. 363; Hooker v. Sugg, 102 N. C. 115, 3 L. R. A. 217, 8 S. E. 919; Talcott v. Field, 34

NOTE.—For another case in this series discussing the question as to whether the lien of an execution can attach to personal property, the interest of the execution debtor in which is merely contingent, see Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 23 L. R. A. 83.

As to garnishment of proceeds of insurance 57 L. R. A. policy, see Brown v. Balfour (Minn.) 12 L. R. A. 373; Stone v. Mutual F. Ins. Co. (Md.) 14 L. R. A. 684; Chipman v. Carroll (Kan.) 25 L. R. A. 305; Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 689; and Ellis v. Pratt City (Ala.) 33 L. R. A. 264.

Neb. 611, 52 N. W. 400; White v. Smith, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) § 399, p. 439.

The fl. fa. was a lien on the insurance policy from the time it went into the hands of the officer, and so continued, and the lien thus secured could have been kept alive for an indefinite time, and was alive and in full force at the death of the said R. T. Bass, and when this suit was instituted.

Va. Code, § 3601; Purvey v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401; Evans v. Greenhow, 15 Gratt. 153; Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216; Trevillian v. Gearrant, 31 Gratt. 525; Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 23 L. R. A. 82, 18 S. E. 807; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522, 27 Am. Rep. 562.

The effect of the lien given by § 3601 is that the fl. fa. binds all the personal estate of the debtor.

Shirley v. Long, 6 Rand. (Va.) 735.

As Mr. Holland had no insurable interest in Mr. Bass's life an assignment of the policy to a greater extent than the indebtedness of Bass to him would have been void.

Roller v. Moore, 86 Va. 512, sub nom. Roller v. Beam, 6 L. R. A. 136, 10 S. E. 241; Long v. Meriden Britannia Co. 94 Va. 594, 27 S. E. 499; Beatty v. Downing, 96 Va. 451, 31 S. E. 612; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 96 Va. 737, 44 L. R. A. 305, 32 S. E. 475; Tate v. Commercial Bldg. Assn. 97 Va. 74, 45 L. R. A. 243, 33 S. E. 382.

The word "estate" is broad enough to cover every description of vested right attached to or growing out of property.

Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Pet. 193, 7 L. ed. 108; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 122; Lee v. Hill, 87 Va. 497, 12 S. E. 1052; Roberts v. Drinkard, 3 Met. (Ky.) 309; Russell v. Clingan, 33 Miss. 535; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Connor, 20 Ill. App. 297; Wiant v. Hays, 38 W. Va. 681, 23 L. R. A. 82, 18 S. E. 807; Huling v. Cabell, 9 W. Va. 522, 27 Am. Rep. 56; Anthraxite Ins. Co. v. Sears, 109 Mass. 383; Re McKinney, 15 Fed. 538; Re Smith, 12 Week. Rep. 534; Shenk v. Franke, 10 Lanc. Bar. 146.

Mr. E. E. Bouldin, for appellee:

Bass had parted with all his interest and the company owed him no debt or obligation.

This assignment to Holland, in the very words of the statute, is excepted from the lien of Robinson's execution. Being an assignment to Holland, as to the surplus Holland holds the legal title as trustee for Bass's estate, for the creditors, and then for his distributees.

Avery v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 117 N. Y. 451, 23 N. E. 3.

Holland was a trustee, and held the surplus for the benefit of those then entitled to it.

Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268; Roller v. Moore, 86 Va. 515, sub nom. Roller v. Beam, 6 L. R. A. 136, 10 S. E. 241.

Mcneers. Peatross & Harris, also for appellee:

This policy did not, until the death of 57 L. R. A.

Bass, constitute a present or existing indebtedness. It was not like a note or bond, which contains a present, absolute, or unconditional promise to pay a given sum at a future day.

The lien of the fl. fa. of the appellant under § 3601 of the Code of Virginia only extended to personal estate of the judgment debtor, not capable of being levied on, and that had existence as such, and of or to which the judgment debtor was possessed or entitled before the return day of the fl. fa.

Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co. 94 Va. 741, 27 S. E. 596; Freeman, Executions, §§ 164, 165; 10 Va. L. J. pp. 4, 5; Drake, Attachm. 6th ed. § 551; Misc. Notes, 3 Va. Law Reg. p. 381; Day v. New England L. Ins. Co. 111 Pa. 507, 56 Am. Rep. 297, 4 Atl. 748; May, Ins. 3d ed. §§ 459 F, 459 H; Wentworth v. Whittemore, 1 Mass. 471.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case alleges that Jennie M. Robinson on the 6th day of March, 1899, recovered a judgment in the corporation court of the city of Danville against one R. T. Bass for the sum of $1,500, with interest and costs; that on the 22d day of March, 1899, an execution was issued on this judgment and delivered to the appellant, as sergeant of said city, to be executed; that said execution was returnable to the first day of the May term of the court from which it issued, and was duly returned by the sergeant, indorsed, "No effects." It is further alleged that at the time the execution was delivered to the appellant the judgment debtor was the owner of a policy taken out on his life, payable to himself, in the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, and dated the 15th day of October, 1887, for the sum of $3,000; that the insured departed this life on the 2d day of May, 1900; and that Thomas J. Penn, the appellee, had qualified as his administrator. The bill charges that the execution, from the time it was delivered to the appellant, was a subsisting and continuing lien on all the personal estate of the debtor, including the life insurance policy mentioned, and that, by virtue of such lien, appellant is entitled to recover the amount thereof from the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York; that his right to collect such insurance policy, to the extent of the execution in favor of Jennie M. Robinson, is paramount and superior to the right of the administrator of R. T. Bass to collect the same. The bill prays that the several parties in interest be enjoined from collecting the policy, that a receiver be appointed to collect and hold the same subject to the order of the court, and for general relief. An injunction was granted, an answer filed by the appellee, and subsequently a decree entered dissolving the injunction. From that decree this appeal has been taken.

It is suggested in the bill, and is established by the record, that R. T. Bass, in his lifetime, on the 16th day of March, 1899, assigned and transferred the policy in question to C. L. Holland to secure the payment of $650 obtained by the assured from him. It is not disputed that C. L. Holland has a prior claim upon the policy to the extent of his debt.

The question presented by the record is whether or not, under § 3601 of the Code, Jennie M. Robinson, the execution creditor, had, by virtue of her execution in the hands of the appellant, a lien upon the policy here involved. In other words, was the policy such personal estate as a fi. fa. lien would fasten upon, in contemplation of the section mentioned?

That section provides that every writ of feri facias shall, in addition to the lien it has, under § 3577 of the Code, on what is capable of being levied on under that section, be a lien, from the time it is delivered to a sheriff or other officer to be executed, on all the personal estate of or to which the judgment debtor is, or may afterwards and before the return day of the said writ become, possessed or entitled, and which is not capable of being levied on under the said section, except as to exempted property, and except, also, as against certain persons. Code, § 3601. And this lien continues so long as the judgment can be enforced. § 3602.

Conceding to this statute the most comprehensive scope, and that every species of personal estate or interest therein is contemplated, the question remains whether or not the policy under consideration is such an estate or interest as can be reached or converted into a benefit to the execution creditor.

The policy is known as a "twenty-year distribution policy." A premium of $29.22 had to be paid quarterly, on the 15th day of January, April, July, and October in every year, during the continuance of the contract, until premiums for twenty full years had been paid to the company. Until the twenty years had expired, the interest or estate of the assured in the policy was wholly contingent, depending upon his completion of the contract by the payment of the premiums therein provided for. The payment of these premiums was a condition precedent to the right of the assured to any claim against the company, and such payment was entirely voluntary. No power could compel the assured to pay them. If the payments ceased, the assured forfeited all those previously made, and the company was discharged from all liability. This policy or contract of insurance did not constitute a present, fixed liability upon the company to pay the assured anything; nor did it create any present indebtedness that the assured could demand within the twenty years. The assured died before the expiration of the twenty years, and before the payment of all the premiums. Until his death, which occurred after the return day of the execution against him, the policy was liable to be forfeited by the nonpayment of premiums to accrue thereon. It was therefore altogether contingent whether an obligation to pay any sum to the assured would ever rest upon the company by reason of such policy.

57 L. R. A.

When a debt has a present existence, although payable at some future day, it is subject to the lien of a fi. fa., and may be reached by garnishment or other appropriate proceeding; but the rule is otherwise where the debt rests upon a contingency that may or may not happen, and over which the court has no control.

In Freeman, Executions, the learned author says: "Debts which are due contingently and which therefore may never become due, are not subject to garnishment."

It is well settled in England, under the process of foreign attachment, that no lien can be acquired upon a debt the very existence of which is dependent upon a contingency, for the very satisfactory reason that it is no debt." 1 Freeman, Executions, § 164.

Again the same author says: "Where a policy of life insurance has issued, the insurer cannot be garnished during the existence of the life of the assured, because it is not certain whether any sum will ever become due on the policy." § 164a.

After laying down the well-recognized rule of law that an existing debt, not due at the service of the writ, but which is certain to become due at a future period, may be reached both under execution and attachment, it is said: "This rule has no application to future contingent liabilities, nor to any case where the liability of the defendant to the garnishee depends upon the performance by the latter of some condition precedent, or upon his full compliance with the terms of some unperformed agreement or contract. The debt itself must be in existence at the time of the service of the writ, free from any contingency, and it may so exist though the time stipulated for its payment be very remote." Freeman, Executions, § 165.

In Drake, Attachm. § 551, it is said: "The debt from the garnishee to the defendant, in respect of which it is sought to charge the former, must, moreover, be absolutely payable, at present or in future, and not dependent on any contingency. If the contract between the parties be of such a nature that it is uncertain and contingent whether anything will ever be due in virtue of it, it will not give rise to such a credit as may be attached; for that cannot properly be called a debt which is not certainly and at all events payable either at the present or some future period." Brockenbrough v. Ward, 4 Rand. (Va.) 352; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. McCullough, 12 Gratt. 595; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gallahue, 14 Gratt. 503; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Rutherford, 95 Va. 773, 30 S. E. 383; Case v. Dewey, 55 Mich. 116, 20 N. W. 817, 21 N. W. 911; Wood v. Buxton, 108 Mass. 102; Godfrey v. Macomber, 128 Mass. 188; Edwards v. Roepke, 74 Wis. 571, 43 N. W. 554; Day v. New England L. Ins. Co. 111 Pa. 507, 56 Am. Rep. 297, 4 Atl. 748.

In the case last cited it was held that a policy of life insurance, payable to the legal representative of the assured, is not the subject of an attachment execution during the life of the assured. In the case cited the policy was payable to the assured, his executors or administrators, for the benefit of his widow, if any. The wife died in the lifetime of the assured; thus making the policy, which was an ordinary life policy, payable to the legal representatives of the assured at his death. The court said: "No action could by any possibility have been maintained for the recovery of the money by the deceased in his lifetime, nor by any other persons, except upon the condition that he had first died. His death was simply and absolutely indispensable to the existence of any right of action on the policy. More than this, if the assured had voluntarily surrendered the policy at any moment before his death, or if it had become forfeited by breach of condition, no right of action would ever have existed, even in his legal representatives. Still more, at no time during his life could the proceedings upon the attachment have been brought to final judgment in favor of the attaching creditor, because it could never be known until the death of the assured had actually transpired whether any money would become due upon the policy. The law regarding attachments contemplates and provides for actual proceedings resulting in judgment for one party or the other, not for an entire suspension of proceedings for an indefinite and uncertain period. A policy effected at the age of twenty-one, payable at death, might not become payable in fact for sixty or more years. Can it be that an attaching creditor, upon such a policy, could demand the judgment of a court against the company as garnishee, payable at the death of the assured, or, as an alternative, claim that the court should suspend all proceedings until the assured shall die? It is incredible. No judgment could be given in advance of death, because no court could possibly know for what amount the judgment should be rendered, nor whether any amount would ever become due."

In that case, like the one at bar, there was no existing indebtedness that could be reached and fastened upon by an execution lien. The condition precedent in each case was that the assured pay the premiums during the time specified in the contract, which made the right to demand anything wholly contingent, because the payment of such premiums rested upon the voluntary action of the assured, and therefore might never be made.

The lien of an execution can affect only such subjects as exist when it is alive. It is impossible to conceive the existence of a lien without a subject for it to operate upon. This proposition seems so self-evident that we deem it unnecessary to consider it further.

There are only two authorities among those cited by appellant that appear to be in conflict with the principle we have been discussing and to these we shall briefly allude:

In the case of Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co. 57 L. R. A.

94 Va. 741, 27 S. E. 596, one of the questions involved was the right of priority of certain execution creditors of a contractor, by reason of their fi. fa. liens upon a fund in the hands of the city of Roanoke; it being 15 per cent of the cost of certain work which the city had the right to retain until the entire work was completed; the work not being then finished. In delivering the opinion of the court, Judge Riely says that the executions were liens on the amount due by the city to Patterson, although the same could not be enforced until the completion of the work. The learned judge seems to have treated the fund in question as a debt in presenti solvendum in futuro. It does not appear from the opinion that the question was raised as to whether the liability of the city rested upon a contingency. Be that as it may, the decision is not approved, to the extent that it may be regarded as authority for the proposition that a future liability which depends wholly upon a contingency that may or may not happen is subject to the lien of an execution.

The case of Anthracite Ins. Co. v. Sears, 109 Mass. 383, is also particularly relied on by appellant. That was a proceeding in equity to subject, during the lifetime of the assured, a policy to the payment of a debt, under a statute which provided for such a proceeding where the subject could not be reached by attachment or taken on execution. An important distinction between that case and the one at bar is that it was there admitted, as one of the agreed facts in the case, that the insurance company was in the habit of taking up policies, like the one there involved, when the company and the holder of the policy could agree upon terms; giving it, as stated by the court, a present market value. No such fact is admitted in the case at bar. On the contrary, we have nothing before us but the policy, under which, as already pointed out, there was no existing indebtedness. If, however, that case can be relied on as contravening the well-settled rule to which we have adverted, we must decline to follow it.

In the case at bar the premiums had been paid for more than three years, and the appellants rely upon the following provision of the policy as vesting in the assured a present interest that could be demanded: "Paid-Up Policy. After three full annual premiums have been paid upon this policy, the company will, upon the legal surrender thereof, before default in payment of any premium, or within six months thereafter, issue a nonparticipating policy for paid-up insurance, payable as herein provided, for the proportion of the amount of this policy, which the number of full-year premiums paid bears to the total number required."

To avail of the terms of this stipulation of the policy would involve, not merely a change of the contract, but the making of a new contract between the assured and the company. Ordinarily a creditor can only subject to his benefit such contract as exists in favor of his debtor. He cannot compel his debtor to change his contract, or make a new and different one, in order that he may reach and subject it to the payment of his debt. But if it were conceded that the surrender contemplated by that clause of the policy could be made by anyone other than the assured, it will be observed that no steps were taken in the lifetime of the assured to carry out that provision, and upon his death any such inchoate right was merged in the higher right of the personal representative of the assured to demand the full face value of the policy. In other words, the conditions necessary to enable the execution creditor to avail himself of the provision, if, indeed, he could have done so under any circumstance,—as to which we express no opinion,—did not arise. This suit was not brought until after the death of the assured, when it was too late to invoke the aid of a court of equity to carry out that stipulation for the benefit of a creditor, because, under the terms of the policy, the time had then passed when that provision was operative for any purpose.

For these reasons, we are of the opinion that the fi. fa. in the hands of the appellant did not operate as a lien upon the policy in question, because, under the terms of the policy, there was no existing indebtedness against the company in favor of the assured to which such a lien could attach.

The decree appealed from must therefore be affirmed.

Cardwell, J., concurs in result. Buchanan, J., absent.

J. O. HUTCHINSON et al., Appts.,

v.

Clark MAXWELL et al.

(.....Va.....)

1. An equitable life estate which shall be free from the debts of the beneficiary cannot be created where the statute provides that estates of every kind, holden or possessed in trust, shall be subject to debts and charges of the persons to whose use, or to whose benefit, they are holden or possessed, as they would be if those persons owned the like interest in things holden or possessed, as in the uses or trusts thereof.

2. In jurisdictions where spendthrift trusts are illegal, creditors may subject to their claims personal property in which the beneficiary in such an attempted trust is given an absolute equitable estate, and the rents, profits, and income of real and personal estate, which the beneficiary could have claimed under a direction to the trustee to use them for his proper and comfortable support and maintenance, although the trustee has a discretion as to what amount shall be so applied.

3. A bill filed in behalf of all creditors "who are entitled to become parties to this suit," to reach the interest of a beneficiary in a spendthrift trust, is not open to the objection that it embraces nonlien creditors as complainants.

4. An allegation of the return of the execution "No property found" is not necessary to support a bill in equity to reach assets of the execution debtor.

5. A bill to reach assets of a judgment debtor is sufficient if, when read in connection with exhibits filed, it will enable defendant to make defense, and the court to decree upon the case made.

6. A bill to reach an execution debtor's interest in a spendthrift trust is not rendered multifarious by allegations in an amendment tending to show that the property originally bequeathed to the judgment debtor, and was conveyed and reconveyed under a plan to defraud creditors, where the whole frame and scope of the amendment show, not an effort to have the deeds set aside as a fraud on creditors, but to subject the debtor's interest in the trust to the payment of his debts.

(January 30, 1902.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Corporation Court of Winchester in favor of defendants in a suit to subject certain alleged interests of Clark Maxwell to the payment of his debts. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Samuel J. C. Moore, C. Kownslar, M. McCormick, and Robert M. Ward, for appellants:

Section 2428 of the Code of 1887 embraces all descriptions of property, real and personal.

Clayton v. Anthony, 6 Rand. (Va.) 308; Findlay v. Toncray, 2 Rob. (Va.) 377.

A devise, bequest, or conveyance of property, real or personal, by a legal or equitable estate or interest, for life, to a person sui juris, together with the power to dispose of the same, or, if not disposed of by the exercise of the power, to his heirs at law,—gives him the absolute ownership, with all its incidents.

Riddick v. Cohoon, 4 Rand. (Va.) 547; Madden v. Madden, 2 Leigh, 377; Burwell v. Anderson, 3 Leigh, 355; Brown v. George, 6 Gratt. 424; Nixon v. Rose, 12 Gratt. 429; May v. Joynes, 20 Gratt. 692; Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church v. Calvert, 32 Gratt. 357; Curr v. Effinger, 78 Va. 197; Cole v. Cole, 79 Va. 251; Hall v. Palmer, 87 Va. 354, 11 L. R. A. 610, 12 S. E. 618; Bowen v. Bowen, 87 Va. 438, 12 S. E. 885; Farish v. Wayman, 91 Va. 430, 21 S. E. 810; Davis v. Heppert, 96 Va. 775, 32 S. E. 467.

NOTE.—For earlier cases in this series on the subject of spendthrift trusts, see Lampert v. Haydel (Mo.) 2 L. R. A. 113, and note; Wales v. Bowdish (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 819; Slattery v. Wason (Mass.) 7 L. R. A. 393; Haycraft v. Bland (Ky.) 9 L. R. A. 599; Billings v. Marsh (Mass.) 10 L. R. A. 764; Ghormley v. Smith (Pa.) 11 L. R. A. 565; Bull v. Kentucky Nat. Bank (Ky.) 12 L. R. A. 37; Day v. Slaughter (Va.) 13 L. R. A. 212, and note; Roberts v. 57 L. R. A.

Stevens (Me.) 17 L. R. A. 266; Leigh v. Harrison (Miss.) 18 L. R. A. 49; Van Osdell v. Champlain (Wis.) 27 L. R. A. 773; Wetmore v. Wetmore (N. Y.) 33 L. R. A. 708; Brown v. McGill (Md.) 39 L. R. A. 806; Schenck v. Barnes (N. Y.) 41 L. R. A. 895; Seymour v. McAvoy (Cal.) 41 L. R. A. 544; Scott v. Keane (Md.) 42 L. R. A. 359; Wilson v. Anderson (Pa.) 44 L. R. A. 542; and Murphy v. Delano (Me.) 55 L. R. A. 727.

The ownership of property includes the right to alien it, and imposes on it a liability for the debts of the owner. An attempt to divest it of these incidents is repugnant to the estate, and therefore void.

Wms. Real Prop. *18, 59; 1 Lomax's Digest, pp. 13, 223; Butler v. McCann, 4 Leigh, 632; Nickell v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 345; Nixon v. Rose, 12 Gratt. 429; Camp v. Cleary, 76 Va. 140; Garland v. Garland, 87 Va. 758, sub nom. Day v. Slaughter, 13 L. R. A. 212, 13 S. E. 478.

In no state are restraints on alienation permitted, where a fee-simple estate, or the absolute ownership, is vested in the party holding the property.

Gray, Restraints on Alienation of Property, §§ 113, 115, pp. 99, 101; J. S. Menken Co. v. Brinkley, 94 Tenn. 721, 31 S. W. 92; Barker's Estate, 159 Pa. 518, 28 Atl. 365, 368; Mebane v. Mebane, 39 N. C. (4 Ired. Eq.) 131.

A spendthrift trust must be a pure gratuity. If the cestui que trust gives any consideration for it, it will be in fraud of his creditors and voidable at their option.

J. S. Menken Co. v. Brinkley, 94 Tenn. 721, 31 S. W. 92.

Even in the case of a power of appointment, which is general and absolute, and is exercised, whether by deed or will, in favor of volunteers, a court of chancery will consider the property appointed as assets, subject to the claims of creditors in preference to the claims of the appointees.

18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 986; Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 41 Am. Dec. 705.

It is only in cases where the happening of the event has divested the devisee of all interests in the property that the courts have said there was nothing that could be reached by creditors.

Bland v. Bland, 90 Ky. 400, sub nom. Huycraft v. Bland, 9 L. R. A. 599, 14 S. W. 423; Rudd v. Hagan, 86 Ky. 159, 5 S. W. 416; Marshall v. Rash, 87 Ky. 116, 7 S. W. 879; Bull v. Kentucky Nat. Bank, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 536, 12 L. R. A. 37, 14 S. W. 425.

If the beneficiary has parted with, or is required to part with, something of value in consideration of receiving the benefit of a devise or legacy, then it cannot be made inalienable by him, nor exempted from seizure by his creditors.

Bank of Commerce v. Chambers, 96 Mo. 459, 10 S. W. 38.

Messrs. Barton & Boyd, for appellees:

An execution constituting a lien is prima facie satisfaction thereof, and suspends all other remedies.

Walker v. Com. 18 Gratt. 43, 98 Am. Dec. 631; Rhea v. Preston, 75 Va. 757; 2 Barton, Law Pr. 854; Trapnall v. Richardson, 13 Ark. 543, 58 Am. Dec. 350; Freeman, Executions, § 269; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 157; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co. 5 Cush. 158, 51 Am. Dec. 63.

Garland v. Garland, 87 Va. 760, sub nom. Day v. Slaughter, 13 L. R. A. 212, 13 S. E. 478, only differs from this case in two particulars: 1. In the Garland Case the whole income went directly to Burr Garland without the interposition of the discretion of a trustee. That is what the bill avers these deeds do, but which they do not in fact, and yet in the Garland Case the spendthrift trust was sustained. 2. In the Garland Case the property was to pass, at the death of Burr Garland, to Charles Y. Morris in trust for the separate use of his wife, Pauline B. Morris, and her children.

A power, whether naked or coupled with an interest, which is vested in one who has no ownership of, but only a limited estate in, property, to appoint the remainderman, is absolutely inconsistent with any property interest vesting in the person who is clothed with the power to appoint.

Nickell v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 336.

If the trustee is vested with a discretionary power of applying the trust estate to the use of the cestui que trust, the creditors cannot subject it to the payment of their claims.

J. S. Menken Co. v. Brinkley, 94 Tenn. 721, 31 S. W. 92; Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 23 L. ed. 254; Lampert v. Haydel, 96 Mo. 439, 2 L. R. A. 113, 9 S. W. 780; Smith v. Towers, 69 Md. 77, 14 Atl. 497, 15 Atl. 92; Leigh v. Harrison, 69 Miss. 923, 18 L. R. A. 49, 11 So. 604; Roberts v. Stevens, 84 Me. 325, 17 L. R. A. 266, 24 Atl. 873; Bull v. Kentucky Nat. Bank, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 536, 12 L. R. A. 37, 14 S. W. 425; Billings v. Marsh, 153 Mass. 311, 10 L. R. A. 764, 28 N. E. 1000; People's Sav. Bank v. Denig, 131 Pa. 241, 18 Atl. 1083; Seymour v. Mo-Avoy, 121 Cal. 438, 41 L. R. A. 544, 53 Pac. 946.

When a provision for support and maintenance is a gift, then the beneficiary has for such a gift parted with nothing that his creditors could have subjected. Parting with something that his creditors cannot subject to the payment of his debts does not constitute a valid consideration for anything which he has accepted by it.

Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 23 L. ed. 254; Chahoon v. Com. 21 Gratt. 822; Tate v. Tate, 75 Va. 522.

One may have the power to appoint whom he may see proper, without any sort of property interest being in him.

Davis v. Heppert, 96 Va. 775, 32 S. E. 407; Missionary Soc. of M. E. Church v. Calvert, 32 Gratt. 357; Randolph v. Wright, 81 Va. 608.

By reason of express limitation in the first taker, he can have no absolute estate growing out of a power to appoint the successor.

Machir v. Funk, 90 Va. 284, 18 S. E. 197; Mosby v. Mosby, 9 Gratt. 570; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 887; Johnson v. Cushing, 15 N. H. 298, 41 Am. Dec. 704.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was instituted to reach and subject the rights and interests of Clark Maxwell, the debtor, in certain real and personal estate conveyed by his wife to a trustee, to the payment of the debts of the appellants, which had been reduced to judgment, and upon which execution had issued.

The object of the conveyances of the wife to the trustee was, as is stated in the deeds, to provide "an estate and fund for the maintenance, support, and enjoyment of the said Clark Maxwell, the husband of the said party of the first part, at the same time securing the same against his improvidence, without being alienable by him, or in any wise subject to or chargeable with his past, present, or future debts or liabilities."

The estate conveyed to Scott H. Hansbrough, trustee, by one of the deeds, consisted of horses, wagons, carts, harness, silverware, pictures, etc., and the right to the use and occupation of, and to the rents and profits arising from, a certain farm lying in part in the county of Clarke and partly in the county of Frederick, containing 333 acres, during the natural life of the husband, reserving to the grantor the remainder in the farm.

The estate conveyed by the other deed consisted:

First. Of one half, in value, or a moiety, of the capital or principal sum of all the properties, moneys, investments, choses in action, and estate, real, personal, or mixed, in the charge, custody, and management of one George M. Saunders, of London, England, the attorney and agent of the wife; and,

Second. The net income, rents, profits, and interest arising out of and derived from the other moiety of the property held by said agent and attorney, during the life of the husband.

The estate or interest of the husband in the horses and other personal property conveyed by the first-named deed is limited as follows:

"The said Scott H. Hansbrough shall, immediately upon the execution and delivery of this indenture, take possession of the personal property aforesaid, mentioned in clause 1, and hold the same as trustee aforesaid, free from all debts or liabilities of the said Clark Maxwell, and without any right or power in the said Clark Maxwell to dispose of, alien, or charge or encumber the same, but for the free use and enjoyment of said Clark Maxwell, as provided in the trust herein contained, with power only to said trustee to sell and dispose of the same when and as he may see fit, in accordance with, and for the purposes of, the trust herein established."

As to the farm, the deed provides that the trustee, "out of the rents and profits arising from said farm, after paying all taxes, insurance, and necessary expenses of administering said trust, shall apply the same, so far as is necessary, in his discretion and judgment, to the proper and comfortable support and maintenance of said Clark Maxwell, paying therefrom from time to time, or from week to week, only so much of said rents and profits proportionately in such sum or sums as to said trustee may seem proper to be paid, without the right or power of said Clark Maxwell to assign or anticpate the same; and any residue thereof, remaining after the payment of said taxes, costs of insurance, and other expenses aforesaid, and the said support and maintenance of said Clark Maxwell, shall be safely invested from time to time by said trustee as other trust funds are required by law to be invested and held in trust, as a capital sum.

"The annual interest or income from which shall be expended for the maintenance and support of said Clark Maxwell as aforesaid, and such capital sum shall at or after the death of said Clark Maxwell be paid to such person or persons as said Clark Maxwell shall nominate and appoint by his last will and testament, and in default of such appointment the same shall pass and belong to the heirs at law of said Clark Maxwell."

By the terms of the other deed, which conveys the property in the hands of Saunders, agent and attorney, it is provided that the property thereby conveyed shall be held in trust, "and free from the control and ownership and power of said Clark Maxwell and his assigns, and in no respect or manner subject to any contract, debt, or liability of said Clark Maxwell, but upon the further trust that out of so much of said income, rents, and profits as, in the discretion and judgment of said trustee, shall be necessary therefor, the said trustee shall provide for the proper and comfortable support of said Clark Maxwell, payable to or for the said Clark Maxwell from week to week, or from time to time, proportionately, so much of said income, rents, and profits in sum or sums as may, to said trustee, seem proper to be paid therefor; and any residue thereof not so expended by said trustee shall be by him safely invested from time to time, and held in trust as a capital sum, along with the aforesaid capital or principal sum derived from the moiety of said properties, money," etc. It further provides that "the said trustee, upon the death of said Clark Maxwell, shall pay the principal sum in his hands to such person or persons as Maxwell shall nominate and appoint by his last will, and in default of such appointment the same shall pass and belong to his [Maxwell's] heirs at law."

Upon appellant's contention, two questions arise: First, whether the interest or estate conveyed by the deeds was a gift, or was based upon a valuable consideration; second, if a gift, whether or not the provisions of the deeds that it should not be liable for the donee's debts are void, because repugnant to the nature of the estate conveyed.

If the conveyances were based upon a valuable consideration, the second question does not arise, as it is conceded by appellees' counsel that, if the cestui que trust paid a consideration for the property conveyed, the provisions of the deed that it should not be liable for his debts would be a fraud upon the rights of his creditors, and could not be upheld.

The deeds in question, upon their face, purport to convey the estate or interest which passes to the grantee as gifts, and the record does not show that the conveyances were based upon considerations deemed valuable in law.

Being gifts, the next question is, Are the provisions of the deeds, declaring that the donee's estate or interest therein should not be liable for his debts, void?

It is conceded that the question of the liability for debt of cestui que trust's interest in property, out of the income of which he is to be supported for life, had not been passed upon by this court prior to the case of Garland v. Garland, 87 Va. 758, sub nom. Day v. Slaughter, 13 L. R. A. 212, 13 S. E. 478. Numerous cases had been before this court in which trusts making somewhat similar provisions were involved, but they were either cases in which it was not necessary to pass upon the question now under consideration, or cases where the provisions were for the benefit of two or more beneficiaries; and the question was whether or not their interests could be severed, or whether they were so connected that no part of the trust fund could be reached for the debts of any one of them. Among these cases are Markham v. Guerrant, 4 Leigh, 279; Nickell v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 336; Camp v. Cleary, 76 Va. 140.

But it is claimed that in the case of Garland v. Garland, 87 Va. 758, sub nom. Day v. Slaughter, 13 L. R. A. 212, 13 S. E. 478, the validity of such trusts was upheld, and that the question is no longer an open one in this state.

The opinion of the court in that case does so hold, but the construction which the court placed upon the will did not, we think, require a decision of the question. It construed the will as giving to the testator's brother Burr Garland the mere right to a decent and comfortable support out of the profits of an estate, the legal title to which, as well as the profits, he (the testator) was careful to confer upon the trustee. Burr Garland was dead, and the property sought to be subjected were profits unexpended at the time of his death.

Having placed this construction upon the will, the court says: "On behalf of the appellees, it is insisted that the testator, by his will, gave to Burr Garland the profits therein mentioned absolutely, and that the exemption of the profits from liability for Burr Garland's debts is void, because they say that it is a fundamental doctrine of the English chancery, and that the same rule prevails in America, that no such estate can be deprived of the incident of alienability or liability for the debts of the owner."

"But this argument seems to me to be beside the mark."

"In this case the devisee and legatee, Burr Garland, did not take any absolute property in the profits of the estate which he might have assigned or aliened, but, on the contrary, he acquired the mere, although exclusive, right to a reception of so much of said profits as would furnish a decent and comfortable support for himself; and this was so qualified and limited as to fence out all his creditors, except those who furnished him supplies for his support. Had he undertaken to expend these profits in any other way, he would have been guilty of a breach of trust; for there was, in the eye of a court of equity, as complete a trust in him to apply these profits in this one direction as there was in the trustee to hold the legal title. And while he, Burr Garland, took this qualified right, which we think it is a misnomer to call property, the remaindermen took a vested remainder in all the surplus or unexpended profits."

If Burr Garland acquired no property rights under the will of his brother in the profits sought to be subjected in that case, as the court, in effect, held, then there was, of course, nothing for his creditors to subject, and there was no necessity or occasion for the court expressing any opinion upon the validity or invalidity of such provisions where the cestui que trust did take a property interest under the trust. That expression of opinion was therefore a mere dictum, and cannot be regarded as an authoritative decision of the question under consideration.

It is well settled in this country and in England, from which country we derive the principles of our jurisprudence, that a gift or grant of a beneficial estate, in fee or absolutely, whether legal or equitable, has certain legal incidents of which the estate cannot be divested, and all conditions adopted for that purpose are necessarily repugnant and void. Among those incidents are the donee's or grantee's power of alienating such estate, and its liability for his debts. Co. Litt. 223a; Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429; 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 287, 288; Gray, Restraints on Alienation of Property, 2d ed. §§ 105, 134.

The reason of this doctrine or principle is the repugnancy of such restraints upon the ordinary rights of property, and that property would thereby be withdrawn from the ordinary rules and channels of commerce and trade.

In Co. Litt. 223a, in discussing conditions against alienation, it is said: "The like law is of a devise in fee upon condition that the devisee shall not alien, the condition is void; and so it is of a grant, release, confirmation, or any other conveyance whereby a fee simple doth pass. For it is absurd and repugnant to reason that he that hath no possibility to have the land revert to him should restrain his feoffee in fee simple of all his power to alien. And so it is if a man be possessed of a lease for years, or of a horse, or of any other chattel, real or personal, and give or sell his whole interest or propertie therein, upon condition that the donee or vendee shall not alien the same, the same is void, because his whole interest and propertie is out of him, so as he hath no possibility of a reverter; and it is against trade and traffique and bargaining and contracting between man and man."

The case of a settlement upon a married woman, or in reference to coverture, is an exception, or apparent exception, to the general rule that conditions restraining the power of alienation and exempting property from the liability for the debts of the owner are repugnant and void. But the whole doctrine of the equitable separate estate of a married woman is the creature of equity,—the invention of the chancellors,—and sets at naught many of the principles of the common law. 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 648.

"When this court," said Lord Cottenham in Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 Myl. & C. 377, "first established the separate estate, it violated the laws of property as between husband and wife; but it was thought beneficial, and it prevailed. It being once settled that a wife might enjoy separate estate as a feme sole, the laws of property attached to this new estate; and it was found, as part of such law, that the power of alienation belonged to the wife, and was destructive of the security intended for it. Equity again interfered, and, by another violation of the laws of property, supported the validity of the prohibition against alienation." Buckton v. Hay, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 645.

It is also well settled in England that the right of alienation and liability for debts are inseparable incidents of a life estate, whether limited by way of trust or otherwise, except in cases where there is a termination or limitation over of the estate dependent upon attempted alienation or seizure by creditors. Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429; Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 66; Kochford v. Hackman, 9 Hare, 475; Gray, Restraints on Alienation of Property, § 134.

It is also equally well settled in this country, even in those jurisdictions where "spendthrift trusts" are upheld, that liability for debts is an inseparable incident of a legal life estate. In the case of Hahn v. Hutchinson, 159 Pa. 138, 139, 28 Atl. 167, in the supreme court of Pennsylvania, where such trusts seem to have had their origin, it was held, following prior decisions, that, "in order to protect the estate from creditors, the legal estate must be in the hands of a trustee, and, if the equitable estate became merged in the legal, it could be immediately seized in execution by creditors." Prof. Gray, who has given this subject the most thorough investigation, in his work on Restraints on Alienation, says there is not a shred of authority on either side of the Atlantic in favor of the doctrine that a life tenant of the legal estate in land can be restrained from alienation. Sections 138, 134. In our investigation, we have found no case holding a contrary doctrine, unless it be some Illinois cases referred to by Prof. Gray. At least, the overwhelming current of authority is that a legal life estate is subject to the legal incidents of property, one of which is that it is liable for the owner's debts. Ehrisman v. Sener, 162 Pa. 577, 29 Atl. 719; Wellington v. Janvrin, 60 N. H. 174; McCleary v. Ellis, 54 Iowa, 311, 37 Am. Rep. 205, 6 N. W. 571; Maynard v. Cleaves, 149 Mass. 307, 21 N. E. 376.

If liability for debts is an inseparable incident of a legal life estate, as it unquestionably is, why should it not be an inseparable incident of a like estate in equity?

One reason why it is an inseparable incident of property at common law is that it is against public policy that a man "should have an estate to live on, but not an estate to pay debts with." Does not this reason apply as much to equitable estates as to legal? A restraint on alienation and freedom from liability for debt are as much against public policy in the one case as in the other. The English chancery courts recognized this, and applied the rule of the common law to equitable estates. They did not ingraft any new doctrine on the common law, as is suggested in some of the cases which uphold spendthrift trusts; but, as Prof. Gray shows conclusively, "they walked scrupulously in the ancient ways of the law, and it is these late cases which have departed from the principles of the common law as much as they have from the precedents in equity." "The common law," as he says, "held that legal estates of freehold, whether in fee simple or for life, should not be inalienable; and chancery held the same of equitable estates of freehold. The common law held that a legal life estate might be made determinable on alienation, and chancery held the same of an equitable life estate." Section 256.

Not only did courts of equity, in the furtherance of a wise public policy, recognize the fact that equitable as well as legal estates should not be withdrawn from commerce, and should be liable for the obligations of the owner, but at an early day, very soon after we had severed our connection with the mother country, the lawmaking power of this state, by an act regulating conveyances, which went into effect January 1, 1787, and which, with some verbal changes, is found in § 2428 of the Code of 1887, declared that "estates of every kind, holden or possessed in trust, shall be subject to debts and charges of the persons to whose use, or to whose benefit, they are holden or possessed, as they would be if those persons owned the like interest in the things holden or possessed, as in the uses or trusts thereof." 12 Hen. Stat. chap. 62, p. 157; 1 Rev. Code 1819, chap. 99, § 30.

This statute makes the equitable estate of the cattui que trust liable for his debts to the same extent as if he were the legal owner of the same. If a condition is annexed to a legal life estate that it shall not be liable for the owner's debts, it is void. Why, then, is not a like condition annexed to an equitable life estate void also?

The legislation of the state shows that it was the object and policy of the legislature to make all estates, where the owners are sui juris, liable for debt, whether legal or equitable, except such as might be exempt by express statutory provisions. The effect of upholding spendthrift trusts would be to encourage idleness and lessen enterprise, and to foster a class who become more and more reckless and indifferent to their honest debts, from a sense that they are hedged in by the law beyond the reach of their creditors.

The decisions of the American courts upon this question are conflicting, and the reasoning of the cases which uphold spendthrift trusts is unsatisfactory, and, as it seems to us, at war with well-settled principles of law as to the incidents of property, whilst the English courts of chancery, and the American cases which follow them, even if our statute did not make a debtor's equitable property liable for his debts to the same extent as if he were the legal owner, seem to us to be sustained by the better reason, and in furtherance of a wise public policy. Whatever rights, whether legal or equitable, a person sui juris has in property, ought to be, and we think are, liable for his debts, except so far as is exempt therefrom by statute. Whatever rights of property the cestui que trust can demand from his trustees, his creditors ought to have the right to subject to the payment of their debts, unless his rights are so connected or blended with the rights of others that they cannot be subjected without prejudice to the latter's rights. Nickell v. Handly, 10 Gratt. 336, 339.

Having reached this conclusion, the provisions in the deed of Mrs. Maxwell must be held to be void in so far as they declare that the property rights which her husband acquired under the deeds shall not be liable for his debts.

The next question is, What rights of property did the husband acquire by the deeds?

By the first-mentioned deed, filed with the bill, and marked "Exhibit B," he acquired an absolute equitable estate in the horses and other personal property described in clause numbered 1 of that deed, or in the proceeds thereof, in the event the trustee sold the same, as he had authority to do under the provisions of the deed. Under that deed, and the other deed filed with the bill, marked "Exhibit C," he was entitled to what, in the judgment and discretion of the trustee, would be a proper and comfortable support and maintenance out of the rents and profits of the farm conveyed by the first-named deed, and out of the income, rents and profits of the property conveyed by the second-named deed, after paying taxes, insurance, and necessary expenses of administering the trust, and which were made prior charges upon the profits and income received by the trustee from the farm and from the property conveyed by the other deed. And the husband was further entitled, under the provisions of the first-named deed, to the annual interest or income on so much of the rents and profits of the farm as were not necessary for the said proper and comfortable support and maintenance of the husband, and which the trustee was required by the deed to invest as a capital sum or interest-bearing fund.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the appellants have the right to have subjected to the payment of their debts, so far as may be necessary, the horses and other personal property conveyed by clause numbered 1 of the deed marked "Exhibit B," and filed with the bill, or the proceeds thereof, if that property has been sold by the trustee, and so much of the rents, profits, and income derived by the trustee from the other property conveyed by, and also the fund invested under, the two deeds, after paying the prior charges of taxes, insurance, etc., charged thereon, as the husband would be entitled to receive for his proper and comfortable support and maintenance under the provisions of the said deeds.

It is true, there is a discretion vested in the trustee by the deeds as to what amount of the rents, profits, and income arising from the property conveyed shall be applied to the husband's support and maintenance; but it seems to be settled that where trustees are directed to apply the income of a trust fund for the support and benefit of the debtor, and for other purposes, but have no right to exclude the debtor, then the assignee and the creditors can claim from the trustee the amount which the debtor could have claimed should have been applied to his benefit. Page v. Way, 3 Beav. 20; Kearsley v. Woodcock, 3 Hare, 185; Rippon v. Norton, 2 Beav. 63; Wallace v. Anderson, 10 Beav. 533; and Gray, Restraints on Alienation of Property, 159.

Upon cross appeal, the action of the court in overruling the demurrer to the bill and amended bill is assigned as error by the appellees.

The first objection is that the bill was filed in behalf of all creditors, when it could be filed on behalf of all lien creditors.

The bill is in behalf of complainants, and "in behalf of all creditors of Clark Maxwell who may be entitled to become parties to this suit." As only lien creditors were entitled to become parties to the suit,—Armstrong v. Pitts, 13 Gratt. 235, 243,—the bill must be construed as showing on its face that it was filed in behalf of such creditors only. The complainants were lien creditors, and none other than lien creditors became parties to the suit.

The next objection urged to the bill is that it alleges that the complainants had sued out execution and obtained a lien upon the property sought to be subjected, without showing that they had exhausted their remedy at law.

It was necessary, under the decision of Armstrong v. Pitts, 13 Gratt. 235, 243, that the creditors should have a lien upon the property sought to be subjected, before they could come into a court of equity; but it was not necessary that they should have alleged a return of "No property found" upon the executions as a condition precedent to filing their bill. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 28 L. ed. 301, 303, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226; Lewin, Tr. 795.

The third objection is that its allegations are indefinite and uncertain. The bill, when read in connection with the exhibits filed, and which are made a part of it, is not, in our opinion, subject to the objection made, but states the complainants' case with such a degree of certainty and consistency as would enable the defendants to make defense, and the court to decree upon the case made, and that is sufficient.

The fourth ground of demurrer is that the bill and amended bill are multifarious.

The object of the original bill was to subject the interest of the debtor in the trust subject to the payment of his debts, notwithstanding the provisions of the deeds creating the trust declared that it should not be so liable, upon the ground that such provisions were void. In addition to the facts alleged in the original bill, the amended bill alleges that the interest of the debtor in the trust subject was not a gift, but that the deeds conveying it were founded upon a valuable consideration. The amended bill, it is true, further alleges that the property settled by the wife upon the debtor husband had been originally conveyed by him to her, with all his other property, and that these conveyances of the husband to the wife, and afterwards of the wife for the benefit of the husband, were executed in pursuance of a plan to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the husband; but in the same paragraph in which that allegation is made it is alleged that the deeds of the wife vest in the husband the equitable title to all the property conveyed to the trustee, in trust for the former's use and benefit, and that such equitable interests are subject to and liable for the payment of his debts. It is apparent from the whole frame and scope of the amended bill that it was not filed to have the deeds in question set aside and annulled upon the ground that they were made to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the husband, but to subject the debtor's interest in the trust subject to the payment of his debts,—the same object for which the original bill was filed.

We are of opinion that there was no error in the court's overruling the demurrer to the bill and amended bill upon either of the grounds assigned.

The decree appealed from must be reversed, and the cause remanded to the corporation court for further proceedings to be had in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

John HERRMAN, Appt.,

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp't.

(.....Wash.....)

1. A person resorting to a railroad depot to purchase a ticket for transportation over a railroad which makes use of the depot to receive and discharge passengers is not bound to show that the person at the ticket window is the agent of the company, and not a mere broker, to avoid the application of the rule that a railroad company is not liable for the condition of premises where its tickets are sold by a broker in whose hands they have been placed.
2. A railroad company is not relieved from liability for injury to its passenger by reason of the unsafe condition of the depot premises unless the passenger must use to reach its trains, by the fact that the premises are used by, and in possession of, a union depot company or its receiver, with whom the railroad company contracts for terminal facilities.

(March 4, 1902.)

NOTE.—As to duty of railroad company to keep in safe condition platform connecting its station with that of another company, and liability for injury to passenger while on platform, though defect causing injury is in that portion of platform belonging to other company, see Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 193, and note, as to duty of railroad company to keep its platforms and approaches in safe condition.

For other cases in this series as to duty of carrier in respect to condition of station generally, see Walker v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. (La. Ann.) 7 L. R. A. 111; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein (N. J. L.) 7 L. R. A. 435; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marlen (Ind.) 7 L. R. A. 57 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mount & Merritt and Hand, Taylor, & Graves, for appellant:

Where a railroad company uses a depot and the walks around it and the approaches thereto, and stops its trains there, unloads its passengers, express, and baggage, and keeps its tickets on sale, then the person at the ticket window of such depot may be an agent, and may be a broker, but the knowledge that he is acting as a broker must be brought home to the person dealing with him, and he must be in fact a broker.

Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 213, 46 Pac. 243.

Common carriers cannot, by means of any lease or other contract for the operation of their means of transportation or the management and control of their tracks and right of way, relieve themselves from liability for violation of contracts, or the pub-

687; Redigan v. Boston & M. R. Co. (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 276; Johns v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. (S. C.) 20 L. R. A. 520, and note; and Jordan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.) 32 L. R. A. 101.

As to liability for injury caused by icy condition of steps of elevated railroad station, see Kelly v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 74, and note as to duty to furnish safe approaches, platforms, etc., generally.

For a case holding that ticket agent of union depot is agent of a railroad company using depot, for the purpose of receiving service of process, see Hilary v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) 32 L. R. A. 448.

lie law, or for torts committed by their lessees or the parties with whom they specially contract.

Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 51, 31 Pac. 411; 1 Redf. Railways, 5th ed. p. 616; Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 26 L. ed. 235; Thomas v. West Jersey R. Co. 101 U. S. 71, 83, 25 L. ed. 950, 952; Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 445, 21 L. ed. 875; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reich (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 819.

As between the person injured and the lessee or occupant, the latter is liable, even though the landlord or lessor may also be liable on his covenant to keep in repair.

Swords v. Edgar, 59 N. Y. 28, 17 Am. Rep. 295.

The fact that the Union Depot Company was in the hands of and under the control of a receiver cannot change the rule.

Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 26 L. ed. 235; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141; Carleton v. Franconia Iron & Steel Co. 99 Mass. 216; Buenemann v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 390, 20 N. W. 379; Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 80 Mich. 390, 45 N. W. 178; Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 37 N. W. 361.

If it were the duty of the receiver to keep the property in a safe condition for the public it was equally the duty of the defendant and the O. R. & N. Co., and all other companies using the said premises to do the same. All are jointly and severally liable for the tort caused by the negligence of its or their agent.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 899; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 471-473; Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 213, 46 Pac. 243; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72; Tompkins v. Clay Street R. Co. 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; 1 Rorer, Railroads, pp. 477, 478.

Messrs. Will H. Thompson and M. J. Gordon for respondent.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages brought by appellant against respondent. The complaint alleges that the respondent is in the possession of a certain depot and depot grounds within the city of Spokane, which it operates and controls, on the line of its railroad passing through said city; that the respondent, for its own convenience, and for the convenience of its passengers, did, on the 13th day of December, 1898, maintain a sidewalk upon its said line of road, and in front of said depot; that on said date the respondent negligently and carelessly permitted snow and ice to accumulate and remain upon said walk, and in front of said depot, and carelessly and negligently permitted its engines to exhaust steam upon said snow and ice, and thereby caused said sidewalk to become slippery and icy on top of the snow, and dangerous to the public and persons having business with respondent.

ent at that place; that at about the hour of 6 o'clock in the evening of said day appellant, desiring to travel upon respondent's regular passenger train going east, went to said depot for the purpose of purchasing a ticket for passage upon said train, and that upon inquiry he was informed by the agent in charge of the depot that the train would not leave until the next morning, and thereupon he purchased a ticket for passage over respondent's road from Spokane to Milan, Washington, and at once left the depot for the purpose of going to his lodging in the city of Spokane; that while walking upon said sidewalk on the depot grounds in a careful manner, being compelled to walk upon the snow and ice which had accumulated as aforesaid, he, without any fault of his own, slipped upon the snow and ice, and was violently thrown to the ground, falling in such a manner as to sprain and bruise the ankle of his left leg and break the bones thereof, by reason whereof he was unable to stand upon his feet, and it became necessary that he should be taken from said place to the hospital in Spokane for treatment, which was done; that the said injuries were and are permanent, and by reason thereof appellant will be permanently crippled for life; that he was confined to his room in the hospital for about thirty-five days, and has suffered, and now suffers, great physical and mental pain by reason of said injuries, and is thereby permanently disfigured and deprived of the power he would have had but for said injuries to engage in profitable employment during the remainder of his life; wherefore he asks recovery in damages. The answer of respondent denies the allegations of the complaint, and further affirmatively pleads contributory negligence on the part of appellant, and alleges that appellant was a trespasser upon the property described in the complaint, and had no right to be thereon at the time mentioned in the complaint; that he was not invited by the respondent to pass along the place where he claims to have been injured, and that respondent owed him no duty whatever in respect to any of the matters alleged in the complaint; that whatever risk there may have been or which attended his passing along the premises described in the complaint, was a risk which the plaintiff well knew, and could have, by the exercise of ordinary care and caution, avoided. The cause was tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict for respondent. Appellant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and judgment was thereupon entered that appellant shall take nothing by his said action, and that respondent shall recover its costs. From said judgment this appeal was taken.

Respondent moves to strike the statement of facts, for the reason, as urged, that the court has settled two separate and complete statements which are inconsistent and conflicting with each other. From the record it appears that appellant duly filed a proposed statement. The evidence is not set out in the form of questions and answers as taken by the stenographer, but is set forth in narrative form, and purports to contain all the material facts, matters, and proceedings which occurred at the trial. In due time respondent filed what is denominated an amended statement of facts, proposed by respondent as a substitute for the original statement proposed by appellant. In the latter proposed statement the evidence is also set out in narrative form, and purports to be a complete statement of all the evidence, and of all that occurred at the trial. The certificate of the court is to the effect that the matters and proceedings embodied in the appellant's proposed statement, and in the respondent's proposed amended statement, combined, are matters and proceedings which occurred in the cause and they are made a part of the record. The court, in its certificate, also refers to the combined statements as "the foregoing statement," thus treating them as a unit, and as comprising one statement in the case. Respondent contends that appellant's proposed statement is distorted, garbled, and incomplete; and appellant makes a like charge against the amended statement proposed by respondent. It is manifest that this court has no means of determining the accuracy of the respective contentions, and must rely upon the certificate of the trial court. That certificate recites, in effect, that the contents of each of the proposed statements are truthful accounts of matters which occurred at the trial, and both are therefore approved and made a part of the record. It was doubtless the court's view that omissions in one proposed statement were supplied by the other. In any event, respondent's motion to strike the whole statement as settled seems to us inconsistent, since the motion includes respondent's own proposed amended statement, submitted by itself for certification, which purports to be complete in itself, and which the court has made a part of the record. Moreover, we are unable to find in the record any objection made in the court below to the signing of the court's certificate as it was signed, making both proposed statements a part of the record. For the foregoing reasons we must treat that which the court has made a part of the record as constituting the statement of facts for the case, and the motion to strike is denied.

The assignments of error are based upon the court's instructions, and upon its refusal to instruct as requested by appellant. Counsel differ materially as to the law applicable to the facts in issue in this case. The testimony discloses that the appellant is a farmer, who resides in the country, 17 miles distant from Spokane. On the day he received his injuries he drove a team of horses from his home to Spokane, expecting to attend to some business there, attend a lodge in Spokane that night, and the next day drive with his team from Spokane to Milan, Washington, where he desired to attend to some business. On the way to Spokane one of his horses became lame, and upon reaching there he took his team to a stable and decided to leave them there and go to Milan the next day by the respondent's railroad. He inquired of persons at the stable at what time the train would leave for Milan, but they were unable to inform him. He then went to the depot to ascertain the time the train would leave. He inquired of the agent in charge at the depot, who informed him that the train would leave about 8 o'clock the next morning. He then asked the agent for a ticket to Milan, and purchased from him at that time a round-trip ticket from Spokane to Milan. He immediately passed out of the depot building, and was returning by way of the sidewalk before mentioned when he received the injuries aforesaid. The evidence also disclosed that the depot and grounds thereto attached did not belong to the respondent company, but did belong to a corporation known as the "Union Depot Company of Spokane Falls." The property of the Union Depot Company consisted of the depot, with platform and walks, and some tracks and side tracks. At the time appellant received his injuries the property of the Union Depot Company was in charge of a receiver acting under direction of the United States circuit court. By arrangement between the respondent company and said receiver, the passenger trains of respondent arrived and departed from said depot, and the passengers, baggage, and express matter of said trains at Spokane were received and discharged at said depot. The agent in charge, and who sold appellant his ticket, was employed by the receiver, and sold tickets for passage over respondent's line and also over other lines using the same depot, as well as over all other railway lines in the country. No other agent was stationed at said depot to sell tickets over respondent's line. The evidence is conflicting as to the condition of the sidewalk at the time. Respondent's witnesses testified that it was kept clear of snow and ice, while appellant's testimony is supported by that of other witnesses. We will not inquire into this conflict of testimony, but will leave that to the jury, since it belongs to them to determine that matter. The verdict should not be disturbed unless it appears that the court has submitted the case to the jury under instructions which embody an erroneous view of the law.

It is the contention of respondent that it was not in possession or control of the depot premises at the time; that the ownership of the premises was in another company, and the possession and control thereof were in a receiver of that company, who was operating it as an independent property, distinct from the management and operation of respondent's railroad; that the respondent had no agent in charge, and had no connection with the premises other than to receive and discharge at that place its passengers, baggage, and express matter; that respondent's duties and relations to the public and its patrons at that place were confined to the times of the arrival and departure of its trains, and that, since appellant did not go there with the purpose of taking the train at that time, but only to ascertain the time the train would leave, and to purchase a ticket from the agent of the depot company, his business was therefore entirely with the depot company, and no negligence can be attributed to respondent for the condition of the premises at that time. It is further urged that respondent was under no obligation to sell its own railroad tickets, but had the right to place such tickets in the hands of any person or corporation, and that such person or corporation undertaking the sale of such tickets must assume the duty of providing safe premises for the sale of the same, and under such circumstances respondent is under no duty to a ticket purchaser upon which negligence as to the condition of the premises where tickets are sold can be founded. This view seems to have been adopted by the trial court. The court gave the following instructions: "Any person or corporation selling or offering to sell to the general public any article, such as a railroad ticket, assumes the duty of providing, during reasonable business hours, reasonably safe premises upon which to transact such business, and if necessary, reasonably safe ways to and from said place of business." "I charge you, however, that the defendant did not necessarily have to sell its own railroad tickets, but had the right to place its said tickets for sale in the hands of any person or corporation who, under such circumstances, would assume the duty of providing safe premises for the sale of same. If you should find from the evidence that at the time plaintiff was injured, if he was injured, his only business at said depot was to buy a railroad ticket for a trip on defendant's road, and you should further find from the evidence that said tickets were then and there being sold by some other person or corporation, then and in that case the plaintiff cannot recover from the defendant, and you should find for the defendant." "A railway ticket is property which may be lawfully sold by anyone in whose hands it is placed by the railway company with authority to dispose of the same, and the railway company will not necessarily be required to keep the premises where such persons may conclude to sell such tickets, or the approaches to such places, in repair. I instruct you that the mere fact, if it is a fact, that the defendant railway company allowed a receiver of the United States court, by himself or by his agent, to have possession of the defendant company's tickets, and to sell them to persons desiring to take passage upon its railway line, would not of itself necessarily make it a duty of the defendant railway company to keep the premises occupied by the receiver in the sale of such tickets, or the walks or approaches to the place where such tickets were so sold by such receiver or his agents, in repair." The foregoing instructions would undoubtedly be correct as applied to a mere ticket broker, and to one purchasing from him who had knowledge that he was only such broker. It will be observed that the instructions are wanting in any requirement that the purchaser shall have knowledge that he is dealing with a broker only. One dealing with a broker, knowing him to be such broker only, and as selling tickets upon his own account, could certainly not charge respondent with negligence for not providing safe premises at the place where he applies to purchase a ticket. Here is a case, however, where a railroad company uses a depot, the walks around it, and the approaches thereto. It stops its trains, unloads and receives its passengers, baggage, and express there, and its tickets are there kept on sale. Under such circumstances the person at the ticket window, and who has charge of the sale of tickets, may be an agent, or he may be a mere broker, but knowledge that he is a mere broker should be brought home to the purchaser. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is the ordinary rule for a railroad company to maintain depots where its tickets are kept on sale at a ticket window, and one desiring to purchase a ticket for passage over respondent's line, seeing some person at the ticket window in the depot where respondent's trains are accommodated, would naturally suppose that such person was the agent of the company whose tickets he was selling, and would not suppose, without actual knowledge, that such person was a mere broker, and not the agent of respondent. The above instructions, therefore, place the burden upon the ticket purchaser and patron of respondent to first ascertain whether he is dealing with a broker or an agent of respondent, before he may assume that respondent is obligated to furnish a safe approach to and from its depot over which he must travel when he wishes to purchase a ticket. Such a rule we do not think is just or reasonable, and we therefore think the instructions erroneous in the particular mentioned. In Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 213, 46 Pac. 243, it was held that a ticket seller in a union depot, whose business it is to sell tickets over various lines of railway whose trains enter and depart therefrom, is such an agent of any company furnishing tickets to be sold there which are accepted by the conductors of its trains as its tickets, that the company is bound by any of the declarations of such ticket seller as to the running of its trains.

The evidence shows, and respondent so concedes in its brief, that appellant went to the depot for the purpose of ascertaining at what time the train would leave, and also to purchase a ticket. He had made inquiry uptown as to the train time, but, not getting the desired information, what was more reasonable than that he should go to the depot from which the train would start, in the expectation that someone representing the respondent company would there give him authoritative information? Again, from whom could he expect more accurate information upon that subject than the person at the ticket window? He sought the information from that person, received it, and then purchased his ticket. It is certainly reasonable that someone should be stationed at the place where respondent's trains arrive and depart to give information to the public upon as important a matter as the time of the arrival and departure of trains. If the ticket agent was in no sense the agent of respondent, but only the agent of the receiver of the depot company, then from whom could appellant have procured authoritative information upon so important a subject? Certainly the relations of respondent to the public must be such that someone in charge is authorized to speak, and who can more properly do so than the person who sells the tickets and receives the money which is the consideration for the patron's passage over the line? Appellant sought authoritative information which could only be had from someone having authority to speak for respondent, and such a one he might reasonably expect he would find at the depot. To that extent, at least, it would seem that his business at the depot was with respondent company, and not with the depot company, or its agent, as a ticket broker. The real question is, Is the respondent liable to its patrons for the negligence of the Union Depot Company to keep the premises used by respondent reasonably safe where the depot company has control of the premises, but which by common consent are used as a depot for passenger, express, and baggage business by the respondent company? As bearing upon this subject the court further instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that if you find from the evidence in this case that the sidewalk or platform upon which plaintiff fell and was injured, if you find that he did fall and was injured, was at that time in the exclusive possession and control of the receiver of the United States court, then your verdict must be for the defendant. You are instructed that the gist of this action is negligence; that is to say, the plaintiff charges that the defendant carelessly and negligently permitted snow and ice to accumulate upon a sidewalk, platform, or approach to its depot in the city of Spokane, and I charge you that unless you find from the evidence that the defendant was at that time in the possession and control of such sidewalk, platform, or approach, then your verdict must be for the defendant. You are instructed that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover in this action, it is not enough that you should believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, at or about the time alleged in the complaint, fell upon the sidewalk, platform, or approach mentioned in the complaint in this action, and was injured thereby, unless you further find that the plaintiff was at that time exercising ordinary and reasonable care for his own safety, and also that his fall was a result of the snow and ice upon the platform or approach at the place where the plaintiff sustained such fall; and also that such sidewalk, platform, or approach was, at the time plaintiff fell, within the possession or under the control of the defendant." Thus it will be seen that the court left the jury to find for the respondent if they found that the premises were under the control of another, without regard to whether respondent used the premises for its depot purposes. This, we think, was error. In Cogswell v. West Street & N. E. Electric R. Co. 5 Wash. 46, 31 Pac. 411, this court, at page 51, 5 Wash., and page 412, 31 Pac., said: "It is a well-established principle of the law governing common carriers, which obtain certain rights or franchises from the public by either special or general legislation on the part of the state or municipal corporations, and upon whom in return therefor are cast the burden of certain duties, that they cannot, by means of any lease or other contract for the operation of their means of transportation or the management and control of their tracks and right of way, relieve themselves from liability for violations of contracts or the public law, or for torts committed by their lessees or the parties with whom they specially contract." Again, on pages 52, 53, 5 Wash., and page 413, 31 Pac., the court further said: "Out of a great number of cases which were cited to our attention by both sides, we find but two which are directly pertinent upon this point. The first is Cunningham v. International R. Co. 51 Tex. 503, 32 Am. Rep. 632. In that case a passenger was carried by a construction train operated by independent contractors for the building of the road, without the knowledge of the railroad company, and against its express prohibition, and it was held that the railroad company was not liable. The other case is that of Lakin v. Willamette Valley & Coast R. Co. 13 Or. 436, 57 Am. Rep. 25, 11 Pac. 68, which is a case on all fours with this one, with the exception that there the railroad was an ordinary steam railroad. The court said: 'The defendant may contract for the construction of its road, but it cannot escape liability for injuries to passengers caused by the negligence of another which it permits or allows to use its road for the purposes of traffic. In such case, as regards the public, those who operate the road must be regarded as the agents of the corporation. This doctrine is in accordance with sound public policy; for it would certainly be against the public interest to allow corporations, invested by the state with important franchises and privileges, and incorporated to discharge a public duty as well as to subserve a private benefit, to shirk its responsibilities or shift its duties and liabilities to other, perhaps, irresponsible parties. Except as authorized by statute, it cannot relieve itself from responsibility for the exercise of its corporate powers and franchises.' The two cases referred to, it seems to us, express the correct principle applicable in such instances, and under that principle there was no error on the part of the court as to the point in discussion." The defense in the above case was that of negligence of a construction company employed to equip the road with electric appliances, but passengers were being carried upon the same car that carried the construction material, and it was held that the company could not be relieved from liability because the negligence was primarily that of the construction company. Culling from the first quotation the statement of a general principle which seems particularly applicable here, we have the following: "They cannot by means of any . . . contract for the operation of their means of transportation . . . relieve themselves from liability for violations of contracts or the public law, or for torts committed by . . . the parties with whom they specially contract." Respondent had a contract or arrangement with the depot company by which its "means of transportation" were to be operated upon the depot premises. To these premises the traveling public were invited and induced by respondent, to come and take passage upon its cars. Whether it kept one it called its own agent to sell tickets there or not, yet the fact remains that the public were invited and induced to come there. The tickets were there to be sold, and the ordinary traveler would expect to buy his ticket upon those premises, and without knowledge to the contrary would suppose that in so doing he was dealing directly with respondent through its duly authorized agent. For all the purposes of operating its means of transportation upon those premises and of dealing with the public as is usual at a railroad depot, the respondent was the occupant of the premises, whatever may have been its contract or arrangement with the depot company. In the case of Bennett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 102 U. S. 577, 580, 26 L. ed. 235, 236, the court said: "The facts disclosed by the pleadings, and by the demurrer conceded to exist, seem to bring this case within the rule—founded in justice and necessity, and illustrated in many adjudged cases in the American courts—that the owner or occupant of land who, by invitation, express or implied, induces or leads others to come upon his premises for any lawful purpose, is liable in damages to such persons—they using due care—for injuries occasioned by the unsafe condition of the land or its approaches, if such condition was known to him and not to them, and was negligently suffered to exist, without timely notice to the public, or to those who were likely to act upon such invitation." There a railroad company and a steamboat company used the same premises for depot and landing purposes. A passenger in going to take a steamboat at night was injured by reason of negligently kept premises. The premises belonged to the railroad company, but the passenger's business at that particular time was not with the railroad company, but with the steamboat company upon whose steamer he then sought passage. The railroad company was held liable, within the principle above stated, that by invitation, express or implied, it induced the public to come upon the premises. Likewise did the respondent in this case, by its relations to the depot premises as an occupant for traffic purposes, invite and induce its patrons to come upon those premises; and it therefore came within the above rule. The same principle would doubtless have been applied to the steamboat company in the case cited as an occupant and user of the premises for traffic purposes, although not the owner; but the relief seems to have been sought against the railroad company alone.

Respondent is not relieved from liability on account of unsafe premises because the premises may at the time have been under the control of a receiver of the depot company. Respondent used the premises voluntarily, and it became its duty to provide a reasonably safe place for its patrons. If the receiver neglected to maintain safe premises, his negligence became the negligence of the respondent, because in law he was the agent of respondent, whose duty it was to maintain safe walks upon its depot grounds. In Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141, a passenger purchased from a railroad company a ticket over its line, and at the same time from a palace car company a ticket entitling him to a berth in one of its sleeping cars constituting a part of the train of the railroad company. In the course of transportation he was injured by the falling of a berth in the sleeping car in which he was at the time riding. It was held that, for the purposes of the contract with the railroad company for transportation, and in view of its obligation to use only cars that were adequate for safe conveyance, the palace car company, its conductor and porter, were in law the servants and employees of the railroad company, and that the negligence of either of them as to any matters involving the safety or security of passengers was that of the railroad company. In Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Brown, 17 Wall. 445, 21 L. ed. 675, where a railroad company was being operated jointly by a receiver of a part of it and by a lessee as to the remaining part, the railroad company was held liable for injuries committed by a servant of the parties working it upon the person of a passenger whom such servant improperly expelled from a car into which the passenger had entered, the railroad corporation having allowed tickets to be issued in its own name in the same form as it had done before the road was leased, and the passenger, for aught that appeared, not knowing that the railroad corporation was not itself managing the road. In Pennsylvania Co. v. Ellett, 132 Ill. 654, 24 N. E. 559, it was held that, where a railway company allows another company to use and operate its road, no other negligence than that of the corporation using the track need be alleged or proved in order to fix the liability of the owner company. The negligence of the lessee company is treated the same as its own. In Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72, it was held that all the property of a railroad company, including its depots and adjacent yards and grounds, is its private property, on which no one is invited or can claim the right to enter except those persons who have business with the railroad, which class embraces, not only passengers, but protectors and friends attendant upon their departure or awaiting their arrival; that to the class of persons thus having business the railroad company is under obligation to keep in safe condition all parts of its platforms, with the approaches thereto, to which the public do or would naturally resort, and of the portions of the station grounds reasonably near to the platform where passengers would be likely to go, and to provide safe waiting rooms, and to keep the depot and platform well lighted at night. A building in the city of Montgomery, known as the "Union Depot," with the yards or grounds annexed, was the property of the two railroad companies known as the South & North Alabama and the Louisville & Nashville, but the Montgomery & Eufaula Railway Company, having acquired by lease the right to use the property in common with the others for the arrival and departure of its trains, with the use of its waiting rooms, ticket office, baggage room, etc., was held to be liable to passengers and the public generally in relation to the property as if it were the owner in fee. It is true it was held that the plaintiff in that case could not recover because of his contributory negligence, but the principle announced by the court is particularly pertinent to the discussion here. It thus seems clear that, as between respondent and its patrons and those having business with it at said depot, the duty rested upon respondent to see that the depot premises were safe as fully as though the premises had been owned by respondent. That such is the duty of a railroad company owning and using the premises there can be no doubt. "A railroad corporation is bound to make the approaches to their own depots and premises safe and convenient for passengers, and the public having business at such premises; and is bound to keep the same, and their landing places, in a reasonably safe condition for the convenient use of all who use their cars as a means of conveyance, and others who have a rightful occasion to resort there." 1 Rorer, Railroads, 476. Numerous cases are cited by the author. See also Buenemann v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 390, 20 N. W. 379; Collins v. Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. 80 Mich. 390, 45 N. W. 178; Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 69 Mich. 363, 37 N. W. 361; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reich (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 817.

We therefore think the instructions of the court heretofore set out were erroneous in the particulars herein discussed. The jury should have been instructed to the effect that respondent is not relieved from liability by the mere fact that another may have owned and controlled the depot premises; that if the respondent used and occupied the premises for depot purposes the duty rested upon it to see that such premises were safe.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to grant the motion for a 57 L. R. A.

new trial, with costs taxed against respondent.

Reavis, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Dunbar, Anders, and White, JJ., concur.

Henry GEORGE, Appt.,

v.

Mary M. BUTLER et al., Interveners, Respts., and

W. E. GAYNOR et al., Defendants.

(26 Wash. 456.)

1. A grantee of mortgaged premises who is not obliged to pay the debt secured is not precluded from pleading the statute of limitations against foreclosure by the fact that the mortgagor has been continuously absent from the state, so that as to him the limitation period has not run.
2. The fact that a mortgage is given to secure payment of an entire sum which is payable in instalments does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations against each instalment as it becomes due.
3. A covenant in a mortgage to pay the whole debt will not prevent the statute of limitations from running against each instalment as it becomes due, if the covenant is to pay according to the terms of the notes secured.
4. A purchaser of mortgaged property cannot, in the absence of express contract, be charged, in a proceeding to foreclose the mortgage against him, with the interest provided for by the notes, where the rate named in the recorded mortgage is much less.

(December 4, 1901.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Snohomish County in his favor for a less amount than demanded in an action to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Whitney & Headlee, for appellant:

The action to foreclose this mortgage and each and every part of it was not barred when this action was commenced, even had the mortgagor been a resident and remained in the state at all times after its maturity.

A mortgage is a lien on real estate to secure the payment of money.

Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4522; Parker v. Dacres, 2 Wash. Terr. 446.

NOTE.—As to effect of absence from the state when right of action accrues on statute of limitations, see Stanley v. Stanley (Ohio) 8 L. R. A. 333, and note; Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. (Md.) 29 L. R. A. 273; and Hogg v. Hartley (W. Va.) 54 L. R. A. 215.

For a case in this series holding that when an action to foreclose a mortgage has become barred by limitations as against a purchaser who assumes the mortgage it is also barred as against the mortgagor, see Mulvane v. Sedgley (Kan.) 55 L. R. A. 552.

7 Pac. 893; Brundage v. Home Sav. & L. Asso. 11 Wash. 285, 39 Pac. 666.

The statute begins to run where the mortgage is given for a lump sum payable at different times, and contains a promise in the mortgage itself to pay the whole debt, when the whole debt is due.

At common law so long as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee existed the statute would not begin to run in favor of either.

Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. §§ 1195, 1208, 1211; Wood, Limitation of Actions, §§ 224, 226, 229.

No presumption of payment arises under the limitations created by the statutes of the several states in this country; such limitations relate to the remedy alone. The right or obligation remains the same after the bar occurs as before.

Wood, Limitation of Actions, § 222; Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 1203; Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; Low v. Allen, 26 Cal. 141; McCarthy v. White, 21 Cal. 503, 82 Am. Dec. 754; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 301; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 703.

The running of the statutory six years on any part due for more than that time does not satisfy that much of it; nor does it pay it.

Moulton v. Williams (Idaho) 55 Pac. 1019.

Neither the action to foreclose the mortgage, nor the action on the notes, was barred, because of the absence of the mortgagor from the state.

The statute of limitations never began to run in this case against the mortgage debt or any part of the same, because of the absence and nonresidence, and continued absence and nonresidence, of the debtor.

Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4808; Denny v. Sayward, 10 Wash. 431, 39 Pac. 119; Weber v. Yancy, 7 Wash. 84, 34 Pac. 473; Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 1202.

So long as the debt as between the original parties is kept alive the action to foreclose the mortgage will never be barred.

Clinton County v. Coa, 37 Iowa, 570; Brown v. Rockhold, 49 Iowa, 282; Mahon v. Cooley, 38 Iowa, 479; Waterson v. Kirkwood, 17 Kan. 9; Clift v. Williams, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1261, 49 S. W. 328, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 551, 51 S. W. 821; Cook v. Union Trust Co. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 454, sub nom. Cook v. Bramel, 45 L. R. A. 212, 51 S. W. 600; Flewel-ten v. Cochran, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 499, 48 S. W. 39; King v. Brown, 80 Tex. 276, 16 S. W. 39; Robertson v. Stuhlmiller, 93 Iowa, 326, 61 N. W. 986; Emory v. Keighan, 88 Ill. 488; Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. ed. 682, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Schmucker v. Sibert, 18 Kan. 104, 26 Am. Rep. 765; Ft. Scott v. Schulenberg, 22 Kan. 658; Sibert v. Wilder, 16 Kan. 176, 22 Am. Rep. 280; Pears v. Wilson, 23 Kan. 346; Smith v. Perkins, 10 Kan. App. 577, 63 Pac. 297; Mo-Lane v. Allison, 7 Kan. App. 263, 53 Pac. 782; Balch v. Arnold, 9 Wyo. 17, 59 Pac. 438; Lau v. Spence (Idaho) 48 Pac. 283; 57 L. R. A.

Heyer v. Pruyn, 7 Paige, 465, 34 Am. Dec. 355.

Having notice of the mortgage, the purchaser is presumed to have notice of its contents.

Wade, Law of Notice, 2d ed. § 15; 1 Warvelle, Vendors, pp. 269, 270; Acer v. Westcott, 46 N. Y. 384, 7 Am. Rep. 355; Reeder v. Barr, 4 Ohio, 446, 22 Am. Dec. 762; Gibson v. Winslow, 46 Pa. 380, 84 Am. Dec. 552.

Mr. Francis H. Brownell, for respondents:

A mortgage does not pass the fee. It is a mere lien upon the land.

Brundage v. Home Sav. & L. Asso. 11 Wash. 284, 39 Pac. 666.

The mortgage follows the note or notes to secure which it is given.

Any defense to the notes is a defense likewise to the mortgage, and when the notes become barred by the statute of limitations the mortgage is likewise barred.

Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; Duty v. Graham, 12 Tex. 427, 62 Am. Dec. 534; Gower v. Winchester, 33 Iowa, 303; Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb. 28; Emory v. Keighan, 88 Ill. 482; Jones, Mortg. § 1207.

A mortgage becomes outlawed when the note is outlawed.

Damon v. Leque, 17 Wash. 573, 50 Pac. 485; Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 442, 55 Pac. 637.

Statutes of limitation apply equally to promissory notes payable in instalments and to mortgages given to secure notes payable at separate times.

Wood, Limitation of Actions, § 224, p. 454; Parker v. Banks, 79 N. C. 480; Bush v. Stowell, 71 Pa. 208, 10 Am. Rep. 694; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 725.

Suspension of the statute as to Gaynor does not likewise suspend it as to these respondents, who bought his interest in the mortgaged land, and as against whom, therefore, an entirely different cause of action exists.

Anderson v. Baxter, 4 Or. 105; Fowler v. Wood, 78 Hun, 304, 28 N. Y. Supp. 976; Davis v. Clark, 58 Kan. 454, 49 Pac. 665; Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. 185; Damon v. Leque, 17 Wash. 573, 50 Pac. 485; Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 442, 55 Pac. 637.

Subsequent purchasers are only bound to pay the rate of interest stipulated in the mortgage as recorded.

Whittacre v. Fuller, 5 Minn. 503, Gil. 401; Jones, Mortg. 4th ed. § 565; Gardner v. Emerson, 40 Ill. 296; Gilchrist v. Gough, 63 Ind. 576, 30 Am. Rep. 250; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 599; Ritchie v. Griffiths, 1 Wash. 429, 12 L. R. A. 384, 25 Pac. 341; Howard v. Shaw, 10 Wash. 151, 38 Pac. 746.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action foreclosing a mortgage. It appears by the complaint that on the 16th day of February, 1892, the defendant W. E. Gaynor executed and delivered to Wyatt J. Rucker and Bethel J. Rucker certain promissory notes as follows: One note for $3,000, due eighteen months after date; and one for $1,666.67, due two years after date. By the terms of the notes each drew interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum from date until maturity, and after maturity at the rate of 3 per cent per month, payable monthly. On the same day the notes were executed the said defendant executed a mortgage upon certain real estate in the city of Everett to secure the payment of the notes. No part of said notes has been paid except the sum of $583.34, which was paid upon the last-mentioned note on the 24th day of February, 1894. It is alleged that on the 12th day of November, 1895, the said payees and mortgagees assigned and transferred the said notes and mortgage to the plaintiff in this suit, and that he is now the holder thereof. The complaint alleges that the defendant Gaynor, the maker of said notes and mortgage, was absent from the state of Washington at the time said notes became due, and that he has not returned to this state since right of action upon the notes and mortgage accrued. The respondents Lucy A. Friedlieb and Mary M. Butler subsequently, by deed, became the owners of separate portions of the mortgaged premises. Said respondents demurred to the complaint by way of general demurrer, and also by way of interposing the statute of limitations. The demurrer was by the court overruled. Respondents then answered the complaint, denying certain allegations therein, and alleged affirmatively, among other things, their ownership of portions of the mortgaged premises, and that the action was not commenced within the time limited by law as to said $3,000 note, in that no payments were ever made upon said note, and more than six years elapsed since the maturity thereof before this action was commenced. The reply denies the affirmative allegations of the answer. Upon these issues the cause was tried by the court, and decree entered denying any recovery on the said $3,000 obligation, and granting a recovery upon the other note for the amount of its face less the said payment thereon, with interest computed at the rate of 8 per cent per annum until the date of the decree. The plaintiff appeals, and assigns as error: (1) That the court erred in refusing to allow the full amount of said $3,000 note, together with 8 per cent per annum interest, and 3 per cent per month thereafter, compounded; (2) that the court erred in refusing to allow upon the other note interest at 3 per cent per month, compounded after maturity; (3) that the court erred in concluding, as a matter of law, that appellant was not entitled to have his mortgage foreclosed for the principal and interest due on the $3,000 note.

The $3,000 note matured August 16, 1893, and the other one matured February 16, 1894. On the 16th day of August, 1899, six years had elapsed since the maturity of the $3,000 note, and on the 16th day of February, 1900, a like period had elapsed since the maturity of the other one. This action appears to have been commenced between the two last-mentioned dates. It is clear that under any view of the statute of limitations the smaller note was not barred at the time this suit was commenced, and the right of action to foreclose the mortgage, as far as said note was concerned, was not barred. Appellant urges that the $3,000 note was not barred by reason of the absence of the maker of the note from this state. It is true, under the showing in this record the note was not barred as to Gaynor, the maker, and consequently the right of action to foreclose the mortgage was not barred if Gaynor had remained the owner of the mortgaged premises. Respondents are, however, subsequent grantees of the mortgaged premises, and they have interposed the plea of the statute of limitations as to a right of action against them for the foreclosure of the mortgage.
57 L. R. A.

The principal question involved here is, Can the subsequent grantee of a mortgagor not obligated to pay the debt plead the statute of limitations against an action to foreclose a mortgage when the statute has not run, as against the mortgagor and maker of the note secured by the mortgage, by reason of his continued absence from the state? This precise question seems never to have been directly passed upon by this court. The relation of a subsequent grantee of a mortgagor to the running of the statute of limitations has not been the subject of harmonious decision among the courts that have considered it. Certain phases of the subject have heretofore been considered by this court. In Damon v. Leque, 17 Wash. 573, 50 Pac. 485, a subsequent execution purchaser under a judgment against the mortgagor was made a party defendant in an action which was held to be one in foreclosure. The court in that case said: "The case turns upon the question of the right of the mortgagor to revive the mortgage after the bar of the statute had become complete as against another party who had purchased the lands, but was not obligated to pay the debt. The authorities are conflicting upon this question, but the great weight sustains the defendants on the proposition. The mortgagor could no more revive the mortgage in such a case than he could give a new mortgage upon the land." Again, in the case of Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 442, 55 Pac. 637, it was held that, where a note was secured by a mortgage executed by a man and wife upon community realty, payments of principal or interest thereon made by the husband without the authority of the wife, after maturity, will not extend the time of the running of the statute of limitations as against the wife. The theory upon which the first case was decided was that, when the right of action as against the debt secured by the mortgage is barred, the right of action upon the mortgage itself is also barred. The latter case was decided upon the theory that part payment by one person, being equivalent to a new contract based upon an old consideration upon which a cause of action accrues at the time of payment, binds only the person making the payment, or one whom he has authority to bind by a new contract to pay the balance. In the case of Presbyterian Bd. of Church Erection Fund v. First Presby. Church, 19 Wash. 455, 53 Pac. 671, the opinion contains a statement that may upon first reading appear to put the case in conflict with Damon v. Leque, 17 Wash. 573, 50 Pac. 485, which had been previously decided. A similar state of facts existed in the two cases. In the later case the grantee of the mortgagor sought to raise the defense of the statute of limitations in this court. The defense had not been pleaded in the court below by way of answer, and the demurrer was only upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It was held that, when the attention of the court is intended to be directed to the subject of the statute of limitations by way of demurrer, it must be so specially designated in the demurrer; that being a distinct and separate ground of demurrer as provided by statute. In discussing this subject the opinion states: "In the first place, a pleading of the statute of limitations is a privilege which is accorded by the law to the defendant,—in this case the Presbyterian Church,—and it can avail itself of that privilege, or answer upon the merits, or default, just as it pleases. It is not a right which defendant Walter Morgan can receive the benefit of." The further discussion of the subject, however, shows clearly that the court did not adjudicate the question of the statute of limitations, for the reason that it was not raised in the record. The case was in fact determined upon other grounds. There is, therefore, no conflict between that case and Damon v. Leque. On the authority of the latter case it must be considered, therefore, at the outset of the consideration of this subject as settled by this court, that, when a debt secured by a mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations, the mortgage is also barred, and the mortgage cannot be revived by the act of the mortgagor as against a subsequent grantee without his consent. In the case at bar the full statutory period had run against the mortgage debt if the debtor had remained within the state. Section 4808, 2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, provides as follows: "If the cause of action shall accrue against any person who shall be out of the state or concealed therein, such action may be commenced within the terms herein respectively limited after the return of such person into the state, or after the time of such concealment; and if, after such cause of action shall have accrued, such person shall depart from and reside out of this state, or conceal himself, the time of his absence or concealment shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited for the commencement of such action." By reason of the above provision the operation of the statute of limitations was suspended during the absence of the debtor from the state and it is therefore clear that the right of action against him is not barred. The statute having been suspended as to the right of action against the debtor, was it for that reason suspended as to the right of action upon the mortgage against the subsequent grantee of the mortgaged land? The rule adopted by this court, as far as it has passed upon the right of a grantee to interpose the defense of the statute of limitations against an action to foreclose a mortgage, seems to be in harmony with that adopted by the supreme court of California. In Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. 185, a question similar to the one involved here was under consideration. The court there held that there is no difference in principle between the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations resulting from an express waiver and one caused by voluntary act in absenting one's self from the state. In order that the views and reasoning of the California court may more fully appear, we quote extensively from the opinion in said case, as follows: "If Goodfellow still held the equity of redemption, and if the action was against him alone, it is evident his absence from the state would afford a sufficient answer to the plea of the statute of limitations. So long as he retained the equity of redemption, and no other rights had intervened by reason of subsequent liens or encumbrances, he had the power, by written stipulation, under the statute, to extend the time within which the debt should not be barred, or he might suspend the running of the statute by his absence from the state. So long as his rights only were to be affected, it was within his power to suspend the operation of the statute either by a written stipulation or by absenting himself from the state. But this court has repeatedly decided that as against subsequent encumbrancers, or a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption, the mortgagor has no power by stipulation to prolong the time of payment, or in any manner increase the burdens on the mortgaged premises. Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; McCarthy v. White, 21 Cal. 495, 82 Am. Dec. 754; Lent v. Morrill, 25 Cal. 500; Low v. Allen, 26 Cal. 141; Lent v. Shcar, 26 Cal. 361; Barber v. Babbel, 36 Cal. 11; Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493. . . . The argument [of counsel] assumes that a subsequent holder of the equity of redemption or a subsequent encumbrancer stands in the shoes of the mortgagor, and cannot invoke the aid of the statute in the given case, because he could not. But it is the settled doctrine of this court, as will be seen from the authorities above cited, that when third persons have subsequently acquired interests in the mortgaged property they may invoke the aid of the statute as against the mortgage, even though the mortgagor, as between himself and the mortgagee, may have waived its protection; and we see no difference in principle between a suspension of the running of the statute resulting from an express waiver and one caused by his voluntary act in absenting himself from the state. In either case it is the sole act of the mortgagor, performed at a time when he had lost his rightful control over the property, and when other interests had intervened, which ought not to be dependent for their protection on the conduct of the mortgagor. When the mortgagor has parted with his title to the property, and ceased to have any interest therein, those who have succeeded to his rights stand in the same relation to the mortgagee as if they had originally made the mortgage on their own property to secure the debt of the mortgagor. The mortgagor has no interest in the property, nor are they under obligation to pay his debt. Their property, however, is bound as collateral security for its payment, under the mortgage, which is a contract in writing, by which the property is pledged as a security for the debt. The mortgage, in such a case, has the same effect in law as if it had been originally made, as a separate instrument, by the parties succeeding to the rights of the mortgagor to secure his debt." In Anderson v. Baxter, 4 Or. 105, a similar rule was announced. The court in that case observed: "If the relief sought had been a decree in personam, the analogy would be sufficiently complete, and the period of such absence not be included as any part of the time limited. Such absence in that case would suspend, or at least affect, the party's remedy, which is the only reason for the exception. In this case the plaintiff can claim no remedy, except to have the property in question adjudged to be sold to satisfy the debt secured thereby. It was, in effect, a proceeding in rem, and the absence of the mortgagors did not interfere with the prosecution of his remedy, or render it less effectual. If the absence of the mortgagors in this case prevented the statute of limitations from running, then the same result would have followed if the premises had been sold to defendant the next day after the execution of the mortgage, and he had gone into possession and remained in possession thereof; and in fact the statute would never run so long as the mortgagors should remain away from the state. Where a personal obligation is sought to be enforced, the provisions of [Civil Code Proc.] § 16, referred to, would undoubtedly apply; but where the only remedy is against the property, which has a fixed situs, the construction contended for would be unreasonable." It is suggested that the last-named case should be distinguished, because the remedy there was against the land alone, there being no personal obligation to pay the debt; and that, when the mortgagor had conveyed the property, there was no longer any cause of action against him, and necessarily, his absence from the state could not affect the running of the statute. We are not, however, impressed with the distinction sought to be made. If a personal obligation exists, and the maker thereof leaves the state, the remedy under the mortgage remains against the property, and may be enforced at any time when the obligation is due. It is with this remedy against the property alone that the grantee of the mortgaged premises is concerned. It is further suggested that the case of Anderson v. Baxter, 4 Or. 105, is inconsistent with Cross v. Allen, 141 U. S. 528, 35 L. ed. 843, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, which was a case that went up to the Supreme Court of the United States from Oregon, and involved the consideration of the laws of Oregon on certain phases of the statute of limitations. The supreme court of Oregon had determined that under the statutes of that state a payment made upon a note after maturity by one joint obligor had the effect to bind the co-obligor or surety, and the question before the Supreme Court of the United States was the effect of the state law as construed by the supreme court of the state. We do not see that the cases are necessarily inconsistent. Cross v. Allen involved the question of the power of one obligor by his act to continue an obligation against a co-obligor, who was bound equally with himself on the original obligation. But in Anderson v. Baxter the question was whether the act of the debtor in absenting himself from the state could affect the rights of one who was never in any way bound with him on an obligation. The difference was such that the supreme court of Oregon might adopt the two views as applied to the different facts without any inconsistency. This court, in Stubblefield v. McAuliff, 20 Wash. 442, 55 Pac. 637, declined to follow Cross v. Allen, as declaring a rule applicable to this state. In Fowler v. Wood, 78 Hun, 304, 28 N. Y. Supp. 976, the supreme court of New York seems to have announced a rule in harmony with the California and Oregon cases. The opinion says: "Nothing appears in the evidence to arrest the operation of the statute as to the appellant, except the fact that before the expiration of twenty years Ferris removed from the state. This act suspended the running of the statute as against him. Whether it also suspended the statute as to the cause of action against the owner of the mortgaged property is a question that, so far as my examination goes, has not, prior to this case, been decided in this state. . . . The Code of Civil Procedure provides (§ 381) that an action upon a sealed instrument must be commenced within twenty years after the cause of action accrued; but if, after a cause of action has accrued against the person, he departs from the state, etc., the time of his absence is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action. (§ 401.) This provision very plainly has reference solely to a cause of action against the person who departs from the state. It does not suspend the operation of the statute as to a person liable on the same cause of action, who continues to reside within the state; nor was it intended to extend the time generally within which an action might be brought for the debt or the enforcement of a security collateral to the debt. It affects the remedy solely against the person who departs from the state." We are not aware that the above case was ever reviewed by the court of appeals of New York. We are aware, as heretofore indicated, that some other courts have adopted a different rule from that announced in the above cases. But viewing the subject, as we do, in connection with prior decisions of this court, we do not find it necessary to review those cases here. This court having already adopted the same view as that of the supreme court of California,—that a debtor cannot revive a debt once barred as against a subsequent grantee of mortgaged premises without his due consent thereto,—we are disposed to adopt here the reasoning of that court in Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. 185, as applied to the effect of the mortgagor's absence from the state upon the running of the statute of limitations. It is there held, as shown above, that there is no difference in principle between a suspension of the statute by express waiver and that caused by the mortgagor's voluntary act in absenting himself from the state; that in either case it is the sole act of the mortgagor, performed at a time when he had lost his rightful control over the property, and when other interests had intervened, which ought not to be dependent for their protection upon the conduct of the mortgagor. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage, and it therefore comes within the provisions of 2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4798, subd. 2, which limits the period to six years for bringing "an action upon a contract in writing or liability, express or implied, arising out of a written agreement." More than six years having elapsed between the date of the $3,000 note and the commencement of this suit, the action is therefore barred as to the amount represented by said note, unless, for further reasons urged, it is excused from the operation of the statute. These we will now examine.

Appellant further urges that this mortgage was given to secure the payment of an entire sum, payable by instalments, and that the action upon the mortgage is not barred as to any portion of the debt until the statute has fully run against the last instalment. It is also suggested that the mortgage contains a covenant to pay the whole debt. The covenant is, however, limited to payment according to the terms of the notes. In this state a mortgage is a mere lien upon the land to secure the payment of the debt. The debt secured in this case was evidenced by certain promissory notes or obligations described in the mortgage, which severally matured at different times. Each note was the foundation for a separate cause of action, and suit might have been brought upon each note as it matured without foreclosure, or the mortgage might have been foreclosed as to each note at any time after its maturity. 2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes and Statutes, § 4796, provides: "Actions can only be commenced within the periods herein prescribed after the cause of action shall have accrued." We think the rule of limitation must be held to apply to each note as it matures. The mortgage being a mere incident to the note, and its only purpose being to secure the same, it has fulfilled its purpose, as far as the debt represented by the note is concerned, when there is no longer a right of action upon the note. We think, therefore, that this action is barred as to the $3,000 note, and we need not discuss other objections urged as to why appellant cannot maintain an action thereon.

57 L. R. A.

The remaining question is, Did the court err in refusing to allow interest in the full sum demanded by appellant? As heretofore stated, the notes were made to draw 3 per cent per month after maturity, compounded monthly. Respondents' counsel assert that the rate named is the equivalent of 65.7 per cent per annum. The mortgage contains no reference to any increased rate of interest. It describes the notes as bearing 8 per cent interest from date. 1 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4535, provides as follows: "All deeds, mortgages, and assignments of mortgages shall be recorded in the office of the county auditor of the county where the land is situated, and shall be valid as against bona fide purchasers from the date of their filing for record in said office; and when so filed shall be notice to all the world." We think a reasonable deduction from the language of the above statute is that subsequent purchasers, who are notified of the existence of the mortgage by its record, have a right to rely upon the terms of the mortgage so recorded. We are not called upon to pass upon this question as between the maker of the notes and the mortgagee. No judgment in personam is here sought. Judgment in foreclosure against the lands in the hands of the grantees is all that is demanded. We therefore think the just rule is that the mortgaged lands in the hands of subsequent purchasers are not bound for a greater rate of interest than that stipulated in the mortgage as recorded, unless the purchaser may have assumed and agreed to pay a greater rate than may be stipulated in the notes, but not shown in the mortgage as recorded. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 599; Whittacre v. Fuller, 5 Minn. 508, Gil. 401; Gardner v. Emerson, 40 Ill. 296; Gilchrist v. Gough, 63 Ind. 576, 30 Am. Rep. 250.

In this case the court allowed the amount of interest as shown by the mortgage of record, which, we think, was right.

The judgment is affirmed.

Reavis, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Dunbar, White, Anders, and Mount, JJ., concur.

C. B. LIVERMORE, Respt.,

v.

Charles E. CRANE, Appt.

(26 Wash. 529.)

Refusal to comply with a contract to purchase real estate, by reason of which the broker who negotiated the sale is de-

NOTE.—For other phases of the law as to rights of brokers, see the following notes in this series:

As to real-estate broker's commissions as afprived of his commissions, will render the intending purchaser liable for the damages thereby inflicted on the broker, although he had agreed to look to the seller for his commissions.

(December 10, 1901.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages which plaintiff was alleged to have suffered because of defendant's breach of contract to purchase certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stratton & Powell, for appellant:

Plaintiff is suing the wrong person.

The only interest plaintiff had in the matter was to entitle himself to his commissions, and he earned his commissions whenever defendant entered into a contract satisfactory to the seller. His rights as a broker, whatever they were, were fixed when the contract between the parties was executed.

Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550; Hodgkins v. Mead, 29 N. Y. S. R. 671, 8 N. Y. Supp. 854; O'Toole v. Tucker, 16 Misc. 485, 38 N. Y. Supp. 969, Affirmed in 17 Misc. 554, 40 N. Y. Supp. 695; Scott v. Clark, 3 S. D. 486, 54 N. W. 538; Brown v. Helmuth, 2 Misc. 566, 21 N. Y. Supp. 615; Barnes v. German Sav. & Loan Soc. 21 Wash. 449, 58 Pac. 569.

It is not perceived how the plaintiff would have lost any rights, even admitting that defendant failed to keep his contract with the seller.

The circumstance, if true, that payment of plaintiff's commissions was contingent upon payment by the defendant of the purchase price, was wholly immaterial.

1 Sedg. Damages, 8th ed. § 201, pp. 216-218; Snell v. Cottingham, 72 Ill. 163.

There was performance of the terms of the original memorandum, and an end of the broker's relation to the matter.

Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550.

Defendant was not in default, even upon his contract with the seller. Plaintiff called defendant as a witness, and proved by him that after the original contract was made the seller and defendant entered into a new agreement whereby the seller, in consideration of a payment of the sum of $300, released defendant from further obligation under the old contract, and allowed him an option on the property for a year. This was a substituted performance, as it is called in some cases, or an accord and satisfaction, and terminated the original contract.

Leete v. Norton, 43 Conn. 219; Merry v. Allen, 39 Iowa, 235; Babcock v. Hawkins, 23 Vt. 561; Woodward v. Miles, 24 N. H.

affected by the negligence, fraud, or default of the principal and a defective title, see note to Brackenridge v. Claridge (Tex.) 43 L. R. A. 593.

As to when real-estate broker is considered as the procuring cause of the sale or exchange 57 L. R. A.

289; Allison v. Abendroth, 108 N. Y. 470, 15 N. E. 606; Tomlin v. M'Chord, 6 J. J. Marsh. 4.

And the plaintiff's right to his commission from the seller then became absolute, even under the terms of his contract with her.

Parker v. Walker, 86 Tenn. 566, 8 S. W. 391; Shainwald v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 101; Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195; Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209, 49 Pac. 237, 50 Pac. 1024.

Mr. H. B. Huntley, for respondent:

The plaintiff's cause of action rests upon the written memorandum of an agreement to buy if certain terms could be met, and when these terms were secured by Mr. Livermore the memorandum became a binding contract.

1 Parsons, Contr. §§ 450 et seq.; Goodpastor v. Porter, 11 Iowa, 161; Willets v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 45, 6 Am. Rep. 31.

If this memorandum ever became a binding contract between plaintiff and defendant the plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant, Crane, for its breach.

The plaintiff performed his part of the contract when he secured the terms specified from Mrs. Brittain.

A part of the consideration which induced the plaintiff to act was that the defendant would make the payments as stated. He had a right to rely on this; he did rely upon it; and if he has been damaged by the defendant's nonperformance, he can recover.

Cavender v. Waddingham, 2 Mo. App. 551; Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 19 S. E. 628.

The principle in our case is the same as where an agent procures an enforceable contract for his principal, and then the principal voluntarily releases the party bound. The principal is liable for the commission.

Granger v. Griffin, 43 Ill. App. 421; Foster v. Wynn, 51 Ill. App. 401.

Damages are given on breach of contract for gains prevented, as well as for losses incurred.

Heinemann v. Heard, 50 N. Y. 37; Messmore v. New York Shot & Lead Co. 40 N. Y. 422; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. 522; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. 327, 14 L. ed. 166.

Reavis, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint, in substance, alleges that in May, 1898, defendant agreed in writing with plaintiff, who is a real-estate broker: That defendant would purchase certain property in Seattle from Mrs. Brittain, and pay for it on the following terms, if plaintiff would procure such terms from the owner, to wit: The full purchase price to be $11,000; $200 to be paid at the time of making the contract of purchase, $800 payable in sixty days, $1,000 payable in ninety days, effected, see note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank (Conn.) 44 L. R. A. 321.

As to performance by real-estate broker of his contract to find a purchaser or effect an exchange of his principal's property, see note to Lunney v. Healey (Neb.) 44 L. R. A. 593.

$3,000 payable in one year, $3,000 payable in two years, and $3,000 payable in three years from the date of the contract, with interest on deferred payments at 8 per cent per annum. At the time of making the agreement it was understood and agreed that plaintiff was to get his commission of $500 for making the sale from the owner, Mrs. Brittain. That plaintiff, relying upon the agreement with defendant, performed services and induced the owner to sell the property for the price upon the terms proposed, and plaintiff by his efforts brought about a meeting of the defendant and the owner of the property, and procured a written contract satisfactory to both parties to be executed by them, by which, among other things, Mrs. Brittain agreed to sell, and the defendant to buy, the property upon the terms and for the price hereinbefore stated, and the sum of $200 was paid as the first payment at the execution of the contract. At the time plaintiff induced Mrs. Brittain to sell the property upon the terms and conditions mentioned, she agreed to pay the plaintiff $500, as his commission on the transaction; $50 of said amount to be paid at the time of the execution of the contract, $200 at the time provided for the second payment, and the remainder, $200, after the third payment should be made by defendant as provided in the contract. That plaintiff has kept and performed all the terms and conditions of his contract with the defendant and the owner of the property, and Mrs. Brittain has kept and performed all of the conditions of the contract of sale by her to be performed, and has been ready at all times, and still is ready, to convey the property to the defendant, but the defendant has failed, refused, and neglected to purchase or pay for the property as he agreed to do. That the plaintiff has been damaged by defendant's failure and breach of the contract to purchase in the sum of $450, and that plaintiff has lost the remainder of the commission which he should have received from the owner of the property if the contract had been performed. A demand has been made upon defendant for the payment of said $450. Defendant filed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and a jury having been waived, the trial was before the court.

The evidence adduced is sufficient to support the findings of fact. The effect of the findings is to sustain the allegations of the complaint. With this view of the record, the only question arising is upon the demurrer to the complaint,—Did the complaint state a cause of action? It is urged by counsel for appellant that plaintiff has mistaken his remedy and sued the wrong person, that the only interest plaintiff had in the contract of sale was his commission, which was earned when the contract was executed. But it will be observed that the contract with Mrs. Brittain was that she should pay plaintiff's commission in accordance with the performance of the contract of sale by the defendant. The essence of plaintiff's action here is the claim for damages sustained by him because of defendant's breach of the contract to purchase the premises from Mrs. Brittain. A pertinent discussion of some of the phases of this case may be found in Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209, 49 Pac. 237, 50 Pac. 1024. Of the authorities to which we have been referred, only two seem to be directly in point. One is that of Cavendar v. Waddingham, 2 Mo. App. 551. In that case the defendant employed plaintiffs to purchase for him real estate from Messrs. Scudder for a stated price, and it was understood that plaintiffs' commissions were to be a certain per cent of the purchase price, but it was stipulated by defendant that this should be paid by the Messrs. Scudder. The purchase of the real property was made in accordance with defendant's direction, and thereafter defendant refused to pay the purchase price and receive the deed. Plaintiffs lost their commission. The court observed: "The first question to which our attention is directed is whether, upon the facts stated, the plaintiffs had any right of action against the defendant. It is argued that they had none, because it was expressly stipulated that their commissions were to be paid by the Messrs. Scudder, and not, in any event, by the defendant; that this is an attempt to hold a party responsible for violating his contract, not with the party suing, but with a third party,—the defendant here having violated none except that made through the plaintiffs, Messrs. Scudder. But this argument ignores the prominent fact that there were two distinct contracts. One was made by defendants through his agents, in the purchase of the property. The other was made with the agents, in securing their services to bring about the purchase. The latter is the subject of the present suit." The second case mentioned is Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 19 S. E. 628, where it was, in effect, determined that a real-estate broker negotiating a sale of land for a person who agreed with him in writing to convey it to the intending purchaser, from whom he was to receive his commission, may maintain an action for breach of contract upon refusal of such person to convey, upon showing that the purchaser was ready to take and pay therefor. It was said in this case: "There were plainly two contracts made by plaintiffs, the one with defendant, the effect of which was that plaintiffs would provide a purchaser of the land at the agreed price, commissions to be paid by the purchaser; the other with the purchaser, that he would pay the plaintiffs' commissions upon the conclusion of the sale. If through the negotiation of plaintiffs the parties had been brought together, and had concluded the trade between them, the plaintiffs would have been entitled to their commissions from Harding the purchaser according to the terms of the contract. But this action is for damages. The gravamen of the charge is that defendant committed the wrong and injury upon plaintiffs by a refusal, without cause, to comply with his contract with plaintiffs to sell the land to plaintiffs' principal, with the distinct understanding that plaintiffs were to be compensated by the purchaser. The natural effect and consequence of this refusal by defendant was the loss by plaintiffs of their commissions." It would seem to be immaterial whether in the original negotiation or the sale the plaintiff was the agent of the vendor or the purchaser. The complaint here is for the violation of the contract to purchase, from which violation damages directly result to plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

Dunbar, Anders, and Mount, JJ., concur.

Walter J. REED et al., Appts.,
v.
Thomas JOHNSON et al., Respts.

(.....Wash.....)

1. Specific performance will not be enforced of an agreement to convey an interest in land to one for services in securing the location of a railroad depot thereon, where he has agreed to divide with certain officials of the road all money received by him from sales of land during the construction of the road, since its tendency is to induce the officers of the corporation to disregard their duties to it, and it is therefore against public policy.
2. The right to insist on the illegality of a contract of which specific performance is sought is not waived by failure to plead it.
3. Validity cannot be given to an illegal contract by estoppel.
4. No recovery can be had for losses which have arisen under an illegal contract.

(December 24, 1901.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Kittitas County in favor of defendants in an action for an accounting and partition of certain real estate in which a cross complaint was filed for an accounting and a conveyance of a portion of the real estate. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Graves & Englehart, for appellants:

Specific performance of a contract will not be enforced, unless it is reasonable, certain, legal, mutual, is based on a valuable or meritorious consideration, and the party seeking specific performance has been prompt in asserting his rights.

Darling v. Cumming, 92 Va. 521, 23 S. E. 880; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 1006; Barton v. Spinning, 8 Wash. 458, 36 Pac. 439.

One of the elements of an enforceable contract is that it binds all of the parties, and is capable of specific performance and enforcement against all.

NOTE.—As to right to enforce contract by railroad company to maintain depot at particular place, see, in this series, Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Tavares (Fla.) 20 L. R. A. 419.

For another case as to contract by railroad company to maintain depot, see Texas & P. R. Co. v. Scott (C. C. App. 5th C.) 37 L. R. A. 94, 57 L. R. A.

Barton v. Spinning, 8 Wash. 458, 36 Pac. 439; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955; Norris v. Fox, 45 Fed. 406.

Equity will not assume jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of a contract that is illegal in any of its features. The least taint of illegality or want of equity will preclude a decree.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 1014.

All contracts which tend to place the officers of a corporation under an inducement to disregard their duties to it, and to decide questions affecting the action of the corporation from a standpoint other than that of its best interests, are illegal.

Woodstock Iron Co. v. Richmond & D. Extension Co. 129 U. S. 643, 32 L. ed. 819, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 402; West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 254, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838; Jackson v. McLean, 35 Fed. 213; Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. 472; Bestor v. Wathen, 60 Ill. 138.

Nonenforcement of illegal contracts is a common matter of public interest, and a party thereto cannot at any time waive his right to set up the defense of illegality in an action thereon by the other party.

Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 336, 33 L. ed. 172, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244; Cardozo v. Swift, 113 Mass. 250; Wilde v. Wilde, 37 Neb. 891, 56 N. W. 724.

The defendants may set up the defense of illegality, though such defense was not specifically pleaded.

Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 266, 26 L. ed. 542; Sheldon v. Pruesner, 52 Kan. 579, 22 L. R. A. 709, 35 Pac. 201; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 426, 7 L. ed. 909; Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 131; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344.

Even when the defendants do not set up the defense of illegality, but such illegality appears from the case as made by either the plaintiffs or the defendants, it becomes the duty of the court sua sponte to refuse to entertain the action.

Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Wilde v. Wilde, 37 Neb. 891, 56 N. W. 724; Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735; Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 Pac. 1068; Schmidt v. Barker, 17 La. Ann. 261, 87 Am. Dec. 527; Bowman v. Gonegal, 19 La. Ann. 328, 92 Am. Dec. 537; Clafin v. United States Credit System Co. 185 Mass. 501, 43 N. E. 293; Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699.

Where a contract is brought before the supreme court for construction and adjudication its validity is necessarily involved, and the court will consider its validity and hold it void, even though the question was not presented below, and was allowed by counsel on both sides to pass without discussion in the supreme court.

Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; Glofin v. United States Credit System Co. 185 Mass. 501, 43 N. E. 203.

Validity cannot be given to an illegal contract through any principle of estoppel.

1 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 162; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808; Durkee v. People ex rel. Askren, 155 Ill. 354, 40 N. E. 626; Brown v. First Nat. Bank, 137 Ind. 655, 24 L. R. A. 206, 37 N. E. 158; Re True, 120 Cal. 352, 52 Pac. 815.

An option of purchase, or a unilateral contract for the purchase of land, confers upon the party purchasing no interest or estate in the land, and the right granted must be exercised within the time specified in the agreement, and the conditions precedent, if any, must be faithfully and punctually observed. Time is always of the essence of such a contract.

1 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 187; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 77; Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394, 36 L. ed. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 646; Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252, 27 L. ed. 145, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Bastwick v. Hess, 80 Ill. 138; Longfellow v. Moore, 102 Ill. 289; Steele v. Bond, 32 Minn. 14, 18 N. W. 830; Dennstaldt v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 628.

Where a contract grows immediately out of, and is connected with, an immoral or illegal act, a court of justice will not lend its aid to enforce it.

Barton v. Port Jackson & U. F. Pl. Road Co. 17 Barb. 397; Deans v. McLendon, 30 Miss. 343; Howell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 176, 46 Am. Dec. 415; Branch v. Haas, 16 Fed. 53; Wooten v. Miller, 7 Smedes & M. 380; Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591; Phalen v. Clark, 19 Conn. 421, 50 Am. Dec. 253; Scott v. Duffy, 14 Pa. 18; Buck v. Albee, 26 Vt. 184, 62 Am. Dec. 564; Reynolds v. Nichols, 12 Iowa, 398; Hale v. Henderson, 4 Humph. 199; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 992; Barile v. Nutt, 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825.

Contracts to influence the action of corporate officers are void as against public policy.

Bliss v. Matteson, 52 Barb. 335; Berryman v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 14 Bush, 755; Cook v. Shipman, 24 Ill. 614, 51 Ill. 316; Bermudez Asphalt Paving Co. v. Critchfield, 62 Ill. App. 221; Hutchen v. Gibson, 1 Bush, 270; Devlin v. Brady, 32 Barb. 518.

Meers. Charles F. Munday and E. E. Wager, for respondents:

The fact that an agreement is optional as to one of the parties, and obligatory as to the other, does not destroy its mutuality.

Cherry v. Smith, 3 Humph. 19, 39 Am. Dec. 150; Morse v. Bellows, 7 N. H. 549, 28 Am. Dec. 372.

Where the owner of lands gives to another an option of purchase, and imposes certain conditions upon the party to whom the option is given, which have been by him duly observed and performed, the performance of the conditions amounts to an acceptance, and creates a mutuality and a consideration for the agreement to convey.

1 Warvelle, Vendors, 187, 188.

Mere lapse of time will not bar a decree for specific performance, when it has not been made material by the agreement.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 174 Ill. 448, 51 N. E. 824; Harrigan v. Smith, 57 N. J. Eq. 635, 40 Atl. 13, 42 Atl. 579; Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 547, 6 Am. Rep. 624.

Hrdley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants are now, and prior to the 13th day of July, 1886, were, husband and wife. On and prior to the date above named they were the owners of certain real estate situated in Kittitas county, Washington; and on said date they executed and delivered to the respondent Thomas Johnson a written instrument, denominated a "bond for deed," which was of the following tenor and effect: In consideration of the sum of $1, and the further efforts of said Johnson to secure the establishment of a railroad depot by the Northern Pacific Railway Company upon section 26 in township 20 N., range 15 E., W. M., the appellants obligated themselves to convey unto said Johnson by good and sufficient warranty deed, a one-half interest in the real estate to which reference was first above made. They further obligated themselves that within ten days after said Johnson should give them reasonable assurance of the establishment of such depot within the boundaries of said section, and after the platting of the whole or any portion of the land described in the written instrument into residence and business lots and blocks, they would convey to the order of said Johnson each alternate quarter block of lots so platted. They further agreed that at any time within one year from the surveying and platting of the first part or parcel they would, upon notice from Johnson, in like manner convey each alternate quarter block of lots that should within that time be platted, in addition to the part that should be first laid out. The expense of surveying, platting, and recording was to be borne by Johnson, and appellants were to continue the occupancy and use of those portions of the land which should remain unplatted. On or about the 26th day of July, 1886, about 65 acres of the tract covered by the aforesaid agreement was platted under said agreement, and designated as the "Town of Cle Elum." Thereafter, on the 2d day of August, 1886, a further agreement was executed and signed by appellant Walter J. Reed and respondent Thomas Johnson, as follows: "For the mutual advantage and accommodation of the parties hereto, it is hereby agreed that for ninety days from and after this date, and so much longer as may be mutually agreeable to the parties concerned, the division of lots, by quarter blocks, in the town of Cle Elum, Wash. Terr., contemplated and provided for in that certain bond for deed, executed and delivered by Walter J. Reed and Barbara A. Reed, his wife, to Thomas Johnson, shall be, and hereby is, deferred, and that pending the termination of this agreement through lapse of time or mutual consent the sale of lots in the town aforesaid shall be conducted indiscriminately; the proceeds being divided equally between the said Walter J. Reed and Thomas Johnson, their heirs, legal representatives, or assigns. Upon termination of this agreement as above provided, the division of lots provided for, by quarter blocks or fractional parts thereof, shall then be made, in so far as practicable, according to the terms and conditions of the bond for deed hereinbefore referred to." The appellants brought this suit against respondent, and in the complaint allege that the lands platted as above stated, and known as the "Town of Cle Elum," are the only lands that have been platted under the said contracts between the parties. It is also averred that appellants, since the execution of said contracts, have paid out large sums of money from their own personal funds for the maintenance and benefit of the town site so platted, which sums have not been repaid to them by anyone or in any way, and which are a charge against said platted town site and the proceeds thereof; that appellants have advanced said Thomas Johnson large sums of money at divers times since July 26, 1886, on account of the interest of respondents in said town site under said contracts, which amounts were to be charged against the interests of respondents therein, and the same have not been paid; that said Thomas Johnson has received large sums of money from the sales of lots in said town site, and from other sources in connection therewith, said sums being in excess of his just proportion, and for which excess he is now indebted to appellants, the same being a just and proper charge against the interests of respondents; that appellants have at all times been ready and willing to comply with all the terms and conditions of said contracts to be by them performed, and have frequently demanded of respondent Thomas Johnson that the accounts between him and them on account of the said town-site transactions be balanced and closed; that the lands be divided according to the terms of said contracts, and that the contracts be terminated; that said Johnson refuses to make a settlement of said accounts, or permit a division of said lots to be made according to the terms of said contracts, and wrongfully holds said contracts as a cloud on the title to all of the lands described in said original agreement, whether the same are platted and subject to said agreement, or whether they are unplatted and not subject thereto, all of which is alleged to be to the great injury and detriment of appellants. It is alleged that the respondent Ann Johnson claims some interest in said property under said contracts as the wife of said Thomas Johnson. The complaint prays that an accounting be taken between the parties; that the accounts thereof be settled, stated, and closed; that a proper division and partition of the lots in said platted town site be made; and that said contracts be terminated and canceled. The respondents answered the complaint by way of denials, and also by way of an affirmative defense and cross complaint. In the cross complaint it is alleged, in addition to the facts alleged in the complaint concerning the contracts and the platting of lands thereunder, that on the 30th day of April, 1888, and on the 9th day of May, 1899, respectively, further and additional plats were filed upon other portions of said lands not included in the first plat, which is the only one described in the complaint. It is also alleged that, since the execution of said agreement and said original plat and supplemental plat, appellants have made sales of a large portion of the lots and blocks in the town of Cle Elum, have made conveyances thereof, and have received large sums of money therefor; that portions of the moneys so received have from time to time been paid to the respondent Thomas Johnson, but much less than his just proportion thereof; that said Johnson has paid out on account of said lands large sums of money for taxes, surveying, and platting, and other expenses incident thereto, which sums have not been repaid, and are a charge against said lands and the proceeds thereof; that said Johnson has at various times since July, 1886, advanced to appellant Walter J. Reed large sums of money. It is alleged that respondent Thomas Johnson has at all times been ready to comply with all the conditions of said agreement and supplemental agreement to be by him performed, and has demanded of appellant Walter J. Reed that the accounts between them be settled, and that said lands, both platted and unplatted, be divided according to the terms of said agreement, which demand has been refused by said Reed. The cross complaint asks an accounting, and also a conveyance to respondents of one half of all unsold portions of said land, both platted and unplatted. The answer to the cross complaint denies many of these allegations, and affirmatively pleads the statute of limitations as to all demands stated in the cross complaint which do not relate to the cause of action, and demands arising out of the original plat described in the complaint as the "Town of Cle Elum." Upon the issues thus formed the parties went to trial. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and resulted in a decree to the effect that upon the issue raised by the respective demands for an accounting there was no balance owing to either party, but that respondents are entitled to a conveyance of one half of all the unsold lots and blocks included within the three plats named, and also one half of the unplatted portion of said lands. From said decree this appeal is prosecuted.

No error is assigned as to the finding of the court on the question of accounting. It is assigned as error that the court granted the demands of respondents as to any lands outside of the original plat of the town site of Cle Elum, and also that the court refused to find that respondents were barred by the statute of limitations as to any demands concerning lands outside of said original plat. We will, however, confine ourselves to the discussion of the following assignment of error: "The court erred in decreeing the conveyance of any of the lands mentioned in the contract on July 13, 1886, for the reason that said contract is void because of uncertainty, lack of mutuality, want of consideration, and as being against public policy." It will be remembered that the consideration for the original agreement between the parties was stated to be the efforts of respondent Thomas Johnson to secure the establishment of a railroad depot by the Northern Pacific Railway Company within the boundaries of the same section which included the lands of appellants. The respondent Johnson stated in his testimony that he had an agreement with three officers of the Northern Pacific Railway Company by which each was to receive a one-fourth interest in the proceeds of whatever lots appellants would convey under their said agreement with Johnson. The consideration for the agreement between these officers and Johnson was that the officers were to cause the depot to be established within the section above named. This arrangement between Johnson and the officers of the railroad company was entered into before the contract between Johnson and appellants was executed. Johnson testified as follows:

Q. In regard to the interest which Huson and Buckley and Bullock had,—how did that in any way affect the interest of Mr. Reed?

A. It didn't affect him any.

Q. In whose interest did they have an interest?

A. In mine. I gave them one eighth of all the money that I got until after the railroad was complete, in '88, for their services in the railroad line and putting the depot at Cle Elum.

Q. Mr. Johnson, what was the consideration which you gave Mr. Reed for entering into this contract?

A. I gave him consideration that I would have a depot there established. I would have the railroad line changed from the west side on the south over on that side, which I did, and had to pay for it, though.

Q. Now, who had any interest in this, besides yourself, in this deal with Reed?

A. During all that time, Mr. Bogue and Huson.

Q. Anyone else?

A. Mr. Bullock.

Q. And you accounted to them for half of the money that you got?

A. I accounted to them for one eighth of the money,—each one of them.

Q. Mr. Johnson, you stated that certain gentlemen connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had an interest with you in those lots. Has that interest been extinguished?

57 L. R. A.

A. They had no interest in the lots with me; they had an interest in the money that I got for the sale of lots at the time they were building the railroad.

Q. They had an interest for whatever lots you should sell while they were building?

A. While they were building, they got their money on it.

Q. That is all the interest?

A. That is all the interest they had.

Q. Whether that would be one lot or ten lots, they should have an interest in whatever money?

A. Each one of them had an interest in one eighth of the money that we took in for the sale of the lots.

Q. Did you make this agreement before or after you made your contract with Reed?

A. I think it was before.

Q. Did they have any interest in any unplatted portions of this land?

A. They had no interest in any of the ground, but the money that we sold lots for. If we sold the whole thing, they got, each of them, an eighth.

Q. That was the extent of the contract? In other words, they took you for one half of the money,—all your interest from the sale of lots during the time the railroad was being constructed?

A. No; they didn't take my half of the money, at all.

Q. One half of the interest?

A. They took—My interest was divided into four parts. The sale of lots was divided into four parts, and the money was divided.

Q. During the time the railroad was being constructed from where?

A. To Tacoma, from where it was already built to.

Q. The amount of their interest depended upon the length of time they were to keep the railroad building?

A. We were not very particular about it. We didn't stick them right down to it. They got a good deal of money after the railroad was built.

The above testimony was undisputed. Appellants proposed the following finding of fact based upon said evidence: "That the agreement hereinbefore mentioned was entered into by the said Thomas Johnson for and on behalf of certain officers of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, who then had charge of the construction of the line of railway of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company through and near said lands, and that the consideration of said contract was that said officers having charge of the location of said line of railway should locate the depot of said railway company within the limits of said tract of land." Said proposed finding was by the court refused, and exception thereto was taken. Appellants also proposed the following conclusion of law: "That said agreement aforesaid having been made for and on behalf of the officers of a public corporation known as the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and whose duty it was to locate depots at such points as would suit the public needs and convenience, and the sole consideration for said agreement being the location of said depot for the use of the public upon the above-described lands, the said agreement was and is without consideration and void." Said proposed conclusion was refused, and exception was thereto taken. In refusing to make said finding and conclusion, we think the court materially erred. The respondents by their cross complaint were asking for a specific performance of the contract, by decreeing a conveyance to them of the lands claimed by them under their contract. Before they are entitled to the relief of specific performance, it must appear that the contract which they seek to enforce has all the elements of an enforceable contract. If the contract is illegal and void for reasons of public policy, specific performance will not be enforced. "Equity will not assume jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of a contract that is illegal in any of its features. If the nature of the contract is such that its enforcement would be in violation of public policy, specific performance will not be granted. The least taint of illegality or want of equity will preclude a decree." 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 1014, ¶ 4. Was the contract between the parties here such as is contemplated in the above statement of the law? It is a general rule that contracts which tend to place the officers of a corporation under an inducement to disregard their duties to the corporation, and to decide questions affecting the action of the corporation from a standpoint other than that of the best interests thereof, are illegal and void. The evidence in this case discloses that certain officers of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, in consideration that they should receive a portion of the proceeds of sales of appellants' lands, agreed to so locate the line of said road that it would run through the section 26 described in the contract between these parties, and further agreed to erect a depot within said section. The testimony of Johnson is to the effect that the company contemplated building its line upon another route, but, by reason of the inducement above stated, the officers having in charge the location of the line and depot determined to change the route and locate both the tracks and depot upon said lands. It is manifest that such a personal inducement acted upon by the officers of the company, having in view their private gain, would not leave them free to act in all respects as might best subserve the interests of the corporation with whose interests they were intrusted. It is urged by respondents that the officers of the company were not parties to this contract. It is true, they are not named in the contract; but it appears from the evidence in the case that before Johnson made the agreement with appellants these officers had negotiated with Johnson to the effect that, if he should procure such a contract from appellants, they would in consideration of sharing in its benefits, make the location of the depot within said section. Johnson had no power to make the location. The persons who held that power agreed to make it if Johnson would procure certain specified compensation for them from appellants. In making the contract, Johnson, in effect, occupied the position of one simply acting between the principal parties concerned. In the arrangement that was made, Johnson stood in the position of a trustee for the officers, since he was to account to them for a specified share of the proceeds of all lands sold. We believe the relations of the officers of the company to this contract were such as cast upon it the taint of illegality, and rendered it void as being against public policy, under the authorities we shall hereinafter discuss. This is true even though the contract, upon its face, appears to have been made with Johnson alone. The officers' interests in the results of the contract aggregated three times as much as the interest of Johnson, and from that fact, together with the further fact that the necessary power to act in the premises resided with the officers, it follows logically that Johnson must have been entirely under the control and direction of the officers, and he therefore became particeps criminis in the illegality of the transaction.

In the case of Bestor v. Wathen, 60 Ill. 138, a contract was involved which was similar to the one here under consideration. The construction firm that was building the railroad, together with the president of the railroad company and another of its directors, and also its construction agent, entered into a contract with the owners of 160 acres of land situated where the road then in process of construction was expected to cross the Illinois Central Railroad, by the terms of which the owners agreed to sell the first-named parties an interest in the land. No money was to be paid by the purchasers, but the land was to be laid out into town lots and sold. The first proceeds of the same, to the amount of $4,800, were to be retained by the owners, and when this sum was received they were to convey to the other parties an undivided half of the residue of the land. The only consideration for the agreement was that the so-called purchasers should "aid, assist, and contribute to the building up of a town on said land." Precisely as is sought by the cross bill in this case, the so-called purchasers in that case brought suit against the owners of the land, asking for an account of sales, and for conveyance of an undivided half of the lots unsold. The court refused to enforce the contract and dismissed the bill. The language of the court in discussing the principle involved is of great emphasis and weight. The necessary space forbids an extensive quotation from the opinion, but the following extract is particularly pertinent: "A court of equity will not enforce a contract resting upon such official delinquency, or even tending to produce it. Such is the character of the contract before us. If we enforce it, we lend the sanction of the court to a class of contracts the inevitable tendency of which is to make the officers of these powerful corporations pervert their trusts to their private gain at the price of injury at once to the stockholders and to the public. Rendered into plain English, the contract in this case was a bribe on the part of Wathen and Gibson to the president and other officers of the railway company, and to the contractors who were building the road, of an undivided half of 160 acres of land, in consideration of which the road was to be constructed on a certain line, and a depot built at a certain point. . . . In this particular case no wrong may have been done, and yet public policy plainly forbids the sanction of such contracts, because of the great temptation they would offer to official faithlessness and corruption." The principle adopted in the above case is sustained by the following authorities: Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. 472; Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; Bliss v. Matteson, 52 Barb. 335; Berryman v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 14 Bush, 755; West v. Camden, 135 U. S. 507, 34 L. ed. 254, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838; Woodstock Iron Co. v. Richmond & D. Extension Co. 129 U. S. 643, 32 L. ed. 819, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 402. In the last-named case the court said: "The business of the extension company was one in which the public was interested. Railroads are for many purposes public highways. They are constructed for the convenience of the public in the transportation of persons and property. In their construction without unnecessary length between designated points, in their having proper accommodations, and in their charges for transportation, the public is directly interested. Corporations, it is true, formed for their construction, are private corporations; but, whilst their directors are required to look to the interests of their stockholders, they must do so in subordination to and in connection with the public interests, which they are equally bound to respect and subserve. All arrangements, therefore, by which directors or stockholders or other persons may acquire gain by inducing those corporations to disregard their duties to the public, are illegal and lead to unfair dealing, and, thus being against public policy, will not be enforced by the courts." It will be noted that the language of the above opinion not only applies the rule to directors or stockholders, and declares that all arrangements by which they may acquire gain by inducing these corporations to disregard their duties to the public are illegal, but also applies the same rule to "other persons;" the words being particularly applicable to the claim made in this case that Johnson, not being an officer of the railway company, is entitled to have his contract enforced. Further addressing ourselves to the last-named point, we refer to the case of Embrey v. Jenison, 131 U. S. 336, 33 L. ed. 172, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776. The contract involved in that case was a wagering contract, and it was held that the broker who negotiated between the parties for the purpose of entering into the illegal agreement was particeps criminis, and could not recover for services rendered or losses incurred by himself on behalf of either in forwarding the transaction. In the case of Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468, the following instruction was given to the jury below: That where the contract grows immediately out of, and is connected with, an illegal or immoral act, a court of justice will not lend its aid to enforce it; and if the contract be in fact only connected with the illegal transaction, and growing immediately out of it, though it be in fact a new contract, it is equally tainted by it. The instruction was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall. The learned jurist says the law was correctly stated by the trial court. To the same effect are the following cases: Barton v. Port Jackson & U. F. Pl. Road Co. 17 Barb. 397; Deans v. McLendon, 30 Miss. 343; Howell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 176, 46 Am. Dec. 415; Branch v. Haas, 16 Fed. 53; Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591; Buck v. Albee, 26 Vt. 184, 62 Am. Dec. 564; Bartle v. Nutt, 4 Pet. 184, 7 L. ed. 825; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 992.

It cannot be successfully urged that appellants have waived objection to the illegality of this contract by not specially pleading the same. The nonenforcement of illegal contracts is a matter of common public interest, and a party to such contract cannot waive his right to set up the defense of illegality in an action thereon by the other party. It is not necessary to specially plead the defense of illegality, but, when the same is made to appear to the court at any stage of the case, it becomes the duty of the court to refuse to entertain the action. The above statements of the law are sustained by the following cases: Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, 19 L. ed. 244; Cardozo v. Swift, 113 Mass. 250; Wilde v. Wilde, 37 Neb. 891, 56 N. W. 724; Sheldon v. Pruessner, 52 Kan. 579, 22 L. R. A. 709, 35 Pac. 201; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 410, 7 L. ed. 903; Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 131; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344; Krcamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735; Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 Pac. 1068; Schmidt v. Barker, 17 La. Ann. 261, 87 Am. Dec. 527; Claffin v. United States Credit System Co. 165 Mass. 501, 43 N. E. 293; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L. R. A. 457, 43 N. W. 102. The appellants are not estopped to raise the illegality of the contract because of their course of dealing with respondents under the contract. Validity cannot be given to an illegal contract through any principle of estoppel. 1 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 162, § 4; Durkee v. People ex rel. Askren, 155 Ill. 354, 40 N. E. 626; Brown v. First Nat. Bank, 137 Ind. 655, 24 L. R. A. 206, 37 N. E. 158; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808. While one is not estopped to raise the illegality of a contract, yet he is not entitled to recover for losses thereunder. In Houcell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 176, 46 Am. Dec. 415, the court said: "The law leaves the parties to such a contract where it found them. If either has sustained a loss by the bad faith of a particeps criminis, it is but a just infliction for premeditated and deeply practised fraud, which, when detected, deprives him of anticipated profits, or subjects him to unexpected losses. He must not expect that a judicial tribunal will degrade itself by an exertion of its powers, by shifting the loss from one to the other, or to equalize the benefits or burdens which may have resulted by the violation of every principle of morals and of laws."

The trial court found that neither party was entitled to recover anything upon an accounting, which was right. But in the light of the foregoing authorities, that portion of the court's findings and judgment which awarded and decreed specific performance in favor of respondents must be set aside. To that extent the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the lower court to modify the judgment to the extent of decreeing that the contracts between appellants and respondents dated, respectively, July 13, 1886, and August 2, 1886, shall be canceled and terminated, and shall be removed and extinguished as a cloud upon the title of appellants to the unsold portions of the lands described therein.

Reavis, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Dunbar, Anders, and Mount, JJ., concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Marianna VIETH

v.

HOPE SALT & COAL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. Where one places a steam boiler upon his premises, and operates the same in lawful business with care and skill, so that it is no nuisance, in the absence of proof of fault or negligence in him, he is not liable for damages to his neighbor occasioned by the explosion of the boiler.
2. A presumption of negligence does not arise from the mere fact of the explosion of a steam boiler used by one engaged in lawful business. Negligence on his part must be shown.
3. While two special questions covering the same inquiry should not be put to a jury, yet if one covering some matter of another is so drawn as to more definitely and pointedly inquire as to a particular matter controlling the case it should be given.

(March 8, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mason County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries caused by the explosion of a boiler. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John U. Myers and H. R. Howard, for plaintiff in error:

The precaution that everyone in conduct-

*Headnotes by BRANNON, J.

NOTE.—As to injury to adjoining property by escape of water from standpipe on premises, see Defiance Water Co. v. Olinger (Ohio) 32 L. R. A. 736.

As to negligence in escape and explosion of gas, see Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (Ohio) 29 L. R. A. 337, and note; Schmeer v. Gaslight Co. (N. Y.) 30 L. R. A. 653; Consolidated Gas Co. v. Crocker (Md.) 31 L. R. A. 785; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Ferrego (Ind.) 32 L. R. A. 57.

ing a business is bound to observe is measured by what in the known course of things is likely to occur as the natural and probable consequence of the doing or not doing of an act.

No one is bound to foresee or anticipate an injury that may result from accidents remotely possible.

An accident resulting in injury to another may be remotely possible, as distinguished from accidents resulting in injury to others as the natural and probable consequences of the acts causing such accidents.

Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Welch, 25 Ind. App. 308, 58 N. E. 88.

No one who uses machinery is a guarantor of its safety. He is only bound to use ordinary and reasonable care in the selection, arrangement, and care thereof. He has a right to provide and use such as the experience of trade and manufacture sanctions as reasonably safe.

Stringham v. Hilton, 111 N. Y. 188, sub nom. Stringham v. Stewart, 1 L. R. A. 483, 18 N. E. 870; Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 141, 60 Am. Rep. 433, 12 N. E. 599; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y. 562.

When an appliance or machine not obviously dangerous has been in use for a long time, and has uniformly proved adequate, safe, and convenient, its use may be continued without the imputation of imprudence or carelessness.

Stringham v. Hilton, 111 N. Y. 188, sub nom. Stringham v. Stewart, 1 L. R. A. 483, 18 N. E. 870; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. Y.

R. A. 146; and Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider (Ark.) 33 L. R. A. 366.

As to liability for injury to person near railroad from explosion of locomotive boiler, see Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lynch (Ind.) 34 L. R. A. 293.

As to explosion of generator of refrigerating machine, see Ryan v. Los Angeles Ice & Cold Storage Co. (Cal.) 32 L. R. A. 524.

562; Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 136, 60 Am. Rep. 433, 12 N. E. 599; Lofthus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 455, 38 Am. Rep. 533.

No one engaged in a lawful business is an insurer against unavoidable accidents.

Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 387, 21 N. E. 864; Loose v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Spencer v. Campbell, 9 Watts & S. 32; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339; Walker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 658, 33 N. W. 224; Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232; Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259; Benedick v. Potts, 88 Md. 52, 41 L. R. A. 478, 40 Atl. 1067.

The act which caused the explosion must be shown to be a negligent one, and this it cannot be unless it is shown that it was one which ordinary and reasonable care would have enabled the person who did it to have foreseen and provided against it.

Voight v. Michigan Peninsular Car Co. 112 Mich. 504, 70 N. W. 1103; Schaum v. Equitable Gaslight Co. 15 App. Div. 74, 44 N. Y. Supp. 284; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394; Earle v. Arbogast, 180 Pa. 409, 36 Atl. 923; Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Lynch, 147 Ind. 165, 34 L. R. A. 293, 44 N. E. 997, 46 N. E. 471; Nitro-glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1227; Black, Proof & Pleading, p. 23; Elliott, Railroads, 1299; Racine v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 Hun, 453, 24 N. Y. Supp. 388; Quill v. Empire State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 159 N. Y. 1, 53 N. E. 680; John Morris Co. v. Southworth, 154 Ill. 118, 39 N. E. 1099; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707.

If one does a lawful act upon his own premises he cannot be held responsible for injurious consequences that may result from it, unless it is so done as to constitute actionable negligence.

4 Wait, Act. & Def. 701; Rockwood v. Wilson, 11 Cush. 221; Johnson v. Burns, 39 W. Va. 659, 20 S. E. 686; Yeager v. Bluefield, 40 W. Va. 484, 21 S. E. 752; Martin v. Thayer, 37 W. Va. 38, 16 S. E. 489; Williams v. Michigan C. R. Co. 2 Mich. 259, 55 Am. Dec. 59; Fahn v. Reichart, 8 Wis. 255, 76 Am. Dec. 237; Spencer v. Campbell, 9 Watts & S. 32; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386, 21 N. E. 864; Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259.

Messrs. W. R. Gunn and Charles E. Hogg, for defendant in error:

The explosion of a boiler is within the doctrine, res ipsa loquitur,—the thing itself speaks.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Phillips, 55 Ill. 194; Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232; Rose v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co. 20 Blatchf. 411, 11 Fed. 438; Posey v. Scoville, 10 Fed. 140; Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733; Barnowsky v. Helson, 15 L. R. A. 33, note, 89 Mich. 523, 50 N. W. 989; Judson v. Giant Powder Co. 107 Cal. 549, 29 L. R. A. 718, 40 Pac. 1020; Houser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 57 L. R. A.

80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154, 30 Atl. 906; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Houck, 72 Ill. 285.

The proximate cause of the injury alleged in the declaration is the defective boiler owned and operated by the defendant,—a boiler in bad condition and repair. Is it material whether it was in such condition when the defendant began its use, or whether it became so while it was using it?

Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Revalee, 17 Ind. App. 657, 46 N. E. 352; Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 116 Cal. 97, 38 L. R. A. 71, 47 Pac. 932; Platz v. McKean Twp. 178 Pa. 601, 36 Atl. 136; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 463, 23 U. S. App. 379, 62 Fed. 440; Folsom v. Lewis, 85 Ga. 146, 11 S. E. 606; Rayburn v. Central Iowa R. Co. 74 Iowa, 637, 35 N. W. 606, 38 N. W. 520.

Brannon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action of trespass on the case in the circuit court of Mason county, brought by Marianna Vieth against Hope Salt & Coal Company, the plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment against the defendant, and it has brought the case up to this court.

The ground of the action was that the defendant company carrying on the business of manufacturing salt, and using a boiler in its work, inflicted injury upon the plaintiff by damage done to her residence from the explosion of said boiler. We see at once that the case involves a conflict or clash between two plain rights vested in the parties to the suit. The right of the company is the right to use its own premises in legitimate lawful business. This is a constitutional right of liberty, and of the plainest import. The right of Mrs. Vieth is the right to abide upon her own premises in peace and security, free from hindrance or disturbance by anyone. She received injury from the defendant's act. Does that alone, without more, give her the right by law to call upon the company for reparation? Upon first impression we would likely answer this question in the affirmative. The plaintiff has received damage, without fault on her part, from the act of her neighbor, and it would seem plausible to say that this neighbor must make her whole. And such is the law under some decisions very well considered in England, particularly the case of Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, where a party constructed a water reservoir upon his land, and the water burst through into some coal shafts which had been made by another party, not known to the owner of the reservoir. The owner of the reservoir was held liable for damages, upon the ground that anyone who for his own purposes brings upon his own land anything that may do mischief, or does mischief, does so at his peril, and, if injury results therefrom to another, he is prima facie answerable for all damage therefrom. But such is not the American law. That law says that the English rule detracts from the right of the owner of land to use it in legitimate business, detracts from the efficacy of that ownership, cripples a plain right of ownership, and makes that owner an insurer against harm to others resulting from mere accident in the lawful use of his property. The American law does not make the mere damage a prima facie cause of action, but requires negligence on the part of him who inflicts the injury. That latest and best work on the subject of negligence, Thompson's Commentaries on the Law of Negligence (in vol. 1, § 14), lays down the law thus: "If, in the prosecution of a lawful act, a casualty purely accidental happens, and one which cannot be ascribed to any want of due care or skill on the part of the party sought to be made liable therefor, no matter how grievous, no action can be supported for the damage arising therefrom. The meaning is that where a man, proceeding in a lawful business, exercises reasonable care, the law does not make him an insurer of others against those consequences of his actions which reasonable care and foresight could not have prevented. The law justly ascribes such consequences to inevitable misfortune, or the 'act of God,' and leaves the harm resulting from them to be borne by him upon whom it falls. The contrary would obviously be against public policy, because it would impose so great a restraint upon freedom as materially to check human enterprise. In such cases, therefore, the law contents itself with inquiring whether any other person than the sufferer was at fault, and, if so, it requires him to reimburse the sufferer for the loss he has sustained, unless the sufferer himself was also at fault. This doctrine, however, is predicated only of unforeseen accidents, which result from the doing of lawful acts. If a person do an act which is wrongful per se, or in the nature of a public nuisance, he becomes, in respect of it, an insurer of the public, and is liable for any injury which may happen in consequence of it to a person in the exercise of ordinary care, irrespective of any question as to the degree of skill or diligence exercised by himself, his agents, or servants, to prevent such injury." In the notable case of Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623, the case of injury from the explosion of a boiler to property of a neighbor was fully considered, and the court adopted this syllabus: "Where one places a steam boiler upon his premises, and operates the same with care and skill, so that it is no nuisance, in the absence of proof of fault or negligence upon his part, he is not liable for damages to his neighbor occasioned by the explosion of the boiler." In the case of Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 118, 25 N. E. 259, this subject is fully considered, and the results stated that one conducting lawful business is not under obligation of saving others harmless from it by inevitable accident, and he performs his duty when he uses reasonable care to save others from injury, and that he who alleges negligence as a foundation of his right to recovery must point out by evidence the defendant's fault, as the presumption is, until the contrary appears, that every man has performed his duty. Thus it clearly appears that the plaintiff must show, not simply injury to her property from the explosion of the boiler, but must add to the fact of injury evidence of some negligence by the defendant. There is some evidence tending to show defect in the original construction of the boiler by reason of insufficient stay, because of the use of railroad iron for the purpose of stays; but the declaration never mentions defects in the construction of the boiler as a ground of action. A declaration for tort must specify with reasonable certainty the main or primary act of omission or commission constituting the negligence, and it cannot state one act as the cause of the damage and then allow the plaintiff to prove another. This declaration charges two acts constituting the negligence,—one that the defendant allowed the boiler to become dangerous and out of repair, and the other that the defendant misoperated the boiler, but does not charge defects in original construction. If the declaration so charged, there is no evidence to show that the defendant knew or could have known of this defect. The engine had been in use a good while and operated well. Numerous engines of the same character were used in like work in the same neighborhood. The law is as expounded in Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623, that if the explosion came from defect in the manufacture of the boiler the owner is not liable, in the absence of proof that such defect was known to him, or discoverable upon examination, or by the application of known tests, and that the fact that the boiler was purchased of reputable manufacturers is proper to be considered as tending to justify its use. This boiler was carefully examined before its purchase and found to be good. It took the place of an old boiler. A witness for the plaintiff, claiming to have some knowledge of boilers, said that the boiler looked to be all right. The defendant was not bound to use in his business the very safest and best machinery. Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304. There is absolutely no evidence at all to show mismanagement of the boiler.

But the plaintiff would sustain her case on the theory that without any proof of negligence she can succeed. It is contended for her that the mere explosion of the boiler, alone and per se, creates, at least prima facie, a presumption of negligence, calling upon the defendant to repel such presumption under the doctrine known in law as res ipsa loquitur,—the thing itself speaks. This subject is discussed in Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733. But does this case fall under that doctrine? Is it possible that every operator of the millions-using boilers is thus a guarantor of them against all latent defects? There is a division of authority here it is true; but the reason and the preponderance of authority are against the doctrine that the mere explosion of a boiler, without proof of some negligence, imposes upon its owner liability. The Supreme Court of the United States in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, denied this doctrine, and held that the plaintiff must establish negligence to impose a liability for damage resulting from the explosion of a boiler. In the above-cited case of Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. it was held that no presumption of negligence arises from the explosion of an oil tank in the yard of the defendant's petroleum factory causing oil to flow through a pipe and set fire to plaintiff's vessel. The court held that there is a distinction between actions for negligence where a contract relation exists between the parties, and those in which the defendant owes to the plaintiff no other duty than to use such ordinary care as the nature of the business demanded to avoid injury to others, and that in the latter class of cases, the mere fact that an accident happened to the plaintiff, without more, will not amount to prima facie proof of negligence on the part of the defendant. Such a rule as that contended for would be very dangerous, as it would make every user of a boiler an insurer against accident, and would almost put an embargo on the use of boilers in legitimate business. Much authority can be cited to support this proposition. Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386, 21 N. E. 864; Young v. Bransford, 12 Lea, 232; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394. Under these principles it was error in the court to refuse the following instruction, because it propounds good law, and was vital in the case, as presenting to the jury the law put to it on the defendant's side of the case: "The jury are instructed that they cannot infer negligence from the mere explosion of the boiler. The plaintiff must prove, in addition to such explosion, such facts and circumstances as will logically raise an inference of negligence on the part of the defendant before they can find for the plaintiff. The presumption of law is that persons in the performance of a lawful act have done their duty, and this presumption continues until the contrary is proved." Without that instruction the defendant's theory of the law of the case was not presented to the jury.

The defendant asked the court to put to the jury eight special questions: "(1) Was the boiler which exploded and caused the alleged injury out of repair and defective at the time of the explosion? (2) If it was out of repair and defective at the time of the explosion, in what particular was it out of repair, and what caused it to be out of repair? (3) If it was out of repair at the time of the explosion, did it so imperil the boiler as to cause the explosion by being out of repair? (4) What caused the boiler to explode? (5) Did the defendant, by its servants and employees, operate and manage said boiler in such unreasonable manner as to cause the explosion; if so in what did the unreasonable conduct and acts of the defendant, its servants and employees, consist, causing the boiler to explode? (6) If the boiler exploded by reason of defects therein, what were the defects that caused such explosion? (7) If the boiler was out of repair and defective, so as to cause it to explode, was the want of repair and defective condition occasioned by the negligent conduct of the defendant, its servants and employees? (8) If the boiler did explode by reason of being out of repair, and in a defective condition by reason of being out of repair, did the defendant know, prior to the explosion, or could it have known by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and inspection, of such defects in the boiler which caused the explosion?" The court put to the jury questions 1, 6, and 8, but refused the others. It seems to us that some of these questions were repetitions of others. Number 2 is fairly covered by number 6, and therefore there is no error in refusing it. Number 3 should have been given. It squarely puts the question whether the boiler was out of repair so far as to cause the explosion. That question is not squarely put by numbers 1 or 6. If answered in the negative, it would overrule the general verdict, and was therefore material. Bess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 492, 14 S. E. 234. There was no question submitted that made the direct explicit inquiry made by this question. As held in Peninsular Land Transp. & Mfg. Co. v. Franklin Ins. Co. 35 W. Va. 666, 14 S. E. 237, the object of a special question is to call the jury's special attention to a careful, deliberate investigation of a particular fact, distinct from other facts, and one controlling the case. Where is there any reason against number 4? It involved the pith of the case. There is no error in refusing question 5, as the court told the jury that it could not find for the plaintiff on the theory of mismanagement of the boiler. We think it was error to refuse to put question number 7.

We do not see that the evidence of Glesencamp was incompetent. He had had a long practical experience with boilers.

For these reasons we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, grant a new trial, and remand the case to the Circuit Court.

Fred JUDY

v.

C. G. LASHLEY, Mayor of Davis.

(50 W. Va. 628.)

*1. The police power of a municipal corporation depends upon the will of the legislature, and a city, town, or village can only exercise such police power as is fairly

*Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to constitutionality of ordinance making offense against city what a statute makes offense against state, see People v. Detroit White Lead included in the grant of powers by its charter.

2. Section 28 of chapter 47 of the Code, by vesting in the councils of municipal corporations power and duty "to protect the persons and property of the citizens of such city, town, or village, and to preserve peace and good order therein," does not confer power to punish acts made criminal by the state law, and fully covered thereby, except such as would be attended with circumstances of aggravation not included in the state law. Such power must be specifically and expressly given by the legislature, before it can be exercised by such corporation.
3. The carrying of deadly weapons, being an offense fully provided for and punished by law, and being an act not in itself amounting to a breach of the peace, cannot be made an offense and punished by a municipal ordinance, unless expressly authorized by the municipal charter.
4. Prohibition lies to restrain the mayor of a town incorporated, under the provisions of chapter 47 of the Code, from imposing a fine upon a person for carrying deadly weapons, and from collecting the same, under an ordinance making such act an offense, and punishing it by fine and imprisonment, as such ordinance is void, and the mayor is without jurisdiction in the premises.

(March 1, 1902.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to restrain defendant from proceeding against applicant for violation of an alleged ordinance forbidding the carrying of deadly weapons. Awarded.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. H. Kelly for petitioner.

Messrs. Cunningham & Stallings for respondent.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Fred Judy presented his petition June 9, 1900, praying a writ of prohibition restraining C. G. Lashley, mayor of the town of Davis, from proceeding against the petitioner on a charge of carrying a deadly weapon, and from attempting to collect a fine of $25 imposed upon him for said offense. There is some controversy between counsel as to whether said proceeding by the mayor was under the ordinances of the town, in his capacity as mayor, or under the state statute; the mayor being, by law, ex officio a justice of the peace. Code, chap. 47, § 39. The transcript of the mayor's proceedings is not with the papers, but it seems to be conceded that there is nothing in it to indicate that the proceeding was under the statute; the record showing only that as mayor he tried petitioner, and found him guilty, and assessed the fine against him.

Sections 26 and 52 of the ordinance of the town concerning offenses and their punishment reads as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person to carry about his person any revolver of other pistol, dirk or bowie knife, razor, slung shot, billy, metallic or other false knuckles, or any other dangerous or deadly weapon of like kind or character, nor shall any person sell or furnish any such weapon as is hereinbefore mentioned, to a person whom he knows, or has reason, from his appearance, or otherwise, to believe to be under the age of twenty-one years; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent any person from keeping or carrying about his dwelling house or premises such revolver or other pistol, or from carrying the same from the place of purchase to his dwelling house, or from his dwelling house to any place where repairing is done, to have it repaired, and back again. If any person commit any of the offenses prohibited or enumerated in any of the sections of the foregoing ordinance, he shall forfeit and pay a fine of not less than one, nor more than thirty dollars, and may, in the discretion of the mayor, be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, except for a violation or an offense as provided in § 26, when the party shall be fined not less than $25, nor more than $200, and may, at the discretion of the mayor, be confined in prison not less than one, nor more than twelve, months. And if any male person so convicted and fined, under any of the sections of this chapter, shall fail or refuse to pay said fine and costs, the mayor may sentence said offender to work same out upon the streets of said town, or other work in said corporation, at the rate of $1 per day and board until such fine and costs are paid, under the direction of such officer or person as the mayor may select, and may provide for his safe keeping while performing such work, and if deemed necessary, shall provide a ball and chain to be attached to his person for such purpose as is provided in chapter 36, § 11, of the Code of 1891."

It is urged for the petitioner that chapter 47 of the Code does not authorize a municipal corporation to punish acts already made criminal under the state law, and that the ordinance making the carrying of deadly weapons an offense punishable by the municipal authorities is void. It is further contended that the mayor, in taking cognizance of the offense, is acting without jurisdiction. In passing upon these questions, it becomes necessary to look to the source and extent of municipal criminal jurisdiction and power. On this subject it is said in Tiedeman, Pol. Power, § 212, that "a large part of the police power of the state is exercised by the local governments of municipal corporations, and the extent of their police power depends upon the limitations of their charters. They are creatures of the state, and the superior control of the state is almost without limit. The police power of a municipal corporation must depend upon the will of the legislature, and in order that a city, town, or county may exercise a particular police power, it must be fairly included in the grant of powers by the charter." The soundness of this proposition cannot be questioned. Looking now to the powers delegated by the legislature to municipal corporations of this state, it is found in § 28 of chapter 47 of the Code that it is the duty of the councils of such corporations, among other things, "to protect the persons and property of the citizens of such city, town, or village, and to preserve peace and good order therein." Section 29 of said chapter further provides that "to carry into effect these enumerated powers, and all others conferred upon such city, town, or village, or its council, by this chapter or by any future act of the legislature of this state, the council shall have power to make and pass all needful orders, by-laws, ordinances, resolutions, rules, and regulations, not contrary to the Constitution and laws of this state, and to prescribe, impose, and enact reasonable fines, penalties, and imprisonments in the county jail or the place of imprisonment in said corporation, if there be one, for a term not exceeding thirty days, for a violation thereof. Such fines, penalties, and imprisonments shall be recovered, and enforced under the judgment of the mayor of such city, town, or village, or the person lawfully exercising his functions." The offense in question here is clearly an offense against the peace. It is not only so regarded, but is so classed by chapter 148 of the Code. Unless the ground taken by the petitioner that the power thus delegated by the legislature does not include the right to punish acts already made criminal under the state law is tenable, it is manifest that the town may by ordinance declare the carrying of deadly weapons an offense, and punish it, for it is expressly given power to preserve peace and good order within its limits. On this question there is much conflict in the decisions of the various states. In New York and Alabama and Missouri, and some other states, it has been held that under a general authority delegated by the legislature, such as to preserve the peace and regulate the police, a municipal corporation may impose penalties for the commission of acts which by the state law are declared to be crimes. Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wend. 261, 19 Am. Dec. 493; Mobile v. Allaire, 14 Ala. 400; Mobile v. Rouse, 8 Ala. 515; Greensboro v. Mullins, 13 Ala. 341; Amboy v. Sleeper, 31 Ill. 499; State v. Crummeys, 17 Minn. 72, Gil. 50; Brownville v. Cook, 4 Neb. 101; Levy v. State, 6 Ind. 281; St. Louis v. Bentz, 11 Mo. 61; State v. Gordon, 60 Mo. 383. In some of the cases it is further held that a conviction under an ordinance may be pleaded in bar of a prosecution in the state court for the same act. State v. Cowan, 29 Mo. 330. This is on the ground that the Constitution forbids that a person shall be twice punished for the same offense. There is another class of cases which hold that the party may be punished under both the state and the municipal law. Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 410, 12 L. ed. 213; Moore v. Illinois, 14 How. 13, 14 L. ed. 306; Slaughter v. People, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 334, note. In some other states it is held that a state cannot punish by ordinance what is already an offense by the statute. State v. Keith, 94 N. C. 933; Re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405; Menken v. Atlanta, 78 Ga. 668, 2 S. E. 559. Cooley, Const. Lim. 239, says: "Nor will conferring a power upon a corporation to pass by-laws and impose penalties for the regulation of any specified subject necessarily supersede the state law on the same subject, but the state law and the by-law may both stand together, if not inconsistent. Indeed, an act may be a penal offense under the laws of the state, and further penalties, under proper legislative authority, be imposed for its commission by municipal by-laws, and the enforcement of the one would not preclude the enforcement of the other." It will be noticed that Judge Cooley says these penalties may be imposed under proper legislative authority. From this it is clear that he does not mean to say that such corporations have any inherent power, or power of themselves, to punish acts which are punishable under the state law. He does not pursue the question as far as does Judge Dillon, who says at § 367 of the fourth edition of his Work on Municipal Corporations: "Questions of difficulty have arisen in consequence of grants of power to municipal corporations to make ordinances respecting matters and acts already regulated by general statute, and, if criminal in their nature, punishable under the laws of the state. Hence, the same act comes to be forbidden by general statute and by the ordinance of a municipal corporation, each providing a separate and different punishment. The same transaction may, if complex in its nature, be in one part of it an offense against the general law, and in another against the by-law; but such cases present no difficulty. But can the same act be twice punished, once under the ordinance and once under the statute? The cases on this subject cannot be reconciled. Some hold that the same act may be a double offense,—one against the state and one against the corporation. Others regard the act as constituting a single offense, and hold that it can be punished but once, and may be thus punished by whichever party first acquires jurisdiction." In the next section the author presents his own conclusion deduced from the authorities, as follows: "Where the act is in its nature one which constitutes two offenses,—one against the state and one against the municipal government,—the latter may be constitutionally authorized to punish it, though it be also an offense under the state law; but the legislative intention that this may be done ought to be manifest and unmistakable, or the power in the corporation should be held not to exist. Where the act or matter covered by the charter or ordinance and by the state law is not essentially criminal in its nature, and is one which is generally confided to the supervision and control of the local government of cities and towns, but is also of a nature to require general legislation, the intention that the municipal government should have power to make new, further, and more definite regulations, and enforce them by appropriate penalties, will be inferred from language which would not be sufficient were the matter one not specially relating to corporate duties, and fully provided for by the general laws. Such are the general principles to be extracted from the authorities."

Works (Mich.) 9 L. R. A. 722; Thelsen v. McDavid (Fla.) 26 L. R. A. 234; Ex parte Fagg (Tex. Crim. App.) 40 L. R. A. 212; and Greenville v. Kemmlis (S. C.) 50 L. R. A. 725.

57 L. R. A.

As to how far proceedings for violation of ordinances are to be regarded as prosecutions for crime, see note to State v. Robitschek (Minn.) 33 L. R. A. 33.

It is evident that the exercise of such municipal power cannot extend to the whole range of acts made criminal by the state law. There must be a limit, and, in the cases holding that double punishment may be inflicted, under an indefinite delegation of power, the acts in question were generally those constituting the milder offenses under the state law. Usually they are such as bear a direct relation to, or are fairly to be included within the terms of, the power delegated to preserve peace and good order. This is well stated by Lumpkin, J., in Savannah v. Hussey, 21 Ga. 86, 68 Am. Dec. 452: "Can a municipal corporation legislate criminaliter upon a case fully covered by a state law? I am aware that decisions may be found to support the affirmative of the foregoing proposition. Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wend. 237, 19 Am. Dec. 493; Mobile v. Allaire, 14 Ala. 400; Mobile v. Rouse, 8 Ala. 515; Zylstra v. Charleston, 1 Bay, 382; St. Louis v. Bentz, 11 Mo. 61; Marsh v. Com. 12 B. Mon. 25. Without stopping to investigate the applicability of these precedents to the point under inquiry, I ask, What limit will you set to this power? If it may legislate by an ordinance for any one offense, may it not for every crime embraced within the Penal Code? Arson in a town or city is provided for by the public law. Why not pass a by-law prescribing another mode of trial, and a different punishment for the same offense, if committed within their limits? So of the crimes of forgery, counterfeiting, perjury, etc. Such, I am sure, has not been the understanding of the country. Under the general grant of power delegated by the act of 1849, the city authorities may cover all cases not provided for by the paramount authorities of the state. Their Code already fills a volume of some five hundred pages. All those ordinances regulating cemeteries, commons, markets, vehicles, fires, exhibitions, lamps, licenses, waterworks, watch, police, city taxes, city officers, health, nuisances, etc., are legitimate and proper. Nay, I might go further, and concede that where the state law defines an offense generally, and prescribes a punishment, without reference to the place where it is committed, in town or country, and the act, when committed in the streets and public places of the city, would be attended with circumstances of aggravation, such as an affray, for instance, the corporate authorities, with a view to suppress this special mischief, might probably provide against it by ordinance, because that ingredient or concomitant of the crime might not be supposed to be included in the state law. And this is going quite far enough." This seems to be a conservative position on the question, and one which extends to municipal corporations all power that is necessary, supplemented by the state law, which extends throughout all cities, towns, and villages of the state, to fully protect the interest and give complete exercise of all the police power of the state within municipal corporations. What more is needed? What good reason can be assigned for extending greater power, when the statute does not specifically and expressly grant it? So remote from a breach of the peace is the carrying of weapons, that at common law it was not an indictable offense, nor any offense at all. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 729. The legislature has empowered the municipal corporations of this state to preserve peace and good order therein, but the carrying of weapons, although having a remote tendency to a breach of the peace, is more objectionable on the ground of its danger to life and limb of the citizens of the state. It is probably on that account, more than any other, that it is made a statutory offense in nearly all of the states of the Union. It seems to be of such character as to be clearly without the limited and indefinite power conferred upon municipal corporations in this state. It would be just as reasonable to say that that power extends to the punishment of petit larceny and arson, under the power given to protect the property of the citizens, but no such authority is claimed or exercised by our municipal corporations. It is left to the jurisdiction and cognizance of the state courts. For these reasons, and under these principles, the ordinance of the town of Davis in reference to the carrying of deadly weapons, and punishment therefor, must be held invalid, and the mayor is without jurisdiction to take cognizance, as mayor, of the offense charged. This position must not be confounded with the position announced in Moundville v. Fountain, 27 W. Va. 182, and Jelly v. Dils, 27 W. Va. 267, holding that municipal corporations may punish for unlawful retailing of spirituous liquors, etc. The statute expressly gives power to such corporations to impose license taxes upon the privilege of making such sales, from which it results that the council must have power to enforce its regulations. That is a very different matter from the case under consideration.

But it is insisted that the writ of prohibition should not go, for the reason that, being ex officio a justice of the peace, the mayor may take cognizance of the offense and punish it under the statute. This position would be well taken if it appeared that the mayor was proceeding in that way. But it does not appear, except from the argument of his counsel. In the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary, it appearing that the town has this ordinance, the presumption must be that the mayor is proceeding under the ordinance, and not under the statute. Such an ordinance cannot be permitted to be enforced in that way.

The mayor cannot enforce the ordinance until his authority to do so is questioned, and then say he is acting, not as mayor, but as a justice of the peace. By such proceeding every city and town in the state could pass and enforce such an ordinance, except in particular cases. But on this question of the authority by which the mayor claims to be proceeding, his answer is conclusive, for it sets out the ordinances, and claims their validity, and his right and power and jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offense under them; and it does not deny the allegation in the petition that he is so proceeding, and that the petitioner has been by him convicted, under the ordinance.

On the demurrer it was argued that the town of Davis should have been made a respondent. The town is not a necessary party where the defendant is a governmental agent, and the matter involved is purely public in its nature. Neither the state nor the municipality, having power and authority delegated by the legislature, is a necessary party. "When the suit complained of is brought by a private person, he may be joined as a defendant. But when it is a suit or prosecution on behalf of the government, the writ of prohibition can go to the court only." Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 176, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; 3 Bl. Com. 112; Ex parte Braudlacht, 2 Hill, 367, 38 Am. Dec. 593; Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 31; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338. In the last case it is said: "A writ of prohibition, like a writ of mandamus or of certiorari, is properly sued out in the name of the Crown or the state. The only necessary defendant is the tribunal whose proceedings are sought to be restrained, controlled, or quashed."

All questions in the case having been disposed of, except that of costs, the next inquiry is whether the petitioner is entitled to costs. "The judge of the inferior court, although the record party, cannot be taxed with the costs." 16 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1143; State ex rel. Cummings v. King County Super. Ct. 5 Wash. 518, 32 Pac. 457, 771.

For the reasons hereinbefore given, the writ prayed for must be awarded, but without costs to the applicant.

E. E. WHITE, Admr., etc., of James A. White, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

Thomas B. COOK et al.

(.....W. Va.....)

*1. A contract between a sheriff and his deputy, providing that the deputy

*Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

NOTE.—For another case in this series holding that a contract by a sheriff and tax collector to pay a commission to other person for collecting taxes is in violation of a statute forbidding the sheriff to let to farm his county or any part of it, see Causler v. Penland (N. C.) 48 L. R. A. 441.

57 L. R. A.

shall collect all the taxes, with slight exceptions, and do all the work of the sheriff's office in one district, and attend the sessions of the court during stated portions of the time each year, and is to have all the fees and commissions allowed by law upon the work done by him, and is to pay the sheriff $100 a year, violates § 5 of chapter 7 of the Code, prohibiting the sale or farming, in whole or in part, of any office under the laws of this state.

2. When such contract provides that the payment of the sum agreed to be paid by the deputy shall be paid out of the fees and commissions, it is not in violation of said statute; but when the contract provides for the payment of such sum, without specifying that it shall be paid out of the fees and commissions, it is a contract to pay at all events, and amounts in law to a purchase of the office in part, and is therefore illegal.

3. A bond given by a deputy, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as deputy sheriff, and containing in one of its clauses a reference to said contract, is void as to the private interest of the sheriff and his deputy, so far as it may relate to them, and no recovery can be had thereon for any fees or commissions or the sum specified in said contract to be paid by the deputy.

4. But the sheriff may recover thereon the taxes, fines, other public dues, and money received by the deputy on executions and other process, although he may have satisfied the state, county, district, and creditors as to such fund, and such recovery only operates to reimburse him; for these funds came into the hands of the deputy as a de facto officer, by virtue of the law as much as by reason of the contract, and primarily belong to the public and innocent private individuals, and said statute is not allowed to so operate as to imperil the interests of the public or innocent persons.

5. Public policy demands protection of public funds in the hands of de facto officers, as well as prohibits the sale or farming of public offices; and although ordinarily, where a contract grows immediately out of, or is connected with, a contemporaneous or prior illegal contract, the illegality of such contract enters into the contemporaneous or subsequent contract, and vitiates it, from considerations of public policy that rule is not applicable when the illegal part of the contract can be severed from the balance of it, and it is necessary to do so to protect funds which, in their nature and primarily, belong to the public and persons unconnected with the illegal contract.

6. A sheriff cannot maintain a bill in equity for an account against his deputy without showing, by sufficient allegations, special circumstances entitling him to discovery as necessary to complete and adequate relief, or that the accounts are complicated and intricate.

(March 22, 1902.)

For public policy in respect to transfer of an officer's salary generally, see Schwenk v. Wyckoff (N. J. Eq.) 9 L. R. A. 221; Bowery Nat. Bank v. Wilson (N. Y.) 9 L. R. A. 706, and note; and State v. Williamson (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 827.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Mercer County in a suit for an accounting by defendant Cook as deputy sheriff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Hale, for appellant:

This contract simply divides or defines the duties of White as sheriff and Cook as deputy sheriff in Rock district in Mercer county, and fixes and adjusts the salary or compensation which each shall have for the services performed.

Noel v. Fisher, 3 Call (Va.) 215; Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh, 46.

In the absence of any authority directly holding this contract invalid, the presumption of the law is that it is valid.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 990.

Though the court should hold that the said contract is void, still Cook and his sureties are bound by their bond, which is not void.

Messrs. A. M. Sutton and C. W. Smith, for appellees:

The contract constituted a sale or transfer to the deputy of a part of the powers, duties, privileges, and emoluments of the sheriffalty. It was the sale of a deputation or farming of a part of the office. This could not be done.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 377; Grant v. McLester, 8 Ga. 554; Hall v. Gavitt, 18 Ind. 390; Outon v. Rodes, 3 A. K. Marsh. 433, 13 Am. Dec. 193; Meredith v. Ladd, 2 N. H. 519; Carleton v. Witcher, 5 N. H. 196; Ferris v. Adams, 23 Vt. 136; Candler v. Penland, 125 N. C. 578, 48 L. R. A. 441, 34 S. E. 683; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 340; Mott v. Robbins, 1 Hill, 21, 37 Am. Dec. 286; Lewis v. Knox, 2 Bibb, 453; Becker v. Ten Eyck, 6 Paige, 68; Noel v. Fisher, 3 Call (Va.) 215; Godolphin v. Tudor, 2 Salk. 468, 1 Bro. P. C. 135; Greenville v. Atkins, 9 Barn. & C. 462; Foott v. Bullock, 4 U. C. Q. B. 480; Reg. v. Moodie, 20 U. C. Q. B. 389; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 7th ed. § 471; 1 Hawk. P. C. 6th ed. chap. 67, § 3.

When a statute fixes a penalty for an act, a contract in violation of the statute is held void unless a different legislative intent can be inferred from the language or subject-matter of the statute, although the contract was valid at common law.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 939; Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. 97, 13 L. ed. 909; 1 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. 458, and note.

If the fixing of a statutory penalty for a common-law offense can give validity to a contract made in aid of crime, then our legislature has given validity to a wide range of contracts made in aid of both felonies and misdemeanors, for it is well established that all such contracts are void at common law.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. rule 451; Jackson v. Walker, 5 Hill, 27; Cantur v. Bennett, 39 Tex. 303; Russell v. De Grand, 15 Mass. 35; Milton v. Haden, 32 Ala. 30, 70 Am. Dec. 523; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 935; Capehart v. Rankin, 3 W. Va. 571, 100 Am. 57 L. R. A.

Dec. 779; Brown v. Wylie, 2 W. Va. 502, 99 Am. Dec. 781; Dodson v. Swan, 2 W. Va. 511, 98 Am. Dec. 787.

Had the contract gone no farther than assign a part of the unearned fees of the office, it would have been void.

Bowery Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 122 N. Y. 478, 9 L. R. A. 706, 25 N. E. 855; Bliss v. Laurence, 58 N. Y. 442, 17 Am. Rep. 273; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 964; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 351; Field v. Chipley, 79 Ky. 260, 42 Am. Rep. 215; Flarty v. Odlum, 3 T. R. 681; Davis v. Marlborough, 1 Swanst. 74; Stone v. Lidderdale, 2 Anstr. 533; 1 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. 225; Bangs v. Dunn, 66 Cal. 72, 4 Pac. 963; Beal v. McVicker, 8 Mo. App. 202; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1040d; National Bank v. Fink, 86 Tex. 303, 24 S. W. 256; Hunter v. Gardner, 6 Wilson & S. 618.

The sheriff has no interest in taxes and levies until collected, and an assignment of his uncollected commissions is to that extent a sale of the public revenues.

Hinchman v. Morris, 29 W. Va. 673, 2 S. E. 863.

If an ante-election arrangement, made at the instance of a part of the electors of Rock district, existed, it was without consideration, too indefinite to be enforced, and merged in the contract here sued on.

Even stronger reasons may be urged against such contracts when made before election, as the tendency to corrupt elections would be greater.

O'Rear v. Kiger, 10 Leigh, 622; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 983.

The bond sued on was given to insure on Cook's part the performance of his contract with White. That contract was its only consideration; it is expressly made a part of the bond. The law makes the bond a part of the contract.

Davis v. Baker, 45 W. Va. 456, 32 S. E. 239; Hall v. Gavitt, 18 Ind. 391; Love v. Buckner, 4 Bibb, 506; Davis v. Hull, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 9; Waldron v. Evans, 1 Dak. 10, 46 N. W. 607; Swift v. Beers, 3 Denio, 70; Batten v. Faulk, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 233; Nourse v. Pope, 13 Allen, 87; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. rule 17.

The money in Cook's hands was the primary fund for paying the balances due the county and district, and the plaintiff should not be permitted to collect funds to which the public is entitled, and which Cook by the terms of his contract was to settle, until he was in default in paying the same.

State v. Hays, 30 W. Va. 107, 3 S. E. 177; St. George Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Parsons, 22 W. Va. 314; Licking Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Parsons, 22 W. Va. 580; Spencer Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Cain, 28 W. Va. 758; Van Winkle v. Blackford, 33 W. Va. 573, 11 S. E. 26.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction of the case.

Lafever v. Billmyer, 5 W. Va. 33; 1 Barton, Ch. Pr. & Pl. 260; Davis v. Baker, 45 W. Va. 455, 32 S. E. 239; Petty v. Fogle, 16 W. Va. 497.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

James A. White was elected sheriff of Mercer county in 1896, and in January, 1897, with the consent of the county court of said county, he appointed T. B. Cook his deputy. The contract of service made between them is dated January 1, 1897, and, after reciting the election and qualification of the sheriff and appointment of the deputy, it reads as follows: "Now, therefore, this agreement witnesseth that the party of the second part agrees to do and perform all the work to be done by the sheriff of Mercer county, as the law requires, in the district of Rock of said county; to attend upon the sessions of the courts of said county his proportional part of the time, but in no event to exceed one third of the time of said courts; and to pay to said party of the first part one hundred ($100) dollars per annum. The party of the first part reserves, however, in the collection of the taxes of said Rock district, the tax ticket against E. W. Clark et al., trustees. The party of the first part agrees that the party of the second part shall have all the fees and commissions arising from all work and labor so performed by him in and about his duties as such deputy sheriff of Mercer county in the said district of Rock, except the commissions of the said tax ticket of E. W. Clark et al., trustees, reserved as aforesaid. But in no event is the said party of the second part to have or receive any commissions on any sums not collected by him." The sheriff took a bond from said deputy in the penalty of $25,000, and with numerous sureties. The condition of the bond reads as follows: "The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas, the said James A. White was duly elected sheriff of Mercer county, W. Va., on the 3d day of November, 1896, whose term of office begins on the first day of January, 1897; and whereas, said White, with the consent of the county court of said county, entered of record, has appointed the above-bound T. B. Cook deputy sheriff for said county within Rock district, said county, who is to perform said duties within said district and receive such compensation and reward as is set forth in a written contract this day executed by and between said White and said Cook, and which is made a part hereof: Now, therefore, if the said T. B. Cook shall well and truly perform his duties as such deputy sheriff within said Rock district, and perform such work in court as set forth as above mentioned, then this obligation to be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue."

White died in September, 1900, and Cook served as deputy until after the date of the death of White, but just how long does not appear. Taxes and other demands, amounting to a large sum of money, went into his hands for the years 1897, 1898, and 1899, and no final settlement has been made between him and the administrator of White. In the year 1900, E. E. White, as administrator with the will annexed of James A. White, deceased, instituted a suit in equity against Cook and all his sureties on the bond, alleging that the accounts between said decedent and the defendant Cook were mutual, that Cook was indebted to the estate of White on account of his deputyship in the sum of $7,500, and that discovery on the part of Cook was necessary to complete and adequate relief. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the bill, being of the opinion that the bond and contract exhibited therewith were made in violation of the statute and public policy of the state, and are void. Leave was granted the plaintiff to amend his bill, and, after the amended bill had been filed, the court sustained a demurrer to it on the same ground, and dismissed it. The amendment consisted of an allegation that there was a sort of ante-election agreement between said sheriff and the voters of said Rock district that, in case of the election of White to the office of sheriff, he would appoint Cook deputy for that district, and that in pursuance of such understanding Cook was appointed.

It is insisted here, as it was in the court below, that the contract between White and Cook amounted to a sale or farming of a part of the office of sheriff. Undoubtedly this contract falls within the exact terms used in Godolphin v. Tudor, 2 Salk. 468, decided under the reign of Queen Anne, which is everywhere considered the leading case on the subject. On a writ of error to the House of Lords the judgment was affirmed. 1 Bro. P. C. 135. In the report of the case found in Salk. it is said: "The court held that where an office is within the statute, and the salary is certain, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a lesser sum out of the salary, it is good. So if the profits be uncertain, arising from fees, if the principal make a deputation, reserving a sum certain out of the fees and profits of the office, it is good, for in these cases the deputy is not to pay unless the profits rise to so much; and, though a deputy by his constitution is in place of his principal, yet he has no right to the fees; they still continue to be the principal's; so that as to him it is only reserving a part of his own, and giving away the rest to another. But where the reservation or agreement is not to pay out of the profits, but to pay generally, a certain sum, it must be paid at all events, and such bond is void by the statute." The statute referred to is 5 & 6 Edw. VI. chap. 16. Godolphin, being the auditor of Wales, made Toudor his deputy, and they entered into an agreement by which the deputy was to have all the fees, and in consideration thereof pay his principal £200 per annum and save him harmless. In Greville v. Atkins, 9 Barn. & C. 462, the same conclusion is reached under Stat. 49 Geo. III. chap. 126. Other English cases bearing on the subject of sales of offices are Parsons v. Thompson, 1 H. Bl. 322; Garforth v. Fearon, 1 H. Bl. 327; Lockner v. Strobe, 2 Ch. Cas. 48, as explained by Lord Loughborough in Garforth v. Fearon; Juxon v. Morris, 2 Ch. Cas. 42; Blachford

v. Preston, 8 T. R. 89; Hanington v. Du-Chatel, 1 Bro. Cn. 124. A careful examination of these cases leads to the conclusion that the whole doctrine of the English law concerning sales of offices and deputations is based upon Stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. chap. 16, and other statutes which forbid and make illegal the sales of certain offices. There is no clear intimation that by the English common law the sale of an office or deputation was illegal. Lord Kenyon said in Blachford v. Preston: "Up to a certain extent the legislature have interfered and prohibited, by the Stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. the sale of some offices; but whether or not that act of Parliament were necessary for the purpose I will not now inquire." In Garforth v. Fearon, in which the customer of a port, having before his appointment, agreed to hold the office in trust for another party, and appoint such deputies as the other party should nominate and would empower, said other party to receive the profits of the office to his own use, an action of assumpsit was brought on the agreement. The contract was held to be void, and Lord Loughborough said: "I should therefore not find much difficulty to conclude, if there were nothing more in the case, that the common law would not support an assumpsit on such an agreement. But I think it is clearly void by positive law respecting this office. The appointment of any customer by any means contrary to Stat. 12 Rich. II. chap. 2, is a misdemeanor. That statute, though very ancient, is certainly not obsolete. It is the statute under which they are sworn in the exchequer. It not only prohibits the appointment, but goes on to say that 'none that pursueth, by him or by others, privily or openly, to be in any manner of office, shall be put in the same office or in any other,' and the 5 & 6 Edw. VI. chap. 16, makes void all promises, bonds, and assurances, as well on the part of the bargainer as the bargainee."

The English rule is generally recognized and applied by the American courts. Throop, Pub. Off. § 579; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 376. In Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, New Hampshire, and Virginia the courts have applied the English statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI. chap. 16, and the doctrine of the English courts. Grant v. McLester, 8 Ga. 553; Outon v. Rodes, 3 A. K. Marsh. 433, 13 Am. Dec. 193; Love v. Buckner, 4 Bibb, 506; Davis v. Hull, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 9; Baldwin v. Bridges, 2 J. J. Marsh. 8; Noel v. Fisher, 3 Call (Va.) 216; Meredith v. Ladd, 2 N. H. 517; Carleton v. Whitchoer, 5 N. H. 196; Cardigan v. Page, 6 N. H. 182; Haralson v. Dickens, 4 N. C. (2 Car. Law Reps.) 66. In other states statutes have been passed founded upon that of 5 & 6 Edw. VI. chap. 16, notably New York, Virginia, and Wisconsin. Becker v. Ten Eyck, 6 Paige, 68; Tappan v. Brown, 9 Wend. 175; Mott v. Robbins, 1 Hill, 21, 37 Am. Dec. 286; Addington v. Seaton, 17 Wis. 328, 84 Am. Dec. 745; Salling v. McKinney, 1 Leigh, 42, 19 Am. Dec. 722; O'Rear v. Kiger, 10 Leigh, 622; 1 Va. 57 1 A. R. A.

Rev. Code 1819, p. 559, chap. 145; Rev. Rep. chap. 12.

The tenacity with which the courts adhere to the English rule where they recognize the English statute, and it has not been modified in any way, will be seen by reference to some of the cases cited. In Grant v. McLester the clerk of an inferior court appointed a deputy, agreeing to give him for compensation all the fees and costs already accrued and which were thereafter to accrue, and the deputy agreed to pay his principal $500 out of the fees and costs thereafter to accrue and gave his notes to secure the payment of the same. The court held that it was an agreement to pay the $500 at all events, and was not limited to payment out of the fees, and was therefore void. In Ferris v. Adams, 23 Vt. 136, the action was upon a note for $30, given by a deputy sheriff to his principal upon the occasion of his being appointed to the office, and the court held the contract void, basing its decision upon the English cases and many of the American cases here cited. In Noel v. Fisher, 3 Call (Va.) 215, the action was debt upon a bond given by a deputy sheriff, in the condition of which it is recited that for the perquisites and benefits of the office the deputy agrees and binds himself to pay the sum of £35 on specified days, and the court held that the contract was void under the British statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI.

The contract between White and Cook, in so far as it relates to the amount which Cook agreed to pay White, is clearly within the principles of law against the farming of offices. But the principal question in the case is whether the action may be maintained upon the bond for the recovery of the taxes and other moneys which went into the hands of Cook by virtue of his deputyship. It is insisted here that, the contract of appointment to the office of deputy being illegal and void, all contracts and transactions in pursuance and furtherance thereof are void. This contention is borne out by some of the American cases. No English case is recalled in which that question arose. They were all actions or suits differing very materially in their facts and legal status of the parties from this case. In Leavis v. Knox, 2 Bibb, 453, the court held that the bond taken for a sum given for the sale and purchase of an office is void; but whether it was intended to hold in that case that the bond was void for all purposes, or only as to the illegal consideration, does not appear. In the opinion it is said: "So far as the condition of the bond to perform the duties of the office of sheriff and keep the principal indemnified, there is clearly nothing in it illegal. For, as the sheriff may lawfully appoint a deputy, it would be unreasonable not to permit him to take security for his indemnity against any violation of the duties of the office by the deputy." But in Love v. Buckner, 4 Bibb, 506, the court met the point squarely, and decided that the bond was invalid for any purpose and in all respects. The court said: "The bond we suppose not to be of the character of those declared void by the statute, 5 & 6 Edw. chap. 16. That statute more properly applies to bonds securing the payment of anything agreed to be given for an office, and should not be construed to embrace bonds conditioned exclusively for a faithful discharge of the duties of an office. But, although there is no stipulation in the bond repugnant to the provisions of the statute, yet as, by a recitation in the condition, the deputation of the office appears to have been sold by Love to Buckner, it becomes material to inquire whether, upon common-law principles, the bond can be sustained. The sale of the deputation must have caused the execution of the bond, and, as the sale is expressly interdicted by the statute, the consideration of the bond is against law, and consequently the bond itself inoperative." In Davis v. Hull, 1 Litt. 10, the action was on the bond of a deputy sheriff for breaches of its condition for the faithful performance of the duties of the deputy, and a plea was interposed alleging that Davis, the sheriff, on the day of the date of the bond, sold the deputation of the office to Hull for the sum of ——— dollars, and it was held that the facts alleged in the plea formed a valid bar to the plaintiff's action on the bond. Another case, which goes probably further than any of these, is Canaler v. Penland, 125 N. C. 578, 48 L. R. A. 441, 34 S. E. 683, decided in December, 1899. There the sheriff, being the tax collector of the county, made a contract with another person by which it was agreed that the latter should collect the taxes for the years 1891 and 1892, and receive a commission of 2½ per cent for making the collections. The tax list was delivered to him, and he collected the taxes, and in 1894 the sheriff brought an action against him, and recovered a judgment for $93.02. On appeal the judgment was reversed, on the ground that the contract was illegal. A circumstance which distinguishes this case from all the Kentucky cases is that the party who was employed to collect the taxes, and to whom the sheriff endeavored to delegate his authority in that respect, does not appear to have been appointed a deputy. However, the decision does not seem to rest upon that circumstance. The court regarded it as an unauthorized delegation of authority, amounting to a farming out of the office. Redfield, J., in Ferris v. Adams, refers to the Kentucky case of Love v. Buckner, in which the court held the bond given to indemnify the sheriff void, and says: "We should not, perhaps, be prepared to go to that length." There is no Virginia case in which the bond given by a deputy, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties and to indemnify the sheriff, has been held invalid, as to the indemnity, on the ground of a sale of the deputation. On the contrary, in Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh, 42, 19 Am. Dec. 722, the court virtually repudiated the English doctrine, in so far as it relates to sales of deputation in the office of sheriff. That was the first case involving the question of the sale of a deputation, in which the purpose of the action was to recover for breaches of the condition to faithfully perform the duties of the office and indemnify the sheriff against loss. Hoge v. Trigg, 4 Munf. 150, was an action by a deputy sheriff against his principal for damages on the contract between them for removing the plaintiff from his office in violation thereof. Noel v. Fisher was for the recovery of the purchase money of the deputation. O'Rear v. Kiger was an action brought by Kiger against O'Rear's administrator for the breach of an agreement by O'Rear, in consideration of money, to appoint Kiger his deputy. In Hoge v. Trigg the declaration showed that Hoge, by their agreement, was to pay Trigg for the fees and profits of his office $100. Several pleas in bar were interposed, and, among others, that Hoge had been guilty of certain misfeasances and improprieties in office, which was held to be a bar to his action. On a writ of error to this judgment it was affirmed. The supreme court of appeals waived the question whether the contract was void because of the agreement to pay the sheriff a certain sum of money for the fees and profits of the office. This case was decided twelve years later than that of Noel v. Fisher.

Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh, 42, 19 Am. Dec. 722, arose after the passage of the Virginia statute found in 1 Rev. Code 1819, taken from the British statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI., and it was held that the sale of deputation of a sheriff's office was not within the inhibition of that statute. That statute provided, in § 3, that "every such bargain, sale, promise, bond, covenant, agreement, and assurance, as before specified, shall be utterly void and of no effect;" but it also contained in the 4th section this proviso: "Provided, always, that nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the appointment, qualification, and acting of any deputy clerk, or deputy sheriff, who shall be employed to assist their principals in the execution of their respective offices." Judge Carr said, in his dissenting opinion, that this proviso did not so operate as to take the sale of a deputation in the office out of the statute. But Green, J., and Brooke, P., while admitting that such sale was clearly within the terms of the 1st section of the act, held that the proviso did so operate. The former said, after discussing the statute: "These considerations would incline me strongly to the opinion, if we were not to look beyond the terms of the statute itself, that the sale of the deputation of the offices of clerk and sheriff was not embraced by the statute. Other circumstances lead to the same conclusion." The principal one of these considerations was stated as follows: "The only case in which a deputation of the office could come within the enacting clause is that where the deputy paid or agreed to pay for it a gross sum at all events, and independently of the amount of the fees, and if the proviso does not except such a case it has no effect whatever." He then reviews the history of the sheriff's office in Virginia, and, among other things, says: "The office of sheriff, devolving on them (the justices) in succession, generally comes to them at an advanced age, and when they are unfitted from that cause, as well as from their previous course of life and other occupations, to discharge in detail the duties of the office, or even to superintend personally the discharge of those duties by others; and they have, as was to be expected, almost invariably, so far as I am informed, and as, indeed, is perfectly notorious, farmed their offices to others, without being conscious of violating any law, either municipal or moral. This practice must have been well known to the legislature which enacted the law in question. And this induces a belief that the proviso was intended to except the deputation of this office from the general terms of the statute." The reasoning of Brooke, P., was much the same. The law as settled by this case so remained until 1849, when the revisers recommended that the office of deputy sheriff be expressly excepted from the statute prohibiting sales of offices and deputations thereof, saying: "More than one hundred years ago, when a deputy sheriff, who had given bond to the high sheriff to indemnify him and pay him 1,500 pounds of tobacco, pleaded the statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI., and averred the tobacco to be for the deputation, the plea was adjudged in Virginia to be bad. Goodloe v. Dudley, Jeff. (Va.) 59. And more recently the practice which prevails in Virginia of farming the sheriffalty was sanctioned in Salling v. M'Kinney, 1 Leigh, 42, 19 Am. Dec. 722. This being the case, it is deemed better to make the statute conform to the practice, and the adjudications sanctioning that practice, than to retain merely the language of the 4th section of the act in 1 Rev. Code, p. 559." Rev. Code, p. 49. It will be seen by reference to Code 1860, chap. 12, § 6, that, in pursuance of this recommendation, the office of deputy sheriff was expressly excepted from the general statute, § 5 of the same chapter, against selling or farming of the offices or deputations thereof. This exception became a part of the law of this state, and so remained until 1868, when said section was stricken out, and § 5 amended so as to read as follows: "If any person holding or expecting to hold any office under the laws of this state, sell the same, or let it to farm, either in whole or in part, or contract to do so, such person and the person who may buy, take to farm, or contract to do so, shall be thereby disabled from holding said office." Our present statute on the subject is in the same terms, and it is worthy of notice that it is a substantial modification of § 5 of chapter 12 of the Code of 1860, in this, that the words, "or the deputation thereof," found in the old statute, are omitted from our present statute. How much weight this omission is entitled to in the construction of that statute it is difficult to say. But, if the process of reasoning adopted in Salling v.

M'Kinney should be applied here, it would probably lead to the conclusion that it was the intention of the legislature in so doing to except from the operation of that section contracts relating to the compensation of deputy sheriffs. The public policy of the state of Virginia, as shown by its legislation and the interpretation thereof by its highest courts, carried down into the jurisprudence of this state, as has been shown, undoubtedly warrants and commands on the part of this court, in the construction of that statute, a relaxation, in respect to contracts between a sheriff and his deputy, of the strictness of the English rule as enforced by the courts of Kentucky and North Carolina. Even in Kentucky, when the English rule was enforced to the very letter, as has been shown, in more than one case, and carried perhaps even beyond any English precedent, public sentiment blotted it out about the same time it was abrogated in Virginia, as will be seen from an examination of the case of Baldwin v. Bridges, 2 J. J. Marsh. 7, where it is said: "This opinion of the impolicy and injustice of invalidating the bonds of deputies for indemnifying their principals is fortified by public sentiment. An act of 1820 (2 Dig. 1146) declares that such bonds shall be obligatory, even when executed in consideration of sale to the deputy." Our statute no longer provides, as did the statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI., and the early Virginia statute, both of which have been supplanted by it and are not now law in this state, that every bond, covenant, agreement, and assurance for any vote or appointment to office shall be utterly void, and this provision undoubtedly had great weight in the construction put upon those statutes by the courts. They further provided that persons guilty of making such contracts should be forever disabled from holding such post or deputation. That, also, has been eliminated from our statute, which says only that they "shall be thereby disabled from holding said office," which language has been construed by this court in Dryden v. Swinburne, 20 W. Va. 89, to mean that they shall be disabled only from holding the particular term of the office in respect to which the illegal contract was made.

Where an officer has the right, under the law, to appoint a deputy, and is at liberty to contract with his deputy in respect to compensation, as a sheriff may do in this state, the reason for the distinction between the effect of a contract by which the deputy is to have all the fees and perquisites of the office, and pay his principal a sum certain out of the fees, and a contract by which he is to pay a sum certain, without limiting it to payment out of the fees, is not in all respects satisfactory, although that distinction is hoary with age, and too well settled to be disturbed. With us, in the selection of deputy sheriffs, the law is so lax as not to require the application of the principle to detur digniori. The sheriff has full latitude to select, not the most meritorious and competent man to perform the duties of deputy sheriff, but the man who will perform that duty for the least money, subject only to the limitation that the county court must consent to the appointment. He may permit his deputy to take all the fees and commissions for his services, and in consideration thereof pay to his principal any amount of money they may see fit to agree upon, provided only that it be specified that the money so to be payable shall be paid out of the fees and commissions. If the only object of the law is to prevent trafficking and dealing between the sheriff and his deputy in respect to his compensation, whereby the deputy may take his appointment for such meager compensation as to make it necessary for him to oppress the people and extort from them what he is not legally entitled to, it clearly falls far short of accomplishing that purpose. It is difficult to conceive of any circumstances under which a man would engage to perform the services of a deputy sheriff, and take upon himself great financial responsibility and risk, in consideration of the fees and commissions, and at the same time agree, in consideration of the premises, to pay his principal more money than he could reasonably expect to realize out of the fees and commissions. The law, as settled and as applied for centuries, stands upon an assumption of facts which it is difficult to imagine ever existed in any case. With all due respect to the learned and illustrious men who laid its foundations, it must be said that the distinction seems to be more technical and fictitious than real. Taking the contract between the parties in this case as a whole, holding it up by its four corners, it imports nothing more than an agreement between the sheriff and his deputy whereby the latter undertakes to perform all the services of the sheriff in a certain district, except the collection of a certain tax ticket, for all the fees and commissions arising from the work, except $100, which he agrees to pay to the former. Had they said the deputy should have all the fees and commissions, less the sum of $100, the contract would be good, under the authority of all the cases cited. However, as has been said, the law is too well established to be overthrown, however devoid of sound reason it may appear to be. From this it results that no recovery can be had upon the bond or otherwise for the money which the deputy agreed to pay his principal.

But it does not follow that the plaintiff is precluded from recovering the taxes, fines, and other moneys which went into the hands of the deputy by virtue of his office, as was held in Kentucky and North Carolina, unless that part of the contract which is forbidden by the law is such that it cannot be severed from the other. It is argued here that the illegal contract between White and Cook, which the statute says disabled both of them from holding the office, disabled Cook from doing any official act as deputy. If so, then by the same means White was also disabled from doing any official act. But it is an admitted fact that both of them continued to perform the functions of sheriff and deputy sheriff, respectively, in their county. The state, county, and district revenues, executions on judgments and decrees, fines and other dues, public and private, went into their hands. Is it possible that because the contract between them, in reference to the appointment of Cook, was such as is prohibited by the law and resulted in the forfeiture of their offices, the state, county, districts, and private individuals must lose the large sums of money which went into their hands? Whether legal or illegal, they held the offices. If not officers de jure, they were officers de facto. Code, chap. 7, § 15. These funds that went into their hands were put there by the law, and not solely by their illegal contract. If it be possible to ascertain what those funds amount to, why should they not be separated from the illegal consideration of the appointment, and a recovery thereon allowed? What difficulty stands in the way of such severance? How much of the state money, county money, district money, what fines, what collections on executions, are in the hands of Cook are easily ascertainable, and they bear no relation whatever to the illegal $100 which Cook agreed to pay, except that by reason of the agreement Cook was enabled to obtain the position by virtue of which these funds came into his hands. It is claimed for that reason alone the bond of indemnity is vitiated, and Cook must be allowed to escape with all the money which went into his hands except what he has seen fit to pay over. The same law which permits the appointment of a deputy sheriff and allows the sheriff to contract with him for his compensation requires the sheriff to give a bond for the faithful performance of his duties. To allow a deputy sheriff to squander or appropriate to his own use the public funds for which the sheriff is responsible, and thereby inflict great loss upon the sureties of the sheriff himself and possibly upon the public, simply because the contract between the sheriff and his deputy in respect to his appointment, which is clearly severable from the public duty, faithfulness in respect to which is secured by the deputy's bond, is illegal, certainly was never intended by the legislature, nor is there any evidence that the law pronounces such disastrous results except the three or four cases which have been mentioned.

The principle of severance, where part of the contract is illegal and can be separated from the balance, is perhaps as "rock-ribbed and ancient" as any other principle of the law. In Pigot's Case, 11 Coke, 26b, it is said: "If some of the covenants in an indenture, or of the conditions indorsed upon a bond, are against law, and some good and lawful, . . . the covenants or conditions which are against law are void ab initio, and the others stand good." It is there said that this was unanimously agreed in 14 Hen. VIII. 25, 26, etc. Gaskell v. King, 11 East, 165, was decided almost 100 years ago, and it is there held that "a distinct covenant in a lease, whereby the tenant bound himself to pay the property tax and all other taxes imposed on the premises, or on the landlord in respect thereof, though void and illegal by Stat. 46 Geo. III. chap. 65, § 115, will not avoid a separate covenant in the lease for payment of rent clear of all parliamentary taxes, etc., generally; for such general words will be understood of such taxes as the tenant might lawfully engage to defray." M'Allen v. Churchill, 11 J. B. Moore, 483, was an action of assumpsit on a contract whereby the plaintiff agreed to purchase the defendant's interest in a lease and pay for the fixtures on certain terms, and it appeared on the face of the agreement that it contained a clause whereby the defendant agreed that he would not, directly or indirectly, take, occupy, or carry on the business of a publican or victualer within five years from the time of making the agreement. This clause was admittedly illegal and against public policy, being in restraint of trade; but Best, L. C. J., dismissed the objection by saying: "But are we to say that every agreement is wholly bad because it may happen to contain an illegal clause?" Filson v. Himes, 5 Pa. 452, 47 Am. Dec. 422, was an action of assumpsit to recover the balance for the sale of a store and its contents. But it appeared from the plaintiff's testimony that he sold the store for a certain amount, and in consideration of the defendant's promise to procure the removal of a postoffice to the plaintiff's place of business, and that he should be appointed postmaster. There was judgment for the defendant in the lower court. The question principally discussed in the appellate court was whether the procurement of the postoffice should be severed from the rest of the consideration, the court holding that if that were possible the plaintiff should be permitted to recover. In determining whether the illegal part of the contract should be separated from the balance of it, Gibson, Ch. J., said: "The value of the goods could be ascertained from the bills, but the value of the lease could not be reduced to certainty by any process, and, even if it could, no one could say how much the want of the postoffice, to say nothing of the direct income of it, might take from the defendant's business. Had a price been put on the illegal part of the consideration, it might have been deducted, and the contract apportioned, as it was in Frazier v. Thompson, 2 Watts & S. 235, in which the consideration was goods purchased at several times, including spurious bills; and in Yundt v. Roberts, 5 Serg. & R. 139, in which it was goods sold and a prohibited tavern bill." In Rand v. Mather, 11 Cush. 1, 59 Am. Dec. 131, it is held that, "if part of agreement is contrary to statute, this does not avoid or annul other parts of the agreement which are separable from the bad part, and not founded upon it, unless the statute expressly or by necessary implication declares the whole bad." Page v. Monks, 5 Gray, 495, holds that "a contract is not necessarily void, or wholly inoperative, because it consists in part of promises and engagements for the breach or disregarding of which the statute neither affords nor allows any remedy by an action at law. In such cases, whether any of those promises or engagements can be enforced must depend upon the manner and extent of their connection and combination with the rest. If the contract is in its nature entire, and its parts are incapable of separation or division, then, though some of its stipulations are not if others of them are affected by the statute, no action can be brought or maintained upon it. But it is otherwise if the parts are severable." While there are many cases which hold that where a contract grows immediately out of, and is connected with, a prior illegal contract, the illegality of such contract will enter into the new contract and render it illegal, and that if the connection between the original illegal contract and the new contract can be traced it cannot form the basis of a recovery. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 992. But it must be remembered that the funds which went into the hands of Cook, as deputy sheriff, although their reception by him followed the illegal contract as one of its consequences or results, were public funds. He was a de facto public officer, and it was by virtue of the law, as well as in consequence of the illegal contract, that these funds came into his hands. Moreover, while technically and directly they are due to White, they are still, in some sense, public funds, and to allow the illegal contract, in reference to his appointment, to vitiate the security for these funds, would, under some circumstances, as has been shown, result in the loss of public funds. So far as these funds are concerned, the contract between White and Cook may be regarded as a contract between private individuals, but it is nevertheless a contract relating to public funds, and in so far as it may affect them it is severable from the balance of the contract, and, to the end that the public interest may be protected, it is necessary that it be held good as to such funds. In all the cases hereinbefore referred to in which the principle of separating the good from the bad in contracts has been discussed, the matters involved and affected were purely private in their nature. Here the subject-matter of the contract of indemnity, which is said to be vitiated by the illegal part of the contract, is a large amount of money which does not belong to either of the contracting parties in point of fact, but consists of public revenues and money of individuals in the custody of the law. This is a most important distinction, and one which imperatively demands, as well as justifies, the separation of the good from the evil in the contract, and permits a recovery of the money. While public policy forbids the sale of an office in whole or in part, it requires the protection and faithful application of the public revenues, and no statute should be so construed as to permit or effect the loss of public funds or the funds of innocent persons in the hands of public officers, whether they be officers de jure or officers de facto. On this point, therefore, the conclusion is that, so far as the contract and bond relate to the private interests and rights of the sheriff and his deputy, they are illegal and void, and the courts cannot enforce them as to either of the parties; but in so far as the bond relates to the moneys, public and private, which went into the hands of Cook, and which it was his duty as an officer to collect, and which were lost by his unfaithfulness or negligence, if there be any such funds, the bond is valid, and recovery thereon may be had against Cook and his sureties. But such recovery will not include any commissions or fees, for they fall within, and belong to, the private interests in the office which are the subject-matter of the illegal contract. As to these matters, the law will leave the parties in the situation in which they have put themselves, refusing aid to either of them. The principles announced in the following cases seem to fully sustain this view: Faikney v. Reynous, 4 Burr. 2089; Farmer v. Russell, 1 Bos. & P. 296; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 17 L. ed. 732; Planters' Bank v. Union Bank, 16 Wall. 483, 21 L. ed. 473; McBlair v. Gibbes, 17 How. 232, 15 L. ed. 132; Bly v. Second Nat. Bank, 79 Pa. 453.

Another objection to the bill is that there is no equity in it, and this objection is undoubtedly well taken. The court properly dismissed the bill, but gave an insufficient reason for so doing. This bill is substantially like the one in the case of Lafever v. Billmyer, 5 W. Va. 33. Lafever was the sheriff of Berkeley county, and Billmyer was his deputy for the years 1859 and 1860, and the bill showed that there had been no settlement between the sheriff and his deputy, and alleged that the accounts between them were complicated and intricate, as this bill does. It also prayed for discovery, as is the case here, and the court held that the accounts were not mutual, and that equity had no jurisdiction unless proper ground for discovery appeared in the allegations of the bill. Judge Moore discussed that case at great length, and came to the conclusion that there was no ground for discovery. The only thing in this bill that seems to suggest the necessity of discovery is the allegation that White, in his lifetime, delivered to Cook sundry orders, amounting, in the aggregate, to the sum of $1,058.25, which White himself had paid, and that the plaintiff does not know the amounts, numbers, or character of the orders, but that Cook does know all about them, and when and under what circumstances they were delivered to him, and that he is the only person that does know. These orders seem to have been given to Cook for the purpose of making the annual settlements between White and the county court and board of education; for the bill alleges that they were used in the settlements, and that it is impossible to ascertain which orders, so filed and used, are those paid and turned over by White to Cook. This is merely colorable, and no real ground for discovery, for the reason that, if these orders are credited to White in his settlement as alleged in the bill, White has received credit for them and has no right to charge them to Cook. It is not pretended that there is any difficulty about ascertaining what taxes, fines, and executions went into the hands of Cook, and mere allegations of such difficulty, without facts to support them, such as that records had been burned or destroyed or lost, would be utterly insufficient. The tax books on file in the sheriff's, county clerk's, and auditor's offices show the taxes for the district of Rock undoubtedly. All these taxes for certain years went into the hands of Cook for collection, except what were retained for collection by White, and there seems to be no dispute about what portion of the taxes White retained for collection. The license taxes, fines, and executions are all matters of record. Therefore, as to these matters, no discovery is necessary. After ascertaining what Cook is chargeable with, which is easy of accomplishment, so far as shown by this bill, it devolves upon Cook to show that he has accounted for according to law, by payment to White in money or orders, either actually delivered to him, or paid by Cook and credited to White in his settlements, or paid to the state, execution creditors, or other persons legally entitled to receive it. He is entitled to credit for all proper disbursements made by him. Such are undoubtedly the views held by Judge Moore in the Lafever v. Billmyer case, for he says: "In all those matters of execution and administration the records would enable the plaintiff to designate with absolute certainty the parties and their claims." In matters of account, as to legal demands, a court of equity rarely, if ever, has concurrent jurisdiction unless discovery is necessary, except where the accounts are mutual. Lafever v. Billmyer, 5 W. Va. 33; Yates v. Stuart, 39 W. Va. 124, 19 S. E. 423; Thompson v. Whittaker Iron Co. 41 W. Va. 580, 23 S. E. 795. If accounts between sheriffs and their deputies can be drawn into a court of equity upon such allegations as are contained in this bill, other matters, of a similar nature, would follow, and but a short time would be required to utterly break down and obliterate the line of demarcation between law and equity jurisdiction where matters of account are involved.

Another objection to the bill is that no order has been made by the county court or board of education requiring Cook to pay over the balances due, respectively, to the county court and the board of education. This position is untenable. While these funds in the hands of Cook are public in their nature, and primarily belong to the county and district funds, and possibly other funds, Cook is but the agent or representative of White, and the funds must reach their ultimate destination and application and settlement through White, the principal, or his personal representative, he being dead. Any order that may be made in respect to them would be directed to White, and not to Cook. Prior to the making of such order, White's personal representative has the right and power to compel Cook to pay over these funds, to the end that they may be in hand and ready when the order is made. State v. Hays, 30 W. Va. 107, 3 S. E. 177; St. George's Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Parsons, 22 W. Va. 314, 580; Spencer Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Cain, 28 W. Va. 758,—have no application here, for they were all suits against the sheriff himself, and not actions by the sheriff against his deputy. An action by White's administrator against Cook and his sureties upon the bond is not a proceeding by the state, county court, or board of education, but is a proceeding by the sheriff against his agent for money which, according to the allegations of the bill, is due and payable.

It appearing that there is no equity in the bill, and that the plaintiff has brought his suit in the wrong court, the decree of the court below, sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill, is affirmed.

STATE of West Virginia
v.

W. M. GILLILAN, Plff. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. 'Courts of record have a discretionary jurisdiction, in case of conviction for a gross common-law misdemeanor, punishment for which has not been prescribed by statute, to require of the defendant sureties for good behavior. To this extent only, the principles announced in State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 258, are overruled.
2. Such jurisdiction does not exist when the conviction is for a statutory misdemeanor, or a common-law misdemeanor for which punishment is prescribed by statute.
3. The simple selling of intoxicating liquors is a statutory offense.

(March 29, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Greenbrier County to review a judgment requiring defendant to give bond for good behavior after conviction of having unlawfully sold intoxicating liquors. Reversed.

A decision was originally reached and an opinion handed down in this case on March 30, 1901, but a rehearing was granted, and the opinion (printed herewith) handed down supersedes the former one, and makes its publication immaterial.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gilmer & Gilmer for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Romeo H. Freer, Attorney General, and Alexander Dulin, for defendant in error:

*Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

NOTE.—As to the adoption of the common law in the United States, see McKennon v. Winn (Okla.) 22 L. R. A. 501, and note. 57 L. R. A.

The criminal courts under the common law possess such power as was exercised in this case.

4 Bl. Com. p. 352; 4 Burn, Justice of the Peace, p. 62; Dunn v. Queen, 12 Q. B. 1031; Estes v. State, 2 Humph. 496; State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 266.

All common law of the country extends as well to crime as to civil wrong.

1 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 35-40.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the November term, 1899, of the circuit court of Greenbrier county, W. M. Gillilan, upon the trial of an indictment charging him with having unlawfully sold, offered, and exposed for sale, at retail, spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer, and drinks of a like nature, without a state license therefor, was convicted; and the court, in addition to imposing a fine of $15 and costs, further ordered "that said Gillilan be required to give bond, with good security, in the penalty of $500, conditioned to be of good behavior towards all the citizens of this state, and not to sell intoxicating drinks contrary to law for the period of twelve months," and the defendant was committed to the custody of the sheriff until the bond should be given. The court having overruled his motion to set aside so much of the judgment as required this bond, he excepted, and has brought the case here on a writ of error and supersedeas.

The indictment charges a statutory offense. The simple selling of intoxicating drinks is not a common-law crime or offense. Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 984. An ale house, if not disorderly, is, under the common law, lawful; no license being required to keep it. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 505, citing King v. Ioyes, 2 Show. 468. This indictment is under § 1, chap. 32, of the Code; and the punishment for the offense is prescribed by § 3 of said chapter, and is a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, and, at the discretion of the court, imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding three months. As the selling of intoxicating liquors was not an offense at common law, there is no common-law punishment for it. The only punishment, therefore, must be that prescribed by the statute. But if there had been common-law punishment for the selling of liquors, it would be repealed by the statutory provision in reference thereto. "We can always separate the offense from the punishment. So that, for example, a statute which provides a new punishment for an old offense repeals by implication only so much of the prior law as concerns the punishment; leaving it permissible to indict an offender either under the old law, whether statutory or common, and inflict on him, upon conviction, the punishment ordained by the new, or under the new, statute, at the election of the prosecuting power." Bishop, Statutory Crimes, § 166. In addition to this, we have a statute which prohibits the infliction of any other than statutory punishment, when it exists. "A common-law offense, for which punishment is prescribed by statute, shall be punished only in the mode so prescribed." Section 3 of chapter 152 of the Code. Hence, if the selling charged in the indictment were a common-law offense, it could be punished only under § 3 of chapter 32 of the Code. However, this is not conclusive of the question, unless it appear that the requisition of sureties is punishment. There was a discretionary jurisdiction at common law in the court trying a person charged with misdemeanor to bind the accused, after conviction, and as a part of the judgment, to good behavior for a time, and that jurisdiction was not statutory. It was a jurisdiction inherent in every court of record having criminal jurisdiction. In addition to this, there were statutes under which persons not convicted of any offense might be required to enter into recognizances to keep the peace and be of good behavior. They were the same in principle and in substance as the provisions found in chapters 148 and 153 of the Code. "If a person have been convicted of a misdemeanor, it is usually part of the judgment that he shall find security for his good behavior for some time." 9 Bacon, Abr. p. 309. "This requisition of sureties has been several times mentioned before as part of the penalty inflicted upon such as have been guilty of certain gross misdemeanors; but there, also, it must be understood rather as a caution against the repetition of the offense, than any immediate pain or punishment." Bl. Com. bk. 4, chap. 18, p. 251. "Binding to the good behavior was a discretionary judgment at the common law, given by a court of record, for an offense at the suit of the King, after a common-law conviction by a verdict of twelve men." 4 Burn, Justice of the Peace, p. 268. "I shall observe in general that for crimes of an infamous nature, such as petit larceny, perjury, or forgery, at common law, gross cheats, conspiracy not requiring a villainous judgment, keeping a bawdy house, bribing witnesses to stifle their evidence, and offenses of the like nature against the first principles of natural justice and common honesty, it seems to be in great measure left to the prudence of the court to inflict such corporal punishment, and also such fine, and lien to the good behavior for a certain time, etc., as shall seem most proper and adequate to the offense, from the consideration of the baseness, enormity, and dangerous tendency of it; the malice, deliberation, and wilfulness, or the inconsideration, suddenness, and surprise with which it was committed; the age, quality, and degree of the offender; and all other circumstances which may any way aggravate or extenuate the guilt." 2 Hawk. P. C. p. 633. It is said by Bl. Com. bk. 4, p. 252, that this jurisdiction falls under the title of preventive justice, and he there discriminates between preventive justice and punishing justice. But this certainly does not mean that a judgment requiring such recognizance is not punishment. All punishment belongs, in some sense, to the same title. "And, indeed, if we consider all human punishments in a large and extended view, we shall find them all rather calculated to prevent future crimes, than to expiate the past, since, as was observed in a former chapter, all punishments inflicted by temporal powers may be classed under three heads: Such as tend to the amendment of the offender himself, or to deprive him of any power to do future mischief, or to deter others by his example; all of which conduce to one and the same end,—of preventing future crimes, whether that be effected by amendment, disability, or example." Ibid. He then proceeds to a discussion of the statutory provisions by which surety for the peace or good behavior is taken when no offense has been committed, and says in those cases such requisition is not meant as any degree of punishment. From this, as well as from his saying the requisition of sureties upon conviction for the misdemeanor is a part of the penalty inflicted, it is to be inferred that in such case the order or judgment requiring the convicted person to enter into bond for good behavior is punishment. The quotations from Hawkins, Bacon, and Burn all indicate that it was regarded by the authors of those works as punishment. It would be difficult to class it as anything other than punishment. When the bond is required and not given, the consequence is imprisonment. It is required under pain of imprisonment. How could it be anything else than punishment? Here the judgment was that the defendant enter into a recognizance for his good behavior for one year, and in default of his doing so he was committed to the custody of the sheriff. How long he was to remain in custody was in the discretion of the court, and it might have been for the whole year. The statute only permits an imprisonment of three months. Hence the punishment attempted to be inflicted was more severe than the statute itself prescribes.

The existence, nature, and extent of this jurisdiction are discussed at great length by Judge Green in State v. Gould, 26 W. Va. 258, and the conclusion of the court, as announced by him, is, that the court, in rendering judgment against a defendant in any case upon the conviction of him of any misdemeanor, has no right to add to its judgment, as a part thereof, an order requiring the defendant to give a bond, with approved security, to keep the peace or be of good behavior, and in default thereof to be imprisoned till such bond is given. In that opinion, however, it is admitted that the jurisdiction existed at common law in respect to conviction of common-law misdemeanors. But it is pointed out that the taking of such recognizance had never been the practice in this state or in Virginia, and it is argued that, as the evidence adduced in the trial of an indictment for misdemeanor is not such as is required in a proceeding for the purpose of requiring sureties for the peace or good behavior, there is no evidence upon which the court can base a judgment requiring such surety. From a careful examination of the authorities cited and others, it seems that, notwithstanding the want of evidence of threats or bad character on the part of the accused, the English courts did exercise such jurisdiction and require such recognizances. While the Virginia and West Virginia Reports do not disclose any case in which the jurisdiction is recognized, that fact does not preclude its existence. And as it has been shown that it did exist at common law, and the common law obtains in this state, so far as it has not been repealed and is not repugnant to the laws of this state, it cannot be blotted out by mere argument. But it cannot be exercised as to purely statutory offenses, nor in cases of common-law offenses for which punishment is prescribed by statute. Hence it can only exist as to common-law offenses, for which common-law punishment only can be inflicted. As to these cases the jurisdiction does exist, and to that extent the principles announced in Gould's Case must be overruled. For the reasons herein given, the view taken by the court in Estes v. State, 2 Humph. 496, cannot be adopted.

The conclusion, therefore, is that there is error in the judgment, and it must be reversed.

L. J. PETERS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
Johnson JACKSON et al.

(50 W. Va. 644.)

- *1. A verdict in an action of trespass on the case reading, "We, the jury, find for the defendants" (the plea being not guilty), is good.
2. Though, in an action sounding in damages, there is an order at rules for an entry of damages, yet a plea of the general issue, or other issuable plea, filed in term, annuls that order; and the jury is properly sworn to try the issue, and not to inquire of damages.
3. The general rule is that damages for which a party is liable in tort are such, and only such, as are the reasonable and probable consequence of his acts.
4. Only the parties to a contract can sue for damage from its breach; but where, in executing it, things of imminently dangerous character are used, from which injury may probably happen to others, the law places him who executes the contract under duty to so perform it as not to injure strangers to it, and such strangers may sue for damage coming to them from its negligent performance.

*Headnotes by BRANNON, J.

NOTE.—As to liability of druggist to third person for injuries caused by negligence in sale of drug, see cases in note to Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 139; also, in this series, Wise v. Morgan (Tenn.) 44 L. R. A. 548, and Smith v. Middleton (Ky.) 56 L. R. A. 484.

As to liability of manufacturer or seller of dangerous article to person thereby injured, 57 L. R. A.

5. Apothecaries, druggists, and all persons engaged in manufacturing, compounding, or selling drugs, poisons, or medicines, are required to be extraordinarily skillful, and to use the highest degree of care known to practical men to prevent injury from the use of such articles and compounds.
6. Where a merchant sells a poisonous drug to one person, for a medicine which is harmless, by mistake, and it is taken for medicine, without negligence, by a third person, the seller is liable to such third person for damage resulting to him therefrom, notwithstanding there is no privity of contract between the merchant and such third person.

(March 1, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ritchie County to review a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' mistake in filling an order for drugs. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.
Mr. Sherman Robinson, for plaintiff in error:

This verdict is not sufficient. It is not responsive to the issue in this case.

Tyler's Stephen, Pl. p. 117.

An individual holding himself out to the public as a dealer in a certain line of goods or drugs assumes all the risk incident to such business; and if, by reason of his negligence or carelessness, injury results to another without fault on the part of the injured party, he who makes the sale is liable, and the party injured can recover.

Where an individual or a firm is engaged in the sale of any article or drug there is an implied warranty, with every sale of such article or drug, that it is of the kind and character asked for by the buyer and sold by the seller.

Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. 96 Mich. 245, 21 L. R. A. 139, 55 N. W. 812; Hoover v. Peters, 18 Mich. 51; Rosicel v. Vaughan, Cro. Jac. 16; Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. E. 154; Sinclair v. Hathaway, 57 Mich. 60, 58 Am. Rep. 327, 23 N. W. 459; Copas v. Anglo-American Provision Co. 73 Mich. 541, 41 N. W. 690; Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576, 41 Am. Rep. 728, 11 N. W. 392; Walton v. Booth, 34 La. Ann. 913; Barnowsky v. Helson, 89 Mich. 523, 15 L. R. A. 33, 50 N. W. 989; Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387, 50 N. W. 872; Morse v. Union Stock Yards Co. 21 Or. 289, 14 L. R. A. 157, 28 Pac. 2; Benjamin, Sales, 686.

Messrs. B. F. Ayres and Homer Adams, for defendants in error:

The verdict is in the usual form.

Hogg, Pl. & Forms, 2d ed. p. 226; Lewis

where there is no privity of contract between them, see Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. (Minn.) 15 L. R. A. 818, and note; Helzer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. (Mo.) 15 L. R. A. 821; State use of Hartlove v. M. Fox & Son (Md.) 24 L. R. A. 679; Lewis v. Terry (Cal.) 31 L. R. A. 220; Ives v. Welden (Iowa) 54 L. R. A. 854; and McCaffrey v. Mossberg & G. Mfg. Co. (R. I.) 55 L. R. A. 822.

v. Childers, 13 W. Va. 1; 2 Barton, Law Pr. 697; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 404.

Mr. P. W. Morris also for defendants in error.

Brannon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass on the case, brought in the circuit court of Ritchie county by L. J. Peters against the firm of Johnson Jackson & Co. The declaration alleges that the defendants sold to the plaintiff, through his agent, by mistake, saltpeter, for Epsom salts, and that the plaintiff, having taken the saltpeter, believing it to be Epsom salts, became sick, and suffered great impairment of health. The jury in the case found for the defendants.

One error relied upon is that the verdict reads, "We, the jury, find for the defendants," whereas it ought to read, "We, the jury, find the defendants not guilty." The argument is that, as the plea was, "Not guilty," the verdict should have responded to the issue. Plainly, there can be nothing in this point. The verdict does meet the issue. How could the jury find for the defendants, if they did not find them not guilty? It, in effect, says they found the issue for the defendants, thus responding to it. Many verdicts are in this form, and are always regarded as good,—just as good as the other form. Verdicts are to be favorably construed, and, if the point in issue is substantially decided by the verdict, it is good; and when the meaning of the jury can be satisfactorily collected from the verdict, upon matters involved in the issue, it ought not to be set aside for irregularity or want of form in its wording. Lewis v. Childers, 13 W. Va. 1; Hogg, Pl. & Forms, 2d ed. p. 227.

Another objection to the verdict is that the jury was sworn wrong, as the record simply says it was sworn "the truth to speak upon the issue joined," whereas, as there had been an inquiry of damages at rules, the jury ought to have been sworn to well and truly find the amount, if any, which the plaintiff was entitled to recover. How can such a point as this be colorably made, when there was in court a plea of not guilty, which annulled the rule order for inquiry of damages?

The declaration avers that the plaintiff sent by an unnamed agent to the store of the defendants for Epsom salts, and that they wrongfully and negligently sold to the plaintiff, by his agent, saltpeter, which, being taken, sickened and inflicted lasting injury upon him. The contest in the trial court seems to have been upon the question whether the sale was in fact made to the plaintiff or to McGary. The plaintiff had been sick or indisposed at McGary's house for some three weeks, and wanted salts for medicine, and, as he claims, procured the son of McGary (a boy) to go for him to the store of the defendants for the salts; whereas the defendants claimed that the plaintiff neither sent the boy, nor bought or paid for them, but that Mrs. McGary, being informed that the salts which they usually kept in the house were exhausted, sent the boy herself to the store, and bought them herself. The circuit court seems to have acted, in its instructions, upon the erroneous theory that if the sale was in fact to McGary, and not to Peters, Peters could not recover. This theory rests upon the reasoning that there was no sale to Peters, no contract, no relation between the plaintiff and defendants, and therefore there was no duty upon the defendants to the plaintiff, the breach of which could give rise to an action. But the law will not sustain this line of reasoning. Can a druggist, from incompetency or negligence, sell to one person the wrong, poisonous article as medicine, which, being taken by such person lying sick in the purchaser's house, inflicts injury upon such third person, without any liability upon that druggist to answer to that third person? The law says he is liable to that third person. We know that drugs and medicines are kept in homes, and may, and probably will, be used by other persons than the one buying. Such is the probable, usual case. Is it possible that there is no reparation to this third person for irreparable harm to him from such incompetency or negligence? Considering the frightful dangers lurking in drugs, poisons, and medicines, this would be a disastrous rule. Is there no duty upon a seller of medicine, as to persons who may use them, beyond the immediate purchaser, simply because there is no contract between the seller and the third person? Where the action is only for the breach of a contract, only the parties to it, or their privies, can maintain it. Strangers cannot sue for its negligent breach. National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 116; 2 Jaggard, Torts, § 260. But where, in a given transaction, the law puts upon a person the duty to so act that he does not harm others, independent of a contract, he is liable to third parties, even though executing a contract made with a particular person, if he harms others by negligence. The question is, Has the defendant broken a duty apart from the contract? If he has simply broken his contract, none can sue him but a party to it; but, if he violated a duty to others, he is liable to them. The single question in a given case is, Was there a duty on the part of the defendant to the person suing him? Whence does duty come? The general rule is that damages only come from what is the natural, reasonable, and probable consequence of an act. If harm may come reasonably and probably to anyone from another's action, there is duty on him so to act as to avoid such injury. Now, where a druggist sells medicine to one, is it not probable that it may be taken by others than his immediate vendee; and if the wrong article, and dangerous, is it not probable that others will receive injury? If, under the facts, a common-law duty to third persons exists, a party may be sued by such persons for negligence, incapacity, or misfeasance in performing his contract with another. This is particularly so in respect to a dangerous thing sold. 2 Jaggard, Torts, § 261; 1 Shearn. & Redf. Neg. § 116; note to Trenlon Mut. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Perrine (N. J. L.) 57 Am. Dec. 401. "Apothecaries, druggists, and all persons engaged in manufacturing, compounding, or vending drugs, poisons, or medicines, are required to be extraordinarily skilful, and to use the highest degree of care known to practical men to prevent injury from the use of such articles and compounds." Hovew v. Rose, 55 Am. St. Rep. 251, and note, 13 Ind. App. 674, 42 N. E. 303; Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. 96 Mich. 245, 21 L. R. A. 139, 55 N. W. 812; Walton v. Booth, 34 La. Ann. 913 (where one sold sulphate of zinc for Epsom salts, and was held to a high standard of liability). Such persons are liable for the slightest negligence, and for ignorance and incapacity. They handle things dangerous to human life and health, and must be most alert to avoid mistakes, and they are bound to have adequate skill. 2 Shearn. & Redf. Neg. §§ 689, 690. In Kentucky the rule is that a druggist must know what he sells, and if he departs from the prescription, or ignorantly sells wrong and poisonous or hurtful drugs, he is an absolute guarantor, and cannot plead that he has been extraordinarily careful in general. Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Mon. 219, 56 Am. Dec. 563. This excludes the question of negligence or ignorance, as irrelevant, and bases the position on the tremendous and imminent danger to the public from the sale of poisons and medicines. It can hardly be said to lay down too rigid a rule, looking to the safety of life; but the authorities generally do admit the question of negligence as material, but they demand the utmost caution and skill above stated. Certainly this duty is demanded as between the parties to the sale, and, upon principles above stated, this duty exists between the seller and third persons also. A few cases will show this. The leading case is Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455, holding that a manufacturing druggist selling a poisonous drug labeled as harmless is liable to a person who relying on the erroneous label, and without carelessness, takes the drug as medicine, on the ground of breach of public duty, whether the person injured is the immediate customer or not. The druggist, Winchester, sold wholesale to Aspinall, and he to Foord, and Foord sold by retail to Mrs. Thomas. Winchester was held liable to her. The court said: "The death or great bodily harm of some person was the natural and almost inevitable consequence of the sale of belladonna by means of the false label." The court distinguished between articles of imminently dangerous character and those not of such character, in saying: "The defendant's negligence put human life in imminent danger. Can it be said that there was no duty on the part of the defendant to avoid the creation of that danger by the exercise of greater caution; or that the exercise of that caution was a duty only to his immediate vendee, whose life was not endangered? The defendant's duty arose out of the nature of his business, and the danger to others incident to its mismanagement. Nothing but mischief like that which actually happened could have been expected from sending the poison falsely labeled into the market; and the defendant is justly responsible for the probable consequences of the act. The duty of exercising caution in this respect did not arise out of the defendant's contract of sale to Aspinall. The wrong done by the defendant was in putting the poison, mislabeled, into the hands of Aspinall . . . and afterwards used as the extract of dandelion by some person then unknown. The owner of a horse and cart who leaves them unattended in the street is liable for any damage which may result from his negligence. Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190. The owner of a loaded gun who puts it into the hands of a child, by whose indiscretion it is discharged, is liable for the damage occasioned by the discharge. Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198. The defendant's contract of sale to Aspinall does not excuse the wrong done to the plaintiffs. It was a part of the means by which the wrong was effected. The plaintiffs' injury and their remedy would have stood on the same principle if the defendant had given the belladonna to Dr. Foord without price, or if he had put it in his shop without his knowledge, under circumstances which would probably have led to its sale on the faith of the label." That case is recognized as sound law, almost without dissent. It is approved in National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 204, 25 L. ed. 621, where it is held that "such an act of negligence being imminently dangerous to the lives of others, the wrongdoer is liable to the injured party, whether there be any contract between them or not. Where the wrongful act is not immediately dangerous to the lives of others, the negligent party, unless he be a public agent, . . . is, in general, liable only to the party with whom he contracted, and on the ground that negligence is a breach of the contract." This distinction between things imminently dangerous and things not so is drawn in Thomas v. Winchester, cited, and Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 543. In Norton v. Sevall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298, it was held that if one sell negligently a poison for a harmless medicine to A, who buys it to administer it to B, and gives a dose to B, which kills him, an action lies for B's estate. Gray, J., said: "This finding includes a violation of duty on the part of the defendant and an injury resulting therefrom to the intestate, for which the defendant was responsible, without regard to the question of privity of contract between them. The case is within that of Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455, which has often been recognized and approved by this court." The same in Davis v. Guarnieri, 45 Ohio St. 470, 15 N. E. 350. Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 5 L. R. A. 612, 10 S. E. 118, approves Thomas

v. Winchester, and holds that one who sells dangerous medicines to a druggist, to be resold, is liable to third parties, as if he himself had sold to them. In Langridge v. Levy, 2 Mees. & W. 519, 4 Mees. & W. 337, A bought a defective gun, which was warranted, and gave it to B, who was hurt by its explosion. It was held B could sue the seller. The principle was applied to persons contracting to build scaffolds to repair buildings, by holding them liable for defects to workmen using these scaffolds, not employed by such contractor, though there was no privity of contract between them. Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 315. So where a mechanic made a bad repair to a gas meter, which injured a servant in the house. Parry v. Smith, L. R. 4 C. P. Div. 325, cited in note in 42 Am. Rep. 315. The text-books lay it down as law. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 817; Cooley, Torts, 82; Wharton, Neg. § 91; 2 Jaggard, Torts, § 261. There are cases sometimes cited in this connection where there is no mistake, but the seller knew the article to be defective or dangerous, and put it on the market, and he was held liable to third parties injured. Where one sold to another a bad ladder, knowing it to be bad, and a third party using it in work was injured, he was allowed to recover against the seller. Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 331, 15 L. R. A. 818, 51 N. W. 1103. The knowledge of the seller seemed to govern in that case. There will be found some cases where a seller to one party knows the article is to be used by another. In such case we can base the right on the theory that the third party is the real purchaser,—a party to the contract made for his benefit,—so that he can sue. Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co. 89 Ky. 340, 7 L. R. A. 77, 12 S. W. 554, 13 S. W. 249. Such is the case of George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Exch. 1, where a husband bought a hair wash for his wife, represented to be good for the purpose, and she was allowed to recover. The case is often cited in this connection; but it seems to me to stand on the ground that the seller sold it knowing that it was to be used by the wife, she being a party to the contract, as it was made for her use. The opinions in the case turn it on this knowledge. The seller's representation was also for her use. The seller also knew the character of the article. A number of cases hold the seller liable to strangers to the contract when he knows of defects, but does not disclose them. They are not apposite in this case. One making bad coal oil, knowing its defect, was held liable in Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 403. Same principle in Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64. Our case in hand is the case of one selling by mistake the wrong article, by negligence or incompetency, as is claimed,—selling a hurtful drug for medicine, when a harmless medicine was called for,—and injury resulting to a stranger to the sale. Many authorities hold that one who sells provisions for consumption that are bad 57 L. R. A.

and hurtful is liable. Craft v. Parker, W. & Co. 96 Mich. 245, 21 L. R. A. 139, 55 N. W. 812. Much more in the case of hurtful drugs! Would you limit the liability for selling foul food to only him who made the contract of purchase, and leave others at the table—wife, child, boarder, guest—without remedy against the first author of the harm? If one contracts to prepare a supper for a ball or festival, and furnishes sickening victuals, ought not anyone injured to go to him for reparation? Under the facts, is he not under duty to everyone present, in addition to his duty to his contracting party? It was held that he was in Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. E. 154. Why not, also, one selling drugs? We must distinguish cases, and not carry the principle of allowing strangers to the contract to sue for damages in every case. We cannot say that everyone injured from defects in a railroad car or carriage or machinery can sue the maker or seller. This would be saying that any stranger could sue for injury for breach of a contract, resulting in injury to him. Who would sell under such a rule? The explosion of a defective cylinder of a threshing machine did not give action to a person operating it, against the manufacturer, for want of privity of contract. If the manufacturer knew of the defect, he would be liable; but, if he did not, it would be otherwise, though guilty of negligence in manufacturing and testing. Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L. R. A. 821, 19 S. W. 630. A contracted with the government to furnish a coach for carriage of mail, and B contracted with the government to furnish horses to draw it, and B hired C to drive, and C was injured from a breakdown of the coach. C was denied recovery from A for defect in the coach. Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109. What is the test or criterion always applicable? Hardly any. Each case involving this nice principle must be largely its own arbiter. We may say that, as the authorities cited show, a third party, a stranger to the sale, can only sue when the thing used or the negligent act is very dangerous to human life, and injury may reasonably be expected to happen to others therefrom.

Contrary to these principles, the court instructed the jury that, if the sale of the salt-peter was in fact made to McGary, the plaintiff could not recover; and therefore instructions of the defendant numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, and 7 are bad. I think defendants' instructions 4 and 12 are bad, because they say that only reasonable or ordinary care was demanded. The greatest care is demanded of one who sells dangerous drugs. So, also, is high skill,—certainly ample skill. If one sells them who is not skilled, but incapable of the business from ignorance or want of experience, he must not sell them. He does so at his peril. He assumes the obligations and risks incident to his chosen business. Salt-peter and Epsom salts not being drugs prohibited from sale, except as allowed in § 9, chap. 150, Code 1890, it is not unlawful for a merchant to sell them, and instructions 2 and 3 were not objectionable. There is no objection to defendants' instructions 8 and 9, as to contributory negligence. My understanding is that instruction 7 of plaintiff was given, as it ought to have been. Plaintiff's instruction No. 9, saying that no one but a licensed druggist can sell saltpeter, and that its sale was prima facie negligence, was properly rejected. Whether so selling would be ground for treating him as engaged in the business of a druggist without license is one question; but it would raise no presumption, on that ground alone, for the inference of negligence. Of course, it will be understood that whether the defendant in fact did sell the pulverized saltpeter, and whether it was of a highly dangerous character, as also the question of negligence and unskilfulness, will be matters for the jury, under the evidence and law, on another trial.

For these reasons, we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, grant a new trial, and remand the cause to the Circuit Court.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

Mat JONES, Appt.,
v.
COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky.

(.....Ky.....)

There may be sufficient force to constitute robbery, in grabbing a purse from one's hand so quickly that he has no opportunity to resist.

(February 12, 1902.)

NOTE.—What force is sufficient to constitute robbery.

- I. Introductory, 432.
- II. Actual force.
 - a. Snatching.
 1. When there is resistance, 432.
 2. When there is no resistance, 433.
 3. When property is attached to the person so as to afford resistance, 437.
 - b. When the taking is without knowledge of the person robbed, 438.
- III. Constructive force.
 - a. In general, 439.
 - b. Demand with overwhelming numbers or demonstrations of force, 439.
 - c. Threatening to charge with crimen innotinatum, 440.
 - d. Other threats of prosecution, 441.
- IV. Force used to obtain property under color of right or claim of ownership, 443.
- V. Force employed as a means of escape, or to prevent a recaption of property taken without force, 443.
- VI. Decisions under special statutes, 445.
- VII. Miscellaneous cases, 446.
- VIII. Résumé, 447.

I. Introductory.

The force, by means of which robbery is committed, may be divided into two classes, actual and constructive; under the former is included all violence inflicted directly on the person robbed; under the latter, all demonstrations of force, menaces, and means by which the person robbed is put in fear sufficient to suspend the free exercise of the will, or prevent resistance to the taking.

Cases where the question of the sufficiency of the force is not decided, except by the fact that convictions of robbery were had, are not included in this note.

57 L. R. A.

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Harrison County convicting him of robbery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. T. Lafferty for appellant.

Mr. Morrison Breckinridge, for appellee:

To snatch a pocketbook forcibly from another's hand is robbery.

Williams v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1850,

II. Actual force.

a. Snatching.

1. When there is resistance.

Snatching property from the person of another, if met with resistance, however slight, and that resistance is overcome, is robbery. Davies's Case, 2 East, P. C. 709; Com. v. Davis, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1717, 66 S. W. 27.

Where a satchel containing money was snatched from the owner's hand with such force as to throw her down the court said: "While it may be true that mere taking unaware, or a sudden snatching a thing from the hand of another, is not robbery, if the snatching be accompanied with violence or such demonstrations or threats as to create a reasonable apprehension of bodily injury, or create resistance, however slight, the offense is committed." Evans v. State, 80 Ala. 4.

And where the evidence showed that the accused forcibly wrenched a pocketbook out of the owner's hand, the court held that the crime of robbery was committed, and said: "While it requires an exercise of the muscle to pick up an article, or to take from a pocket, this is not force sufficient to constitute robbery; it would be theft; but where there is resistance to the taking, and this resistance is overcome by force, it is a forcible taking, or a taking accompanied by violence, and constitutes robbery. It is not necessary that a blow should be struck, or the party be injured, to be a violent taking; but if the robber overcomes resistance by force he is guilty." Williams v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1850, 50 S. W. 240.

State v. Moore, 106 Mo. 480, 17 S. W. 658, was a case where a man grabbed at a woman's pocketbook lying on top of some packages in her arm, and at the same time the woman caught hold of it, whereupon the man struck her a blow in the breast and wrested the pocketbook from her. The court affirmed a judgment of conviction of robbery, stating that the pocket-

50 S. W. 240; Davis v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 54 S. W. 959.

Guffy, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant was indicted, tried, and convicted in the Harrison circuit court under an indictment for robbery. The specifications in the indictment are as follows: "Did feloniously take a pocketbook and seven dollars in money, the personal property of Esaw Eckler, from his presence, and against his will, by violence, and putting him in fear of some immediate injury to his person." A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment sentencing the appellant to the penitentiary for two and one-half years. The verdict reads as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, and fix his punishment at two and one-half years in the penitentiary. Dow Holten, Foreman."

book was taken by force, against the will, and with intent to steal, citing State v. Broderick, 59 Mo. 318. (See II. a, 3, infra.)

In Usom v. State, 97 Ga. 194, 22 S. E. 899, a man tried to snatch a satchel which was hanging on the "front gate" of a wagon in which a woman was riding. She also took hold of it and tried to keep him from getting it, but he wrenched it from her, breaking the handle, and ran away. The court affirmed a judgment of conviction of robbery.

Where, a person's watch chain being snatched, he started backward and his hat fell, the court stated: "It is a close question whether such taking constituted robbery or grand larceny. That question was dependent upon the absence or presence of the use of force in the taking, and . . . was for the jury;" and reversed a judgment of conviction of robbery. People v. Church, 116 Cal. 300, 48 Pac. 125. The quick backward motion, at the time of the snatching, was certainly some evidence of resistance.

One person went up to another, who was intoxicated, and "kept fooling around" his overcoat, and the latter said that he had nothing belonging to the other, and took out his money intending to put it into his purse, when the thief grabbed it and ran. The judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed on the ground that some resistance was shown. Burke v. State, 74 Ga. 372.

One man demanded of another an article of value in the hands of the latter, and, upon a refusal to deliver, declared: "I will take it anyway," accompanying the words with a forcible snatching of and running off with the article. It being done against the actual consent of the person in possession of it, the court held that the offense of robbery was committed, if there was a felonious intent. McDow v. State, 110 Ga. 293, 34 S. E. 1019.

And where a man snatched hold of a valise carried by a small boy, wrenching it from his hands by force, and, putting his hand in his pocket, threatened the boy, a judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed. The court states: "But whenever the taking is resisted, and the resistance is overcome by violence, the offense is committed. . . . Or, if resistance is prevented by threats of actual violence, creating a reasonable apprehension of it, the offense is complete." Jackson v. State, 69 Ala. 249.

Bond v. State, 20 Tex. App. 421, and Leonard v. State, 20 Tex. App. 442, are companion 57 L. R. A.

The grounds relied upon for a new trial are because the court misinstructed the jury, or refused to properly instruct the jury, and because the verdict was against the law and evidence. At the conclusion of the testimony for the commonwealth the appellant asked for peremptory instruction, which was refused by the court. No evidence was offered by the defendant. The court, in its first instruction, substantially instructed the jury that "if, from all the evidence, they believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, before the finding of the indictment, and prior to March 1, 1901, did feloniously take a pocketbook and $7 in money, or any part thereof, the personal property of Esaw Eckler, from his presence, and against the will of said Eckler, by violence or putting said Eckler in fear of some immediate injury to his person, they should find the defendant guilty, cases, being prosecutions against confederates for the same crime. Judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed in each instance. The facts were: A farmer, having been in town all day and drinking some, met some men in an upper room who wanted him to play poker. He declined, but they passed him some checks, saying that he had ordered them and should pay for them. He did so, and then started down stairs, whereupon one of the men remarked "You have no money is the reason you won't play." At that, the farmer exhibited a pocketbook containing $52, and immediately the lights were put out and the men seized him and wrenched his pocketbook from him. He held on to it as long as he could, but the strength of the others prevailed over him.

In People v. Foley, 27 N. Y. Week. Dig. 217, it is said: "When the property is taken by force the degree of force is immaterial. This is the rule now whatever it may have been heretofore."

In Thompson v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 26 S. W. 1081, two men came up to another, and, one of them trampling on his feet, he put his hand in his pocket and caught hold of his money to hold it, whereupon the thief grabbed hold of him, and, when the other took his hand out of his pocket still holding onto his money, and tried to push him away, the thief caught his hand and twisted the money away, handing it to the confederate, and the two ran off. The court held that there was evidence of violence, and might be of fear, and that the question of robbery was properly submitted to the jury.

It is said in Gallagher v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 306, 30 S. W. 557, that, "In this latter case [larceny from the person] the property must be taken from the person without his knowledge, or so suddenly as not to allow time to make resistance, and this must be done by privately stealing the property. . . . If force or violence is used, or the assaulted party is put in fear of life or bodily injury and the property is thus taken, it is robbery." A conviction of robbery was affirmed.

State v. West, 106 La. 274, 30 So. 848, holds that an attempt to rob, under § 811, La. Rev. Stat., by "cutting or tearing the clothes, or thrusting the hand into the pockets, or otherwise," includes an attempt to rob by violently snatching away the property from the hands of another.

2. When there is no resistance.

The force that is used merely to snatch or 28 and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for not less than two years nor more than ten years, in their discretion, governed by the proof." The second instruction was in regard to petit larceny. The third instruction was to the effect that, if the jury believed the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, but entertained a reasonable doubt as to the degree of his guilt, they should find him guilty of petit larceny only. The fifth instruction was to the effect that if, upon the whole case, the jury entertained a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant having been proved they should acquit him. The contention of appellant is that there was no evidence tending to prove that the appellant committed the offense of robbery. The evidence as to the taking of the pocketbook in question was given by Esaw Eckler, and is in words as follows: "I am acquainted with Mat Jones, the defendant. I have known him for several years. Some time in December, 1900, shortly before Christmas,—I think it was on court day,—Mat Jones came up to me at the corner of Main and Pike streets, in Cynthiana, Harrison county, Kentucky, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I think it was about that time, for the 4 o'clock train was just blowing. I asked Jones if he had seen my son James Eckler. He said that he had, and that he knew right where he was, and he would take me to him if I would go. I told him I would, as I wanted to get him, and go home. We then walked north on Main street a short distance below where the new church was being built, and to the head of the alley. Jones then asked me if I would change a quarter for him, and I told him I thought I could, and take property from the person of another without any resistance on his part is not sufficient to constitute robbery. Spencer v. State, 106 Ga. 692, 32 S. E. 849; Anderson's Case, 1 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 163; Bonsall v. State, 35 Ind. 400; Routt v. State, 61 Ark. 594, 34 S. W. 262; Wilson v. State, 3 Tex. App. 63; Jackson v. State, 114 Ga. 826, 40 S. E. 1001; Doyle v. State, 77 Ga. 513; Reg. v. Walls, 2 Car. & K. 214; King v. Macauley, 1 Leach, C. L. 287; King v. Baker, 1 Leach, C. L. 290; Steward's Case, 2 East, P. C. 702; Robin's Case, 1 Leach, C. L. 290, note; Danby's Case, 2 East, P. C. 702; Rex v. Grey, 2 East, P. C. 708; Horner's Case, 2 East, P. C. 703; Chick's Case, 2 East, P. C. 703.

Brennon v. State, 25 Ind. 403, and Hall v. People, 171 Ill. 540, 49 N. E. 495, are not cases of snatching, but are cases of taking without resistance from intoxicated persons. The court reversed a judgment of conviction of robbery in each instance, with a dissenting opinion in Brennon v. State. These cases are set out more at length under II. b. infra.

In Territory v. McKern, 2 Idaho, 759, 26 Pac. 123, a charge as to robbery, "that if a man stealthily flich from the pocket of another the force necessary to remove the property is all the force that the statute requires," was held error.

In Rex v. Gnosll, 1 Car. & P. 304, it is stated that to constitute robbery the force used must be either before or at the time of the taking, and must be of such a nature as to show that it was intended to overpower the party robbed and prevent his resisting, and not merely to get possession of the property stolen. In this case a man laid hold of another's watch, and with considerable force jerked it from his pocket; a scuffle then ensued, and the thief was secured. The court held that the facts constituted larceny only.

This case is commented on and followed in State v. John, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 163, 69 Am. Dec. 777, where the facts are very similar, only the thief escaped after the struggle. The court states that "violence may be used for four purposes: (1) To prevent resistance; (2) to overpower the party; (3) to obtain possession of the property; (4) to effect an escape. Either of the first two makes the offense robbery. The last, I presume, will be conceded does not. The third is a middle ground. In general, it does not make the offense robbery, but sometimes, according to some of the cases it does." It is stated also that later English cases held that the law was now settled that unless there was some struggle to keep the property, and it was forced from the hand of the owner, it was not robbery. The judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed.

Where a thief slipped his hand into a lady's outside pocket and furtively took therefrom a purse of money, but before he got the purse entirely out she felt the hand and tried to seize it, but the thief had succeeded, and the purse was gone, the court held that the facts did not constitute robbery. Fanning v. State, 66 Ga. 167.

It was held a taking in an artful, secret manner, and not robbery, where a man accosted a country boy as an acquaintance, at the same time seizing him around the waist and by fumbling around him at length succeeded in picking his pocket of an empty pocketbook. Davis's Case, 2 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 32.

It is stated in State v. Miller, 83 Iowa, 291, 49 N. W. 90, that the "force and violence . . . must be designed, not merely to take the property stolen if there be no resistance, but to prevent or overcome resistance to the taking." This was a taking of a jug from the floor of a hack in the presence of the owner with felonious intent. Judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed.

A man slyly put his hand into another's pocket and took his purse without knowledge of the latter until just as it was drawn from the pocket, and it was held merely larceny from the person, in Norris's Case, 6 New York City Hall Rec. 86.

Where one man, with his arm around another's neck, put his hand into the latter's pocket and drew therefrom money and a knife, but returned the knife without his companion's trying to prevent him, and yielding neither to force nor fear, the court held that robbery was not proved. And a charge that the same degree of violence that would constitute an assault and battery in any case would be sufficient violence to constitute a robbery was held error. Judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed. McCloskey v. People, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 299.

People v. McGinty, 24 Hun, 62, is a case where, in a saloon, accused knocked a pocketbook out of a man's hands onto the bar, and another picked it up; and accused then grabbed the owner and put him out of doors. The court states that there is error in holding that any physical act to the person which resulted in the taking was violence within the meaning of the statute, and that violence "generally implies the overcoming, or attempting to overtook my pocketbook from my pocket, which was a leather pouch, or 'ridicule,' as I called it, closing by means of a draw string. I held the book in my left hand, and put my right hand into it and drew out a dime, and just as I was putting my hand in the book a second time Jones reached over and took the book from my hand, and ran up the alley. I called to him to stop with my pocketbook, but he didn't stop. I had about $7 in the book and my tax receipt. I had paid my taxes that day." On cross-examination Eckler testified as follows: "I was holding my pocketbook in my left hand, and had my right hand in it, and Jones grabbed it out of my hand, and ran up the alley." There was other testimony tending to show that the appellant really had the pocketbook in his possession, but no witness testified about the transaction of taking except Eckler. Counsel for appellant cites many authorities showing that there must be some force used in the taking of the property, or that the injured party must have been put in some fear. It may be conceded that the authorities sustain this contention of appellant, but it is the contention of appellee that the facts and circumstances proved in this case sustain the verdict, and that the jury were authorized under the evidence to find the defendant guilty of the charge of robbery, and cites several decisions of this court in support of his contention. In Williams v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1850, 50 S. W. 240, the court had under consideration the law governing the offense of robbery. The injured party in this case testified as follows: "I was standing with my back to this colored man, and he came behind me and wrenched the come, an actual resistance, or the preventing such resistance through fear." The judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed. Another justice concurs in the result, but states that the decision should not be deemed conclusive as to whether seizure of complainant and forcibly putting him out might not, on a new trial, furnish the element of force or fear necessary in robbery.

Also, where one of two confederates snatched money from another's hand and ran, while his companion held the victim so that he could not pursue the thief, it was held not to be robbery, and that the violence will not make a precedent taking, effected clandestinely or without either violence or putting in fear, amount to a robbery. Shinn v. State, 64 Ind. 13, 31 Am. Rep. 110.

To the same effect, and with very similar facts, is Johnson v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 140, 32 S. W. 537, where one of two confederates snatched a purse from a man, who grabbed him, but the other confederate drew a pistol, and the man, through fear, let go. A judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed. The opinion states that the authorities seem to indicate that where there is no fear excited prior to the act of robbery there must be force or violence used to the person robbed; and that the authorities, except State v. Carr, 43 Iowa, 418, appear to hold that the mere snatching of property from another's hand is not such force as will constitute the offense of robbery.

If the violence to the person in a case of snatching was accidental and unintentional, it is not robbery, as in Queen v. Edwards, 1 Cox, C. C. 32, where a woman was returning from market in a wagon with a basket tied onto the seat by her side, and the prisoner and another, both armed with broom knives, endeavored to lift off the basket by stealth, but, seeing the string, cut it through with the knife just at the same moment when the woman perceived their intention and stretched out her arm to lay hold of the basket and thus received a wound on the wrist from the knife, which caused her to withdraw her hand and leave the thieves in possession of the basket. This was held to be simple larceny, for in robbery force must not only be employed by the party charged, but it is necessary to show that the force was used with the intent to accomplish the robbery, and that in this case the wound seems to have been inflicted undesignedly and by mere accident.

A case under the same principle is Com. v. Ordway, 12 Cush. 270, where in a sudden snatching the thief touched the hand of the owner. The court held that there was no intentional touching of the person amounting to an assault, and that a conviction upon an indictment for robbery ought not to be rendered.

Upon an indictment for robbery in State v. Harris, 119 N. C. 811, 26 S. E. 148, where the evidence showed only that a woman snatched a purse of money out of the hands of a man as he stood under a city lamp, counting it, the prosecution abandoned the charge of robbery and requested a verdict of larceny, which was given and affirmed on appeal. Otherwise than as stated, the question of sufficiency of the force to constitute robbery did not come in question.

It was contended that it was an attempt to commit robbery where a man attempted to snatch from the hands of a girl a bag containing money, but the court affirmed a conviction of an attempt to commit grand larceny. State v. Sommers, 12 Mo. App. 374.

But State v. Carr, 43 Iowa, 418, is a case which is often cited as contrary to the prevailing doctrine. The evidence on the part of the state tended to show that defendants, or one of them, had hold of prosecutor at the time the money was snatched. Prosecutor himself testified that both of them took hold of him and would not let go. Evidence contradictory of this was from a witness, who testified that he saw no violence used, and that prosecutor handed one of defendants his pocketbook. The court instructed the jury as follows: "You will observe that robbery may be committed by force or violence, or by putting in fear. Now, if in this case you believe from the evidence that the Bohemian [prosecutor] took the money from his pocket and voluntarily handed it to one of the defendants, there was no robbery however he may have been deceived. If you believe from the evidence that the Bohemian, without being put in fear, took his money from his pocket and held it in his hand, and the defendants, without using any other force, snatched it from his hand, this is no robbery. If, however, the defendants seized the Bohemian and held him, and while they held him he took out his money and they snatched it, and one made off with it while the other held him, this is robbery. It is not necessary to constitute robbery that any injury should be inflicted on the person; and it is not necessary that the means used to put a party in fear should be such as to put in fear a man used to the ways of the world. If the defendant took hold of the Bohemian, and this was calpocketbook out of this [left] hand; and, of course, he being stronger than I, I had to give way to him, and let him have it." On cross-examination she said: "No, because you don't no more than just take it from your hand. That man took it by main force from my hand." The court, in discussing the testimony, said: "The crime of robbery in this state is the same as at common law. The statute does not attempt to define the crime; only provides the penalty. We are clearly of the opinion the testimony of the commonwealth, if true, showed that the crime of robbery had been committed." In Davis v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 54 S. W. 959, this court again had under consideration the offense in question. In discussing the case it said: "It will be observed that the snatching of the money from Parton's hand was excluded from the jury by the second instruction, as evidence of actual violence. We think this fact was evidence to go to the jury, and they should have been instructed to convict if the money was taken against Parton's will by actual force." In Blanton v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 515, 58 S. W. 422, the court, in discussing the offense of robbery, said: "The taking must be by violence, or by putting the owner in fear; but both of these circumstances need not concur. Williams v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1850, 50 S. W. 240. Under the rule announced in this case and the authorities there cited the indictment is sufficient. It was held in the same case that to snatch a pocketbook forcibly from another's hand was robbery, and in Snyder v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1538, 55 S. W. 679, it was held that, if the victim is pushed or shoved about by the pickpocket or his associate for the purpose of diverting his attention, and the crime is then accomplished, it is robbery, even if the victim is at the time unaware of his loss." This court, in the recent case of Com. v. Davis, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1717, 66 S. W. 27, had under consideration the crime of robbery. After stating the case, the court said: "The prosecuting witness testified that she was walking along Fourth street about 1 o'clock in the dayculated to put such a man as he in fear, by means of which robbery was committed, this is sufficient." This court on appeal, said: "We think the instruction right in principle,—clearly so; and that there was evidence to which it was applicable." So far, the decision is in harmony with the uniform doctrine. But the court below refused to give the following instruction: "No sudden taking of anything unawares from the person or out of the hand, as by snatching the same, is sufficient to constitute robbery, unless some injury be done to the person of the party from whom the property is taken, or unless there appears to have been a previous struggle for the property;" and such refusal this court commends, saying: "It may well be that a person might be put in fear, and money suddenly snatched from his hand or person." And then the court makes the following additional statements, which make this case outside the prevailing doctrine: "Nor are we prepared to admit that a sudden snatching of a purse from the hand is not the use of such force as to constitute robbery. On the contrary, with due deference to the authority cited by counsel, we hold that a sudden snatching from the hand or person of another constitutes the force and violence sufficient, under our statute, to constitute robbery." Whether this is a carefully considered statement expressing the court's mind on this subject, or whether, as might be inferred from his indorsement of the above instruction, the court has not said exactly, or all that he meant to say, is doubtful. In any event, it is an exceptional case.

Davis v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 54 S. W. 959, is another case which verges on the doctrine stated in State v. Carr, 43 Iowa, 418. The evidence showed a demand for a loan, made in a "positive, rough tone of voice," and that when the money was produced defendant snatched it out of the other's hands. The court instructed the jury that there was not sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of robbery by forcibly taking the money from Parton, the prosecuting witness; and unless they believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant obtained the money from Parton by the use of threats, menaces, or demonstrations of violence, such as to induce in the mind of a man of ordinary courage the fear of immediate injury to his person, they could not convict. So the question on this appeal was solely whether there was any evidence to go to the jury of threats, menaces, or demonstrations of violence sufficient to put in fear. The snatching of the money from Parton's hand was excluded from the jury as evidence of actual violence by the above instruction. This court held that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain a conviction by putting in fear, and reversed judgment of conviction; and held, also, that the fact of the snatching was evidence of actual violence to go to the jury, and they should have been instructed to convict if the money was taken against Parton's will by actual force. JONES v. Com. cites Davis v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 54 S. W. 959, and seems to follow State v. Carr, 43 Iowa, 418, where the opinion states: "In fact, the snatching or grabbing and jerking of the pocketbook out of the witness's hand was probably done so quickly that he had no chance to actively resist; and, if this be true, we think such taking or snatching must be construed as taking by violence or force." This decision goes farther than any of the authorities cited to sustain it, except Davis v. Com. In the other cases cited in the opinion there was something besides a mere snatching; for instance, in Williams v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1850, 50 S. W. 240, there was resistance which was overcome; in Blanton v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 515, 58 S. W. 422, there was actual force sufficient to tear the button holes and buttons off, under cover of which force the property was taken. (See this case under II. b. infra.) Snyder v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1538, 55 S. W. 679, is a similar case to that last-mentioned: actual force was used for the purpose of diverting the owner's attention, and the property then taken. (See II. b. infra.) In Com. v. Davis, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1717, 66 S. W. 27, a boy grabbed a purse a woman was carrying, and, although she "resisted with all her force," he succeeded in wrenching it from her. (See II. a. 1, supra.) This decision in JONES v. Com. seems to be one to be placed by the side of State v. Carr, and possibly Davis v. Com. as exceptions to the general rule.

Cases of snatching are prosecuted under a charge of larceny or theft from the person where the facts show that the taking was so sudden as to allow no time for resistance. For time; that she saw two boys in a yard of an empty house; that, after she passed them one of them slipped up behind her, grabbed a purse, which she was carrying in her hand, that she resisted with all her force, but that he slipped one of his hands over her wrist, and wrenched her pocketbook out of her hand with his other hand; and that it contained $10; and that the boy ran off with it, she pursuing." The court then proceeded to refer to the facts which in law constitute robbery, which are stated substantially as contended for by appellant. The court then said: "It is not so much the extent and degree of violence which makes the crime as the success thereof. Any force which is sufficient to take the property against the owner's will is all that is necessary to make up the crime of robbery." Under the Civil Code of Practice this court cannot reverse a judgment of conviction if there be any evidence tending to establish the guilt of the accused. In this case it must be conceded that the snatching of the pocketbook from the hand of Eckler required some force or violence, and the jury might perhaps infer from all the statements of the witness that he was put in some fear, else he would have made greater effort to recapture his money; hence it seems to us that, taking all the testimony introduced in this case, there was evidence tending to show that the appellant took the pocketbook and money by violence, and probably put the witness in some fear. It is true that the witness did not state that he was put in fear, nor that he tried to hold onto the pocketbook; he does not appear to have been asked specifically on these points; in fact, the snatching or grabbing and jerking of pocketbook out of the witness's hand was probably done so quickly that he had no chance to actively resist; and, if this be true, we think such taking or snatching must be construed as taking by violence or force. It results from the foregoing that the court did not err in respect to the giving or refusing of instructions.

For the reasons indicated, the judgment is affirmed.

a few examples, see Clemmons v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 279, 45 S. W. 911, where it is said that the crime of larceny from the person is complete if the property is taken so suddenly as not to allow time for resistance; that it need not be taken without the knowledge of the owner, if the taking be so sudden as to allow no time for resistance. Other cases stating a similar doctrine are Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122; Green v. State, 28 Tex. App. 493, 13 S. W. 784; Mathis v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 65 S. W. 523. These cases are not entirely relevant, but are inserted here to show that when there is a quick snatching with no resistance the courts generally look upon it as larceny, and not robbery.

3. When property is attached to the person so as to afford resistance.

The force used to take or snatch property attached to a person in such a manner as to afford resistance is sufficient to constitute robbery. King v. Moore, 1 Leach, C. L. 335; Rex v. Lapler, 2 East, P. C. 557.

A recognized authority on this point is Rex v. Mason, Russ. & R. C. C. 419, where a thief snatched at a man's watch, but was prevented from immediately taking it by a steel chain which went around the owner's neck and was fastened to the watch, but, by pulling and two or three jerks, he succeeded in breaking the chain, and made off with the watch. The court held that in this case there was a sufficient degree of previous violence to constitute the crime of robbery, and that, although there was no actual injury to the person, yet, as force was necessary to separate the thing stolen from the person, it appeared to the court unlike the cases of snatching which have been held not to be robbery.

In Rex v. Lapler, 2 East, P. C. 557, above cited, a thief snatched at a woman's earring and tore it from her ear, which was held robbery.

In a case where a man grabbed with both hands a hand bag hanging on the arm of a woman, and jerked it off with such force as to break the handle, as she believed; and she testified that her arm was bruised and lame for several days after,—the court held that the taking was clearly by force, and that the act was robbery. Klein v. People, 113 Ill. 596.

And where a watch in a vest pocket, attached to a silk-ribbon watch guard, about ½ inch wide, passing around the owner's neck, was snatched by a thief, who had one arm through the arm of the owner, and who, at the time of snatching, exclaimed "D— you! I will have your watch," and fled with it, breaking the ribbon,—it was held robbery on the ground that the taking was effected by force. The court states that the facts shown make this a clear case of a taking by open violence, as distinguished from a secret taking, or a mere taking by surprise from the hands of another. State v. McCune, 5 R. I. 60, 70 Am. Dec. 176. See also extensive note on What constitutes robbery, attached to this case.

Also, where a man seized another's watch chain, and in doing so broke it loose from the watch and the button hole, and, upon the owner's endeavoring to recover it, the thief struck him and ran, it was held to be robbery on the ground that the taking was effected by force. In the opinion the court said: "The violence used was sufficient to overcome the resistance of the chain and break it from the watch and straighten out the hook which fastened it on the button hole. The violence was open, and the property was retained by force, for the prosecutor was struck by defendant at the very time when he made an attempt to snatch the chain out of defendant's hands." State v. Broderick, 59 Mo. 818.

In Reg. v. Simpson, 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 530, a man took a watch out of another's pocket and forcibly drew the chain out of the button hole, but his hand was seized by the latter's wife, and it then appeared that, although the chain and watch key had been drawn out of the button hole, the point of the key had caught upon another button and was thereby suspended. The court held that the facts constituted robbery, and not an attempt to commit robbery. The point was whether there was a sufficient asportation, and the court held that there was, as the watch and chain were in the possession of the thief, and severed from the person of the owner, for the interval of time after the key was drawn out of the button hole and before it caught on the button. This case is pertinent to the question of sufficiency of force only by reason of the facts and the decision of the court that they sustain a conviction of robbery.

But in United States v. Simms, 4 Cranch, C. C. 618, Fed. Cas. No. 16,290, where one snatched a watch from another's side pocket, it being fastened around his neck by a ribbon which was broken at the first snatch, it was held that the force was not sufficient to constitute robbery, and the court intimated that the law was correctly stated in Rex v. Gnosil, 1 Car. & P. 304. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

And another case which differs from the prevailing doctrine is People v. Hall, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 642, where a marshal and E. came up to a man, asked him if he had E.'s watch, and requested to see what ones he had: upon the man's showing him two, one of which was fastened around his neck by a cord, E. snatched them both, breaking the cord. The court held that it was error for the judge to refuse to charge that mere snatching of the watch would not constitute robbery; and then criticised Lapler's and Mason's Cases, and stated that when there is nothing to inspire fear, there must be superior force, and the property must be relinquished upon a struggle and upon compulsion; and that there must be such force employed, and such degree of force, as shall overcome the free agency or power of resistance of the person despoiled. A conviction of robbery was reversed.

b. When the taking is without knowledge of the person robbed.

If the taking is accomplished by actual force, although the person is unaware at the time that he is being robbed, it is nevertheless robbery.

As in Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. 379, where one man jostled against another in the street, and, when the other begged his pardon, he turned, looked, and swore at him, and followed him until the latter ran up against a house, then seized him by the cravat and leaned upon him, and while so doing took the man's watch. At the time this was occurring the owner thought the thief meant to beat him, but had no idea he was being robbed, and did not know it until after the thief had gone out of sight. The court stated that it was clear that the prisoner's violence was the cause of the loss of the watch; that the fear of being beaten diverted the owner's attention from his property, and the fear was produced by force, so that in truth the property was taken by force; and that, if it was the prisoner's intent to obtain the watch under cover of this violence without the knowledge of the owner, it was to be construed a taking by violence. There was a conviction of robbery.

In Mahoney v. People, 3 Hun. 202, Affirmed in 59 N. Y. 659, the facts show that as a man was entering a horse car an accomplice of the accused crowded him against the door, while accused threw his arms around the man's neck and removed a wallet from his pocket. The court cites Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. 379, with approval, but states that this case is unlike that one because the hand which grasped the pocket book was felt and the theft discovered, but states that if it was robbery in that case it was equally so in this, and also remarks that "the force which a thief uses to and upon the person of his victim, to consummate a robbery, if successful, is as much the successful force which robs when exerted to bewilder and confuse, as when used and exerted directly upon the main object. In either, the taking would be the result of force, though in one case indirectly applied and in the other directly." 57 L. R. A.

And the court states that Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. 379, determines the principle as follows: That when force is employed to divert the owner's attention, while he is unconsciously deprived of his property, the taker is guilty of robbery, though, by means of the force which distracts the attention, the larceny is artfully and unknown to the owner completed. The court approved such rule, saying it was sound sense and good law. The judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed.

In State v. Gorham, 55 N. H. 152, one man said he wanted to whisper to another, and, putting his left arm around the other's neck and his mouth to the other's right ear, and pretending to whisper, with his right hand he took a roll of money from the other's vest pocket and handed it to a confederate who was standing near. The court affirmed a conviction of robbery, and stated that any forcible taking of property from the possession of another by means which overcomes resistance, however slight, is the taking by the infliction of actual injury, and so is by assault.

And while to pick one's pocket without the use of some force or violence or putting in fear is said in Snyder v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1538, 55 S. W. 679, which was a case of picking a pocket while jostling the owner, not to be robbery, yet it is held that if the victim is being pushed or shoved about by the pickpocket or his associates, and the crime is then accomplished, it is robbery, even if the victim is at the time unaware of his loss.

It is decided in Anonymous, 1 Lewin, C. C. 300, that running against a person to divert his attention, and then picking his pocket, is force sufficient to constitute robbery, if the force is used with felonious intent.

Where three men, acting in concert, picked a man out, pushed him through the crowd down the pavement for some distance, one being at his back, and the others at his right and left, and one of them took a pocketbook from the victim's pocket, passed it to one of the confederates, and they all disappeared in the crowd, the court held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction of robbery. The court gives the following illustration: "Suppose three men observe a person approaching upon the highway, and agree to take his money from him if he has any; suppose, as they meet, the three, without saying a word, push the man backward till he is crowded against a fence or building, and during the time while his attention is thus distracted draw from his pocket his money. How shall we say the money was taken? Is it taken by force, violence, or how? Take away the violence used in the case, and what other means are left by which the money could have been seized?" Seymour v. State, 15 Ind. 288.

In Blanton v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 515, 58 S. W. 422, the facts appear that one man grabbed hold of another, pulled open his overcoat, tore the buttonholes and buttons off, and also pulled his vest open; that they scuffled while the one seized was trying to get loose, and soon after getting loose he found that his pocketbook had been stolen from his pants pocket. The court cites Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. 379, and sustains conviction of robbery.

In People v. Glynn, 54 Hun. 332, 7 N. Y. Supp. 555, Affirmed in 123 N. Y. 631, 25 N. E. 953, the captain of a schooner lying in a river, heard a noise on deck at night and succeeded in reaching the deck although one of the hatches had been fastened down. Accused, who was on deck, pointed a pistol at the captain and ordered him to go below, and at that the captain struck accused, knocking him overboard; and then two other men and accused jumped into a boat and rowed away. After they were gone the captain found that certain articles had been taken from the boat. The court affirmed a conviction of robbery, and stated in the opinion that, although the thief may have procured possession of the property of another without force or violence, the removal of the property from the presence of that other with force and violence constitutes robbery. That it is not necessary that the owner or person in whose presence the property is removed shall know of its removal at the time. The fact that it is removed from such presence by force and violence constitutes the crime.

Brennon v. State, 25 Ind. 403, is a case of taking without the knowledge of the person where the force was held not sufficient to constitute robbery. The facts show that H. was lying on the ground at night in an unconscious state, the result of intoxication, and the thief stood astride his body and took from his pockets the property, putting it in his own, until he was discovered by a policeman, when he fled. Except for the fact that the pockets were turned inside out there was no proof of violence, and the court held that the facts were insufficient to constitute robbery, and reversed the judgment of conviction. The opinion states that it would be contrary to all authority to hold that any force is sufficient, but that there must be enough to constitute violence. Rex v. Gnosil, 1 Car. & P. 304 (see II. a, 2, supra) is quoted from, but is qualified by Rex v. Lapier, 2 East, P. C. 557, and King v. Moore, 1 Leach, C. L. 335 (II. a, 3, supra). And the court refers to State v. McCune, 5 R. I. 60, 70 Am. Dec. 176, and Rex v. Mason, Russ. & K. C. C. 419 (II. a, 3, supra), and states that they go to the very verge of the law; that, "to go further than this would be to recognize no distinction whatever between robbery and larceny from the person." To this decision, reversing conviction, there is a dissenting opinion, in which the judge states: "It would not take as much force to rob a man 'insensible, drunk with liquor, and in a deep sleep,' as it would a sober man in the possession of all his faculties; yet, in my opinion, violence enough to rob the former would be no less the crime of robbery than it would be to rob the latter by all the force and violence necessary to accomplish the wicked purpose." (See II. a, 2, supra.)

Hall v. People, 171 Ill. 540, 49 N. E. 495, is another case of a taking from an intoxicated man. From the facts it appears that the thief unbuttoned his vest and took his pocketbook from his inside vest pocket when he was so intoxicated that he did not know what the thief was doing, and made no resistance, and that he was not intimidated or put in fear. The court reversed a conviction of robbery, and stated in the opinion that the principle in regard to the force or violence necessary to constitute robbery is that the power of the owner to retain possession of his goods must be overcome by the robber, either by actual violence physically applied, or by putting him in such fear as to overpower his will, giving as an illustration the felonious taking of property from the person of another with such violence as to occasion a substantial corporal injury, or obtaining it by a violent struggle with a possessor; but that where it appeared that the article was taken without any sensible or material violence to the person, as snatching a hat from the head or a cane or umbrella from the hand of the wearer,—rather by sleight of hand and adroitness than by open violence, and without any struggle on his part,—that it is merely larceny from the person; and further said that "If one should rifle the pockets of a sleeping or an unconscious person, even to the unbuttoning of clothes and turning out of pockets, such offense would not be robbery." Judgment of conviction was reversed. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

III. Constructive force.

a. In general.

In Breckinridge v. Com. 97 Ky. 267, 30 S. W. 634, it is stated: "Again, by repeated adjudications, has this law of robbery been extended so as not only to include fear of personal violence, but fear of the loss of his property; fear that his child in possession of the persons intending the robbery may be killed; fear that he may be accused of an unnatural crime."

It is robbery if one takes another's child and threatens to destroy him unless the other gives him money. Rean's Case, 2 East, P. C. 735.

But, obtaining money from a woman by threatening to accuse her husband of an indecent assault is not robbery. Rex v. Edwards, 5 Car. & P. 518.

Where one is induced by fear to take less for property in his possession than it is worth, it is held robbery, in Rex v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 712. Spencer's Case, 2 East, P. C. 712, decides the same on parallel facts. (See III. b, infra.)

As to the fear necessary, it is charged, in State v. Nicholson, 124 N. C. 820, 32 S. E. 813, that it need not amount to great terror, but that, if the prosecuting witness surrendered his goods on account of threats or gestures which made him apprehensive of danger, it is sufficient so far as the element of fear is concerned.

In a brief memorandum of decision in Paco v. Com. 16 Ky. L. Rep. 476, 29 S. W. 16, the court said that accused's crime consisted in obtaining a watch of one Cooper by putting him in fear, and that the proof introduced for the state left no room for doubting his guilt, and affirmed conviction of robbery. Further facts are not given.

b. Demand with overwhelming numbers or demonstrations of force.

Making a demand with such demonstrations of force or numbers as to render resistance useless is force sufficient to constitute robbery. Hughes's Case, 1 Lewin, C. C. 301.

In Spencer's Case, 2 East, P. C. 712, the prisoner, with a great mob marching in military order, came to a man's house, and one of the mob said they would give 30s a load for corn which the man had in his possession belonging to other people, and if he would not take that they would take it anyway, upon which the man sold it for 30s when it was worth 38s. This was held to be robbery.

In Taplin's Case, 2 East, P. C. 712, a boy knocked violently at the door of a man's house, and said: "God bless your honor! remember the poor mob." The man told him to go along, when the boy said: "Then I will go and fetch my captain;" and he went and brought a mob with Taplin at the head on horseback, and said to the man: "Now I have brought my captain;" and some of the mob said: "God bless the gentleman! he is always generous." The man asked "How much?" and Taplin replied "Half-a-crown, sir." A conviction of robbery was had.

Where prisoner went with a mob to a man's house, and one of the mob very civilly, and as the man then believed with good intention, advised him to give them something to get rid of them, and prevent mischief, and the man gave them money, this was held robbery in Rex v. Winkworth, 4 Car. & P. 444.

In Rex v. Astley, 2 East, P. C. 729, prisoners and a stranger went to G.'s house, and the stranger said: "I am come out of friendship to you, Mr. Grundy, to let you know your house is marked to come down to-morrow morning at 2:00 o'clock. I am the head of the mob; they are 2,000 strong in Birmingham. I must have something to make my men drink. I can bring 200 or 300 in an hour's time or keep them back." G. gave him all he had in his purse, and testified that he was greatly alarmed but not for his person, but that he feared his house would be pulled down. It was contended that there was no evidence of robbery because prosecutor did not deliver his money from any immediate fear of danger to himself or his property, but from an apprehension of future injury to his house by pulling it down. This was held to be robbery, but the reporter stated that no case had gone further.

Rex v. Simons, 2 East, P. C. 781, held it was robbery in the dwelling house where accused came to house of R. with about 70 of his companions and demanded a guinea or they would tear down his mow of corn and level his house. Upon receiving the money they opened a cask of cider and drank part of it and ate R.'s bread and cheese and carried away a piece of meat.

In Rex v. Brown, 2 East, P. C. 781, accused, having a drawn sword in his hand, and in company with another man, entered D.'s house, and said: "Put a shilling in my cap, or I have a party that can destroy your house presently," upon which prosecutor gave him a shilling. This was held robbery.

Where R., one of the officers of a bank agency, was requested to go to the bank agency to meet, as he supposed, a superior officer, but found instead a colonel and many more of a certain general's officers, who, by threats, insolence, and demands induced him to hand over what money there was in the bank, whereupon the officers carried it to the general, and R. was afterwards given a receipt by the general's orders, it was held, on a hearing of an application for extradition, that there was probable cause to believe the accused (general) guilty of robbery. Re Ezeta, 82 Fed. 992.

c. Threatening to charge with crimen innominatum.

Extorting money or property by threatening to charge with an unnatural crime is constructive force sufficient to constitute robbery.

If the money is obtained through fear produced by such a threat, it is held robbery, in People v. McDaniels, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 198, although the threat was not in direct terms, but was in the nature of an insinuation.

This question was thoroughly considered in Rex v. Donolly, 2 East, P. C. 715, 1 Leach, C. L. 193, and a number of opinions were written discussing the sufficiency of the fear produced by such a threat. One judge stated that whether the party were obliged to part with his money from fear of personal danger, or loss of character, was the same thing, it being equally against his will in either case. In this case there was no violence used in connection 57 L. R. A.

with the threat, and one judge distinguished it from Brown's Case, where violence was used, and from Jones's Case, where there was a continual force and violence, a mob and crowd whose anger the victim feared if such an accusation should be publicly made; but the judge stated that without force it might be robbery just to threaten to accuse. And in another opinion it was stated that the laying of hands on the party made no difference; that in Jones's Case, which was very deliberately considered, this circumstance was not relied upon. Another judge cited the Cases of Jones, Brown, and Harrold, and observed that there was some actual violence proved in each of those cases, as taking by the collar or arm; but decided that it did not make any material distinction. All concurred in a decision that a threat to accuse of crimen innominatum was robbery.

After Rex v. Donolly, 2 East, P. C. 715, the reporter states that John Staples was convicted of a similar crime, and executed.

But in Rex v. Cannon, Russ. & R. C. C. 146, several of the judges thought that some degree of force or violence in connection with the threat was essential, and that the mere apprehension of danger to a man's character would not be sufficient to constitute the offense, although to this some of the judges dissented; however, a conviction was sustained because the evidence showed that a coach was called by defendant, and prosecutor was compelled to enter and was driven towards the police station; and this was held a sufficient constraint upon the person.

The doctrine in Hickman's Case, 2 East, P. C. 728, was doubted in Rex v. Cannon, but was afterwards recognized and followed in Rex v. Egerton, Russ. & R. C. C. 375, where it was held that fear of loss of character was sufficient, though the party had no fear of being taken into custody, or of punishment.

In Hickman's Case, 2 East, P. C. 728, it is stated "that, whether the terror arose from real or expected violence to the person, or from a sense of injury to the character, the law made no kind of difference, for to most men the idea of losing their fame and reputation was equally, if not more, terrific than the dread of personal injury;" and "that a threat to accuse a man of having committed the greatest of all crimes was a sufficient force to constitute the crime of robbery by putting in fear."

There was some constraint in Rex v. Jones, 2 East, P. C. 714, above referred to. While prisoner was threatening prosecutor he held him by the arm, but the judges do not refer to such constraint as necessary to constitute the crime, stating only that taking money from a man in such a situation rendered him not a free man, and that such a putting in fear is robbery.

Harrold's Case, 2 East, P. C. 715, is not reported in full, the reporter simply stating that he was convicted for a robbery similar to Jones's Case.

There was a conviction of an assault with intent to rob, in Reg. v. Stringer, 2 Moody, C. C. 281, where a man took another by the collar, accused him of an unnatural crime, and forced him to go part way to the police station, but obtained nothing from him.

In Reg. v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 671, it was decided that where the money was obtained by means of any of the threats specified by statute the indictment must be upon the statute, and not for robbery, but, if the person was put in fear, and parted with his money in consequence of threats not specified by statute, the indictment might charge robbery. The facts showed menaces of bodily injury, violent gestures, statements by the robber that he was armed, and a threat to accuse of a crime in the nature of crimen inominatum, but not sufficiently specific to bring it under the statute. The victim stated that he parted with his money from fear both of personal injury and an attack upon his character. And the court held a conviction of robbery was proper, stating that there was violence enough shown to put the party in fear without any threat, and that, if the money was parted with conjointly with the violence offered and a vague threat of an undefined charge, the crime is made out.

Rex v. Gardner, 1 Car. & P. 479, holds that to threaten to accuse of such crime is equally robbery whether a person is guilty or not.

To the same effect are Reg. v. Richards, 11 Cox, C. C. 43; Reg. v. Cracknell, 10 Cox, C. C. 408.

In Rex v. Jackson, 1 Leach, C. L. 193, note, it is held that the money must be taken immediately upon the threat made, and not after the parties have separated, and time has intervened for the prosecutor to deliberate and procure assistance, and especially after he has consulted a friend, who was present at the time the money was paid, though prosecutor parts with his money from fear of losing his character.

But parting with money upon such a threat will not amount to robbery if it is parted with, not from fear of loss of character, but for the purpose of bringing the extorter to justice. Rex v. Fuller, Russ. & R. C. C. 408; Reane's Case, 2 East, P. C. 734.

Where money is parted with upon such a threat, not so much from a fear of loss of character as loss of a position, it is robbery. Rex v. Elmstead, 2 Russell, Crimes & Misdemeanors, 86.

Thompson v. State, 61 Neb. 210, 85 N. W. 62, is an appeal from conviction of murder. The court held that the jury should have been instructed that a man may defend his domicile to the extent of taking life, against invaders who come with the intent of obtaining money by taxing him with the commission of an infamous offense against nature, and threatening to oppose him to public contempt; that under these circumstances the breaking and entry would be felonious because done with intent to rob, saying: "It appears from the authorities, ancient and modern, that the extortion of money by threatening to smirch a fair reputation is so atrocious a wrong that it is generally regarded as robbery,—especially if the vice or crime imputed is an unnatural one."

In Houston v. Com. 87 Va. 257, 12 S. E. 385, it is said that to constitute robbery "the demonstrations or fear must be of a physical nature, with the single exception that, if one parts with his goods through fear of a threatened charge of sodomy, the taking is robbery."

In regard to the exception thus made, it is said in Britt v. State, 7 Humph. 45: "The reason on which the single admitted exception is made to rest turns upon the overwhelming and withering character of the charge and its damning infamy so well calculated to unman and subdue the will . . . of the falsely accused. It is evident that the courts of England felt that even this exception looked extremely anomalous, and they strove, while permitting it to stand, to place it on ground unapproachable by any other case of fear of prosecution, as, if determined hereafter, it should have no associate in the offense of robbery. Our statutes create no change in this respect." (See III. d, infra.)

In Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293, it is said: 5? L. R. A.

"Again, threats of a prosecution amount to that violence, by construction, which constitutes the offense of robbery only in one instance, and that is when the threat is to prosecute for an unnatural crime; and it will be robbery whether the party is guilty or not. So abominable is the crime, and so destructive is even the accusation of it of all social right and privilege, that the law considers that the accusation is a coercion which men cannot resist. This seems to be the only case in which a threat to prosecute will supply the place of actual force." (See III. d, infra.)

In a note to Davis v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 66 Am. St. Rep. 794, it is said that in England, and perhaps this country in the absence of statute, a threatened charge of sodomy is the only threat of prosecution for a crime from which can be inferred the fear necessary to constitute the crime of robbery.

And in Simmons v. State, 41 Fla. 316, 25 So. 881, it is said: "The terror which would lead the person robbed to apprehend an injury to his character was never deemed sufficient to support an indictment for robbery, except in the particular instance of its being excited by means of insinuations against or threats to destroy the character by accusations of sodomitical practices." (III. d, infra.)

d. Other threats of prosecution.

No threat of prosecution for debt, or for any crime except crimen inominatum, is sufficient to constitute robbery.

Where three men, one of them pretending to be a marshal and authorized to take a woman's furniture, threatened to arrest and take her in custody if she resisted, and so prevailed upon her to deliver up to them property and furniture, the court sustained the contention that the facts alleged did not show a sufficient putting in fear within the meaning of the statute. The court states: "The rule is well settled that property obtained by trick or artifice, or by threats of illegal arrest, or criminal prosecution, or insinuations against character, except they relate to sodomitical practices, is not taken by 'putting in fear' within the common-law definition of robbery; and we think the same rule applies to the offense defined by our statute." Judgment of conviction of robbery was reversed. Simmons v. State, 41 Fla. 316, 25 So. 881.

In Britt v. State, 7 Humph. 45, a man gave up money to another solely on the ground of the other's threats to prosecute him for having passed a $5 note alleged to be counterfeit. The prosecutor testified that he was not alarmed or afraid of violence at any time while with prisoner, nor did he apprehend bodily danger or injury to his person. The court decided that these facts do not constitute robbery; and held, also, that it was error to charge that if the prosecutor gave up his property through fear, by reason of the defendant making falsely a threat to prosecute him for a crime, the punishment of which would be confinement in the penitentiary, defendant would be guilty of robbery, but if the prosecutor actually passed to the defendant a counterfeit note, it would not be robbery, but a mere compounding a felony, and the jury ought to acquit defendant. The opinion states: "It has been settled, upon much consideration, by the judges of England in more than one case, that threatening to prosecute an innocent man for any crime whatever except only the crimen inominatum, and by the fear arising from such threat, to compel the surrender of money or property, does not amount to robbery. (See III. c. supra.)

In Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 240, a man falsely pretending to be town marshal obtained money from an ignorant colored man by threatening to arrest and put him in jail for selling a horse without a license. The colored man swore that he gave up the money because he was "mighty scared," but the court states that in its opinion the evidence would not support an allegation of taking by putting in fear of life or bodily injury; and also that the evidence would have to support a charge of assault in order to sustain the indictment, and, in view of the absence of such evidence, reversed the judgment of conviction.

Where a woman was compelled to pay money by treats of carrying her before a magistrate and to prison for not paying for goods pretended to have been bid for by her, but she did not pay the money through fear of any personal violence, the court held that it was duress, not robbery, and stated that the prosecutrix had a choice of difficulties, and chose to pay her money rather than undergo the trouble of being carried before a magistrate, and that the law did not allow the fear of being sent to prison to be a sufficient ground of terror to constitute a robbery; and that the threat of legal imprisonment ought not so to alarm any mind as to induce the person to part with his property. Rex v. Wood, 2 East, P. C. 732, 2 Leach, C. L. 732, also cited as Rex v. Knewland.

In a trial of an indictment for robbery, which included the charge of larceny, the question was whether the prosecuting witness had voluntarily paid the money obtained from him, to prevent a threatened exposure by the defendant of crime, or whether it was extorted from him by putting him in fear of his life or great bodily injury. A charge that if the jury should find that the prosecuting witness parted with his money to shield himself from a prosecution for a crime, or to avoid a public charge of that character, this would not constitute larceny, was held proper. Haley v. State, 49 Ark. 147, 4 S. W. 746. This case is of value here for the reason that if the above facts would not constitute larceny they would not constitute the greater crime of robbery.

But if the threat to accuse, arrest, or prosecute is supplemented by force, actual or constructive, it is sufficient to constitute robbery.

In McCormick v. State, 26 Tex. App. 678, 9 S. W. 277, the prisoner came up to two men in a city street at night with his hat pulled down and collar turned up, and, stating that he was an officer of the law, demanded that they hold up their hands or he would arrest them for drunkenness. One of the men testified that he was very much alarmed, and through fear threw up his hands, and the thief took his money. The court stated that there was no evidence tending to show that defendant simply told the man that he was an officer, and by that means obtained his money; but that the evidence showed that he was also put in fear. Judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed.

And in Williams v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 55 S. W. 500, where a man impersonated an officer, and, accusing two men of having counterfeited money, demanded that they deliver up their money, and used a six-shooter to enforce such demand, the court affirmed a conviction of robbery, stating that, as the party used fire arms to enforce compliance with his demands, and secured the money by these means, it constituted robbery; citing McCormick v. State, 26 Tex. App. 678, 9 S. W. 277.

In Bussey v. State, 71 Ga. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 57 L. R. A.

256, defendant pretended that he was town marshal, and had on a star designating the office. He seized prosecutor, to whom another was showing a trick at cards, and, upon the exclamation of that other, "There's the marshal," pushed prosecutor against the wall, threatened to take him to jail unless he paid him money, and thus extorted from him $8, which he said "he paid to keep from going to jail, and he did not want to be bothered." The court states: "Whilst the mere arrest of him, with the threat to take him to jail . . . would not suffice, alone, to make a case of robbery, yet, accompanied with this ill-usage and violence of seizure, pushing and holding, it does, according to Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293, make such a case;" and, "whilst the case on the facts may be close, yet there is evidence of force as well as intimidation about the jail." Judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed.

The court held that robbery by intimidation under § 4389 of the Georgia Code was committed in Sweat v. State, 90 Ga. 315, 17 S. E. 273, where two men, without a warrant, arrested another whom they pretended to believe was a fugitive from justice. They handcuffed him, and took possession of his personal property, including a bag of money, and took him some miles across the country to the home of one of the captors. They professed to be keeping the property for the prisoner. By operating on his fears, threatening to carry him to prison, and hinting at mob violence, they induced him to consent that they might have $50 of the money if they would allow him to depart. The prosecutor testified that he was afraid his captors were going to kill him, so he complied with their proposition and was allowed to go.

A well-known and oft-quoted case on this point is Long v. State, 12 Ga. 293. A man was induced by threats of shooting, constraint upon his person, and threats to send him to the penitentiary for a theft he had committed in the past, to give a bill of sale of a negro girl, and almost all of the property which he owned. The court states: "So that threats to take one before a magistrate, or to prosecute for any other offense, or accusations of other crimes, although these may have the effect of extorting money or property from a person, do not make the transaction a robbery. If, however, such threats or accusations are accompanied with force, actual or constructive, and the property or money is given up in consequence of this force, the transaction is robbery. Nor is the guilt of the party accused any defense to an act of robbery. If property is extorted by violence upon a charge of larceny or any other crime, the offense is neither justified nor mitigated by his guilt, nor aggravated by his innocence." The court affirmed judgment of conviction. (See III. c. supra.)

Where a woman was obliged to pay for goods for which she had not bid in an auction room, before she was allowed to leave, a conviction of larceny was had, and the court said, by way of obiter dictum, that the facts would have proved a robbery also. Reg. v. McGrath, 11 Cox, C. C. 347, L. R. 1 C. C. 205, 37 L. J. M. C. N. S. 7, 21 L. T. N. S. 543, 18 Week. Rep. 119.

In Williams v. State, 51 Neb. 711, 71 N. W. 729, a man, pretending to be a police officer, accused another of violating a gambling ordinance, holding him by the shoulder and shaking him a little at the time, and demanded that he hand over all his money or the other would take him to the police station. The victim, greatly frightened, gave him all his money. The court held that the evidence supported a charge of robbery by putting in fear.

Gascolgne's Case, 2 East, P. C. 709, holds that a runner at the police office, taking money out of the hand and pocket of a prisoner whom he had before handcuffed and was conducting to prison,—under pretense of letting her go home,—and paying for coach hire and liquor which he had himself ordered, is guilty of robbery, the jury finding that all this was done with a felonious design to get her money, although the party in custody had before offered him the money if he would let her go home, and repeated the offer after he had taken it in that manner.

In Merriman v. Hundred of Chippenham, 2 East, P. C. 709, Merriman was carrying his cheeses along the highway in a cart, when he was stopped by a man who insisted on seizing them for want of a permit (which was found by the jury to be a mere pretense for the purpose of defrauding the owner, no permit being necessary), and, after some dispute, they agreed to go before a magistrate to determine the matter. While they were gone the thief's confederates carried away the goods. The jury returned a verdict of robbery. The reporter in a note says that this opinion must have been grounded on the consideration that the first seizure of the cart and goods by the aggressor, being by violence and while the owner was present, constituted the offense of robbery.

The court compares robbery and extortion, in People v. Barondess, 61 Hun, 576, 16 N. Y. Supp. 438, as follows: "Robbery is the unlawful taking against the will by means of force or violence, or fear of injury immediate or future, to one's person or property, . . . while extortion is the obtaining with consent by similar means."

IV. Force used to obtain property under color of right or claim of ownership.

When the property is taken by force, actual or constructive, under color of right or claim of ownership, it is not robbery. Barnes v. State, 9 Tex. App. 128; People v. Vice, 21 Cal. 344; State v. Hollyway, 41 Iowa, 200, 20 Am. Rep. 586.

Where the loser in an unlawful card game compels the winner by means of force or fear to restore the money won from him, it is not robbery. Thompson v. Com. 13 Ky. L. Rep. 918, 18 S. W. 1022.

To the same effect is Sikes v. Com. 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1353, 34 S. W. 902, where, under a similar state of facts, a judgment of conviction was reversed.

And People v. Hughes, 11 Utah, 100, 39 Pac. 492, is also a case where money lost by gambling was recovered by the loser by a putting in fear, and the court reversed a judgment of conviction of robbery.

Also, Gant v. State (Ga.) 41 S. E. 698, decides the same question in the same way, but the court says, if the winner were compelled to surrender, not only his winnings, but also some of his individual money, it would then be robbery. Judgment of conviction of robbery was affirmed.

Where a creditor by violence forced his debtor to pay the debt, it was held not to be robbery, in Reg. v. Hemmings, 4 Fost. & F. 50.

A man had given a note, with sureties, to another in payment of land, but objected to the deed given him. He asked to see the note, and, upon getting it in his hands, refused to return it, and, breaking loose from the man, who had seized him, he caught up an ax and reaching his horse got away, saying that the surety had sent him word to get the note as he could or might. The court held that these facts made out a case of forcible trespass, but not larceny or robbery, as the act was done under color of right and with some seeming excuse for it. State v. Deal, 64 N. C. 270.

In Rex v. Hall, 3 Car. & P. 409, the jury found that a man had acted under a bona fide impression that wires and game which a game keeper had found and appropriated were his property, and therefore his demanding and obtaining them by menaces was not robbery.

In Gables v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 68 S. W. 288, there was evidence that a saloon keeper obtained 50 cents, which he claimed was due him from another man, by use of a pistol; other evidence was to the effect that he used the pistol to defend himself from apprehended violence. The court held that the crime was not made out in either case, and reversed judgment of conviction of robbery.

In Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221, where the prisoner obtained money from a man by threats and force while somewhat intoxicated, and the evidence tended to show that he claimed the money as his own, the court charged the jury that if they thought that the prisoner had lost some money, and honestly believed the other man had taken it, and that he was only getting back his own, he should be acquitted. There was a verdict of guilty, which was affirmed on appeal.

The court pointed out, in Brown v. State, 28 Ark. 126, that there was a dispute as to the ownership of the property taken, and that defendant claimed it and went in open day to assert his claim in the presence of several others, and that such circumstances make the case fall short of what is necessary to make out robbery.

But in Crawford v. State, 90 Ga. 701, 17 S. E. 628, the court says it is for the jury to say whether a claim of right was made and acted on in good faith, or whether it was merely a pretext resorted to as cover for a fraudulent intent.

A man in the presence of a friend gave another money with which to buy a horse at a fair, but afterwards tried to get the money back but could not. On the following day the friend asked the man for the money, and he refused to give it up. Subsequently, this friend seeing the man's son receive some money, demanded that he give it to him on account of the money the father had retained, and upon his refusal to do so the friend knocked him down, and attempted to obtain it. It was held that there was such a semblance of right as not to constitute an assault with intent to rob. Reg. v. Boden, 1 Car. & K. 395.

V. Force employed as a means of escape or to prevent a recaption of property taken without force.

If the force or fear is employed merely as a means of escape, or to prevent a recaption of property taken without force, it does not constitute robbery. State v. Clark, 12 Mo. App. 593, Appx.

Where a man merely picked up a pistol deftly and suddenly, and walked off with it, covering his retreat by presenting the pistol at the owner with a view to prevent him from pursuing or attempting to recover it, the court held that robbery was not committed, in Jackson v. State, 114 Ga. 820, 40 S. E. 1001.

Smith's Case, 1 Lewin, C. C. 301, holds that in robbery the force must precede the theft, otherwise it is a stealing from the person.

And in Harman's Case, 2 East, P. C. 736, a thief took a purse from a man's pocket without his knowledge until he saw it in the thief's hand and demanded it, whereupon the thief menaced him and rode away. The thief was held guilty of larceny only, having obtained the property by stealth, and the words of menace being used after the taking.

Rouff v. State, 61 Ark. 594, 34 S. W. 262, was a case where a man snatched a bill from the hand of another and handed it to a confederate, who started for the door. The owner drew a pistol, and the thief did also, and got away. The court reversed a conviction of robbery, and stated: "There are numerous cases holding that where the property is obtained by artifice, trick, or by merely snatching from the hand, and where the only display of force is used to prevent the retaking of the property by the owner, the crime is not robbery." (See II. a, 2, supra.)

Likewise, in Shinn v. State, 64 Ind. 13, 31 Am. Rep. 110, a man snatched money from another and ran away, while a confederate held the owner so that he could not pursue. The court reversed a conviction of robbery, and stated that there must be some previous struggle for the possession of the property, and that violence or putting in fear will not make a precedent taking effected clandestinely, or without violence or putting in fear, amount to robbery. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

A parallel case is Johnson v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 140, 32 S. W. 537. A man suddenly snatched money from another who grabbed him, but a confederate of the thief drew a pistol, and the owner let the thief go. The court reversed a conviction of robbery, and stated that where no fear is excited prior to the act of robbery there must be force or violence used on the person robbed, and that a mere snatching is not sufficient force. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

In Rex v. Gnosil, 1 Car. & P. 304, a man snatched another's watch, after which a struggle ensued and the prisoner was secured. The court held that the accused was guilty of larceny only, and stated that, to constitute robbery, force must be used, either before or at the time of the taking. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

This last case is followed in State v. John, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 163, 69 Am. Dec. 777, which is very similar, only the thief escaped after the struggle; but there is a dissenting opinion in which the judge said that the distinction between a struggle to escape and one to carry off property when defendant was guilty of both was too refined for practical use. (See II. a, 2, supra.)

A case where this rule came up, but was held not to apply under the facts, and conviction of robbery was had, is Thompson's Case, 3 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 10, where it was contended that the owner was not put in fear until after his money was taken, when the thief menaced him, but the court held that it was for the jury to say whether acts of the prisoner just previous to the taking were not sufficient to put the owner in fear; or, if the jury believed that the threats were made by the thief before he had obtained complete possession of the money, he would be guilty; or, if the jury should believe that the whole conduct of the thief was sufficient to have induced a well-grounded apprehension of personal danger in the owner, then they should convict. A verdict of guilty was rendered.

Another such case is State v. Miller, 53 Kan. 324, 36 Pac. 751, where a man reached over a counter and grabbed the money in the money drawer, and at the same time the owner caught his hand, whereupon the thief cut the owner on 57 L. R. A.

the hand with a knife, causing him to let go, and so escaped. The contention was that the violence used by defendant was merely for the purpose of breaking away from the owner, and that defendant had the money in his possession before the struggle took place. The court stated that the correctness of those cases which hold that robbery is not committed where the thief gains peaceable possession of the property, and uses no violence except to resist arrest or effect escape, is not questioned; but in this case it cannot be contended that defendant had obtained complete possession of the money before using violence, and that the violence to the person and the taking may certainly be contemporaneous.

And also Sherman v. State, 4 Ohio C. C. 531, where prisoner, having asked to take conductor's fare box and been refused, grabbed it from under conductor's left arm, jerking it out, and striking conductor across face and nose, and escaping, it is stated that the blow struck and the taking of the property were parts of the same act; that the violence was inflicted as a means of getting possession of the property, and that this case differs widely from those where the violence used was after the property was taken.

That an assault with intent to rob must not be subsequent to an attempt to take the property is held in Hansom v. State, 43 Ohio St. 376, 1 N. E. 186. The opinion states that "after the taking of the property had been abandoned by the defendant, a struggle to avoid an arrest ensued. However violent this struggle, it did not characterize the attempt to take the diamond stud."

In State v. Willis, 16 Mo. App. 553, Appx., it is stated that the fact that the owner is frightened by the theft is immaterial if the theft was not in consequence of the fright. This was a sudden snatching from the hand of the owner without violence or putting in fear.

But Thomas v. State, 91 Ala. 34, 9 So. 81, applies this doctrine to a state of facts where some cases draw a distinction. A man stopped a boy carrying a gun, and entered into conversation with him in regard to purchasing it. The boy handed it to the man on his request for examination, and informed him that it was loaded, whereupon the man backed off a few feet and pointing the gun at the boy told him to run or he would shoot him. The boy, frightened, backed off, and defendant ran away with the gun. The court reversed conviction of robbery, and stated in the opinion that if force is relied on in proof of the charge it must be the force by which another is deprived of, and the offender gains, the possession; and that, if putting in fear is relied on, it must be the fear under duress of which the possession is parted with; that the taking must be the result of the force or fear, and force or fear which is a consequence, and not the means, of the taking will not suffice; that violence or putting in fear, to constitute the essential factor in the crime of robbery, must precede or be concomitant with the taking of the property from the possession of the owner; and that no violence or excitation of fear resorted to merely for the purpose of keeping a possession already acquired, or of escaping after the possession has been acquired, will support the element of force, which is an ingredient of this offense.

The court in the last-mentioned case overrules James v. State, 53 Ala. 380, where the facts are somewhat analogous. Two men were traveling together along the same road, and the articles taken, contained in a bag, were handed by the owner to his companion to be carried for him. They proceeded some distance in this way when the thief took a step backward, and struck the owner behind on his neck, knocking him down and insensible, and when he recovered consciousness the thief was gone with the bag. These facts were decided to constitute robbery, and the reasoning of the court was that up to the time of the blow there was no appropriation of these articles by defendant or denial of the property of owner in them until he was struck and knocked down by the thief; that until then they were in the owner's presence and constructively in his possession; and that the violence was not done after the goods were taken away, but that they were taken away after and by means of the violence.

A case with very similar facts to Thomas v. State, 91 Ala. 34, 9 So. 81, but in direct opposition to it, is McNeal v. State, 29 Ohio L. J. 185, where a man went into a hardware store, asked to see a revolver, and, when shown one, loaded it, and pointing it at the clerk, backed out of the store with it. In a very brief decision the court holds that this was robbery notwithstanding the revolver was peaceably given the defendant and there were no violent acts until after he had obtained it, and thus seems to follow the doctrine of James v. State, 53 Ala. 380, and is contrary to the general doctrine.

Likewise, in People v. Glynn, 54 Hun, 332, 7 N. Y. Supp. 555, Affirmed in 123 N. Y. 631, 25 N. E. 953, referred to more at length under II. 6, supra, the opinion states that, although the thief may have procured possession of the property of another without force or violence, the removal of the property from the presence of that other with force and violence constitutes robbery.

Another case similar to People v. Glynn, but which goes farther, and seems to be a variation of the general rule, is State v. Trexler, 4 N. C. (2 Car. Law Repos.) 90, 6 Am. Dec. 558, where a man dropped a bank note, which another picked up, and there was then a struggle for its possession, which resulted in the thief's retaining it and running out of the room. The indictment and conviction were for forcible trespass, and it was contended that the crime was either larceny or robbery which would merge the trespass, but the court held that, the bank note not being a subject of larceny, no felony could be committed to extinguish the trespass. But the court reasoned that, supposing the note a proper subject of larceny, the seizing, the scuffle, and the carrying away were one continuing transaction; that, if a thief privately took money from a man and put it in his pocket, and when he attempted to take it out again the owner seized his hand, upon which a scuffle took place, and the owner was overpowered, it would be robbery; and that in this case, if, during the scuffle, the owner had caught hold of the bill, and then been overcome or intimidated, it would be robbery, and that if an actual touching of the note were essential to the regaining possession (which the court by no means thought necessary), that the jury had ample means to presume it from the circumstances, and should have been so instructed. And the court makes the extreme proposition that while snatching anything unawares is not considered a taking by force, yet, if there is a struggle to keep it, the taking is a robbery; but says that this distinction steers clear of cases like the one where a purse was stealthily taken, and upon the owner's discovering it in the hands of the thief and demanding it the thief threatened to pull his house from over his head if he said anything about it, and rode off, which was held not to be robbery.

At the conclusion of the opinion in People v. McGinty, 24 Hun, 62, referred to more fully under II. a, 2, supra, where, after a man had knocked a purse out of another's hand, he seized him and put him out doors, one of the judges who concurred in a decision reversing conviction of robbery states that the decision should not be deemed conclusive as to whether the seizure of complainant and forcibly putting him out might not in a new trial furnish the element of force or fear necessary in robbery.

In a brief memorandum of State v. Cunningham, 13 Mo. App. 576, Appx., it is said that property taken from a person and carried away is robbery, although violence be used after the deportation to prevent an arrest. Apparently this case is a violation of the rule, but it is not further reported.

VI. Decisions under special statutes.

Under Texas Penal Code, art. 723 [857], providing that "if any person, by threatening to do some illegal act injurious to the character, person, or property of another, shall fraudulently induce the person so threatened to deliver to him any property with intent to appropriate the same to his own use," he shall be guilty of robbery, it was held in Davis v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 38 S. W. 792, that the act threatened must be illegal; and that a threat to accuse a person of an offense and prosecute him therefor when such person is guilty of such offense was not a threat to do an illegal act, and was not robbery under the above statute. A judgment of conviction was reversed.

Where a man cocked a pistol and pointed it at another and thus obtained his money it was held a taking by assault or violence, or by putting in fear of life or bodily injury, under art. 722 [856], and not a taking under art. 723 [857] (the provisions of which are set out in the preceding paragraph). Coffelt v. State, 27 Tex. App. 608, 11 S. W. 639.

United States v. Hare, 2 Wheeler, C. C. 283, Fed. Cas. No. 15,304, is an exhaustive case which holds that stopping a carrier in the highway and demanding the surrender of the mail, at the same time showing weapons calculated to take his life, such as pistols or dirks, and thus putting him in fear of his life and obtaining possession of the mail against his will, is sufficient under act April 30, 1810, § 19, authorizing conviction for robbery of the mails if the offender shall wound the person having custody thereof, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of dangerous weapons.

This case is cited and followed in United States v. Wilson, Baldw. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730, where defendants were indicted under act March 3, 1825, § 22, for robbing the mail of the United States by the use of dangerous weapons and putting the life of the carrier in jeopardy. It was held that "jeopardy," as used in this section, means a well-grounded apprehension of danger to life in case of refusal or resistance; and that it is not necessary that the danger should exist at the moment of giving up the mail, if it ceased in consequence of the driver's submission from a reasonable fear of his life if he resisted or refused; also that pistols are dangerous weapons within the meaning of the statute, and are presumed to be charged until the contrary is proved. Conviction was affirmed.

United States v. Wood, 3 Wash. C. C. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 16,756, holds that a sword or pistol, by means and through terror of which a carrier is robbed of the mails, is a dangerous weapon within the meaning of the 19th section of the postoffice law (4 Laws U. S. N. E. 297), requiring the putting of the life of the carrier in jeopardy by the means of dangerous weapons to constitute the offense, although it was not drawn or pointed at the breast of the driver at the time.

And in Com. v. Martin, 17 Mass. 359, it was held that if the robber shall, being armed with a dangerous weapon, make an assault with intent to kill or maim if it shall be necessary to effect his purpose, the offense is complete under Stat. 1818, chap. 124, § 1, which enacts that if any person shall commit an assault upon another, and shall take from his person any property which may be the subject of larceny, being at the time armed with a dangerous weapon, with intent to kill or maim the person so assaulted, or, being armed as aforesaid, shall actually strike or wound the person so assaulted and robbed, every person so offending suffer punishment of death.

An indictment, under Rev. Stat. chap. 125, § 13, which alleges that the prisoner assaulted the prosecutor and struck and wounded him while armed with a dangerous weapon, was held in Com. v. Gallagher, 6 Met. 565, not to be proved as to the wounding by evidence of a slight scratch on prosecutor's face which ruptured the cuticle only, without separating the whole skin, nor as to the striking by evidence that prisoner put his arms around prosecutor and threw him to the ground and held him there. The statute referred to enacts that if any person shall assault and rob another of any property which may be the subject of larceny, being armed with a dangerous weapon and with intent if resisted to kill or maim the person robbed, or if being so armed he shall wound or strike the person robbed, he shall suffer punishment of death.

And in Com. v. Mowry, 11 Allen, 20, it was held not necessary to aver or prove that the wounding or striking was done with a dangerous weapon, under Gen. Stat. chap. 160, § 22, which enacts that whoever assaults another and feloniously takes from his person property which may be the subject of larceny, being at the time armed with a dangerous weapon with intent, if resisted, to kill or maim the person robbed; or, being so armed, wounds or strikes the person robbed,—shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for life.

Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 1741, provides that it shall be robbery if any person, being armed with a dangerous weapon, shall assault another with intent, if resisted, to kill or wound, and shall take any property from them. And in State v. Carlson, 39 Or. 19, 62 Pac. 1018, it is held sufficient, under this statute, where one pointed a loaded Winchester rifle, within shooting distance, at another, and by that means obtained property from him.

But in Reg. v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 671, where the prisoner said to prosecutor, "If you do not assist me I will say you took indecent liberties with me some time ago,"—it was held that the charge was not sufficiently specific to support conviction under special statute, 7 Wm. IV., and 1 Vict. chap. 87, § 4, relating to robbery, which enacts that whoever shall accuse, or threaten to accuse, any person of committing, or attempting to commit, an abominable crime, with a view to extort money from him, and shall so extort money, shall be guilty of felony. (See this case further, under III. c. supra.)

See also Sweat v. State, 90 Ga. 315, 17 S. E. 273, under III. d. supra.
57 L. R. A.

VII. Miscellaneous cases.

If the force or fear is the operative cause of the delivery of the property, although it was not delivered at the time such force or fear was used, it is robbery, as in Ashworth v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 419, 20 S. W. 982, where a store keeper through fear was compelled by defendant to promise to do up certain goods in packages for delivery to him, and defendant left the store and sent his confederate after the goods, a conviction was affirmed.

If one avails himself of a state of terror into which he has put another by force, actual or constructive, to obtain property from his possession, it is robbery, although that was not the original intention with which the force was exerted, as in Rex v. Blackham, 2 East, P. C. 711, where a woman offered a man money to desist from an attempt to commit rape, which he took but continued to treat her with violence until the approach of another person.

And where a negro had assaulted a white woman with the same intention, and she induced him to release her by promising to give him money, which she afterwards did, it was held robbery, in State v. Nathan, 5 Rich. L. 219.

Likewise, in Hope v. People, 83 N. Y. 425, 38 Am. Rep. 460, where robbers by violence and putting in fear compelled a janitor to disclose the combination of a bank safe, and at the same time took a bunch of keys from a table in his presence, they were afterwards convicted of a robbery of the keys, for the court stated that they had availed themselves of the state of terror into which they had put the janitor in extorting from him the secret of the combination, to enable them to take the keys also.

In State v. Johnson, 111 Mo. 578, 20 S. W. 302, where a man held the victim in one room while a woman took property from a trunk in an adjoining room, the court held that if the man was guilty at all it was by reason of a conspiracy between him and the woman, and that an instruction which authorized a verdict of guilty without proof of a conspiracy or concerted action was error.

Where a man stepped from behind a tree and demanded another's money upon a threat to shoot, and leveled what the other thought was a pistol at him, but what was in reality only a knife, the court held that putting in fear was sufficiently proved, but reversed conviction on another point. State v. McLain, 159 Mo. 340, 60 S. W. 736.

Pendy v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 643, 31 S. W. 647, affirmed a conviction of robbery where the prosecutor testified that he did not know whether he was in fear of death or serious bodily injury or not, when a pistol was presented at his head and his money taken, but that defendant would not have gotten the money but for the pistol. And it was contended that, in order to constitute robbery, the assaulted party must be placed in fear of death or serious bodily injury, but the court held that it may also be consummated by assault or violence as well as by putting in fear of death or bodily injury.

Where persons participated in a search of premises and seizures made under a warrant which was technically insufficient, a charge of robbery cannot be sustained, although they acted in excess of the authority which the warrant gave. Re Lewis, 83 Fed. 159.

The taking must be accompanied with a felonious intent in order to constitute robbery; and so, where a pistol was snatched by a man to prevent its being used against him, and without at the time intending to steal it, the subsequent carrying away of it would not be robbery; but such intent is a question for the jury. Jordan v. Com. 25 Gratt. 943.

VIII. Résumé.

The force sufficient to constitute robbery may be actual, consisting of violence inflicted directly on the person robbed, or constructive, being anything which produces fear, sufficient to prevent resistance or overcome and render impossible the free exercise of the will.

Constructive force includes fear of injury to a person, his property or character, or fear of bodily injury to the members of his family or someone in his presence. The injury may be threatened to be inflicted at some future time; and if the property is not delivered at the time of the threat, but afterwards, under a continuing sense of fear, it is robbery. It also includes a demand made with such demonstrations of force and numbers as to render resistance useless. A threat of prosecution or arrest for any crime except crimen inominatum is not sufficient, unless such threat is supplemented by force; but a threat to accuse of crimen inominatum is robbery, whether the person accused is guilty of such crime or not. If the money or property was parted with, not through fear of loss of character, or position, but for the purpose of prosecuting the extorter, it is not robbery. In a few of the old English cases of this nature it was held that there must also be some constraint upon the person in connection with this threat; but later cases hold to the contrary.

Obtaining money from a woman by threatening to accuse her husband of an indecent assault does not constitute the offense. The courts look with marked disfavor upon any attempt to extend this doctrine that a threat to accuse of crimen inominatum constitutes robbery to threats of accusation of other crimes, but with one accord uphold the exception thus made.

Where actual force is used, as in cases of snatching, if there is any resistance, however slight, and that resistance is overcome, it is robbery, but the great weight of authority is to the effect that if the property is taken without resistance, or so suddenly as not to allow time to make resistance, it is not robbery. Two cases which seem to be exceptions to this rule are State v. Carr, 43 Iowa, 418, and Davis v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 54 S. W. 959, and they are the only cases which would bear out the decision in Jones v. Com. State v. Carr is not cited, either by counsel, or in the opinion, and, with the exception of Davis v. Com., the cases which are cited are ones where there was more than a simple snatching,—either resistance on the part of the owner, or a taking with actual force but without knowledge of person robbed,—and therefore JONES v. Com. goes farther than the cases cited to sustain it except Davis v. Com., and those two cases, with State v. Carr, seem to be exceptions to the prevailing doctrine.

If the property is attached to the person in such a manner as to afford resistance, as an earring in the ear or watch cord around the neck, the sudden snatching of it is held robbery with a few exceptions. And it is held a taking by actual force if property is taken from the owner unawares while he is being pushed, pulled, or jostled for the purpose of diverting his attention.

Property taken by force, either actual or constructive, where there is color of right or claim of ownership is not robbery; but it is for the 57 L. R. A.

jury to say whether such claim is not a cover for a fraudulent intent.

If the force or fear is employed merely as a means of escape or to prevent a recaption of property taken without force, and is not the operative cause of the delivery of the goods, it is not robbery, although People v. Glynn, 54 Hun, 332, 7 N. Y. Supp. 555, Affirmed in 123 N. Y. 631, 25 N. E. 953, holds that, even if the thief procured possession of the goods without force, nevertheless the removal of them from the presence of the owner with force constitutes robbery; and State v. Trexler, 4 N. C. (2 Car. Law Repos.) 90, 6 Am. Dec. 558, is another case bearing the same way. James v. State, 53 Ala. 380, held that where the property was being carried for the owner by the thief, who, while it was thus in his possession, struck the owner a blow which rendered him unconscious, and made off with the property, it was robbery, but Thomas v. State, 91 Ala. 34, 9 So. 81, on analogous facts, squarely overrules this decision. McNeal v. State, 29 Ohio L. J. 185, with very similar facts to Thomas v. State, follows James v. State. But these last three are all cases where a distinction might fairly be made.

Although the line is very finely drawn, nevertheless, the authorities with a very few exceptions agree that the force necessary to constitute robbery is force with a felonious intent however exerted, which overcomes resistance, however slight, and that where there is no resistance there is no robbery. And as to constructive force, it is anything which produces fear sufficient to suspend the power of resistance and prevent the free exercise of the will.

M. M. M.

L. P. FOREMAN, Admr., etc., of H. W. Lewis, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

TAYLOR COAL COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The question whether or not a petition to recover damages for injuries to the person and for wrongful death, to which a demurrer was sustained, states a cause of action, may be reviewed on appeal, although the causes of action were improperly joined, where no motion to require plaintiff to elect on which he would proceed was made.
2. The master owes no duty to protect his servant from the criminal violence of a mob of strikers; hence no liability is imposed upon him for death resulting from such violence by a statute making him liable for death resulting from injuries inflicted by his negligence or wrongful act.
3. A cause of action against a master for injuries inflicted on a servant by a mob of strikers does not survive the servant's death, under a statute providing that no action for personal injury shall die with the person except actions for assault, etc.
4. Breach of contract by a master to furnish protection to his servant from violence of a mob of strikers will not give a right of action under statutes making the master liable for the death of the servant through his negligence or wrongful act, and providing that actions for injury to the person, except by assault, shall not abate on the death of the person injured.

NOTE.—As to carrier's liability for assault upon passenger by strikers, mob, or third persons, see note to Fewings v. Mendenhall (Minn.) 55 L. R. A. 713.

(March 5, 1902).

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ohio County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. H. Yost and Glenn & Ringo for appellant.

Mr. F. M. Sackett, with Messrs. Sweeney, Ellis, & Sweeney, for appellee.

The administrator has no right to sue.

Injuries from which death ensues, no matter from what source or by what cause they may have been inflicted, are not, and never were, the subject of a civil action for damages at the common law.

It requires a statute to furnish such right in any case, and such statute, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.

Eden v. Lexington & F. R. Co. 14 B. Mon. 204; O'Donoghue v. Akin, 2 Duv. 478; Davis v. Justice, 31 Ohio St. 359, 27 Am. Rep. 514; Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580.

The Kentucky statutes give no right of action.

The petition states that a contract was made and broken, and to recover damages for its breach this action is prosecuted.

Every case in which an action to recover damages for loss of life is allowed will be found in §§ 4, 5, and 6, Ky. Stat.

The object of the statute under which this action was brought is to give a cause of action only where injuries are occasioned by negligence.

Chiles v. Drake, 2 Met. (Ky.) 146, 74 Am. Dec. 406.

There can be no such thing as a case of negligent injury to one person by another; nor can the acts of one causing injury to another be deemed wrongful in the absence of a legal duty on the part of the person inflicting the injury to take care, and a corresponding right on the part of the person injured to be protected.

O'Callaghan v. Cronan, 121 Mass. 114.

Before it can be said that a case falls within the scope of the statute there must be a particular relationship between the party causing the injury and the party injured.

No duty is considered in law except a legal duty, and all legal duties exist from implication of law.

Wharton, Neg. § 24; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 410, and note.

The right, on one hand, and the corresponding duty, on the other, in every case where an action for tort can be maintained for negligent injury, exists independent of a contract, even though the injury may have grown out of the breach of a contract.

Cooley, Torts, §§ 2, 3; Bishop, Non-Con-57 L. R. A.

tract Law, §§ 74-76; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 342, 41 Am. Rep. 41, 11 N. W. 356, 911.

Actionable negligence is the inadvertent failure of a legally responsible person to use ordinary care, under the circumstances, in observing or performing a non-contractual duty implied by law, which failure is the proximate cause of the injury to a person to whom the duty is due.

The contract recited in the petition is void because against public policy.

To have carried out the agreement would have compelled appellee to employ an armed force, the scope of whose duty would have been, if the necessity required it, to kill all those who might interfere with appellant's intestate while in the employ of appellee.

When a plaintiff seeks to enforce an executory contract, or to recover damage for its breach, if it appears that the consideration of the contract involves the violation of a penal law the courts will declare the contract void, and refuse to aid in its enforcement, whether its illegality is pleaded or not.

Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1445; Keith v. Fountain, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 22 S. W. 191; Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 539; Ormerod v. Dearman, 100 Pa. 561, 45 Am. Rep. 391; Bowman v. Phillips, 41 Kan. 364, 3 L. R. A. 631, 21 Pac. 230.

If the cause of action arises ex turpi causa, or from a transgression of a positive law of the land, then the courts say such cause of action cannot be successfully maintained.

2 Kent, Com. p. 467; 2 Starkie, Ev. 86; Mitchell v. Vance, 5 T. B. Mon. 528, 17 Am. Dec. 96; Hardesty v. Taft, 23 Md. 512, 87 Am. Dec. 584; Hutchen v. Gibson, 1 Bush, 271.

The earlier English cases did not recognize, but condemned, strikes. But the modern doctrine in this country and in England is to the effect that workmen possess the right to quit work, either singly or in a body, provided only they do not interfere with the rights of others.

State v. Donaldson, 32 N. J. L. 151, 90 Am. Dec. 649.

The agreement stated in the petition is ultra vires.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 354, and note 1; Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 980. The contract sued on is void because it is an undertaking to answer for the misdoing of another.

The contract is void for want of power to make it.

Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1443; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 869.

The contract is void for want of consideration.

Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, §§ 6, 7; Beach, Contr. § 505.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee is a corporation engaged in the business of mining and selling coal.

The intestate, H. W. Lewis, was a coal miner. While in the employ of the appellee he received injuries from the effects of which he died. This action was brought to recover damages resulting from the injuries received. Omitting formal parts, the petition reads as follows: "(3) That in May, 1898, it had in its employment a large number of miners and mine laborers, all of whom were members of a secret organization called the 'Miners' Union,' and were on that account known and designated as 'union men,' in contradistinction to miners and mine laborers who were not members thereof, and who were designated 'nonunion men.' About this time these union miners became dissatisfied with the management of the defendant's mines, or with the amount of wages they were being by it paid for their services, and left its employment on a strike; refusing not only to work themselves, but to permit others to work at, in, or about these mines, until their differences with the defendant corporation could be adjusted. So openly and to such an extent did they show their determination that no one should be employed to fill their places in or about the mines, that they publicly and boldly threatened to take the life of any man or men who should come there and attempt to do any character of work for the defendant. These threats, and the consequent danger to any nonunion men who should attempt to work there for the defendant, were well known to it, its superintendent and agents. Shortly after this strike was inaugurated, the defendant attempted to, and did, hire the services of a large number of nonunion men, and brought them to its said mines, in order with them to carry on its business; but these men were, with threats of violence and force, frightened from their labor and driven from the place. These facts were, as a matter of course, well known to and by the defendant and its agents, as at this time the locality of the mines was under the domination of the strikers, and men who attempted to work or labor for the defendant were intimidated and awed into a submission to their commands and behests. This soon left the mines in a bad and dangerous condition, as the rising of the waters therein, and their great need of being pumped out and drained, was rendering them valueless and unfit for use; and the defendant's officers and agents fully realized that the property would soon be ruined and become a dead loss to its owners unless hands could be procured who would do the work so badly and seriously needed there. (4) That an agent and officer of the defendant company fully authorized to act and make contracts for it then approached the plaintiff's intestate, the said H. W. Lewis, then a resident of the county of Jefferson, in this state, and without warning him of the trouble of the mines, of the strikes of the miners, of their threats against anyone who would come there to work, of the consequent danger to him, which the defendant well knew, employed him to go to the mines and work for it, promising and agreeing to give him employment for the space of one year. Accepting this employment at the compensation then and there agreed upon, and wholly ignorant of any danger or dangers incident to the work, or on account of the strikers and their threats, his said intestate went to the mines and began work. After a few days, during which time he had been superintending a number of men who were draining the mine, he was warned by a committee of the strikers that they would not allow him to work for the defendant. These facts and the language and the threats of the said committee his intestate at once communicated to the defendant's superintendent and chief officer, then at the mines, and asked him what he must do. It was well known to the defendant, its officer and agents, that, if this work was stopped then, the mines would become flooded, dangerous, and unfit for use, and be thus made utterly worthless; and thus knowing, and realizing the absolute necessity for the continuation of this work, the defendant corporation, by and through its said superintendent and chief officer, then and there promised, agreed, and undertook, in consideration of said Lewis continuing the work under the circumstances as herein above alleged, that the said company would hire a sufficient guard or force of men to protect the said Lewis and all the men working under him from any danger or trouble from the strikers; and thereupon said Lewis, relying solely and wholly upon the defendant's promise to protect him, proceeded again to work, and finished his day's labor. The defendant, however, wilfully, negligently, and wantonly failed and refused to perform its said undertaking, in this: that it did not hire a guard or any number of men to protect the said Lewis, nor did it, through any of its officers or agents, make any attempt to secure the services of a guard, or in any way to protect him from the dangers which it well knew environed him, and from which, in consideration of his work to save its property from ruin, it had solemnly agreed and undertook to hold him harmless. (5) He now alleges that after the said Lewis had finished his labor for the day, and had gone to his home, a number of the strikers, consisting of about — men, went to the house where he was staying, dragged him therefrom by force, and wilfully, unlawfully, and without right or reason, beat him on the head with stones, clubs, and loaded sticks, by reason of which beating he was permanently disabled and injured, and was confined to his bed for — months, suffering all the time great bodily pain and mental anguish, and afterwards died by reason of the wounds then and there so by him received, and all of which these strikers were enabled and encouraged to do on account of the defendant's failure to furnish the guard and protect the said Lewis, which, well knowing the urgent and crying need therefor, it wilfully, wantonly, and negligently failed and refused to do. (6) That his said intestate was so assaulted, beat, injured, and murdered by these rioters at the defendant's mines, on its property, and although it had due notice of the riot immediately on its breaking out, and although it had promised and agreed to protect the said Lewis, it failed to protect or to make any attempt to protect him, to his damage in the sum of $15,000, all of which occurred on the 31st day of May, 1898, and within twelve months next preceding the filing of this petition."

At common law, although the death of a person was caused by negligence or wrongful act, no cause of action survived. Under § 6, Ky. Stat. where death results from negligence or wrongful act, the cause of action survives to the personal representative. The section reads as follows: "Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act, then in every such case damages may be recovered for such death from the person or persons, company or companies, corporation or corporations, their agents or servants, causing the same, and when the act is wilful or the negligence is gross, punitive damages may be recovered and the action to recover such damages shall be prosecuted by the personal representative of the deceased." Section 241 of the Constitution provides that there may be a recovery where death resulted from negligence or wrongful act. At common law the right of action for the injury to the person abated on the death of the party injured. Under Ky. Stat. § 10, the cause of action for personal injury, causing physical and mental suffering, does not abate on the death of the injured person, except actions for assault, slander, and criminal conversation, and so much of the action for criminal prosecution as is intended to recover for personal injury. These questions are reviewed by this court in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788, 34 S. W. 236. So, under the principles of the common law, if appellee had, through its agent, inflicted the injury which resulted in physical pain and mental suffering and death, neither cause of action would have survived. This court has held that the cause of action for damages resulting in death cannot be joined with the cause of action for physical pain and mental suffering; that a recovery for one bars an action for the other. Hackett v. Louisville R. Co. 95 Ky. 236, 24 S. W. 871; Owensboro & N. R. Co. v. Barclay, 102 Ky. 16, 43 S. W. 177; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain, 98 Ky. 700, 34 L. R. A. 788, 34 S. W. 236; Hansford v. Payne, 11 Bush, 385; Conner v. Paul, 12 Bush, 145. No motion was made to compel the plaintiff to elect which cause of action he would prosecute. A demurrer was filed to the petition and sustained. As there was no motion to elect, the question as to whether the petition states a cause of action is here for review.

The law imposes on carriers the highest degree of care in the transportation of their passengers. The law not only makes them liable for neglect in the operation of their road, if a railroad, but makes them liable for the neglect of any duty imposed on them resulting in the injury of a passenger. If those in charge of a train knowingly permit a person to remain upon it who from his conduct renders it probable that the passengers may be injured by him, and one is so injured, then the carrier is liable, because the law imposes the duty of exercising the highest degree of care in his transportation; and it would be gross negligence to endanger the life or limb of passengers by carrying a person of the character described. So the duties of the carrier are such that it might be made responsible for the criminal conduct of someone who is entirely disconnected with its service. The law imposes the duty upon the master to furnish his servant with reasonably safe tools or machinery to use or operate, and reasonably safe premises upon which to work. A violation of this duty, when the servant is ignorant of the master's neglect, or, being aware of it, a reasonably prudent man would continue to work under like conditions, the master is responsible for the injury which he receives in consequence of such neglect. The master, whether he be a common carrier or engaged in another enterprise, does not undertake to protect the servant from the criminal acts of others. This is not a duty which the law imposes, or which arises from the relation of master and servant. The law does not make one liable civilly or criminally for the criminal act of another unless the position of the parties are such relatively that the act must be considered as having been, in contemplation of law, advised or procured to be done by another. Actionable negligence arises from a duty imposed by law to use ordinary care under the conditions in which a person upon whom a duty rests is placed. For a failure to perform that, a cause of action exists. The negligence may have resulted independent of a contract, or a contract may exist which does not contain a promise that the one is to use ordinary care to avoid injury to one who is to perform a service in the execution of the contract. In the latter case actionable negligence results from a condition, rather than a violation of the provisions of a contract.

With these general observations, we come to the consideration of §§ 6 and 10 of the Kentucky Statutes. The word "negligence" is used in § 6 in its usual and ordinary sense. It was intended to make one liable for his own negligent act, or for that of another for whose act he is responsible. The words "wrongful act" are comprehensive enough to include negligent acts, but they were intended primarily to cover cases where the act was wanton or was intentionally committed, or where one may have counseled or procured another to do it, when, in contemplation of law, the act of counseling or advising makes the wrongful act his own. It is not charged that under the law of master and servant (nor could it have been correctly done) the appellee was bound to furnish a guard to protect the decedent from the hands of a mob. Therefore there was no breach of duty imposed by law which would make it guilty of negligence. It is not charged that the appellee inflicted the injury upon decedent, or counseled, advised, or procured others to do it. Therefore it is not charged, nor could it have been, that the appellee was guilty of the wrongful act which resulted in the injury and death. By the way, it may be added that in McClure v. Alexander, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 732, 24 S. W. 619, it was held that the section of the statute where the right of action is given the widow and minor children of a person killed by the careless, wanton, or malicious use of firearms, etc., is not repealed by § 241 of the Constitution. Having reached the foregoing conclusion, it follows that an action for the death of the intestate will not lie under § 241 of the Constitution, or § 6 of the Kentucky Statutes. If appellee had been liable at common law for the assault and battery committed upon the person of the intestate, the cause of action would not have survived to the personal representative, because the act complained of was an assault, and an action therefor does not survive to the personal representative; for § 10 of the Kentucky Statutes reads as follows: "No right of action for personal injurious injury to real or personal estate shall cease or die with the person injuring or injured, except actions for assault, slander, criminal conversation, and so much of the action for malicious prosecution as is intended to recover for the personal injury; but for any injury other than those excepted, an action may be brought or revived by the personal representative, or against the personal representative, heir, or devisee, in the same manner as causes of action founded on contract." This court has held, in Anderson v. Arnold, 79 Ky. 370, that an action for an assault and battery does not survive. Of course, the court did not mean to hold that, when death has resulted from an assault, any cause of action which was given under the statute for the death would not survive; neither do we want to be understood as holding a cause of action given for the death of a person, either by § 241 of the Constitution, or any section of the statutes, is affected by § 10, although the death was the result of an assault. We simply hold that the cause of action for the assault and battery does not survive. The action is really one in contract. The contract averred cannot bring the case within the provisions of § 241 of the Constitution and § 6 of the statute; nor can it have the effect of keeping alive a cause of action, if it existed, which § 10 of the statute declares does not survive. There is another reason, and may be more, why the contract cannot be enforced, but we deem it unnecessary to consider it.

The judgment is affirmed.

57 L. R. A.

D. H. BALDWIN et al., Appts.,

v.

C. D. TUCKER.

(.....Ky.....)

One purchasing a piano from an agent is bound to take notice that, unless it is expressly given, the agent has no authority to take a note for the purchase price payable to himself, and that no title can be acquired to the instrument in exchange for such note unless the transaction is ratified by the principal, or a custom to take such notes is shown.

(Guffy, Burnam, and Hobson, JJ., dissent.)

(December 6, 1901.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Mercer County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover possession of a piano. Reversed. The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Gaither & Vanarsdall, for appellants:

Sparks had no authority to receive cash, or to take a note to himself for the amount of the sale. His authority was fixed by his contract and written instructions, and he could not transcend it so as to bind appellants.

Martin v. United States, 2 T. B. Mon. 90, 15 Am. Dec. 129; Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. 287; Dehart v. Wilson, 6 T. B. Mon. 581; Spalding v. Tucker, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 224, 51 S. W. 2; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 987; Mechanics' Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 632; Tidrick v. Rice, 13 Iowa, 214; Snow v. Warner, 10 Met. 136, 43 Am. Dec. 417; Reese v. Medlock, 27 Tex. 120, 84 Am. Dec. 611; Dozier v. Freeman, 47 Miss. 660; Brown v. Johnson, 12 Smedes & M. 398, 51 Am. Dec. 118; North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill, 262.

An agent to sell personal property must act within the scope of his authority, and where the manner of the sale is set forth in the agent's authority, the instructions therein with reference to the sale must be followed.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1012.

An agent cannot bind his principal by accepting from the debtor, in discharge of the debt, a note, bond, draft, or check, nor by accepting payment in merchandise or other property; and the agent cannot substitute himself as creditor by taking a note payable to himself in settlement of a claim.

1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1027, 1028; McCormick v. Keith, 8 Neb. 142; Aultman v. Lee, 43 Iowa, 404; Martin v. United States, 2 T. B. Mon. 89, 15 Am.

NOTE.—As to the extent of a traveling salesman's authority to collect payment, etc., see note to Jackson v. National Bank (Tenn.) 18 L. R. A. 663.

As to agent's power to use the property of his principal for the payment of his own debt, see Gerard v. McCormick (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 234, and note.

Dec. 129; Corning v. Strong, 1 Ind. 329; McCormick v. Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Mach. Co. 72 Ind. 518; McCulloch v. McKee, 16 Pa. 289.

Messrs. Simrall & Deolan also for appellants.

Messrs. Ben Lee Hardin and W. C. Bell for appellee.

Paynter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 7, 1898, D. H. Baldwin & Co., dealers in pianos and musical instruments, by a writing, authorized J. W. Sparks to take orders for their musical instruments in Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and such other territory as might be agreed upon. The instruments and proceeds of sale were to be the property of appellants. The orders taken and sales made by him were not to be binding on appellants until approved by them. Blank notes were furnished to him, payable to appellants' order, and they were to be subjected to appellants' approval when executed. On November 22, 1898, appellants shipped to J. W. Sparks, Lawrenceburg, Kentucky, four pianos, for the purpose of taking orders therefor, according to the terms of the contract of agency. One of the four pianos shipped to him was sold to Charles Sparks, and one of them is the one in contest. On December 22, 1898, he sold the appellee, Tucker, a piano for $120, for which he took a note payable to himself individually, twelve months after date, at the First National Bank, Harrodsburg. Upon receipt of the note and delivery of the piano, he discounted the note at the bank, and never accounted to appellants for any part of the proceeds. Four or five days after this transaction, appellee wrote to appellants at Louisville, Kentucky, that he had bought the piano, Sparks not having made any report of sale to them. The company at once declined to ratify the sale, and claimed the piano. The appellee refused to give it up, and this action was instituted to recover the possession of it, upon the claim that it belonged to them, as they had never parted with title thereto. The appellee resisted recovery, upon the idea that Sparks was acting for appellants, and that they were bound by his acts. Upon the proof as to the contract of agency and the value of the piano, etc., the court, at the conclusion of appellants' testimony, instructed the jury to find for appellee.

It is a difficult question sometimes to determine whether an agency is general or special. It is sometimes held that where an agency is special as between principal and agent it is general between the principal and third persons. Where the agency is created by writing, it seems to be proper for the court to determine whether it is general or special. If it be by parol it is for the jury to determine its character and extent. Mr. Mechem, in his work on Agency, § 6, says: "A universal agent is one authorized to transact all of the business of his principal of every kind. A general agent is an agent who is empowered to transact all of the business of his principal of a particular kind or in a particular place. A special agent is one authorized to act only in a specific transaction. A principal can have but one universal agent. He may have a general agent in each line of his business, and in each of several places. He may employ as many special agents as occasion may require. A universal agency is of very rare occurrence, the great majority of the cases being those which involve some form of general or special agency." Sparks seems to have been made the agent, with limited powers to transact all the business in the matter of selling musical instruments in the city of Harrodsburg and such other territory as might be agreed upon between the parties. Without deciding, we will assume, that he was a general agent for appellants to sell pianos in Harrodsburg. According to the terms of the contract, he had no authority except to solicit orders for pianos. Where an agent is intrusted with goods to sell for his principal, he has no right to sell or deliver them in payment of his own debt. The creditor who receives goods under such an arrangement, notwithstanding he may be acting in good faith and in ignorance that the goods did not belong to the agent, acquires no title thereto against the principal. Where the principal authorizes the agent to collect a demand, or receive payment of one, he cannot be bound by the action of the agent except he actually collect the money. The agent is not authorized to take the note of the debtor, payable to himself or to his principal. Mechem, Agency, § 354, says: "An agent intrusted with goods to sell for his principal has no right to sell or deliver them in payment of his own debt, or to pledge them as security for his own debt, and persons dealing with such an agent are bound to take notice of this limitation of his authority. A creditor therefore, who receives the goods under such an agreement, as well as his vendee, though acting in good faith, and in ignorance that the goods did not belong to the agent, acquires no title thereto, as against the principal." The same author, in § 375, says: "An agent authorized merely to collect a demand, or to receive payment of a debt, cannot bind his principal by any arrangement short of an actual collection and receipt of the money. He cannot, therefore, take in payment the note of the debtor, payable either to himself or to his principal; or the note or bond of himself, or of a third person; or a draft or order on a stranger, or horses, wheat, merchandise, or other property of any kind; nor can he set off a claim due from himself; or take property for his own use in payment." In Charles Brown Grocery Co. v. Becket, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 393, 57 S. W. 458, the court said: "The general rule is that the acts of an agent bind his principal within the scope of his apparent authority, but that the principal is never bound where the person dealing with the agent knows, or has reason to know, that the agent is exceeding his authority, or is perpetrating a fraud on his principal." In Hoffman v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 161, 23 L. ed. 539, it appeared that an agent of the company agreed to take in payment for the premium a horse for himself and a note to himself. The insurance company refused to recognize the transaction, and in passing upon the question the court said: "The exercise of such a power by the agent was liable to two objections,—it was ultra vires, and it was a fraud as respects the company. Hoffman must have known that neither Goodwin nor Thayer had any authority to enter into such an arrangement, and he was a party to the fraud. No valid contract as to the company could arise from such a transaction." In Bertholf v. Quinlan Bros. 68 Ill. 297, an agent had in his possession whisky for sale. He traded it for a piano. The court held that he had no authority to make such a contract, and that the principal was not bound thereby, and was entitled to recover possession of the whisky, or its value. In Holton v. Smith, 7 N. H. 451, an agent, with general authority to sell his principal's goods did so, and received in payment a debt due from himself to the purchaser. The court held that the principal was entitled to recover the goods. It said "Miller had an undoubted authority to sell the goods; but it was to sell them, not as his own, but as the goods of the plaintiff; and, acting as agent of the plaintiff, he had no right to exchange them for other goods, or for his own note. By the disposition he made of them he treated them as his own, and this disposition was not properly a sale, within the meaning of his authority to sell, but a delivery over, at a certain price, in payment of a demand against himself. Although in the nature of a sale, it is, in fact, a payment of his debt with goods instead of money. If it might also be considered as a purchase by himself at the same time, that will not avail, as an agent has no right to purchase of himself what he is intrusted to sell. Had Miller sold, and received the money, he might, to be sure, have squandered it, but that can make no difference. . . . If a principal may be subjected to loss in such modes, it is because he has thus far trusted to the fidelity of the agent, and this furnishes no reason why the law should permit the agent to defraud him in other cases." In Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89, a sewing machine agent had authority somewhat similar to the powers of Sparks in this case. He sold a machine under a contract that he would take part pay for it in board for himself. The court held that the contract was not binding on the company, saying: "He has no right to charge the security of his principal for his debt, or to make himself the debtor of the principal for the like amount in lieu of the person who owes the debt, without the consent of the principal to that effect. If an agent has authority to receive for his principal a debt due from a third party to him, and the agent owes a like amount, or a greater, he has no right to substitute himself as the debtor of the principal, giving him credit for the amount, or to set off the debt due by him to such third person." In McCulloch v. McKee, 16 Pa. 289, an agent was authorized to collect a debt. He took a note from the debtor payable to himself in settlement. The court held that it could not be done. In Trudo v. Anderson, 10 Mich. 357, 81 Am. Dec. 795, an agent was authorized to sell a horse, but he exchanged it for another. The court held that he had no power to do so. In Stewart v. Woodward, 50 Vt. 78, 28 Am. Rep. 488, a general agent for a merchant tailor agreed with a doctor to sell the principal's goods in payment of a medical bill which the agent owed him. The agent's authority was general. The court held that he could not be presumed to have the power to make such a contract for his own benefit at the expense of his principal. In Aultman v. Lee, 43 Iowa, 404, an agent for the sale of threshing machines agreed with the purchaser that he would take wheat from him in part payment of the notes given for the machine. The court held that he could not bind the principal by such contract. When the principal places goods in the hands of his agent to sell, the parties dealing with him are bound to take notice that there is a limitation upon his authority which prevents him from taking property in exchange for that which he has to sell, or from receiving in payment thereof the purchaser's note payable to the agent. If an agent has a debt to collect for his principal the debtor must take notice that there is a limitation upon the authority of the agent to receive anything in payment of it except money. If the agent cannot take a note payable to himself for a debt which he has in his hands to collect, or cannot take the note of another in payment of the demand, upon what principle can he sell the property which may be intrusted to him for that purpose and take a note payable to himself for the purchase money? In this case the appellee knew the piano belonged to appellants. He assumed that Sparks was acting as their agent in the sale of the piano. He was bound to know that there was such a limitation upon the power of the agent that he could not take the purchaser's note payable to himself for the purchase money of the piano. In Hoffman v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 161, 23 L. ed. 539, the Supreme Court expressly held that the agent had no right to take a note payable to himself for the premium due his principal. Any man with ordinary understanding ought to know that a firm handling a vast number of pianos, like appellants, would not send its agents over the country to sell pianos and take notes payable to themselves for the purchase money. It is not a question, however, of what he ought to know, but in a transaction like the one under consideration the purchaser is bound to know that there was a limitation upon the agent's authority which would prevent him from taking a note payable to himself for the purchase money. The proof shows that the selling price of the piano was $300, and yet Sparks sold it to the appellee for $120, besides taking the note payable to himself. The court erred in giving a peremptory instruction to the jury. On the facts shown in this record it should have told the jury, in the absence of any evidence to show that Sparks was authorized to sell the piano and take the note payable to himself for the purchase price, to find for appellants. There was nothing in this case to show that, in the business of selling pianos by agents, it was usual for them to take notes payable to themselves for the purchase money. Had such been shown, then it would appear to be an act within the scope of the agent's apparent authority. It is said in Hoffman v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 164, 23 L. ed. 539: "Within the sphere of the authority conferred, the act of the agent is as binding upon the principal as if it were done by the principal himself. But it is an elementary principle, applicable alike to all kinds of agency, that whatever an agent does can be done only in the way usual in the line of business in which he is acting. There is an implication to this effect arising from the nature of his employment, and it is as effectual as if it had been expressed in the most formal terms. It is present whenever his authority is called into activity, and prescribes the manner, as well as the limit, of its exercise."

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Hobson, J., dissenting:

It has often been held by this court that the acts of an agent within the apparent scope of his authority bind his principal; and that, where there is any evidence of fact, it must be left to the jury, and is not to be determined by the court, as a matter of law, on a motion for nonsuit. Appellants sent out their agent to sell pianos for them; they gave him possession of their instruments, assigned him certain territory in which he was to represent them, and authorized him to sell on credit. As to the public he was their representative in that territory. The selling of a piano was within the apparent scope of his authority, and they are bound by his sale, unless the circumstances were such as to apprise the purchaser that the agent was exceeding his authority, or such as to put a reasonable man on inquiry. It is said that the purchaser was put on inquiry by the fact that the piano was sold at $120, and a note taken payable to the agent. No weight is given in the opinion to the amount of the price. Pianos vary much in value, and there is not enough in this case to show that the purchaser was put on notice, by the amount asked for the piano, that something was wrong. At least, what weight should be attached to this circumstance is clearly a question for the jury. As to the taking of the note to himself, the agent having the power to sell on credit and take a note for the price, it was within the apparent scope of this authority to determine the form of the note. The purchaser had a right to assume that the agent took the note according to the course of business between him and his principal. A large part of the business of the country in the selling of sewing machines, pianos, and the like is done by agents who go from house to house and sell their wares on credit. It is not uncommon for the principal to require them to take the notes in their own names and then indorse them, so as to make them personally responsible for the notes. No authority can be found for the proposition, so far as I am aware, that the taking of a note by an agent in his own name is, as a matter of law, conclusive to the purchaser that the agent is exceeding his authority. None of the authorities cited by the court sustain this conclusion, and it is, at least, remarkable that, if such is the law, no case so holding can be found, when such a large part of the business of the country has for years been done in this way. As between two innocent persons, one of whom must suffer, the loss should fall on the principal who has armed the agent with apparent authority, and thus enabled him to obtain the advantage of the person with whom he trades, rather than on the purchaser, where the agent acts within the apparent scope of his authority, and there is nothing in the transaction to put the purchaser on notice that he is exceeding his authority. Where authority is conferred by parol the rule is that the apparent scope of it is a question for the jury. It seems to me the same rule should be applied where the agent is sent to take charge of his principal's interest in a territory distant from his principal, and the secret arrangements between the principal and the agent are unknown to the public dealing with him.

I am therefore of opinion that the case should be left to the jury, under proper instructions, and that a peremptory instruction should not be given, and in this dissent Burnam and Guffy, JJ., concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Josephine TOMSECEK et al., Respts.,
v.
TRAVELERS' INSURANCE COMPANY,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

A life insurance agent has no implied authority to accept as payment of a premium on a policy an agreement to give him credit upon his individual account, which he shall trade out with the insured in the ordinary course of business, and a policy providing that it shall not take effect until the first premium is paid will not become effective under such agreement, no credit being actually given to the agent, or by him to the company, in the usual course of business.

(January 28, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crawford County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs on an insurance policy, rendered in the circuit court for Crawford county. The defense, in the main, was noncompliance with the following condition of the insurance contract: "All premiums are payable at the home office in Hartford, Connecticut, but will be accepted if paid to an agent in exchange for a receipt signed by its president or secretary and countersigned by the agent designated thereon. This policy shall not take effect unless the first premium is paid while the insured is in good health." The evidence was to the following effect: Maurice M. Enright and Vincent J. Tomsecek were copartners in the business of running a meat market at the time the policy was issued, for a considerable time theretofore, and thereafter till the latter died. By the consent of Enright, Tomsecek and one Webb, agent for the defendant company, agreed that Tomsecek should take out a policy of life insurance in such company, paying the first premium by giving such agent credit on account at the meat market, as payment for meat furnished and to be furnished, to the extent thereof. An application was accordingly made to the company in due form, no mention being made of the agreement aforesaid. The application was accepted and a policy containing the condition before mentioned was forwarded to the agent for delivery, who sent it to Tomsecek by mail, not knowing that the latter was ill. Tomsecek was then in a hospital, too ill to do business. The policy was received at the place of business of Enright & Tomsecek, but was never brought to the latter's knowledge. It remained under seal as taken from the post-office till after he died. That occurred soon after the policy was received. No credit for the first payment on the policy was ever given to the agent as agreed upon, nor was such premium ever paid in any way. There was evidence to the effect that there was an understanding between the agent and Tomsecek that the latter should have an opportunity of examining the policy before deciding whether to accept it or not. The court excluded all evidence as to whether the agent had authority to accept anything in payment of the first premium upon the policy except money, upon the theory that the controversy in that regard was to be solved solely by the writings. It was in effect admitted by plaintiff's counsel on the trial that no payment was made on the policy in money or otherwise, unless the agreement in regard to payment being made by credit to the agent at the meat market operated as payment. The circuit judge stated in the course of the trial, without dissent by plaintiff's counsel, that he so understood the evidence and their position.

The jury found specially as follows: It was agreed between Tomsecek and Webb, defendant's agent, that the former should take out a policy in said company and that the first premium thereon should be paid by applying what was then due and what might become due from said agent to the firm of Enright & Tomsecek thereafter for meat, etc., furnished by them to him. The policy was mailed to Tomsecek in fulfillment of said agreement. It was not agreed between the agent and Tomsecek that the policy should not be in force until Tomsecek had an opportunity, after it was written up, to examine and accept it.

Thereafter the jury, by direction of the court, rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiffs for the face of the policy less $22 to cover the first premium and interest upon the balance, making $1,153. Defendant's counsel moved for judgment on the special verdict. The motion was denied and due exception taken to the ruling. Such counsel then moved the court for an order setting the special verdict and the general verdict also aside, and for judgment on the undisputed evidence or for a new trial, which motion was denied and the ruling duly excepted to. Judgment was then, on motion, rendered upon the verdict in favor of plaintiffs.

Mr. W. E. Howe, with Mr. A. H. Long, for appellant:

The policy contemplates its delivery to the insured subject to the payment of the premium.

McDonald v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 108 Wis. 213, 84 N. W. 154; Prahl v. Mutual Protection L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 608;

NOTE.—As to agent's power to use property of his principal for payment of his own debt, see Gerard v. McCormick (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 234, and note.

Rossiter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 31 Wis. 121, 64 N. W. 876.

The promise to pay was not payment.

McDonald v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 108 Wis. 213, 84 N. W. 154.

No agent had authority to waive payment.

Actual payment or a waiver of it must be shown before the policy can become binding upon the defendant.

Ibid.; Giddings v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 102 U. S. 108, 26 L. ed. 92; Ormond v. Fidelity Life Asso. 96 N. C. 158, 1 S. E. 796; Heiman v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 17 Minn. 154, Gil. 127, 10 Am. Rep. 154; St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Kennedy, 6 Bush, 450; Paine v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 2 C. C. A. 459, 10 U. S. App. 256, 51 Fed. 689; Misselhorn v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 30 Fed. 545; McClave v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 55 N. J. L. 187, 28 Atl. 78; Rossiter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 121, 64 N. W. 876.

Where the policy contains no receipt for premium, as in the case at bar, its possession raises no presumption of its payment, and the beneficiary, to establish a prima facie right to recover, must show that the premium had been paid.

Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Myers, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 875, 59 S. W. 30; 2 Beach, Ins. § 1335.

The actual payment of the premium during the good health of the applicant was a condition precedent to the liability of the company.

Reese v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 111 Ga. 482, 36 S. E. 637.

The application provides "that no agent of the company shall have any power to waive or modify any of the conditions of said insurance contract." This is a valid agreement.

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Small, 14 C. C. A. 33, 30 U. S. App. 127, 66 Fed. 490; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co. 70 Wis. 1, 35 N. W. 34; Enos v. Sun Ins. Co. 67 Cal. 621, 8 Pac. 379; Clevenger v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 2 Dak. 114, 3 N. W. 313; Porter v. United States L. Ins. Co. 160 Mass. 183, 35 N. E. 678; Cook v. Standard Life & Acc't. Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 12, 47 N. W. 568.

Messrs. J. P. Evans and O. B. Thomas for respondents.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Many suggestions are made in the briefs of counsel for respondents why the judgment is right and should be affirmed, which, in our view of the case, need not be considered. The learned trial court rightly decided that if the agreement between Tomsecek and appellant's agent, that the first premium on the policy might be paid otherwise than in money, and the delivery of the policy pursuant to such agreement, constituted a waiver by the company of payment of such premium and of the condition that the policy should not take effect unless such payments should be made while Tomsecek was in good health, then the policy took effect before Tomsecek died and plaintiffs were entitled to recover; otherwise appellant is entitled to judgment. Was the decision of that question in respondent's favor right? That is the proposition upon which this appeal turns.

Many authorities are cited to our attention to the effect that possession of a policy by the assured at the time of his death prima facie establishes all conditions necessary to its having taken effect as a binding insurance contract in his lifetime, notwithstanding it contains a stipulation that it shall not take effect unless the first premium is paid while the assured is in good health; that if such payment was not in fact made, a waiver thereof will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Some of such authorities hold to rather an extreme doctrine when applied to a policy which does not contain a receipt for payment of the first premium and indicates that an independent instrument, evidencing such payment, is to be delivered to the assured upon such payment being made, as in this case. To that extent they are not in harmony with McDonald v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 108 Wis. 213, 84 N. W. 154, and do not meet with our approval. The trial court applied the doctrine of such authorities to this case, and in that, as it seems, committed error. The court went further, not only holding that the agent waived, and had implied authority to waive, payment of the first premium while the applicant for insurance was in good health, but waived and had authority to waive payment of such premium in money and to make an agreement, binding on appellant, that payment might be made by applying the amount of the premium on the agent's indebtedness for meat and as a credit entitling him to further delivery of meat. The principle is familiar that the authority of an agent as to waiving conditions of an insurance policy before it takes effect is pretty broad, but it does not go beyond his actual authority and that reasonably implied from the nature of the business carried on. The rule in that regard is the same in respect to an agent for an insurance company as any other. There is no claim that the agent had actual authority to make the agreement found by the jury, so his authority in that regard must be tested wholly by what may be reasonably implied. It may be admitted that Webb was a general agent, and still the difficulty is not lessened, because it cannot be implied that he had any authority in excess of the power of the corporation, and it must be presumed that such power did not include the issue of policies of life insurance for anything but money.

Several cases are cited to our attention to sustain the decision that an agent may waive the conditions of an insurance policy calling for payment of the first premium in money, but none of them fit the facts of this case. The nearest approach to a situation similar to the one under consideration is that involved in Hancock Mut. L. Ins.

Co. v. Schlink, 175 Ill. 284, 51 N. E. 795. There the agent agreed to waive payment in money of a part of the first premium, such part not exceeding the amount allowed to him as his commission. The policy was sustained upon the ground that payment of the full amount going to the company was made in money, the court inferentially holding that the agent had no authority to waive payment thereof. The decision followed Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 90 Ill. 545, where the agent agreed to take part payment of the first premium out of the assured's saloon. In respect to the defense of nonpayment of the first premium in money, the court said: "As the amount paid in cash was more than enough to pay the premium on this policy, we see no ground for holding that the premium was not all paid in cash." The agent "was entitled to commissions for procuring the insurance, and if he saw proper to take out his commissions in the saloon, we know of no reason or authority to debar him from so doing."

So many loose expressions are found in text-books and legal opinions as well, as to the power of a general agent of an insurance company to waive the conditions of a policy calling for payment of premiums in money, that it is not to be wondered at that attorneys and courts as well sometimes go astray. A careful analysis of the authorities will show that with few exceptions, which are not of sufficient significance to be followed, the idea that the agent of an insurance company has implied authority to waive payment of premiums on an insurance policy in money and agree to take something in lieu thereof which is neither money nor an agreement to pay money, nor an equivalent to money to the insurance company when taken, has no support. In May, Ins. § 360d, it is said: "An agent authorized to deliver policies and receive payment may waive the payment of the premium in cash notwithstanding a stipulation in the policy to the contrary," citing Home Ins. Co. v. Gilman, 112 Ind. 7, 13 N. E. 118. In that case the agent agreed to receive credit on his own debt to the assured for the amount of the first premium, and to pay the insurance company the amount thereof, which agreement was fully carried out, the company actually receiving payment in money. The decision was grounded on the fact that the company received cash for the first premium, substantially according to the contract. The court said: "We are not required to decide what the rights of the parties would have been in case . . . the agent had failed to give the company credit and remit in the usual course." However, the court quoted, without explanation or qualification, and in a way to lead one astray if he fails to examine the supporting authorities, from § 360 of May, Ins., this language: "If the agent be authorized to receive the premium, an agreement between the assured and the agent that the latter will be responsible to the company for the amount, and hold the assured as his personal debtor therefor, is a waiver of the stipulation in the policy that it shall not be binding until the premium is received by the company or its accredited agent," citing Sheldon v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 25 Conn. 207, 65 Am. Dec. 565; Columbus Home Ins. Co. v. Curtis, 32 Mich. 402; Willouts v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 81 Ind. 300, 309. The text in May is supported by Sheldon v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 25 Conn. 207, 65 Am. Dec. 565, and Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Booker, 9 Heisk. 606, 24 Am. Rep. 344. In the last case mentioned the agreement was to the effect that the agent should give the assured time to make the first payment. There was no waiver of payment in money. In Sheldon v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. the facts were that the agent agreed to give the applicant time to make payment of the first premium, to take his note, payable to the company on short time for one half thereof, and his promise to pay such agent the other half, and to personally make the cash payment to the company. It was the custom between the company and the agent to charge the amount of the first premium to the latter upon forwarding to him the policy for delivery, and for the agent to make settlements with the company from time to time, and to remit money on account. There was no waiver of the payment in money, only a waiver of the time of payment. In Columbus Home Ins. Co. v. Curtis, the agent advanced the money for the assured for the first premium, actually paying it to the company, and it was held that there was a sufficient compliance with the provision of the policy requiring payment of the first premium as a condition of the policy going into effect. In Willouts v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. the facts were that the policy was issued to one of the medical examiners of the company and it was agreed between him and the agent that the dues to the applicant for services as medical examiner might be applied on the premiums. It was held that such agreement was binding on the company as to services actually rendered before the premium became due, because, to that extent, it did not really constitute a waiver of payment in money, as the amount due to the examiner from the company was equivalent to it to a cash payment to that extent.

Enough has been said to indicate the character of the authorities relied upon to show that a general agent of an insurance company has implied authority to waive the provision of an insurance policy calling for payment of the first premium in money. None of them go to the extent of holding that the agent may waive such payment and take something in lieu thereof which does not amount to payment to the corporation in cash, such as an agreement on the part of the agent to take pay for a premium in meat, no credit being given or payment actually made to the agent, or credit being given by him to the corporation in the usual course of business. The precise question we have here was decided in Hoffman

v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 92 U. S. 161, 23 L. ed. 539. There the first premium was paid to a local or special agent, by consent of the general agent of the company, in a horse, the cancellation of an indebtedness of the special agent to the applicant for insurance, a note to such agent and a note to the corporation. The transaction was held void, Swayne, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, saying: "It is an elementary principle, applicable alike to all kinds of agency, that whatever an agent does can be done only in the way usual in the line of business in which he is acting;" and the implication to that effect "is present whenever his authority is called into activity, and prescribes the manner as well as the limit of its exercise." It was further said, in effect, that as life insurance is a cash business, the agent of an insurance company, whether he be a general or a special agent, has no implied authority to take or agree to take personal property, such as a horse, in payment of a premium upon an insurance policy; that such an agreement, even if made by the company itself, would be ultra vires, and if made by an agent without the knowledge of the company it would not only be ultra vires but a fraud both upon the part of the agent and the applicant for insurance, for the latter must be presumed to know that an insurance premium cannot be legitimately paid in horses.

It would seem that nothing further need be said to show that the policy in question never became binding upon appellant. The jury found that the agent agreed to accept his own indebtedness for meat as part payment for the first premium and to take meat for the balance thereof. It is undisputed that such agreement was never carried out by the insured so as to obligate the agent to pay the company. Neither the company nor the agent received pay for the first premium. There is no analogy between this case and one where the agent merely agrees to give the applicant for insurance time to make the first payment, or agrees that he will advance the amount of the first payment himself, and actually does advance it, or agrees to charge himself with the first premium in his account with the company, according to a custom of doing business between himself and his principal, thereby becoming liable to the company. We must hold here that the agent had no implied authority to use the appellant's policy of insurance to pay his meat bills or to build up a credit for future purchases of meat. There are no circumstances disclosed in the evidence to avoid the effect of that conclusion.

The motion made by appellant's counsel for judgment on the special verdict should have been granted and the duty devolves upon this court to reverse the judgment and remand the cause with directions to strike out the general verdict and render judgment in favor of defendant on the special verdict, dismissing the complaint with costs.

So ordered.

57 L. R. A.

Albert GLOCKE, Sr., Respt.,

v.

Albert GLOCKE, Jr., Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

- *1. It is not essential to a condition subsequent in a conveyance of property, that it be created by express words, or that there be any express power in the writings to make re-entry for condition broken, or to do anything equivalent thereto.
2. If an aged parent conveys his property to his son to secure support for himself during the remainder of his life, whether the agreement calls for support generally or by paying to the grantor money or property in specific amounts at specified times, the presumption is that the primary purpose of the grantor is to secure personal performance by the grantee of the obligations incurred by him.
3. In the circumstances above stated, there being no adequate remedy for such a breach of the agreement by the grantee as will prevent the grantor from realizing the purpose of the grant other than a restoration, so far as practicable, of the parties to their former position, a court of equity will read out of the papers evidencing the agreement a condition subsequent upon which the property was conveyed, enforceable by the grantor the same as any other such condition in the conveyance of property.
4. In case of a conveyance of property as and for the purpose above indicated, and of the grantee, by his conduct, rendering impossible of realization the purpose of the grantor, if the latter elects to rescind the transaction for breach of condition subsequent, a court of equity will take jurisdiction to give a protective remedy to him by establishing his status as owner of the property. It takes jurisdiction in such a case, not to forfeit a title, but to quiet a title already forfeited for nonperformance of the condition subsequent. To the end that the conditional grantor's remedy may be complete, it will cancel all writings and records that might otherwise be used, presently or in the future, to his prejudice, acting, not upon the theory that they are avoided by the act of the court, but that they are void independent thereof, and that equity jurisdiction is required to settle the status of the property in accordance with the facts, on the principle of quia timet, and to clear away those things which, though void in fact, might, by reason of their apparent force, be used by the holders thereof in some way, presently or in the future, wrongfully.

(February 18, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant Albert Glocke, Jr., from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Waupaca County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce rescission of a contract granting real estate in consideration of support. Affirmed.

*Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

NOTE.—For rights under a deed in consideration of the support of a person for life, see also, in this series, Dreischach v. Serfass (Pa.) 3 L. R. A. 836; Cook v. Bartholomew (Conn.) 13 L. R. A. 452; and Tuttle v. Burgett (Ohio) 30 L. R. A. 214.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to enforce rescission of a contract for nonperformance of a condition subsequent. The issues raised by the pleadings sufficiently appear by the findings of fact and conclusions of law. For the purpose of this appeal such findings and conclusions may be stated as follows: May 23, 1899, and for many years prior thereto, plaintiff owned and possessed as his homestead the lands described in the complaint. Defendant Albert Glocke, Jr., is plaintiff's son and is twenty-five years of age. Defendant Emma Glocke is the son's wife. May 23d, aforesaid, plaintiff, by a deed with full covenants, conveyed the lands mentioned to his said son, receiving as the only consideration therefor an agreement, executed by the latter and his wife, secured by a mortgage for $5,000 on said lands, by which agreement it was stipulated that plaintiff should have the use of a designated part of the dwelling house on said lands during his life, the use of 1 acre of land for a garden, the right to go upon any part of the premises at his pleasure, and the right to permit such persons as he might desire to come upon the land to visit him; that defendants would manure and plow plaintiff's garden spot when requested to do so; that they would give plaintiff good and proper care and nursing in case of his sickness, and at such times obey his request to procure a doctor and pay the doctor for medical services; that they would furnish plaintiff, at any time he might desire, any horse that might be on the farm, with rig and harness, ready for his use to go anywhere he might choose; that the occupancy of the premises by the defendants should commence March 1, 1900; that March 1, 1901, and annually thereafter during plaintiff's life, defendants would pay him $75 in money; that they would, during his life, deliver to him each year at threshing time 40 bushels of good wheat, at digging time 40 bushels of good potatoes, at shearing time 10 pounds of the best wool, in November 100 pounds of good beef and two hogs weighing not less than 200 pounds each, 2 quarts of fresh milk every day, 1 dozen eggs daily from March 1 to November 1, 3 pounds good fresh butter every week, 1 fat chicken every week, at Thanksgiving time 2 fat geese, and all the good dry wood he might desire for fuel, ready for the stove; that in case plaintiff should die leaving a widow, she should have the use during her life of a designated part of the dwelling house as aforesaid, all the good dry fuel she should need, prepared for the stove, and one half as much money, wheat, potatoes, beef, pork, wool, butter, eggs, milk, chickens, and geese as that agreed to be furnished plaintiff, and at the time designated for furnishing the same to him; that on the full performance of all the conditions aforesaid to be performed by the defendants, both as to the plaintiff and as to his widow should he die leaving one, after his death and the death of his widow, if there should be one, the said mortgage should become void and of no effect, and be canceled of record.

.. L. R. A.

As soon as defendants took possession of the farm under the aforesaid agreement, they became intolerably abusive toward plaintiff. They failed, nearly from the first, to carry out any part of the aforesaid agreement. They did not perform any of such agreements except to furnish butter and eggs and milk for about ten days, though they were repeatedly requested to comply in every respect with their contract. Subsequent to the making of the contract plaintiff married and took his wife to live with him on the farm. Defendants immediately thereafter became intolerably abusive toward her. April 5, 1900, without the consent of plaintiff or his knowledge, defendants left the premises to live on a farm purchased by them, some 20 miles away, taking all their belongings with them, after which time they made no attempt whatever to fulfil any of the obligations of said agreement. By reason of such removal they rendered themselves wholly incapable of complying with their contract. After such removal defendants freely asserted to plaintiff that they would not abide by their said agreement, and they gave out publicly that they would sell or lease the place, or commit waste thereon. The premises are worth about $8,000. Plaintiff never gave up possession thereof other than as contemplated in the contract, but is now in possession the same as before the contract was executed.

The conclusion of law was that the transactions between the parties, consisting of the making of the deed, mortgage, and contract, should be deemed rescinded and all rights which the parties obtained through such transaction extinguished, and the title to the property involved adjudged to be in plaintiff the same as if such transaction had never occurred.

Defendants alleged in their answer, by way of counterclaim, that when the contract was made, which was attempted to be reduced to writing by the making of the deed, written agreement and mortgage, it was a material part thereof that a large amount of the personal property and farming utensils in use and for use on the farm should go with the farm to the defendants as part of the consideration for the agreements on their part contained in the written contract referred to; that by mutual mistake the papers were so drawn as not to carry out that part of the arrangement between the parties, and that plaintiff has refused to let the defendants have any part of said personal property. There was a prayer for a reformation of the agreement and deed so as to embody the part alleged to have been omitted therefrom.

Judgment was rendered for plaintiff in accordance with the conclusions of law as before stated.

Mr. Gabe Bouck, with Mr. C. F. Crane, for appellant:

The agreement is not for the support and maintenance of the plaintiffs, but for the payment of life annuities in money and specific articles.

In such cases the only remedy is by foreclosure.

Peterson v. Oleson, 47 Wis. 122, 2 N. W. 94.

When the agreement is for maintenance and support, in a proper case there can be a rescission.

Beckman v. Beckman, 86 Wis. 655, 57 N. W. 1117; Hartstein v. Hartstein, 74 Wis. 1, 41 N. W. 721; Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209; Bresnahan v. Bresnahan, 46 Wis. 386, 1 N. W. 39; Delong v. Delong, 56 Wis. 514, 14 N. W. 591; Knutson v. Bostrak, 99 Wis. 469, 75 N. W. 156.

Messrs. E. L. Browne and E. E. Browne, for respondent:

In the case at bar it would be unjust to compel the plaintiff to resort to foreclosure proceedings, wait one year before he could sell the premises to enforce his judgment of foreclosure, at the end of which time he could only hope to receive $5,000, in which event the plaintiff would lose his old home where he had lived for forty-five years, lose all the benefits he expected to derive from his contract with his son, and lose $3,000 in money.

Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209; Bresnahan v. Bresnahan, 46 Wis. 385, 1 N. W. 39; Blake v. Blake, 56 Wis. 392, 14 N. W. 173; Delong v. Delong, 56 Wis. 514, 14 N. W. 591; Reoch v. Reoch, 98 Wis. 201, 73 N. W. 989; Knutson v. Bostrak, 99 Wis. 469, 75 N. W. 156; Willard, Eq. Jur. 302.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The disposition of this case by the trial court was not complete in that there was a failure to make findings covering the allegations of the counterclaim constituting a cause of action for a reformation of the deed. However, appellant does not appear to have been prejudiced thereby, because the evidence did not establish such allegations with sufficient certainty to warrant findings in his favor. It is elementary that a written contract or instrument cannot be reformed so as to include matters alleged to have been omitted therefrom through mutual mistake, or mistake of one party and fraud of the other, without entirely clear and satisfactory proof of all the facts involved,—proof which will admit of no reasonable controversy. Meiswinkel v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 75 Wis. 147, 6 L. R. A. 200, 43 N. W. 669. In such a case the party upon whom the burden of proof rests must do more than to produce a mere preponderance of the evidence tending to establish the facts in his favor to a reasonable certainty, as in an ordinary civil case. The court cannot overturn the solemn agreements of parties, as indicated by their writings, by merely choosing between conflicting reasonable inferences, where there is a fair controversy yet remaining. The inferences must be substantially either all in favor of the reformation requested, or must so overbalance the inferences to the contrary that a reasonable person would not be liable to act thereon otherwise than in favor of the major inferences. Many courts hold the degree of certainty with which a contract must be established to warrant changing a written agreement, intended to embody that which the minds of the parties met upon but which fails to do so, is the same as that required to warrant conviction in a criminal case, i. e., beyond a reasonable doubt. This court has not gone quite that far, but has followed the rule which generally prevails, that the facts must be established, as before indicated, beyond reasonable controversy. Perhaps it may well be said that the difference between the two rules is quite shadowy and inconsequential, yet it is considered that there is a difference. In Kropp v. Kropp, 97 Wis. 137, 72 N. W. 381, the language used was: "The rule which governs in this class of cases, that the facts requisite to a recovery must appear by clear and satisfactory evidence, or, as is usually said, the proof of the facts must be entirely plain and convincing." In a later case, Fillingham v. Nichols, 108 Wis. 49, 84 N. W. 15, speaking on the same subject, the court said the proof should be such as to establish the facts "beyond reasonable controversy." That language is probably more comprehensive than any other of the various expressions commonly used. The Supreme Court of the United States uses similar language in respect to the subject: "In each case the burden rests upon the moving party of overcoming the strong presumption arising from the terms of a written instrument. If the proofs are doubtful and unsatisfactory, if there is a failure to overcome this presumption by testimony entirely plain and convincing beyond reasonable controversy, the writing will be held to express correctly the intention of the parties." Howland v. Blake, 97 U. S. 624, 24 L. ed. 1027.

A brief review of the evidence will be sufficient to demonstrate that it comes far short of satisfying the standard above indicated. Appellant Albert Glocke said that when the paper was made the understanding was that the farm implements would stay on the place. Defendant Emma Glocke said the same and that respondent consented to give appellant the farm and personal property. Neither of the defendants testified that there was anything said about personal property being mentioned in the conveyance or contract. Both testified that they knew within a few days after the papers were drawn that respondent claimed the personal property and that no mention thereof was made therein. They did not make any complaint in respect thereto or intimate in any way that any mistake had been made in the writings. With full knowledge of the facts, and without objection, nearly a year after the papers were made, they entered upon the performance of their obligations, and there is nothing to show that they ceased performance because of any breach upon respondent's part, either of the written contract or the contract they claimed should have been reduced to writing. Respondent testified that he did not agree to convey the personal property or have any such thing in mind; that the only time such property was mentioned was when the papers were being signed, when he said to appellants: "If you keep me good, everything will be left. Not a pin will be taken off. If you do not keep me good I will do what I have a mind to," and that he never said anything other than that to anyone. The scrivener who drew the conveyance and mortgage testified that respondent used some such language; that no directions were given to him to embody in the conveyance any reference to the personal property; that the parties talked partly in German and partly in English. Two relatives of appellant testified that respondent said to them the day the papers were made that he had given everything to his son. So it will be seen that the evidence, that the parties agreed that the conveyance of property to appellant should include respondent's personal property on the farm, is not entirely clear and satisfactory. All parties were present when the papers were drawn. Appellant must have heard and participated in giving directions to the scrivener; yet there is an entire absence of testimony as to anything having been said to him about mentioning personal property in the papers. The evidence corroborating appellant's version of the matter is no stronger than that corroborating respondent's version. The case stands substantially on the evidence of the opposing parties. It is far too weak to warrant changing their written contract.

The claim is made that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence. As we understand defendants' counsel, they do not contend but that substantial breaches of defendants' obligations were established if the contract between the parties required them to reside upon the farm or where they could render respondent personal attention, but say the contract will not bear that construction. In our judgment it will not reasonably admit of any other construction. Respondent's purpose clearly was to make provision for his support during the balance of his life, including care and nursing in sickness and all the attention which a person in his declining years might probably require. It is not reasonable that he would have thought of intrusting his future in those respects to anyone but a member of his family, or that he would have made such a disposition of his property as he did with the idea that his immediate associate or associates during the last years of his life might be a stranger or strangers,—persons who would have no interest whatever to care for him but the expectation of pecuniary compensation to be paid by another; that he should have mere hired attention. Respondent had in mind the benefits of filial regard,—something which, under ordinary circumstances, uninfluenced by disturbing conditions, is invaluable; something which can neither be estimated in nor bought with money, nor made the equivalent of anything else in a mere commercial transaction. The natural yearning of a person to have in his declining years the full benefit of that regard is well illustrated by the frequency with which persons, circumstanced as respondent was when the transaction in question occurred, part with all or substantially all their property, trusting to the beneficiary to administer the same with the fidelity which becomes a son, in face of the fact shown by experience, that failure, absolute failure, will probably result, and be accompanied with loss of the enjoyment that legitimately belongs to the parental relation; and not only by loss thereof, but a substitution therefor of the most annoying of all hostile relations that can exist between acquaintances not going to the extent of imperiling safety of person or property in a physical sense. Such contracts have come to be looked upon as almost if not quite presumptively improvident in their inception, and in that view courts of equity have gone to great lengths to remedy the mischief by reading out of them a condition, where a covenant only is expressed, upon which may be founded, on principle, a right of rescission where justice requires it for the protection of the weak, the exercise of which will undo the mischief ab initio and restore the parties, substantially, to their original situation.

In this case it seems that the hope and expectation of filial regard was the moving cause on the part of respondent in transferring his property to his son. The contract contained the characteristic features found in most agreements of its class, with which courts have commonly had to deal. It obligates appellant and his wife to give respondent good and proper care and nursing in sickness and to hold themselves ready at all times to execute respondent's request to procure for him a physician; and it required the doing of things for him from day to day that could not be done other than by the personal presence of the son and his wife, or one of them, and which would not in the nature of things have been intrusted to anyone with power to delegate it to another. We cannot doubt but that one of the primary considerations for the conveyance made by respondent was the agreements, as he understood them, which would secure to him the personal presence of his son during his last years. That is as plainly written into the papers by reasonable construction of them as if it were literally expressed. The contract reposed in appellant a trust of the most important character,—that of caring for the daily wants of an aged parent in health and sickness to the end of his life; a trust which only the trustee, under proper conditions, could properly exercise,—one that never ought to be delegated, never can be properly delegated to another not in the same relation. Divan v. Loomis, 68 Wis. 150, 31 N. W. 760. Looking at the evidence in the light of common experience, and the construction generally put upon instruments similar to the one before us, we must hold that it required defendants to live on the land conveyed and to personally execute the agreements on their part to be performed; and that when they abandoned the farm and set up a home 20 miles away, they incapacitated themselves from performing their obligations,—breached the same in such a way as to take from respondent a substantial part of the consideration for the conveyance of his property, a part which, taken away, rendered what remained entirely inadequate to satisfy the purpose of the conveyance, and without which it would never have been made. That renders it unnecessary for us to examine in detail the evidence to see whether it sustains each particular violation of the contract of which defendants were convicted by the finding of the trial court.

The next proposition submitted by appellant's counsel is that a transaction of the kind in question is not subject to rescission unless it was made generally for maintenance and support; that it is not subject to rescission where the agreement between the parties calls for specific payments of money or the delivery of property from time to time, the value of which can be readily ascertained, and a mortgage was given to secure performance thereof as in this case, though the agreement may also provide for care and nursing, since damages for a breach in that regard can be measured in money. In view of the law that performance of such a contract as the one in question is not delegable, it would seem that counsel's proposition has been covered by what has been said if it were not for Peterson v. Oleson, 47 Wis. 122, 2 N. W. 94, upon which he relies. The contract there passed upon was similar in all respects to the one before us, and it was distinctly held that the remedy by foreclosure of the mortgage, not by an action in equity for a reclamation of the property, applied. The real basis for the jurisdiction of the court in this class of cases, it seems, was not thoroughly established and comprehended. In the first case where the court had the subject under consideration, Bogie v. Bogie, 41 Wis. 209, the facts were that the plaintiff, an aged person, gave the defendant, his son, a deed of his property in the usual form, taking back an agreement as consideration therefor, binding the grantee to pay certain sums of money to other members of the grantor's family, and to support his father during the remainder of his life. The son failed to perform any part of his agreement. This court decided that it could not be held that performance of the contract by the defendant was a condition subsequent and that the conveyance could not be rescinded for non-performance of such a condition, but that it was within the power of the court to deal with the situation and remedy the wrong by annulling the whole transaction between the parties, forfeiting the title to the property to the father on the ground of fraud, or to prevent the fraud that would otherwise be consummated. No attempt was made to justify the decision on principle, other than by an observation that the equity power of the court to compel specific performance of a contract, where failure to perform would be a fraud upon the adverse party, includes, necessarily, power to annul a contract or conveyance where that is required to prevent injustice. That rule, perhaps, was not broad enough to govern Peterson v. Oleson, upon the theory that damages for the breach complained of were susceptible of measurement in money, and the parties had limited the remedy for the breach by giving the mortgage to secure performance of the contract. It is significant that Peterson v. Oleson has not been followed in any subsequent decision. We are unable to find that it has ever been cited as authority. It seems to be out of harmony with Bogie v. Bogie, except upon the theory suggested, and out of harmony with numerous cases that have been since decided, and that it has been impliedly overruled. It is perhaps unfortunate that the real situation in that regard has not heretofore been made significant by some direct reference thereto, since counsel for appellant seem to have relied upon Peterson v. Oleson, largely, in bringing this appeal, and it is not improbable that such case may have ruled many cases in trials at the circuit, which have not been brought to the attention of this court.

The only case after Bogie v. Bogie, in which the subject under consideration received attention here, except Peterson v. Oleson, and in which the former was followed, not recognizing any other ground for relief than the one therein stated, is Bresnahan v. Bresnahan, 46 Wis. 385, 1 N. W. 39. When the court reached Blake v. Blake, 56 Wis. 392, 14 N. W. 173, it was suggested that the stipulations made by the grantee in the conveyance, or in the contract forming the consideration therefor, might, by construction, be deemed to constitute a condition subsequent, though in form mere covenants. In Delong v. Delong, 56 Wis. 514, 14 N. W. 591, decided at the next term of the court, that suggestion was referred to in connection with references to the first two cases mentioned, the court saying that in each of such cases the obligation of the son rested in covenant, not in condition. True, it rested in covenant in form, but in condition by the rule of construction which the court intimated in Blake v. Blake might be applied to such a transaction, and which the court later repeatedly held was the true ground for equitable interference. In Gilchrist v. Fowen, 95 Wis. 428, 70 N. W. 585, the consideration for the conveyance was payment of a sum of money to a person named therein and support of the grantor during his life. The grantee accepted the deed and thereby impliedly agreed to render to the grantor the consideration named therein. In that, the transaction differed from each of those where there was a written agreement. The court held that what was a covenant in form should be held to be really a condition subsequent, the breach of which, with re-entry by the grantor, would operate to re-vest the title to the property conveyed in the grantor. In Knutson v. Bostrak, 99 Wis. 469, 75 N. W. 156, the facts, in all essential particulars, were the same as in the case at hand. Plaintiff conveyed property, consisting of a farm and farm implements which were for use and in use in connection with such farm, all of the value of $8,000 or thereabouts, to the defendant, his son. The grantor was an old man and made such conveyance to provide for his support and that of his wife the balance of their lives. As evidence of the purpose of the conveyance the son, at the time of the conveyance and as the consideration therefor, gave to his father a written agreement promising to support him and his wife during the remainder of their lives or the life of either of them, to provide them a home on the farm during such period in the dwelling house there situated, and in a part thereof particularly designated, and to do many other things similar to those which appellant promised to do for respondent here. Performance of the agreement was secured by the son by a mortgage on the property conveyed. The court held that a foreclosure of the mortgage was not the only remedy for breach of the agreement, no reference being made to Peterson v. Olson; that the agreement contemplated personal attention of the son to the wants of his parents as indicated in the agreement, services which he could not delegate, and that performance of the agreement should be held by construction to be a condition subsequent.

The early cases to which we have referred were cited, the court saying, in effect, that it is in accordance with such cases for a court of equity to set aside such a conveyance for breach of condition subsequent. That was not strictly accurate, as we have seen, so far as relates to the precise ground upon which the court rested its decisions in such cases at the start, it being there distinctly held that the obligation assumed by the grantee did not rest in condition and that relief could not be granted on that ground. However, it declared distinctly, what was the necessary conclusion from the history of the subject, that out of such a transaction as the one in question the court may, by rules of judicial construction peculiar to courts of equity, properly read a condition, thereby holding obligations which in form rest in covenant to rest in condition; or, in other words, that a conveyance made under such circumstances is not absolute,—is not to be deemed to have been so intended by the parties,—but was made and intended to have been made upon condition subsequent; and that the title to the property conveyed may be divested from the grantee and revested in the grantor the same as in any other case of a conveyance upon such a condition. That rule is reasonable. If any of the situations where equity, by construction, so called, may arbitrarily, if necessary, turn a transaction into something entirely different from what the parties thereto expressed in their writings in order to do justice, can be supported on principle, the one under consideration can. If courts of equity did not possess power to do that, they would be shorn of much of their efficiency to protect the weak, to prevent the realization of contemplated frauds, of unconscionable bargains, and, generally, of administering justice between man and man. Probably no situation can be named where the exercise of that important power is more needed than just such as the one before us,—one where a confiding parent, in his old age, trusting largely to the affectionate regard of his son, conveys to the latter all his property to secure support and personal care for the balance of his days, and the consideration, by the wrongful conduct of the son, so far fails that there is no efficient remedy that can be applied to right the wrong other than to restore the parent to the ownership and possession of his property. In such a case the court does not lend its jurisdiction to effect a forfeiture. The rule in that regard is not violated. The forfeiture, or rescission, as it is sometimes called, is effected by the acts of the grantor, by his re-entry, or its equivalent, for condition broken. Equity lends its aid to quiet the title, assaït in Knutson v. Bostrak, 99 Wis. 469, 75 N. W. 156. It lends its aid to "set aside the conveyances." Equity deals with the situation the same as with any other where a reversion of title has taken place by re-entry, or its equivalent, for condition broken. It establishes the title to the property in accordance with the facts and clears away all apparently interfering writings and records, giving such other relief as may be necessary to fully accomplish that end. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 112 Wis. 385, 88 N. W. 300.

An examination of the authority by which Bogie v. Bogie was supported in the opinion, and others cited to the attention of the court on the argument, bears out what has been said, notwithstanding the remark there found that the decision could not be justified upon the doctrine of forfeiture for breach of condition subsequent. Reid v. Burns, 13 Ohio St. 49, is the only case particularly referred to. Remarks are there made indicating that the judicial idea was that the controversy turned on fraud,—the right to a rescission for fraud. Surely the idea of rescission for fraud in the making of the contract would not apply to such a case. The subject does not seem to have been carefully considered. If the doctrine of rescission by election of one party to a contract for breach of condition subsequent by the other party was definitely in mind, no clear statement thereof appears in the language of the court. Tracey v. Sacket, 1 Ohio St. 54, 59 Am. Dec. 610, was referred to, but that went on the ground of undue influence in the making of the contract, and the evidence was ample to sustain that theory. Story, Eq. Jur. 692 et seq., and Willard, Eq. Jur. 302 et seq., are referred to. Both authorities, where cited, treat of the power of a court of equity to clear away those things existing after a rescission by the party for nonperformance of obligations without which the contract would not have been made, and for the breach of which there is no adequate remedy other than a rescission, which have no force in fact but may be used by persons having apparent rights thereunder to the prejudice of the rescinding party. After going over all phases of equitable interference in such matters, Willard says (Potter's ed. p. 304): "It is obvious from the preceding views that the jurisdiction exercised in cases of this sort is founded upon the administration of a protective or preventive justice. The party is relieved upon the principle, as it is technically called, of quia timet; that is, for fear that such agreements, whatever may be the character of the instrument, may be vexatiously or injuriously used against him, when the evidence to impeach them may be lost, or that they may now throw a cloud over his title or interest." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 701, in summing up the matter, uses similar language. The idea expressed is that equity is not invoked to obtain a forfeiture or to rescind the contract itself; that the plaintiff's rights to that extent may be vindicated by his own election and act; that what he needs to obtain a judicial establishment of his status in regard to the thing in controversy according to the facts, so he may be freed from danger from outstanding agreements or conveyances which, though void, are apparently good upon their face, and might in some way, presently or in the future, be used to his prejudice. The court so treated the matter in Devereaux v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 103, a case cited to the attention of this court in Bogie v. Bogie. Leach v. Leach, 4 Ind. 628, 58 Am. Dec. 642, is another case brought to the attention of the court in Bogie v. Bogie. There the court acted on the authority of Jenkins v. Jenkins, 3 T. B. Mon. 327, Scott v. Scott, 3 B. Mon. 2, Devereaux v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 103, and Hefner v. Yount, 8 Blackf. 455, all of which cases except the last were cited by counsel in Bogie v. Bogie. The Indiana court decided, as regards the real situation of parties circumstanced as appellant and respondent were after the making of the papers evidencing their agreement, that the grantee holds the land upon condition subsequent that he will in all things substantially comply with his covenant, and in such cases the failure to perform the obligation is a breach of condition subsequent, and a forfeiture of the estate forms a proper subject for the interference of a court of chancery. In Hefner v. Yount, 8 Blackf. 455, the facts were similar to those in Bogie v. Bogie, and the court decided that the grantee held the property conveyed to him subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of a condition subsequent. In Richter v. Richter, 111 Ind. 456, 12 N. E. 698, the facts were quite similar to those in the case before us, including the element of a mortgage to secure performance on the part of the grantee and promisee. The court, looking at all the circumstances under which the papers were made, said: "Giving full effect to the rule that conditions subsequent, as they 'go in destruction and defeasance of estates, are odious in law and shall be taken strictly,' we are, nevertheless, constrained to the conclusion that the deed and mortgage taken together, create an estate in the grantee upon the condition subsequent, that the latter shall perform the terms stipulated in the mortgage. True, neither the deed nor the mortgage states in express terms that the estate is granted upon condition, but the word 'condition' is not necessary to the creation of an estate upon condition, if it plainly appears from the words used that the intent of the parties was to create an estate of that description." The controlling circumstance in that case, and in most of the cases of the class to which it belongs, by which courts are enabled to reach the conclusion that the intention of the parties was that the estate granted should be held upon condition, was that the grantor was an old man, that he made the conveyance, not only to secure the performance of the obligations referred to in the writings, but performance thereof by the particular person therein obligated,—performance with that affectionate regard for the welfare of the grantor which an aged father has a right to expect of his son and which he has no right to expect from a stranger or any person not standing near to him in the family relation. In such a case, if the purpose of the agreement substantially fails of realization, nothing short of a restoration of the original status as to the property involved is an adequate remedy. So nothing short of that could be reasonably said to have been in the minds of the parties at the inception of their contract as the consequence that might follow from a breach of it. In that situation "a condition subsequent arises by clear implication." 2 Washb. Real Prop. 7.

Nothing further need be said to demonstrate that the doctrine of Peterson v. Oleason, upon which counsel for appellant chiefly relies, and the doctrine of Bogie v. Bogie, so far as it is to the effect that relief in such a case cannot go upon the ground of forfeiture for nonperformance of a condition subsequent, is not the law; and that by repeated decisions of this and other courts the law has been firmly established that where a son obtains title and possession of his father's property, giving as a consideration therefor his promise to support the grantor for life, such promise, whether the manner in which it is to be kept be definitely specified in the writings or not, is not delegable; that the property conveyed is held upon condition subsequent; that for a breach thereof the title thereto will, at the election of the grantor, no sufficient equitable considerations to the contrary standing in the way, revert without judicial aid, the same as in any other case of breach of condition subsequent; and that the grantor may have the aid of a court of equity for such appropriate relief as may be necessary to judicially establish his status as regards the property and quiet his title thereto, removing any adverse claim or outstanding paper in regard thereto that may exist, which might be used, presently or in the future, prejudicially to him. That amply justifies the judgment appealed from.

Judgment affirmed.

Mary GERRARD, Respt.,
v.
LA CROSSE CITY RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The court's telling the jury the legal effect of their answers to questions submitted to them for a special verdict is ground for reversal.
2. A street railroad company cannot remove snow from its tracks to the adjacent roadway in such a manner as to leave a deep ditch and render the street unsafe and dangerous for public travel, without liability for injuries to travelers caused thereby, although such liability is not imposed by the ordinance conferring its franchise.
3. Whether or not a traveler in a cutter drawn by one horse is negligent in attempting to cross to the opposite side of the street-car track, which is in a depression about a foot deep, when his progress on the side on which he has been traveling is obstructed, and whether or not he does so in an ordinarily prudent manner, are questions for the jury.

(February 18, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Crosse County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Winslow, J.:

This is an action to recover for personal injuries. The facts were substantially as follows: The defendant is a street railway company operating its tracks in the city of La Crosse. One section of the ordinance giving the company the right to operate its railroad provided that the railway company should not allow snow or ice to accumulate on its tracks in a quantity sufficient to obstruct or hinder the passage of carriages or sleighs, and should not deposit the same on any portion of any street, so as to obstruct or render the same unsafe, or interfere with ordinary travel thereon. Market street, in the city of La Crosse, runs east and west, and is 66 feet in width, and the defendant operates a single track upon the said street; the track being located in the center of the street. The width of the roadway between the curbs is 38 feet; the width of the railway track is 5 feet; thus leaving a distance on each side of the track of 16½ feet. Upon the night of December 11 and 12, 1899, there was a severe snowstorm, 14 to 16 inches deep. On the morning of the 12th the tenants on the north side of Market street at the place of the accident hereafter named, shoveled the snow from their sidewalks and curb onto the roadway, and spread it out between the curb and the track. The defendant used an electric sweeper to clear its tracks, but in order to operate the same it is necessary to clean the rails, in order to secure contact of the wheel with the rail. For this purpose early in the morning of the 12th two men were sent over the track on Market street to shovel the snow from each rail, which they did; making a groove in the snow the width of a shovel over each rail, and throwing the snow on either side. In the afternoon of the same day the electric sweeper was put on, and swept all of the snow from the track, and a strip 16 inches wide on the north side thereof, and threw it all on the south side of the track; leaving the track in a sort of a trench, with sloping sides of snow. Between this time and the 19th of December the street was used in the usual way by teams, and the surface was worn and packed down hard; the temperature during that time being such that there was little, if any, melting. On December 19th, on the north side of the track at the place of the accident, there began a rise or slope to the north 11 to 14 inches in height in a distance of somewhere from 1½ to 3 feet, from which place to the curb the surface was nearly level. About noon of the 19th, the plaintiff, who was a woman fifty years of age, and accustomed to handling horses, was riding in a cutter drawn by a gentle horse, went on the north side of Market street, and stopped and hitched her horse for a few moments, and went into a store. Coming out of the store, she got into the cutter and started on west, and, after proceeding a short distance, found a delivery wagon standing so that she could go no farther west upon the north side of the track. She then turned and drove across the railroad track in order to get by the delivery wagon, and while so doing the sleigh tipped over as it went down the slope on the north side of the track, and she was thrown out and injured. The jury returned the following special verdict: "(1) Did the defendant company, at or about the time alleged in plaintiff's complaint, allow snow or ice to accumulate upon and between the rails of its track at the point where it is alleged the injury in question occurred, in a quantity sufficient to obstruct or hinder the passage of vehicles or sleighs? No (by the court). (2) Did the defendant railway company, in the removal of the snow or ice from its railway track, on or about the 12th or 13th day of December, 1899, at the point on Market street where the alleged injury to plaintiff occurred, deposit such snow or ice, or any sufficient quantity thereof, upon the north side of the north rail of said track, so as to unreasonably obstruct or render travel by vehicles unsafe at the point in question? No. (3) If you answer question No. 2 'Yes,' then was the removal or deposit of such snow or ice by the railway company the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury? Not answered. (4) Did the defendant railway company, by the removal of the snow or ice from its track on or about the 12th or 13th of December, 1899, leave a deep ditch or gully where such snow or ice had been so removed, with high and steep sides, in or near the center of said street, so as to render travel upon such street at the point where the alleged injury to plaintiff occurred unsafe or dangerous for public travel? Yes. (5) If you answer question No. 4 'Yes,' then was the leaving of such ditch or gully, with high and steep sides, by the defendant railway company, the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury? Yes. (6) Was the plaintiff, at the time and place when the alleged injury occurred, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence in attempting to cross the railway track at the point in question? Yes. (7) If you answer question No. 6 'No,' then was such failure to exercise ordinary care and prudence the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury? Not answered. (8) If it shall finally be determined that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, at what sum do you assess her damages? $7,000." Judgment was rendered upon this verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

NOTE.—As to liability of street railway company for defect in street, whether caused by snow or otherwise, see notes to Groves v. Louisville R. Co. (Ky.) 52 L. R. A. 448.

Messrs. Woodward & Lees, for appellant:

The accident is chargeable to the contributory negligence of plaintiff.

The only possible danger being in plain sight, and her attention not being diverted from it at the time, she was negligent in attempting to drive across at a sharp angle, when it was obviously and perfectly safe to drive straight across, or at an angle more obtuse.

Collins v. Janesville, 111 Wis. 348, 87 N. W. 241, 1087; Crites v. New Richmond, 98 Wis. 55, 73 N. W. 322; Kenyon v. Mondovi, 98 Wis. 53, 73 N. W. 314; Cumisky v. Kenosha, 87 Wis. 286, 58 N. W. 395; De Pere v. Hibbard, 104 Wis. 666, 80 N. W. 933.

In the use of its franchise defendant was a public agent, and had such privileges as were reasonably necessary to effect the object of its grant. It was reasonably necessary to the transaction of its business that it should remove this snow from its tracks.

Tesch v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 108 Wis. 593, 53 L. R. A. 618, 84 N. W. 823.

Messrs. McConnell & Schweizer, for respondent:

Everything defendant did was done for its own convenience and profit. The street would have been passable and perfectly safe had defendant let it alone. It had authority to use the street for its special purpose, and to remove the snow for the profitable accomplishment of that purpose, but in so doing it was bound to exercise ordinary care to leave the street in reasonably safe condition.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 350; Wood, Nuisances, § 757; Alton & U. A. Horse R. & Carrying Co. v. Deitz, 50 Ill. 210, 99 Am. Dec. 509.

The bank or slope left by defendant was a dangerous defect. A descent of 12 to 14 inches, with a slope of 16 to 18 inches, is 57 L. R. A.

clearly dangerous. Snow banks of this height and of less height have been so held.

Laughlin v. Street R. Co. 62 Mich. 220, 28 N. W. 873; Smith v. Nashua Street R. Co. 69 N. H. 504, 44 Atl. 133; Mahoney v. Metropolitan R. Co. 104 Mass. 73.

It can make no difference in reason or in law whether the bank is created by heaping up snow on one side of a given line, or by removing it on the other.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. pp. 822, 823; Smith v. Nashua Street R. Co. 69 N. H. 504, 44 Atl. 133; Laughlin v. Street R. Co. 62 Mich. 220, 28 N. W. 873; Dixon v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 100 N. Y. 170, 3 N. E. 65.

Even where plaintiff fully understands the danger the question of contributory negligence is for the jury.

Kelley v. Fond du Lac, 31 Wis. 179; Kenworthy v. Ironton, 41 Wis. 647; McKeigue v. Janesville, 68 Wis. 50, 31 N. W. 208; Cairncross v. Pewaukee, 86 Wis. 181, 56 N. W. 648; Salzer v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 471, 73 N. W. 20; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 376; Laughlin v. Street R. Co. 62 Mich. 220, 28 N. W. 873; Mahoney v. Metropolitan R. Co. 104 Mass. 73.

Winslow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The case was submitted to the jury upon a special verdict, and the court gave the jury, against proper exceptions, instructions which plainly told them the legal effect of their answer upon the question of contributory negligence. For this reason there must be a reversal of the judgment, irrespective of any other question. Musback v. Wisconsin Chair Co. 108 Wis. 57, 84 N. W. 36. Although there must be a new trial for the reason given, we deem it proper to consider the two main questions presented by the record, as they will doubtless arise again upon the second trial: These questions are (1) whether there was any testimony tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant; and (2) whether the plaintiff appears to have been guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law.

1. The city ordinance granting to the defendant company its street franchises provides, as stated in the statement of facts, that the company shall not allow snow or ice to accumulate upon its tracks in such quantities as to obstruct travel, nor deposit snow upon the street in such manner as to obstruct travel or render the same unsafe. The defendant claims that the complaint in this action charges negligence only in the violation of the ordinance, and that the jury, in answer to questions 1, 2, and 4 of the special verdict, having found that there was no accumulation or deposit of snow in violation of the ordinance, but only a removal of snow, against which the ordinance does not in terms provide, there is really no negligence proved in the case. While the complaint sets forth the ordinance requirements in detail, and charges their violation, we think it also charges something more. By the last clause of the third subdivision of the complaint it is charged, in substance, that the defendant negligently caused the snow and ice on its track to be excavated and removed in such manner as to leave a deep ditch, rendering the street unsafe and dangerous for public travel. We can construe this as meaning nothing more nor less than a breach of the common-law duty not to render the street unsafe for travel, which is manifestly wholly independent of the provisions of the ordinance. It is argued, however, that there is no such common-law duty, but that the defendant's obligations to the public are measured by the requirements of the ordinance. With this contention we cannot agree. Even in the absence of any requirements in the ordinance upon the subject, it must be held that when the defendant company received its franchise to operate a street railway upon the streets for its private gain, as well as the public convenience, it at the same time assumed a duty to the public not to unnecessarily render ordinary travel on the street dangerous. It must exercise its rights with due deference to the rights of the general public. It has no license to build and operate its tracks with total disregard of the rights and safety of the man with the horse and wagon, or the woman with the horse and cutter. On this subject the Messrs. Elliott, in their work on Roads & Streets, 2d ed., § 764, say very aptly: "A street railway company which accepts a grant or a license impliedly agrees that it will use due care not to unnecessarily impede travel or to make the use of the street hazardous. The burden which it assumes in conjunction with the benefit which it obtains is a continuing one, and it must bear it, although to do what due care and diligence requires may sometimes entail considerable expense. . . . Where the track is cleared for its own convenience, it must do what is reasonably necessary to make the part of the street not occupied by its tracks reasonably safe, for it cannot for its own accommodation obstruct it so as to endanger travelers." We accept these propositions as correctly stating the law. It is said that to require the company to remove any part of the snow from the street outside of its tracks is an undue burden, involving, perhaps, great labor and expense; but, as pointed out above, the company, by accepting its franchise, assumed a duty to the public, and any disposition which it is obliged to make of falling snow in order to run its cars must be such a disposition as preserves the rights of the public to have a reasonably safe street for ordinary travel. If the public right can be preserved by simply brushing the snow to one side, well and good; but if the snow is so deep that the right can only be preserved by removing the snow from its tracks and from such additional space outside thereof as is necessary to prevent the formation of a dangerous declivity, then the company must make such removal. Any disposition which it makes of the snow must be made with due deference to the rights of travel upon the highway. Wallace v. Detroit City R. Co. 58 Mich. 231, 24 N. W. 870; Smith v. Nashua Street R. Co. 69 N. H. 504, 44 Atl. 133. The evidence in this case was entirely sufficient to call for the submission of the question to the jury whether the company, in the removal of the snow from its track, left a declivity on the north side of its track which rendered the street unsafe for public travel.

2. The question of contributory negligence was also one for the jury. It is said in the appellant's brief that it is not contended that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence from the mere fact that she attempted to cross the track where she did, but that the danger being in plain sight, and her attention not being diverted, she was negligent in attempting to drive across at a sharp angle, where it would have been perfectly safe to drive straight across. So the claim is that she was negligent only in not driving across at the proper angle. On this subject the plaintiff testified that she turned to go over the track, and drove slow over the track, and tipped over; that she drove just as straight as she could,—pretty near straight across the track. And, at request of defendant's counsel, she drew a line upon paper, or upon some diagram present at the trial, showing the way she went across the track; but this paper has not been preserved in the bill of exceptions, and hence we have not the benefit of it. The testimony tends to show that the plaintiff exercised some degree, at least, of additional care, in attempting to cross the track. It has been held in numerous cases in this and other courts that a traveler driving upon a highway is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because he attempts to pass over or around a defective place of which he has knowledge. The defect may be so serious or dangerous that a court would be justified in saying that any attempt to proceed would be negligence, but in all other cases the question is whether a reasonably prudent man, exercising ordinary care, would attempt to proceed under the circumstances, and, if so, whether the plaintiff used that additional care which such a man would exercise in view of his knowledge of the danger. Kelley v. Pond du Lac, 31 Wis. 179; Kennworthy v. Ironton, 41 Wis. 647; Mahoney v. Metropolitan R. Co. 104 Mass. 73; Thomas v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Mass. 156. It must appear, in order to justify a finding of due care in such a case, that the traveler exercised such care as persons of common and reasonable prudence would ordinarily exercise under such circumstances; that is, a degree of care proportionate to the increased danger. If the danger is such as to require unusual precautions, the traveler must use such precaution. Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. § 635. Tested by this rule, we must say that the apparent danger was not so great as to justify the court in saying that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, as matter of law, in attempting to cross the track, but that the question whether the plaintiff exercised ordinary care in making the attempt in the manner in which she did make it was a question for the jury, under proper instructions. There is a very plain line of distinction between a case like the present and the case of foot passengers who are injured by reason of seen and known defects in or upon a sidewalk. In the latter class of cases, of which Hausmann v. Madison, 85 Wis. 187, 21 L. R. A. 283, 55 N. W. 167, and Devine v. Fond du Lac (Wis.) 88 N. W. 913, may be considered typical, it has been held that a traveler upon a sidewalk, who sees a defect before him, such as a piece of ice or a slippery or uneven stone, and walks upon it without necessity, and taking no precautions for his safety, is guilty of contributory negligence. The foot passenger has absolute control over his movements, may stop and turn aside at will and without danger, and hence may properly be held to a strict rule of accountability under such circumstances. But the traveler with a horse and wagon or sleigh is in an entirely different situation. His movements may not, indeed cannot, be absolutely free. His equipage cannot be turned in a moment away from danger. His view is not only not so clear, but his attention may be necessarily occupied with the handling of his horse, and many circumstances may be present which will be entitled to be considered in judging of the degree of care which he exercises, which cannot be present in the case of the foot passenger upon a sidewalk. We have drawn attention to the line of cases last mentioned simply for the purpose of pointing out the distinction between them and the present case, without intimating, however, that there may not be cases of foot passengers who will be justified in attempting to pass over a known defect in a sidewalk, if it is shown that they took some precautions fairly commensurate with the increased risk. Richards v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 226, 51 N. W. 256; Salzer v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 471, 73 N. W. 20.

We think the questions submitted by the court to the jury fairly cover the issues in the case, and we have found no prejudicial errors in the record, save the error first referred to in this opinion, and for this there must be a reversal.

Judgment reversed, and action remanded for a new trial.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

Thomas BLYTH et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
William A. PINKERTON et al.

(.....Wyo.....)

A written guaranty of the salary and expenses of a detective in working up a murder case will not continue after conviction of a suspect and settlement of the bill for services to that time, although the guaranty is not canceled or recalled; and the guarantor cannot be held liable for services rendered in connection with a retrial of the accused.

(January 30, 1902.)

ERROR to the District Court for Laramie County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover on a contract guaranteeing the expenses of detectives furnished by defendants for the investigation of a murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. Lacey for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. M. J. Barry, for defendants in error:

By the mention in the guaranty of "services to be rendered for Harvey Booth," it could never have been the intention of parties to this suit that Harvey Booth or his body should be bound in payment for services, or that services should be performed for him.

Suit was brought to recover for certain investigations in the matter of the murder of Harvey Booth, and the guaranty introduced to fix liability, but at that time no objection was made to the application of the guaranty to charge Blyth and Stone with the bill for the investigation.

Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, § 156.

A contract of guaranty should be construed the same as any other contract, and the same rules should be applied to ascertain the true intention of the parties.

Brandt, Suretyship & Guaranty, § 92; Hotchkiss v. Barnes, 34 Conn. 27, 91 Am. Dec. 713.

The contract itself must be read in the light of the circumstances under which it was entered into.

First Nat. Bank v. Gerke, 68 Md. 449, 13 Atl. 358; Crist v. Burlingame, 62 Barb. 351.

Previous and contemporary transactions and facts may be taken into consideration to ascertain the subject-matter and the sense in which parties have used particular terms.

Beach, Contr. § 719; Brawley v. United States, 96 U. S. 168, 24 L. ed. 622; Vincennes v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 132 Ind. 114, 16 L. R. A. 485, 31 N. E. 573; Illges v. Dexter, 77 Ga. 36; Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327, 28 N. W. 108; Merriam v. United States, 107 U. S. 437, 27 L. ed. 531, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 536.

Where, by the terms of a written guaran-

NOTE.—As to continuing guaranty generally, see notes to National Exch. Bank v. Gay (Conn.) 4 L. R. A. 343, and Coleman v. Fuller (N. C.) 8 L. R. A. 380; also Gay v. Ward (Conn.) 32 L. R. A. 818.

57 L. R. A.

ty, it appears that the parties look to a future course of dealing for an indefinite time, or a succession of credits to be given, it is deemed a continuing guaranty.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1132; Crist v. Burlingame, 68 Barb. 351; Tuohy v. McMurren, 57 Minn. 242, 59 N. W. 301.

To revoke the guaranty explicit language should be used.

Lanusse v. Barker, 3 Wheat. 101, 4 L. ed. 343.

A contract of guaranty is to be construed so as to promote the use and convenience of commercial intercourse.

Davis v. Wells, F. & Co. 104 U. S. 159, 26 L. ed. 686.

Its construction is to be according to what is fairly to be presumed to have been the understanding of the parties, without any technical nicety.

Lee v. Dick, 10 Pet. 482, 9 L. ed. 503; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 273, 45 Am. Rep. 204; Lawrence v. McCalmont, 2 How. 436, 11 L. ed. 329.

Thomas Blyth is liable as an original promisor.

Weiler v. Henaris, 15 Or. 28, 13 Pac. 614.

Knight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the district court by defendants in error, as plaintiffs, against plaintiffs in error and one John H. Ward, as defendants, by a petition of a single count, alleging "that the defendants herein jointly and severally promise to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of $8 per day and expenses for each operative sent out by plaintiffs to perform certain investigations in the matter of the murder of one Harvey Booth in Evanston, state of Wyoming, on or about January 27, 1895; that at the special instance and request of the defendants, and at the special instance and request of each of them, and in consideration of their said joint and several promise to pay, the plaintiffs rendered services which at the said rate of payment amounted to the sum of $658.25; . . . that the defendants, and each of them, did guarantee the payment of the said services rendered by the plaintiffs, amounting to $658.25." The defendants named in said petition were John H. Ward, Thomas Blyth, and Charles E. Stone. Issue was joined by a general denial, and a trial resulted in dismissing said case as to defendant John H. Ward, and findings and judgment against the plaintiffs in error, Thomas Blyth and Charles E. Stone, for the amount claimed, with interest. From said judgment said Thomas Blyth and Charles E. Stone come to this court, alleging the following errors, as set out in their motion for a new trial: "(1) The finding of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence. (2) The finding of the court is contrary to the evidence. (3) The finding of the court is contrary to law. (4) The court erred in excluding from the evidence in said cause the letter of one W. R. Stoll, dated June 9, 1896. (5) The court erred in excluding from the evidence the following portion of that certain letter written by W. R. Stoll to the defendant Thomas Blyth, and dated June 9, 1896, which is in words and figures following, to wit: 'That I was obliged to wire for Mr. Ward, and obliged to accept the assistance of the Pinkertons in tracing certain matters down. Mr. Ward will explain these matters to you in detail. I had to guarantee their expenses, upon the belief that they would be guaranteed by you or some others when the facts became known.' (6) The court erred in refusing to permit the defendants to prove by the witness Thomas Blyth, one of the defendants in said cause, that the said witness supposed that the plaintiffs were performing their services for which this claim is made in this cause for W. R. Stoll, and not for the defendants. (7) The court erred in refusing to permit the witness Thomas Blyth to testify in said cause that he had no idea that the plaintiffs were rendering any services here on behalf of the defendants, or either of them. (8) The court erred in refusing to permit the defendants to prove by the witness Thomas Blyth, one of the defendants in said cause, that he, the said Thomas Blyth, did not in any way understand that the presence or services of the plaintiffs, or any of them, in rendering the services here in question, were performed under any employment through or under the defendants, or for which they were in any way responsible. (9) The court erred in refusing to permit the witness Thomas Blyth, one of the defendants in said cause, to testify as to his reason for not objecting to the presence and employment of the plaintiffs in performing the services sued for in this cause."

A statement of facts from the record in this case proves most unsatisfactory, and is, in substance, as follows: That on or about January 27, 1895, one Harvey Booth was murdered in Evanston, Uinta county, Wyoming; and as a result of negotiations between John H. Ward, originally one of the defendants herein, who was at the time sheriff of said Uinta county, defendant in error, the Pinkerton Detective Agency, was on February 10, 1895, regularly employed by Thomas Blyth, one of the plaintiffs in error, in the matter of the investigation of said murder. The date of such employment is fixed by the evidence to the effect that before services are rendered by defendant in error a guaranty is always required, and the one introduced in evidence herein bears that date, and reads as follows:

Guaranty. In consideration of the services hereafter to be rendered by the Pinkerton National Detective Agency for case of Harvey Booth, of Evanston, Wyo., I, Thomas Blyth, of Evanston, Wyo., hereby guarantee the payment of said agency's bill for services in the case at the rate of $8.00 per day and the expenses of each operative from the time they leave the office of the agency until their return.

Thos. Blyth. [Seal.]

Chas. Stone. [Seal.]

Jas. McParland, Denver, Colo.

Feb. 10th, 1895.

As has been said, the record is unsatisfactory; the reason being that it fails to show when the first trial, at Evanston, was had; who was tried, except by inference; what kind of a verdict, if any, was found; and how it became competent to change the venue to Cheyenne. Counsel for defendants in error supplies some omissions in the record which are important, in his brief, as follows:

"The statement of the case made by counsel for defendant Blyth, while correct in the main, argument omitted, is rather brief, and not given in order of time. For these reasons a new statement is made, giving more detail:

"Statement. One Harvey Booth, of Evanston, Wyoming, was murdered about January 27, 1895. The Pinkerton National Detective Agency was hired to investigate the murder, with view of bringing murderer to justice. A representative of the Pinkertons, in order to secure payment of services to be rendered by agency, secured the following paper, signed by Thomas Blyth and Charles E. Stone. The paper was a printed blank used by the Pinkertons, the words underlined being written by hand. [Then follows the guaranty as set out hereinbefore, and continuing:] Services were rendered, several operatives being employed. As a result, one Crocker was arrested, tried in Evanston, convicted. New trial and change of venue granted. Tried second time in Cheyenne, and acquitted. The murder case closed in Cheyenne about July 1, 1896. All bills rendered by Pinkertons in first trial were paid either by or through Blyth, who was brother-in-law of murdered man, and also his administrator. Blyth was present on second trial, knew the Pinkertons were rendering services, and knew that they held his guaranty, but never recalled it. There is evidence that Blyth offered $250 as payment of account now in judgment, and, after offer was rejected, renewed promise of payment; also that he gave out an idea of his being responsible for payment."

Stopping at this point, where the trial court, as from the record appears, had no right to stop, for want of information that at any time any one transaction had been completed, we find that, as is claimed, the employment of defendants in error, occasioned in part by the guaranty in evidence, had resulted in the arrest of Crocker for the murder of Booth, and that their services had been dispensed with (which is claimed temporarily) by the demand that their operative be recalled, and the payment by Blyth of all claim and demands to that date (April, 1895). There is no conflict in the evidence as to what occurred at that time. Mr. McParland, superintendent, as aforesaid, of defendants' agency in Denver, testified: "A good deal of work was done in the way of making investigations as to the murder of Harvey Booth. Bills for work done in January, February, April, 1895, were paid by Thomas Blyth." The testimony of Thomas Blyth as to what occurred in April, 1895, not denied, is as follows:

Q. The day prior to the settlement and payment in April, 1895, what had been done, if anything, with reference to discharging Pinkertons in the matter?

A. I wrote to Mr. McParland to recall the detectives and send the bill.

Q. What was done under that?

A. The detective was immediately recalled, and bill rendered.

Q. And was paid?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else was cognizant of the recall?

A. Mr. Beard and Mr. Ward.

Subsequently, and while defendant in error had no connection with the case, Crocker was tried, convicted of the murder of Booth, made application for a new trial, which was granted, and thereafter the venue of the case was changed to Cheyenne. The only evidence that connects defendant John H. Ward, who was one of the defendants in the court below, with the transaction, up to this point, was that he sent the original telegram to the agency of the Pinkertons at Chicago at the time the murder was discovered, which was referred to the Denver agency, and had knowledge of the employment of the Pinkertons, and advised, worked, and counseled with them in their operations. After the first trial, and after the case had been sent to Cheyenne, it became necessary to make new contracts in some particulars, as appears from the record; and W. R. Stoll, Esq., an attorney of Cheyenne, was employed by Mr. Blyth to conduct or assist in the prosecution. Mr. Stoll had been recommended by Mr. McParland to Mr. Blyth when the latter had applied to him to name the best attorney in Wyoming to be employed. In June, 1896, more than a year after the services were rendered by the defendant in error under the guaranty aforesaid, and the same had been terminated by accord and satisfaction, as is claimed by plaintiffs in error, Mr. Stoll discovered an emergency requiring the assistance of a detective, and by wire secured the services of defendants in error; and from then on, and during the second trial, the services sued for, which are admitted to be of the value claimed, were rendered. Mr. Stoll, after securing the services of the defendants in error as aforesaid, on June 9, 1896, wrote Mr. Blyth, in part, as follows: "That I was obliged to wire for Mr. Ward, and obliged to accept the assistance of the Pinkertons in tracing certain matters down. Mr. Ward will explain these matters to you in detail. I had to guarantee their expenses, upon the belief that they would be guaranteed by you or some others when the facts became known." The sustaining of the objection to the offer of the part of the letter aforesaid forms the fifth ground in the motion for a new trial presented by plaintiff in error Charles E. Stone. The evidence discloses the fact that while the services sued for were being performed a second guaranty was prepared and presented to Mr. Blyth for his signature, and that he refused to sign the same. This is explained by Mr. McParland, general superintendent as aforesaid, by the statement that the original guaranty in evidence was for a time misplaced or mislaid, and that fact caused the request for a new guaranty to be made.

During the second trial the office of Mr. Stoll was the place where the meetings of those interested in the prosecution were held; and the statement was made in the brief of defendants in error, and in the argument of counsel before this court, based thereon, that "there is evidence that Blyth offered $250 as payment of account now in judgment, and, after offer was rejected, renewed promise of payment; also that he gave out an idea of his being responsible for payment." Referring to certain evidence, we will give that evidence.

William B. Sayers, an operative of defendant in error, upon that point testified as follows:

Q. Now, you may state what conversation you had with Mr. Blyth in regard to pay for the agency.

A. It was on the occasion of a meeting I had with Mr. Blyth, Mr. Hamm, Mr. Ward, and Mr. Stoll in Mr. Stoll's office in this town, in which, acting under instruction from Mr. McParland, I wanted to get advance expense money, and said that I had been instructed by Mr. McParland to get money on expenses account in this matter. During that conversation, Mr. Hamm, who was acting attorney, and also Mr. Blyth, asked if $250 would be the amount of expense, and had a paper drawn up to that effect if I would accept. I was not authorized to accept $250, or any sum. I told them I was not authorized. I told them I traveled a good deal on the railroad,—to Deer Lodge; to Salt Lake; two or three trips to Denver, here. I said I knew my railroad expenses were pretty heavy. I said that I didn't know the amount, and refused it. Then I was given to understand—I remember the conversation quite distinctly at the time in the office, Mr. Stoll being present—that the matter would be satisfactorily adjusted.

Q. Who said that the matter would be satisfactorily adjusted?

A. Mr. Hamm or Mr. Blyth. I don't know which one.

Q. Were they both present at the time?

A. They were both present. I don't know who spoke. So far as that statement, I cannot swear.

Q. If Mr. Blyth did not make the promise, he made no objection to it when it was made?

A. All four were present when this was done. Mr. Stoll, I think, had gone out of the room, and was in his office. I know we were all in the building.

Q. Did they at that time ask you to continue the work?

A. I don't know that they asked me to continue the work. I was working at that time in the discharge of my duties of my work at that particular time that day.

Q. Was there any difficulty about your pay? Were you going to quit, or keep on working, if you did not get your money?

A. I did not say I was going to quit. I spoke to Mr. Stoll about it, and I spoke to Mr. Ward at that time about it. I was given to understand it was all right. We were all four present at one time during the day.

Q. By the Court: Who were the four?

A. Mr. Stoll, Mr. Ward, Mr. Hamm, attorney in the case.

Q. Just be clear on one point. You may state whether or not in the conversation you heard in Mr. Stoll's office between any of the defendants in this case, or any other persons, promises were made that pay would be forthcoming. (Objection to form of question.)

By the Court: Ask what was said with reference to pay at the time and place.

A. I can't give you the exact words. It has been some years ago, and I don't recollect the exact words. The substance of it was that the settlement of the bill of services would be all right in this case. The substance of the conversation was that the bill would be paid.

On cross-examination this witness was asked the following questions:

Q. You do not know who it was said your services would be paid? You do not know whether it was Hamm or Ward or Blyth?

A. No; I do not know.

Q. Mr. Hamm was not an attorney for Mr. Blyth?

A. Mr. Hamm—I don't know anything about that. He was connected with the case.

Q. He was county attorney of Uinta county, and authorized, in a way, to contract bills for that county?

A. I did not know anything about that. At that time I would not have taken any authorization from Mr. Hamm without knowing what he did it on.

Q. Whatever was said, you do not know whether it was Mr. Hamm or somebody else?

A. Mr. Hamm offered this paper $250 settlement, which I refused; asked if that is right, I said, "No." They wanted to know how much it would be,—wanted me to make statement. I said, "No."

Later on the same witness testifies as follows:

Q. It was not settled who would pay it? Is that what you mean to say?

A. It was my understanding that the services would be paid for, in the presence of Mr. Blyth, Mr. Hamm, and Mr. Ward, all of whom heard it at that time as well as I heard it.

Q. As I understand you, you don't know who?

A. One of those gentlemen.

Mr. Blyth testified about the matter above referred to as follows:

Q. You have heard Mr. Sayers's statement as to the conversation in Mr. Stoll's office when you and Mr. Ward and Mr. Hamm were claimed to have been present? You may state what, if anything, of that conversation occurred.

A. I never had any such conversation in Mr. Stoll's office.

Mr. Ward testified upon the same subject as follows:

Q. You have heard the testimony here of Mr. Sayers as to the conversation in his presence in relation to payment of Pinkertons for their services. Did you hear the testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may state whether at any time there was an agreement by Mr. Blyth or yourself, or anybody in your presence, that that bill should be paid?

A. Not in my presence, sir.

Mr. Hamm, the other person referred to by witness Sayers as having been present at the time of the conversation referred to, was not a witness in the case.

Charles Stone, one of the plaintiffs in error against whom judgment was rendered in the court below, and who has been described in all the pleadings and proceedings, except in the guaranty which he signed, as Charles E. Stone, without any apparent cause, testified in part as follows:

Q. You may state what knowledge you ever had during the time of its performance of any service by the Pinkertons in this matter after the settlement was made in April, 1895?

A. None whatever.

Q. What authority did you give to anyone to employ Pinkertons on your behalf, or anybody else, to do detective work after April, 1895?

A. None whatever.

The above evidence is not modified, qualified, or questioned in the entire record.

It is not necessary to continue the unraveling of facts which seemed to be required, for the reason that all parties appeared to rely upon the general notoriety gained by the terrible murder out of which this controversy grew, and the attempts made by the state of Wyoming and private individuals to find, present, and punish the guilty.

Counsel for defendants in error includes in his brief the opinion claimed to have been announced by the trial judge in rendering his judgment, which is not included 57 L. R. A.

in the record of the case before us. While it would not be fair to quote this opinion without giving all the evidence, some of which that is omitted might have had great weight in its being arrived at, still, in view of the fact that Charles Stone, one of the judgment debtor defendants in the court below, was never shown to have obligated himself, by word, sign, or deed, beyond signing his name to the guaranty executed February 10, 1895, not sued on, but offered in evidence, we will quote from the opinion sufficient to show that it was for lack of evidence that caused the court below to commit some of the errors complained of. We quote in part: "That it was a continuing contract, in the light contended for by the plaintiff, seems clear to the court; and it appears further equally true that there was no cancellation of the contract by the defendants, and that the contract expired at the close of the second trial, and that the account sued on is a just debt, under the contract." We are constrained to ask, Why did the contract expire at the close of the second trial? It was at the close of the first trial that it was thought the murderer of Harvey Booth had been discovered and brought to justice. At the close of the second trial this was found to be a mistake, and all the efforts and expenditures had been for naught.

The diligence of the attorneys in presenting authorities applicable to the proper consideration of this case must be commended, and as there is little, if any, dispute as to the law that should govern, we have discussed the facts at length. The plaintiffs in error insist that the guaranty in evidence is not a continuing guaranty, and that there is nothing in the instrument itself fixing the limits of time for which it shall run, nor fixing the aggregate amount for which it shall be good, and that such instrument cannot be construed as a continuing guaranty; that a guarantor, like a surety, is bound only by the strict letter or precise terms of the contract of his principal whose performance he has guaranteed, and in this respect he is a favorite of the law; and that this must be remembered in determining the liability; and that he has the right to stand upon the strict terms of his obligation, when such terms are ascertained. And counsel cites in support of these contentions Miller v. Stewart, 9 Wheat. 680, 6 L. ed. 189, and, to the same effect, Stayer & Walker v. Locke, 22 Or. 519, 17 L. R. A. 652, 30 Pac. 497; Cushing v. Cable, 48 Minn. 3, 50 N. W. 891; Barns v. Barrow, 61 N. Y. 39, 19 Am. Rep. 247; Markland Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 560; Lafayette v. James, 92 Ind. 240, 47 Am. Rep. 140; Gunn v. Geary, 44 Mich. 615, 7 N. W. 235; Henrie v. Buck, 39 Kan. 381, 18 Pac. 228; Gill v. Sullivan, 62 Iowa, 529, 17 N. W. 758; Lang v. Pike, 27 Ohio St. 498; Ryan v. Williams, 29 Kan. 487; Burlington Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 120 Ill. 622, 12 N. E. 205; People v. Toomey, 122 Ill. 308, 13 N. E. 521.

As to the contention made by plaintiffs in error that, by the terms of a guaranty such as is here in evidence, the guarantor cannot be held beyond the immediate transaction, counsel cite Birdsall v. Haddock, 32 Ohio St. 177, 30 Am. Rep. 572; the case, briefly stated, being as follows: The guaranty was: "Send my son the lumber he asks for, and it will be all right." The son at once bought $226 worth of lumber on credit, and afterwards paid for it. But the matter did not stop there. The first purchase was May 11, 1868. Afterward he bought additional lumber, down to January, 1869. The court confined the guaranty to the first purchase, of May 11, 1868, and, in closing a very interesting opinion, said: "The better opinion would seem to be that such an instrument should be confined to the immediate transaction, unless the language of the promise is sufficiently broad to show that it was meant to reach beyond the present, and render the guarantor answerable for future credits. The tendency of decision in this country has accordingly been against construing guaranties as continuing, unless the intention of the parties is so clearly manifested as not to admit of a reasonable doubt. 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 141, note, citing Congdon v. Read, 7 R. I. 576." And several other cases are cited. In the case of Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292, 86 Am. Dec. 52, the guaranty was: "If you will let the bearer have what leather he wants, and charge the same to himself, I will see that you have your pay in a reasonable length of time." The court, in discussing this question, says: "As the plaintiff sold leather to Gates at several different times, and for different amounts, the first question is whether the guaranty is limited as to time. We think it limited to a single purchase or transaction. We must hold this, or that it is unlimited both as to time and amount. Every person is supposed to have some regard to his own interest, and it is not reasonable to presume any man of ordinary prudence would become surety for another, without limitation as to time or amount, unless he has done so in express terms or by clear implication. If the guaranty was limited in express terms either as to time or amount, but not as to both, it might be said it was the intention of the guarantor to leave it open as to the other, or that a further limitation could not be implied. But where it contains no express limitation as to either, and there is nothing in the instrument itself from which it can be inferred that it was the intention of the guarantor to leave it open as to both, we think it must be understood as referring to a single transaction." In the case of Rogers v. Warren, 8 Johns. 119, the guaranty was: "Our sons wish to take goods of you on credit. We are willing to lend our names as security for any amount they may wish." Goods were bought at several different times on credit. The court says: "The true construction of the letter of credit is that it is to be confined to the first parcel of goods. It would be unjust and unreasonable to extend it to an indefinite credit for an indefinite time." To the same effect 57 L. R. A.

were the following authorities cited by plaintiffs in error: Anderson v. Blakely, 2 Watts & S. 237; Aldricks v. Higgins, 16 Serg. & R. 212; John S. Brittain Dry Goods Co. v. Yearout, 59 Kan. 684, 54 Pac. 1062; Cremer v. Higginson, 1 Mason, 323, Fed. Cas. No. 3,383, and many others.

Defendants in error contend that the guaranty in evidence is a continuing one, "and, in order to determine that question, we have to construe its terms in the light of other surrounding circumstances at the time of its execution." And several authorities have been cited in support of that contention, which is not denied. The supreme court of New York used the following language many years ago, and from the authorities examined we have found none more concise, applicable to the case before us: "The party entering into an absolute engagement for the responsibility of his friend should see to the performance of it. The relation in which the parties afterwards stand to each other presupposes privity and knowledge of the credit obtained. It is in most of these cases a nice and difficult question to determine whether the guaranty is a continuing one or not. The intent of the party, to be derived from the words, is the only sure guide, and therefore very little aid is to be derived from the adjudged cases, as they turn upon the peculiar phraseology of the guaranty. Upon general principles, a strict interpretation should be applied in favor of a surety." The same court later, in Baker v. Rand, 13 Barb. 152, says: "If the plain terms of the contract may be fulfilled by being confined to one transaction, courts are not anxious to extend it to others." As to surrounding circumstances, a case fairly well describing that language is Morgan v. Boyer, 39 Ohio St. 324, 48 Am. Rep. 454. We quote from the opinion: "The defendant H. A. Bowlus, a merchant of Melmore, in Seneca county, had at different times purchased small quantities of goods upon credit of the plaintiffs, partners under the name of Morgan, Root, & Co., who were merchants of Cleveland; and, in order to obtain from them further credit, he procured from the defendant H. A. Boyer, of Tiffin, a written guaranty in the following words:

"Tiffin, April 11th, 1876.

"Messrs. Morgan, Root, & Co.

"Gents:—

"The bearer, Mr. H. A. Bowlus, is visiting your city, buying a few goods in your line; and anything you may be able to sell him will be paid promptly as agreed on, which I herewith guarantee.

"Yours respectfully,

"H. A. Boyer."

"Bowlus delivered this guaranty to the plaintiffs about April 12, 1876, and then purchased of them on the faith of the guaranty goods to the amount of $797, for which he afterwards paid in full. The plaintiffs continued to sell goods to Bowlus from time to time until about September 20, 1879, when the balance due from him was $301.12, for which the plaintiffs brought suit against Bowlus and Boyer. The case was submitted to the court of common pleas, which rendered a judgment in favor of the defendant Boyer, and this judgment was, on error, affirmed by the district court. The plaintiffs ask leave to file a petition in error to reverse the judgment of the district court. The principal question argued by counsel, and the only one requiring our decision, is whether the guaranty given by the defendant Boyer is a limited or a continuing guaranty. The language of guaranties is often so indefinite that their construction in this respect is difficult, and the decisions relating to such construction are very numerous and conflicting. This conflict has in many cases arisen from the difference in the surrounding circumstances, and the particular language of each guaranty, but in many cases it is due to the application by the several courts of the different rules to the construction of those contracts. The rules which we apply in this case are those which are in accordance with previous decisions of this court, and those which we deem to be most in accordance with well-established principles of law. The rule that the language of a promise is to be construed most strongly against the promisor cannot properly be applied to the construction of a guaranty. A guarantor, like a surety, is bound only by the precise words of his contract. Other words cannot be added by construction or implication, but the meaning of the words actually used is to be ascertained in the same manner as the meaning of similar words used in other contracts. They are to be understood in their plain and ordinary sense, when read in the light of the surrounding circumstances and of the object intended to be accomplished. The rule that a guarantor is held only by the express words of his promise does not entitle him to demand an unfair and strained interpretation of those words, in order that he may be released from the obligation which he has assumed. In applying these rules there has been much difference of opinion as to whether the language of a guaranty should be construed as creating a limited or a continuing guaranty, when it is fairly capable of either construction, but we are satisfied that the decided weight of authority is in favor of the rule stated by Judge Story,—that in a doubtful case the presumption should be against the construction that the guaranty is continuing. . . . Applying to the construction of this guaranty the rules which we have stated, with the aid of the surrounding circumstances, and the purpose for which it was given, we are led to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not justified in treating it as a continuing guaranty."

57 L. R. A.

Reference is made in the record of the case in the court below several times to the fact that the plaintiffs in error, Blyth and Stone, never canceled or recalled the written guaranty signed by them. They both admitted it on the witness stand; and the court, if correctly quoted by counsel, attached some importance to that fact. Counsel for defendant in error refers to the same both in his brief and argument in this court, and cites us to Lanusse v. Barker, 3 Wheat. 101, 4 L. ed. 343; and we quote from the syllabus, which correctly states the opinion upon that point: "When an authority has been once given to a merchant abroad, and has been acted on in good faith, implied revocations are not favored. It is incumbent on the principal to show a revocation in terms too clear to be charged with equivocation,"—and also, in the same case, the language quoted by counsel: "Nowhere in the evidence is it shown that the guaranty has been revoked or recalled. To revoke the guaranty, explicit language should be used." Counsel is excused, without the asking, for failing to call our attention to the language of the court upon this subject in Twohy v. McMurran, 57 Minn. 242, 59 N. W. 301, cited by him upon another branch of the case,—one already considered. We quote: "The fact that the guaranty itself was not taken up by defendant at the time he claims to have paid in accordance with its terms cannot be regarded as a practical construction of its language, or an admission that it was continuing." We have not found any authority to the contrary.

We are of the opinion that the guaranty offered in evidence was not a continuing one, and that if, under the petition, upon a new trial of this case, it should be claimed that plaintiff in error Thomas Blyth became liable for the services in controversy by reason of his having authorized the contracting for the same, or by reason of having in some way become bound for the payment therefor by any words, acts, or benefits, which, we are free to say, does not appear from the record before us, then he should be allowed to defend against such claim; and it was error to reject the testimony offered as shown by causes numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 in the motion for a new trial, as hereinbefore set out in full.

The judgment of the District Court will be reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Potter, Ch. J., and Cern, J., concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

Robert D. DOUGLASS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

James DAISLEY.

(114 Fed. 628.)

1. No privilege attaches, as matter of law, to a communication transmitted by a commercial agency that a certain person had made an assignment for benefit of creditors, when the information received by or known to it was that he had made an assignment to secure the indorser of a note.
2. A mercantile agency is not liable for sending out by mistake information concerning a merchant variant from that received by it, if it exercises reasonable care and prudence in the matter.
3. Whether or not a mercantile agency which receives information of an assignment on a general assignment blank, to which is added a clause stating that it was to secure an indorser, and transmits it as being a general assignment for creditors, exercises reasonable care and prudence, so as to relieve it from liability for libel, is a question for the jury.
4. Instances of loss of particular customers need not be alleged or proved to warrant an assessment of damages for diminution of business and loss of credit by reason of a false publication by a mercantile agency.

(April 16, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Colt, Circuit Judge, and Aldrich and Brown, District Judges.

Messrs. W. W. McFarland, Eugene P. Carver, and Edward E. Blodgett, for plaintiff in error:

The report in question was privileged, and the court should have instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

Erber v. Dun, 12 Fed. 526; Ormsby v. Douglass, 37 N. Y. 477; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 60 Am. Rep. 631, 9 Atl. 705; State ex rel. Lanning v. Lonsdale, 48 Wis. 362, 4 N. W. 390; Locke v. Bradstreet Co. 22 Fed. 771.

Privilege can mean nothing less than exemption from liability for honest error in oral or written statements that are within the orbit of privileged communication.

Truth does not require the protection. The rule is for innocent untruth, and it has no other object.

Truth, falsehood, or diligence is not the test; it is good faith.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to libel in publication by mercantile agency, see Bradstreet Co. v. Gill (Tex.) 2 L. R. A. 405, and note; Pollasky v. Minchener (Mich.) 9 L. R. A. 102; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co. (Mo.) 20 L. R. A. 138; and Dun v. Weintraub (Ga.) 50 L. R. A. 670.

57 L. R. A.

Haft v. First Nat. Bank, 19 App. Div. 423, 46 N. Y. Supp. 481.

Mere inadvertence or forgetfulness or careless blundering is no evidence of malice; nor is negligence or want of sound judgment.

Odgers, Libel & Slander, 3d Eng. ed. p. 311; Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. 214; Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton & Oil Co. 10 Best & S. 226; Tripp v. Thomas, 3 Barn. & C. 427; Ingram v. Lawson, 6 Bing. N. C. 212; Hemmens v. Nelson, 138 N. Y. 517, 20 L. R. A. 440, 34 N. E. 342.

The publication having been made upon a privileged occasion, the plaintiff was under the burden of proof to defeat the defense of privilege by proof of malice upon the part of the defendant.

White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591; Scullin v. Harper, 24 C. C. A. 169, 46 U. S. App. 673, 78 Fed. 464; Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116.

The damage must be the immediate consequence of the defamatory words, and must be attributable wholly to the words.

Newell, Slander & Libel, p. 852, § 22; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261.

The case is entirely free from the disturbing element of malice in any of its forms. Such being the case, there was no legal basis for anything more than nominal damage.

Newell, Slander & Libel, pp. 398, 838-843; True v. Plumley, 36 Me. 481; Evening News Assn. v. Tryon, 42 Mich. 549, 36 Am. Rep. 450, 4 N. W. 267; Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 253, and notes.

Where loss of custom is relied on, it is not sufficient to make a general allegation of loss of custom, but, either in the declaration or in a bill of particulars, the specific persons withdrawing their custom should be alleged.

1 Rolle, Abr. 58; Barnes v. Prudlin, Sid. 396; Hunt v. Jones, Cro. Jac. 499; Hartley v. Herring, 8 T. R. 130; Chiatovich v. Hanchett, 88 Fed. 873; Moore v. Francis, 121 N. Y. 199, 8 L. R. A. 214, 23 N. E. 1127; Landon v. Watkins, 61 Minn. 137, 63 N. W. 615; Newbold v. J. M. Bradstreet & Sons, 57 Md. 38, 40 Am. Rep. 426.

Mr. G. Philip Wardner also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles F. Choate, Jr., and Josiah H. Benton, Jr., for defendant in error.

Aldrich, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a mercantile agency, known as the R. G. Dun & Co. agency; and on the 28th day of March, 1898, sent out a notice to its subscribers that the plaintiff had assigned for the benefit of his creditors; and the plaintiff brings his action in tort for libel. The defendant does not justify by showing that the communication sent was true, but claims that, by reason of the character of the business of the agency and of the occasion, the communication was privileged, in the sense that the occasion and the relations of the parties exempt the defendant from liability.

In jurisdictions where such communications are treated as privileged, the privilege is a qualified one, and when information is furnished under circumstances which give it a privileged character, though false, recovery cannot be had unless malice or bad faith is shown. In other jurisdictions, like Georgia, Texas, Missouri, Wisconsin, and in some of the cases in the Federal circuits, like Locke v. Bradstreet Co. 22 Fed. 771, the privilege is made to depend somewhat upon the question of due care in the matter of selection of agents, and in respect to the means and manner of communication; and Mr. Francis Wharton, in his valuable note to Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. 214, would seem to give some indorsement to the latter view. In New York and many other jurisdictions, if the requisite occasion and relations exist, such communications, speaking in general terms, are treated as privileged, and the doctrine of immunity from liability is recognized, except in cases where malice or bad faith is shown; and the doctrine is not made to depend much, if at all, upon the question of due care.

It is not necessary in this case that we should examine into the origin, the reason, or the wisdom of the rule of privilege and nonliability as it has been applied in the cases to which we have been referred.

Under the defendant's main contention here in respect to the question of privilege, they largely rely on Ormsby v. Douglass, 37 N. Y. 477, which is supplemented by numerous authorities sustaining the view of that case. Ormsby v. Douglass has been frequently referred to in decisions in jurisdictions where the rule of that case obtains, and the weight of authority, both English and American, would seem to be in accord with the principle of that case, and we may well enough, we think, without going into a history of these decisions, accept the rule of such cases as the law.

The rule of immunity from liability, in cases where it applies, results largely from the necessities of business and the strong presumption of absence of malice; and the rule of the New York cases unquestionably is that, in the absence of actual proof of malice or bad faith, the privilege justifies the agency in transmitting the information it receives. But, conceding the full force of the New York cases and those holding the same view, the defendant is not within the doctrine there established. The general information which it received upon the blank which it had furnished its agent at South Framingham, Massachusetts, was that James Daisley, the plaintiff, had made an assignment to B. T. Thompson, of Framingham, and, under a heading upon the blank which required the agent to furnish any particulars possible, was an exact and particular statement of what the assignment was; namely, to secure the assignee for indorsing a note. Such was the information received at the office of the agency at Boston; but, instead of sending out the information received, they sent a communication saying, "James Daisley, of South Framingham, Massachusetts, has assigned to B. T. Thompson for the benefit of his creditors." This was a plain and substantial departure from the information received. Therefore, it was not sending information received or information accurate in substance. They were informed that the plaintiff had assigned to secure the indorser of a note, and the information was not that he had made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors. The first, in the ordinary acceptance, would not necessarily be injurious to the party's credit or business, while the other, in the ordinary acceptance, means a general failure, and would necessarily be injurious.

The case of Ormsby v. Douglass, 37 N. Y. 477, distinguishes itself at once from the situation here, for the rule is there distinctly stated that "so long as the defendant acted in good faith in reporting facts which came to his knowledge," etc. The later New York case of Haft v. First Nat. Bank, 19 App. Div. 423, 46 N. Y. Supp. 481, on which the defendant largely relies, bases its decision upon the same ground; that is to say, that the bank, in the due course of its business, forwarded the precise information which it received from its messenger. The English case of Lawless v. Anglo-Egyptian Cotton & Oil Co. (1869) L. R. 4 Q. B. 262, 267, is in the same line, and the decision is based, as in the other cases, upon the ground that "what the directors did was this. In their report to a meeting of the shareholders they appended the statement which had been made to them by the auditors." The case of Robinson v. Dun, 24 Ont. App. Rep. 287, 289, treats a privileged communication as one made on a privileged occasion, and fairly warranted by it. It in no sense goes beyond the doctrine of the New York cases in respect to the idea that the communication is privileged, as a rule of law, when limited to the information received, but its reasoning would seem to tend somewhat in the direction of making the question whether the information was fairly warranted an element, or, in other words, in the direction of the other line of authorities, which make the privilege depend somewhat upon the question of due care.

We recognize the exigencies of business and the demands of public policy in respect to information as to the standing of business men in their trade and calling, and we carry to the defendant, for the purposes of this phase of the case, the full force of the authorities upon which it relies. But we are not inclined to extend the privilege, as a rule of law, beyond that of protection, so long as the agency acts in good faith in reporting, with substantial accuracy, information which comes to its knowledge; in other words, beyond the rule of the cases most favorable to the defendant, that the agency, in the absence of bad faith, is privileged in communicating information received, although it may prove to be false.

Where a false report originates in the office, and is not based upon information, the circumstances and the occasion do not necessarily involve a privilege. Carrying the qualified privilege to communications of the character in question, by rule of law, would be carrying the doctrine of immunity beyond the rule in respect to absolute privilege. Mr. Bigelow, in his work on Torts, 7th ed. § 332, in treating of the higher privilege of the publication of court proceedings, and speaking of the report of such proceedings, says: "If, however, the same should be so incomplete or so stated as to give a wrong impression, or, though full, if it is followed by comments containing defamatory matter, the privilege would fail."

The case of King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 60 Am. Rep. 622, 9 Atl. 705, presents a careful review of the American and English cases, with reasoning which would seem to be sound, as to why the rule of privilege should not be extended beyond its present limit. In that case, the general rule is recognized; but, on the question of extending it further, and to include communications to those who are not subscribers, it is observed that "neither the welfare nor convenience of society will be promoted by bringing the publication of matters, false in fact, injuriously affecting the credit and standing of merchants and traders, broadcast throughout the land, within the protection of privileged communications." In that case it is further suggested that, while the subject in relation to which the communication is made may be privileged, the communication may be unprivileged, and the matter of duty to send the information is made an important element of the question; and, though the doctrine of privilege was there recognized while communicating to its patrons information received, it was observed that the agency, in its conduct and management, must be subjected to the ordinary rules of law, and the proprietors and managers held to the liability which the law attaches to like acts of others.

We think the privilege in a business situation like this, which results as matter of law, rests upon the right to send information received, and upon the duty to send with substantial accuracy such information as is received. The communication in question does not rest wholly or with substantial accuracy upon information received. How can it be said, as a matter of law, either that the agency was privileged to send something plainly and substantially different from what had been received, or that any duty rested upon it to send information substantially different from that which it had received? Neither the right nor the duty to send different information exists in this case; consequently there was no privilege which can be ruled as matter of law, and the defendant is liable unless, under proper instructions, facts necessary to clothe the transaction with the immunity of privilege shall be found by a jury. As said in King v. Patterson, supra (p. 427, 57 L. R. A.

49 N. J. L., 60 Am. Rep. 622, and p. 710, 9 Atl.): "A defendant intends to send a communication derogatory to the plaintiff's character or circumstances to A, where it would do no harm. By inadvertence he sends it to B, which produces the injury complained of. It is obvious that it would be a plain transgression of legal principles to excuse the act he did because he intended to do an act from which no injury to the plaintiff would have resulted."

We have seen that the communication in question was not based upon information received; neither was it based upon anything known at the home office. A communication cannot be accepted as privileged as a matter of law which is neither warranted by information received nor by facts known at the home office. It was neither the right nor the public or private duty of the agency to send a communication which was not based upon fact or information. The communication, therefore, not being based upon information from an agent whose business it was to gather information, or upon foundation of fact, it is not a privileged one in the sense of clothing the defendant with immunity from liability through an arbitrary rule of law. In short, we find no case, which pretends, through a rule of law, to bring a communication like this within the domain of privilege; nor do we see any reason for carrying absolute privilege to such a communication.

The English case of Tompson v. Dashwood, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 43, was a case where a communication was intended to be made on a privileged occasion, but was sent to the wrong person; and, while the case is not like the one here, for there it was a mistake in sending to the wrong person rather than a mistake in sending wrong matter, the privilege was held to exist. This case is, perhaps, the most favorable to the defendant's position of any that has come to our attention. But this authority is criticised by Mr. Pollock in his treatise on Torts, as one not by any means universally accepted by the profession, and as contrary to the earlier decisions. Pollock, Torts, 216, 234; Webb's Pollock, Torts, 309. We are not disposed to adopt the doctrine of this case, and hold, as a matter of law, without regard to the question of due care, that the communication was privileged.

We think the circuit court was right in holding that the communication in question was so substantial a departure from the information received that it could not be accepted as privileged, as a matter of law, and that the defendant was not within the rule which gives immunity, as a matter of law, upon the ground of privilege. So, upon this phase of the case, we hold against the defendant, for the reason that the circumstances are not such as to bring it within the doctrine of the cases upon which the defendant relies.

This disposes of the first assignment of error, which, in substance, is that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, as a matter of law, upon the ground of privilege.

Having considered the question whether immunity resulted by rule of law under the circumstances of this case, we come, at the next step, to the question whether, on the other hand, liability resulted by rule of law, and this is the precise question raised by assignments 2, 3, and 4; and we think there was error here, for the reason that the situation was one which, under the circumstances, involved a question of fact which should have been submitted to the jury. The occasion, which was that of receiving and communicating information relating to the subject-matter in question, was privileged; and, the occasion being privileged, the Boston agency, in the ordinary course of its business or receiving information and imparting it to its subscribers in the business world, was in the exercise of a privilege in the nature of a private right, or, as expressed by some of the authorities, a public right. Therefore, starting with this right, if unwarrantable and injurious consequences result, it cannot be said, except in a very clear case, that liability results as a matter of law from a variance between the information received and the communication sent.

No case like the one here presented has been called to our attention, and we do not find that the precise question has been passed upon either by the Supreme Court of the United States or by the courts of Massachusetts, nor do we find that the precise question has been dealt with elsewhere. We must therefore deal with it somewhat as a new question.

The occasion being privileged, we do not think the general rule of law that liability results from accidental or inadvertent slander, and that the accident or inadvertence only operates to remove malice and limit the damages, applies to this case, and it is for the reason that the occasion was privileged, and the defendant was in the exercise of a right. It being a business right, however, or a private right, to gather and impart information to such members of the business world as were its subscribers, it must exercise the right reasonably, to the end that unnecessary harm shall not come to business men about whom the information is furnished. It is not a right which can be exercised heedlessly or carelessly. It is difficult to find a principle of law which would justify the careless and wanton exercise of a right of this character, and afford immunity on the ground of privilege. It is equally difficult, starting with a privileged occasion, to find a principle which would justify an absolute ruling of law upon the question of liability upon the ground of variance between the information received and that sent, and this is for the reason that the variance may be susceptible of explanation. Reasonable care and prudence with respect to forwarding information may, therefore, continue the privilege and clothe the acts of the agency with immunity, and, on the contrary, negligence may destroy the privilege and leave the parties responsible for acts which are culpable. Though the occasion is privileged, the privilege does not carry immunity to heedless and careless management in forwarding information. While the question whether an occasion is privileged is one of law, the ultimate question of privilege may become a mixed question of law and fact, through a variance between the information and the communication, and under such circumstances the question would be whether the privilege was carried to the communication through a reasonable and careful exercise of the right, or whether the privilege was lost by indifferent and careless management, or through inattention and want of due regard to the interests of others. If it was a pure mistake, involving no negligence or culpability, the privilege would not fail. On the other hand, if, by the exercise of such care as men ordinarily exercise in like business affairs, the true character of the information would have been discovered and correct information sent out, rather than that which was not warranted, then the privilege would fail. The communication sent being substantially different from the information received, the question whether it was libelous and injurious was quite likely one for the court; but the question whether it was a privileged communication, though different from the information, depended upon the question of fact whether the variance resulted from an excusable mistake, or from indifference or heedlessness.

Even the privilege of regular process does not protect against unreasonable and careless use. Any right or privilege may be so carelessly used as to lose the protection which it would otherwise afford. No privilege which affects the public at large grants immunity from negligent and careless acts. So, in the case under consideration, the question for the jury, under the circumstances, was not whether the communication was a libel,—not whether the variance was a substantial departure,—because such were questions of law, but whether the defendant's conduct was such as to give immunity, on the one hand, or so wanting in care, or so indifferent, as to make the privilege fail.

The contract between the agency and the subscribers contemplates verbal, written, and printed information, and provides that the agency shall not be responsible for neglect, unfaithfulness, or misconduct of agents; but this stipulation, of course, does not bind a member of the public who is not a party to it, and, as against such parties, to be within the privilege, the home office, in transmitting information, must be in the exercise of reasonable care. We do not look upon this holding as a departure from the principle which applies to reports of public proceedings, where the privilege is lost by an unreasonable exercise of the right, or by an unreasonable or unnecessary mode of communication, like sending a privileged communication by telegraph or postal card, where the communication becomes unprivileged. Indeed the recognized and controlling general principle is that a report, in order to be privileged as a matter of law, whether it be a report of a judicial proceeding or of a commercial agency, shall be a fair report; and in cases where the report is not fairly warranted by the information, exemption from liability upon the ground of privilege, or, what would be a more exact expression, upon the ground of excusable libel, may and should depend upon reasonableness of skill and care in reporting, and the question of skill and care becomes a question of fact for the jury. See Paterson, Liberty of the Press, Speech, and Public Worship, 184, 185, 192, 193, 203, 204.

In the regular course of the business of the agency the report came in from the Framingham agent on a general assignment form; and the mistake, quite likely, although the question is one of fact, resulted from the assumption that the assignment was a general one. Still, while the general statement in the body of the form in a sense indicated a general assignment, under the head which calls for particulars the report was clear as to the nature of the assignment. So, under such a situation, we think the communication sent out was neither so clearly an excusable mistake that it can be ruled a privileged communication as a matter of law, nor so clearly a wanton and heedless variance between the information received and the communication sent as to justify a ruling that the privilege failed absolutely, and that the defendant was liable. While the variation was a substantial one, in the absence of malice the situation does not present a case where it can be said that it was "as completely an invention of an untruth by the defendant as though he had received no information whatever," and that "the information received afforded no justification, no palliation, no excuse," and "as though he had sent out this untrue statement without a shadow of any information on his records about James Daisley;" nor was it a situation which justified the assumption and instruction that "it was made out of whole cloth, and was a mere blunder." And, while the variance between the information and the communication was so substantial and so injurious as to render the communication actionable per se, in the absence of privilege, still there was a reasonable question for the jury as to whether it was a pure mistake, and one which could not have been avoided by careful business management, or, on the other hand, whether the privilege of furnishing information in the ordinary course of business was carelessly exercised. It was for the jury to say whether reasonable care required the home office to read the whole paper and gather all the information that it contained, and whether it was reasonable to act upon the general appearance of the assignment form, and send the information which it did. If it was carelessness, the privilege was lost. If it was a mistake which could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care, privilege and immunity were not lost. In other words, if the home office was reasonably careful and prudent in respect to this transaction in the ordinary course of its business, the privilege continued, and would cover the mistake; 57 L. R. A.

but if the departure from the information was the result of want of care and heedlessness, the privilege failed.

The erroneous communication did not originate with the agent furnishing the information, but resulted from an attempt in the home office to transmit information received; and there is no pretense that they acted upon information other than that received from the Framingham agent; therefore the erroneous communication resulted from the conduct of an agent for whose acts the defendant is responsible. Still, if the mistake was one which could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care, the privilege of the occasion would afford immunity; while, on the other hand, if the mistake was the result of heedlessness and want of reasonable care, the privilege would fail, and immunity would not result from the privilege of the occasion. Neither the privilege of the occasion nor the privilege of sending in good faith information received, though false, furnishes immunity from careless management in the home office, or the careless exercise of the right; nor does the privilege arbitrarily fail by reason of a pure mistake of the home office involving no negligence or culpability. One may lose the protection of this privilege, like any other, through negligence, or he may safeguard himself by its protection through the exercise of such a degree of care at the home office as would be exercised by men of ordinary circumspection, care, and prudence in similar situations. If the privilege is lost through carelessness, then the defendant is answerable for the consequences of circulating injurious reports, and the rights would be determined regardless of the question of privilege, under the ordinary rules which obtain in libel cases.

In Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. 214, 216, the privilege was made to depend upon reasonable caution, and in Locke v. Bradstreet Co. 22 Fed. 771, 774, in submitting the question to the jury, the question of privilege was made to depend upon the exercise of ordinary care and caution.

The error being in the home office, there is no question raised for us as to the responsibility of the defendant in respect to the care of the agent who furnished the information. When there is a departure at the home office from information received, as is often the case in business in condensing, summarizing, and forwarding the reports, management and superintendence are necessarily involved, and, as all this affects the standing and the interests of one who is a stranger to the contract between the agency and the subscriber about whom the report is made, why should not the immunity of privilege depend upon the exercise of reasonable care?

It is fully recognized and established by the authorities that sending out from the home office the report received, knowing it to be false, or sending a true report in bad faith, or sending a true report unnecessarily or maliciously, makes the privilege fail. Inquiries in respect to all these elements involve fact, and it is perfectly clear and logical that the same principle makes privilege depend upon the fact of careful and prudent conduct and management in the home office when there is a departure from the information sent and a misstatement like the one in question here. It is not the question whether the communication was actionable under the general law of libel, but the question whether privilege exists as a protection to the defendant. That depends upon the rule of reasonableness in respect to the conduct and care of one who invokes the immunity of its protection. If the jury should find the necessary fact of careful and reasonable exercise of the right, then the privilege would exist, and the defendant would be within its protection and immunity, and, if not, it would be subject to the ordinary rules of law.

Making the question of privilege and immunity depend upon the question of fact as to the reasonable exercise of the right is not, in principle, altogether unlike, but is somewhat analogous to, the probable cause doctrine, which involves a question of fact for the jury in cases under circumstances where it is an admissible ground of defense (Folkard's Starkie, Slander & Libel, 6th ed. 34, 349-352), and in cases where it is received in mitigation of damages.

The very nature of the business of mercantile agencies makes it impracticable to apply the old rule as to presumption of malice from publication or from gross mismanagement. The reports are gathered from all parts of the country, and in the ordinary course of business there is no such thing as malice in the transaction. No one claims it in this case. Much of the confusion in the books results from attempts to apply ancient rules of presumption, and we have no hesitation in saying that we think the safer and the better rule, in a situation like this, where neither actual malice nor bad faith is suggested, is the ordinary rule that, in the exercise of the privilege or the right, one should be held to the ordinary rule of due care. Mr. Bigelow has aptly said: "It is, indeed, common to say that malice is presumed or implied upon proof of the publication; but that means nothing, and is only misleading, for the presumption or implication cannot be overturned by evidence of want of malice. Malice, touching the making a prima facie case, is only a name arbitrarily applied; it is simply a fiction." Bigelow, Torts, 7th ed. § 319.

In a case where malice is not an active question, why should not the existence or nonexistence of privilege be made to depend upon the existence or nonexistence of due care, and upon a reasonable exercise of the right, rather than upon illogical presumptions one way or the other as to malice, and, in a case where malice becomes an actual element, let the question of malice be tried like any other question of fact.

In this case all questions of malice and bad faith, and all questions as to vindictive damages, were properly eliminated by the position of the parties and by the court, and we are now brought to the questions raised by assignments 14, 15, and 16, which 57 L. R. A.

relate to the allegation of damages, to the sufficiency of proofs, and to the instructions upon the question of damages; and we find no error here. We do not understand that, in this class of cases, the general allegation of injury to business and credit is treated as an allegation of special damages, in the sense of requiring specific allegations of loss of particular customers in order to recover for general diminution. The proof was general as to the immediate diminution of business and loss of credit. There was no evidence of loss of particular customers or contracts, and the instructions distinctly eliminated all such considerations, and confined the jury to such injury by way of diminution of business and loss of credit as they should find from the general facts and the whole situation was caused by the publication.

No question is raised as to the sufficiency of the proofs, provided such damages are recoverable under the allegation set forth, nor as to the sufficiency of the instructions as to the measure of damages. The general rule of compensation for injury was given to the jury with a limitation in general terms that, in order to recover for diminution, the injury suffered must have resulted directly from the wrongful publication. No point was taken that the instructions were not sufficiently full or explicit upon the line that the injury must have been the natural consequence of the injurious publication, or such as naturally and proximately resulted; so there are no questions of that kind for us to consider.

The general rule in libel and slander cases is aptly stated in Hamilton v. Walters, 4 U. C. Q. B. (O. S.) 24, 27, that the plaintiff "may state his case in either of two ways. He may aver a general diminution of business, in consequence of the slander, relying upon his ability to make that appear to a jury, or he may aver a particular instance of damage, knowing that he can give evidence of loss in a specific case." The plaintiff in the case at bar, in his general allegation and proofs, proceeded in the first way. That a plaintiff may do this is, of course, not the result of a rule which is general in its application to all actions of tort, but of one which is, perhaps, peculiar to those of libel and slander. The reason for the rule may be that evil report is insidious, that it travels and does damage in the dark, meandering in ways whereof it is difficult for man to find out, or because, as said in Bergmann v. Jones, 94 N. Y. 51, cases may arise where, from the nature of the business in which the party is engaged, it would be almost impossible to prove the loss of trade by witnesses who had dealt with the party bringing the suit.

Such rule, in this class of cases, is probably limited to cases where the words are actionable per se, where the words, in their natural and ordinary meaning, import a crime, or such as are clearly injurious to one's business, profession, or trade. We do not find any express decision in Massachusetts upon this question, but it would seem to be the English rule, the rule in New York, and the rule quite generally adopted in this country. See cases in 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1084 (4), note 1; cases in 5 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 768d; Union Associated Press v. Heath, 49 App. Div. 247, 253, 254, 63 N. Y. Supp. 96; Bergmann v. Jones, 94 N. Y. 51, 60, 61; Hale, Damages, 226, and cases in note 23; Folkard's Star-kie, Slander & Libel, 3d ed. 347, 348.

Under the general allegation in this case, the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show general loss of business and general loss of credit immediately following the publication complained of. In such a situation, under proper instructions (and no exceptions were taken to the instructions to the jury on the question of damages in this case), we think the jury were warranted, in view of all the evidence and under the circumstances disclosed, in estimating the damages to determine what part, if any, of the loss was attributable to the publication, and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to connect the loss with the publication by direct or positive evidence of particular instances.

The result is that the judgment should be set aside, upon the ground that the question of defendant's liability should not have been ruled as a matter of law under the circumstances.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, the verdict is set aside, the case is remanded to that court for further proceedings, and the plaintiff in error recovers costs in this court.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE of Connecticut
v.

TRAVELERS' INSURANCE COMPANY,
App't.

(73 Conn. 255.)

1. The taxing power of the legislature is not restricted by any implied rule of fundamental law that taxes must be equal and uniform, in the absence of any such provision in the Federal or state Constitution.
2. The privileges and immunities of citizens of other states, guaranteed by U. S. Const. art. 4, § 2, and U. S. Const. 14th Amend., are not violated by Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 3836, 3916, taxing the resident stockholders of certain corporations in the town in which they reside, deducting from the market value of the stock the value of the capital invested in real estate on which the company pays taxes, but imposing a state tax on nonresident shareholders of 1½ per cent on the market value of their shares, without any provision for deduction of capital invested in real estate, since this law is not a hostile discrimination against citizens of other states in the enjoyment of property rights common to all, but provides for the state taxation of nonresident stockholders because it is impracticable to subject them to the municipal taxation that is imposed on the resident stockholders.
3. The duty of determining what is a wise and fair mode of distributing the burden of taxation is a purely legislative power, which the judicial department of the government cannot exercise.

(October 17, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford

NOTE.—As to infringement of equal rights and privileges by taxation, see also note to Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 583.

For a case holding that a state tax allowing a deduction of debts to residents without allowing such deduction to nonresidents is a denial of the equal protection of the laws, see Sprague v. Fletcher (Vt.) 37 L. R. A. 840.

57 L. R. A.

County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce a tax. Affirmed.

Statement by Hamersley, J.:

The complaint alleged that on October 1, 1898, 1,878 shares of the defendant's stock belonged to stockholders residing without this state; that the market value on said day of each share was $250; that the defendant has never paid any part of the tax due the plaintiff under provisions of § 2, chap. 153, Pub. Acts 1897, although said tax was due October 20, 1898. The answer alleged that the defendant's capital stock consisted of 10,000 shares; that on October 1, 1898, 1,799 of these shares were owned by residents of other states who were citizens of the states in which they resided; that on said date the defendant had investments in real estate upon which it was assessed and paid taxes, viz. two pieces of real estate situate in this state, of the market value of $137,965.81, and 948 pieces of real estate situate in other states, of the market value of $1,640,696.24, such market value being the amount respectively at which said investments in real estate were on October 1, 1898, carried on the books of the defendant; that the resident owners of the defendant's stock were, on said date assessed upon the stock owned by them, respectively, at a valuation equal to a market value of $250 a share, less a large deduction therefrom by reason of the company's said investments in real estate; that the amount per share sought to be collected from the defendant in this action as a tax upon the stock owned by said nonresident shareholders is far in excess of the amount per share paid and required to be paid as a tax by the several resident shareholders on the stock owned by them. The demurrer to the answer claimed that the facts alleged therein could not affect the legality of the tax sought to be collected from the defendant in this action, nor the right of the plaintiff to recover as claimed in the complaint, and specified such claims as follows: "It is immaterial (1) that the defendant had as stated, investments in real estate upon which it was assessed and paid taxes; (2) at what amount the defendant's investments in real estate were on October 1, 1898, carried on its books; (3) that resident owners of the defendant's stock were, on October 1, 1898, assessed on their stock at a valuation equal to its market value, less a deduction therefrom by reason of the defendant's investments in real estate; (4) what amount per share happened to be paid, or to be required to be paid, as taxes by the different resident shareholders of the defendant on stock owned by them on October 1, 1898, in the various counties, towns, cities, boroughs, and school districts in which they respectively resided; (5) that assessors of towns within which resident shareholders reside have happened to assess their stock at a less value than $250 per share, because the valuation of the defendant's stock, as well as the stock of other corporations affected by the same laws, when owned by resident shareholders, is by the laws of this state made by the assessors of the towns within which such shareholders reside; (6) what taxes were required to be paid by said resident shareholders on the stock owned by them on October 1, 1898, to counties, towns, cities, boroughs, or school districts in which they severally resided, because the taxes required to be paid by resident shareholders of the defendant corporation, as well as of other corporations affected by the same laws, depend upon the action of the counties, towns, cities, boroughs, and school districts in which such shareholders respectively reside. Other grounds of demurrer were that: It does not appear but that on October 1, 1898, the defendant company had assets vastly in excess of its capital and surplus, and it does not appear that any part of its capital was then invested in real estate. The laws of this state do not provide for any deduction from the market value of the stock of the defendant company owned by resident shareholders in assessing said stock for taxation, by reason of the investments of said company in real estate. The trial court having sustained this demurrer, the defendant refused to plead over, and thereupon judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The appeal assigns error in holding the statute law* under which the tax was imposed to be constitutional, and in not holding that law to be in violation of § 2 of art. 4 and of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution.

Messrs. Robinson & Robinson and William R. Matson, for appellant:

The statute under which the tax is sought to be collected in this action is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution and of the civil rights act, U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1977.

State v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 590, 40 Atl. 465.

The statute law under which the tax is imposed upon the shares of nonresident stock is in violation of the 2d section of art. 4 of the United States Constitution, in that it withholds from the valuation of the shares belonging to nonresidents the deduction allowed by the statutes in the valuation of shares of the same stock belonging to residents, thereby depriving citizens of other states of privileges and immunities enjoyed by citizens of Connecticut.

Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Campbell v. Morris, 3 Harr. & M'H. 554; Story, Const. 4th ed. § 1937; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 489; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449; Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268; Railroad & Teleph. Cos. v. Tennessee Bd. of Equalizers, 85 Fed. 306; Sprague v. Fletcher, 69 Vt. 69, 37 L. R. A. 840, 37 Atl. 239; Bliss's Petition, 63 N. H. 135; Wiley v. Parmer, 14 Ala. 627; Farmington v. Downing, 67 N. H. 441, 30 Atl. 345; State ex rel. Hoadley v. Insurance Comrs. 37 Fla. 564, 33 L. R. A. 288, 20 So. 772; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Maynard v. Granite State Provident Asso. 34 C. C. A. 438, 92 Fed. 435.

There are rights in every free government beyond the control of the state.

Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 663, 22 L. ed. 461; State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 31 L. R. A. 55, 33 Atl. 519.

Mr. Edward D. Robbins, with Mr. Charles Phelps, Attorney General, for appellee:

Laws making exemptions from taxation, being in derogation of the common rule, must be strictly construed. Doubt is fatal to the exemption.

New Orleans v. Robira, 42 La. Ann. 1098,

*Sec. 3836, as amended by chaps. 68 and 248 of the Public Acts of 1889. "Shares of the capital stock of any bank, national banking association, trust, insurance, investment, turnpike, bridge, or plank-road company, owned by any resident in this state, shall be set in his list, at its market value in the town in which he may reside; but so much of the capital of any such company as may be invested in real estate, on which it is assessed and pays a tax, shall be deducted from the market value of its stock, in its returns to the assessors."

Sec. 3916, as amended by chap. 153, § 2, of the Public Acts of 1897. "The cashier or secretary of each corporation whose stock is liable to taxation, and not otherwise taxed by the provisions of this title, shall, on the first day of October, annually, or within ten days thereafter, deliver to the comptroller a sworn list of all its stockholders residing without this state on said day, and the number and market value of the shares of stock therein then belonging to each; and shall on or before the twentieth day of October, annually, pay to the state one and one half per centum of such value; and if any such cashier or secretary shall neglect to comply with the provisions of this section he shall forfeit to the state one hundred dollars, in addition to said one and one half per centum so required to be paid."

ble to taxation, and not otherwise taxed by the provisions of this title, shall, on the first day of October, annually, or within ten days thereafter, deliver to the comptroller a sworn list of all its stockholders residing without this state on said day, and the number and market value of the shares of stock therein then belonging to each; and shall on or before the twentieth day of October, annually, pay to the state one and one half per centum of such value; and if any such cashier or secretary shall neglect to comply with the provisions of this section he shall forfeit to the state one hundred dollars, in addition to said one and one half per centum so required to be paid."

11 L. R. A. 141, 8 So. 402; Copp v. Norwich, 24 Conn. 28; New Haven v. Sheffield Scientific School, 59 Conn. 163, 22 Atl. 156; Hartford v. Hartford Theological Seminary, 66 Conn. 475, 34 Atl. 483; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 364.

Our system of taxation is not unconstitutional because of lack of equality.

State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, sub nom. Taylor v. Secor, 23 L. ed. 663; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 22 L. ed. 189; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533.

The method of taxation now complained of, which has existed unchallenged in this state for a generation, is not "a clear and hostile discrimination against particular persons and classes," and it cannot be said to be a discrimination "of an unusual character unknown to the practice of our governments."

Merchants' & Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829.

So long as the state does not deny to any persons who come within its jurisdiction equal treatment in the matter of taxation with its own citizens similarly situated, its laws are not obnoxious to the civil rights act, nor to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; State v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 590, 40 Atl. 465.

The appellant does not show that the statute sought to be enforced in this action provides any different rule of assessment for stock of its nonresident stockholders than for stock of its resident stockholders.

Batterson's Appeal, 72 Conn. 374, 44 Atl. 546.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant claims that the statute law under which the tax sought to be collected in this action was imposed violates the Constitution. For the purpose of ascertaining our fundamental law, the state and national Constitutions must be regarded as substantially one ordinance, enacted by that body in whom the supreme sovereignty within our limits is vested. The reasons urged in support of the defendant's claim, if sound, are really a challenge to the validity of methods of taxation that have existed in this community for 250 years. Our taxation has always been based on the power and duty of the general assembly, being responsible for the performance of such duty, not to the courts, but to its constituency, to determine, on grounds of public policy, the methods by which a fair and politic distribution of the stress of taxation may be accomplished. Every line of objection raised by the defendant must invoke for its final support the claim 57 L. R. A.

urged in its brief, that the aphorism, "Taxation shall be uniform and equal," is contained in the Constitution, and operates as a limitation on the power of taxation, which this court is bound to enforce. The case, therefore, practically turns on the existence and authority of such a maxim.

The alleged maxim, in order to control our action, must be found either in some express provision or clear implication of the Constitution. No court can directly set aside an act of the legislature, and the power to indirectly invalidate legislation is one which, in the nature of things, can exist in the judicial department only under a constitution in the American sense, and is limited by the authority from which it is derived. It is not a power of veto or revision, but purely the judicial power of interpretation. This judicial power is bottomed on the absolute supremacy of the law. In the United States the supreme law is the expressed will of that ultimate sovereignty which has been assumed by the people. All legislation as well as the action of all departments of government, must conform to "the supreme original will" of the people as expressed in the Constitutions which "form the fundamental and paramount law." Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 176, 2 L. ed. 60, 73; Davison v. Champion, 7 Conn. 244, 246; Opinion of the Judges, 30 Conn. 593.

Since the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Marbury v. Madison, first announced that the judicial department is authorized to declare a legislative act void, if the rights of parties are affected by a clear conflict between the supreme and subordinate law, that power has been used without question. This is an exercise of the judicial power of interpretation, but an application of that power which was wholly novel. In the interpretation of a settled principle of jurisprudence, its meaning, as applicable to existing facts, may sometimes be made clear by illustrations drawn from universal moral rules that in a way account for all law, and, in the interpretation of a statute, historic facts, and political and social conditions, may sometimes make clear a doubtful meaning. So similar considerations may at times be proper and necessary in finding the very essence of constitutional limitations. Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 576, 583, 39 L. R. A. 794, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708; State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 489, 31 L. R. A. 55, 33 Atl. 519; Re Clark, 65 Conn. 17, 37, 28 L. R. A. 242, 31 Atl. 522 et seq. Yet the indiscriminate use, in the discussion of these questions, of arguments drawn from such sources, has undoubtedly induced some practical confusion between the judicial application of a broad principle stated and the judicial enactment of a principle not stated. The distinction, however, is radical. One is interpretation; the other is usurpation.

We deem it therefore immaterial whether or not the apothegm, "Taxation should be equal and uniform," is sound, and ought to be incorporated in our Constitution; for, whatever our view as to this might be, we should be compelled to hold that unequal taxation by the legislature might be valid, if the sovereign who enacted our fundamental law has seen fit to grant the power of taxation, and refused to impose such a limitation on its exercise.

Passing, then, to the real question, Is there in our fundamental law any express provision or clear implication, from provisions therein contained, that "taxation shall be uniform and equal?" There can be no claim that such a mandate is directly expressed either in the state or national Constitution. Express provisions of that nature may be found in the local constitutions of many states, and have proved a source of practical difficulties for legislatures and courts. They are not found in our own, which assumes what experience has taught,—that the power of taxation cannot safely be cabined within a theory of uniformity and equality. Taxes, to be both uniform and equal, affecting each inhabitant in proportion to his ability to contribute, can only be devised by a government unhampered by the limitations of humanity. With the complications of civilized society, the stress of taxation is not and cannot be confined to the individual who pays the tax; its ramifications are widespread and hidden. This and other considerations forbid the assertion of any specific theory as essential to just taxation. It is true that it is the interest of every government that the burden of taxation should be distributed fairly and equally, and that it is the duty of the department in which the taxing power may be vested to honestly use its best judgment to secure such result. If this is what is meant by uniformity and equality being of the essence of taxation, the saying is correct, although unfortunately expressed. But the assertion that a violation of the legislative duty of fair and equal taxation, under a constitution like our own, inherently involves a violation of that constitution, by an overstepping of the limits of legislative power, is not true. If a broad expression of the above principle is desirable, it may more properly be stated thus: Justice and equity in the stress of the whole burden is inherent in taxation, and the power of accomplishing that result is vested, with the power of taxation, in the legislature, subject only to restrictions specified in the grant of that power, and to the general limitations placed by the Constitution on the exercise of all legislative power. But it is unwise to limit the principle by the terms of any authoritative formula.

Is this maxim necessarily implied from any provisions of our fundamental law? Unless the vague notion of a higher law is claimed as a constitutional provision, we are pointed to no provision, nor to any combination of provisions, from which it is claimed that such a maxim is a necessary implication. To controvert a claim which rests on no definite propositions is ordinarily like fighting the air. But fortunately in this case the task of proving a negative is not difficult. The provisions of our Constitution exclude the possibility of a limitation of legislative power by any implied mandate that taxation shall be equal and uniform. It is impossible to study the development of our law during two and a half centuries without reaching the certain conclusion that the right of the people to tax themselves through the representatives in the general assembly has always been held in reverence, and is distinctly secured by the Constitution; that the duty to exercise the power of taxation wisely, and only for the public good, is a legislative duty, for the performance of which the general assembly is responsible to its constituency; that the power of considering the conditions of population or property, the theories and maxims of political economy or moral philosophy, which may affect taxation, and of determining what, on the whole, is a wise and fair mode of distributing the burden, is a purely legislative power, and that the judicial department is, by express provision of the Constitution, forbidden to exercise that power. Such provisions are incompatible with the existence in our state Constitution of any maxim of uniformity and equality in taxation to be defined by the court, and employed in controlling the general assembly in the performance of its legislative duties and the exercise of its legislative powers.

In our national Constitution we find provisions even more pointedly clashing with such a maxim. The power of taxation is granted to Congress in the broadest terms. There are two express limitations as to the manner of exercising that power, and these limitations, without referring to others, necessarily exclude the application to all taxes of any rule of "uniformity and equality." One applies to "direct taxes," and the other to "duties, imposts, and excises." If any mode of taxation can be conceived which does not come within the meaning of this designation of two kinds of taxation, the exercise of that mode is unlimited. "Direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states which may be included within this Union" in proportion to the census directed to be taken. By this positive mandate any rule of equality in laying direct taxes is rendered impossible. The citizens of different states, if thus taxed at all, must be taxed unequally. "All duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." This mandate is plainly geographical, demanding uniformity of rate in all places, but not uniformity of operation, and practically forbids the effort to secure uniformity of operation in laying indirect taxes. And so, by force of specific commands, the theory that equity and uniformity are essential to taxation is ignored. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the reasons for these provisions. They are familiar to all. But the significant fact is the clear declaration of the sovereign will that, in exercising the power of taxation, considerations of public policy must dominate. In certain vital matters affecting the relations of different states to each other and to the general government, these considerations of policy are fixed by the sovereign will, but in all other respects they are committed, with the power of taxation, to the Congress; and whether fixed by the Constitution, or left to Congress, these considerations are the masters, not the servants, of theories of uniformity and equality.

The Federal courts have had occasion to discuss this matter of "equality in taxation" in two classes of cases,—one arising in states whose local constitutions contain some express phrase of that kind, and one arising from the construction of the national banking law. In both classes the court is called upon to deal with the purely judicial question of the interpretation of language used, and in the former has been obliged to struggle with the problem of discovering distinctions that may save the taxing power from serious paralysis. In some instances these discussions have taken a wide range, but in all the considerations entertained are firmly tied to the question before the court; that is, the meaning of language used, in one case in a state constitution, and in the other in an act of Congress. But quite recently the specific claim that the United States Constitution contains some rule or principle of equality and uniformity of operation in taxation was made before the United States Supreme Court and decided. Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747. In the carefully considered opinion in this case, delivered by Mr. Justice White, the court, after long deliberation and with a single dissenting vote, holds that the provisions of the Constitution are inconsistent with the existence of a theory of equality in taxation, which the judicial department is empowered to define and impose upon the legislative. The case arose under the war revenue act of June, 1898, imposing a tax on legacies. The act provided that when by the same will legacies of different values were bequeathed to different persons, strangers in blood to the testator, the tax on one legacy might be 5 per cent of its value, on another $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, on another 10 per cent, on another $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, and on another 15 per cent. This tax was uniform only in a geographical sense, and its patent and "profound inequality" can be defended as just only on considerations of public policy. The precise claim was that this whole scheme of taxation was grossly unequal, and therefore was not within the taxing power of Congress as granted and limited by the Constitution. The power of state legislatures, whose state Constitutions contain some express provisions requiring uniformity and equality in taxation, to impose such unequal taxation, had previously been sustained on the theory of a distinction, in the right of property as recognized and protected by the state, between the right to make a transfer of property to take effect before death and one to take effect after death. It is thus stated in Magoun v. Ill- inois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 288, 42 L. ed. 1037, 1041, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 596: "The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law, and not a natural right,—a privilege; and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it. From these principles it is deduced that the states may tax the privilege, discriminate between relatives, and between these and strangers, and grant exemptions, and are not precluded from this power by the provisions of the respective state Constitutions requiring uniformity and equality of taxation." Therefore the power of legislatures to tax legacies is less trammelled, and "disenthrall'd from limitations which would otherwise apply if the privilege of regulation did not exist." How far such a distinction, as applicable to the power of taxing, may result from the impracticable nature of such requirements in the state Constitutions, is not material. The distinction has no application to the power of Congress. In Knowlton v. Moore the court holds that the tax in question is one on the transmission and receipt of property by death, which is as common and legitimate a subject of taxation as any other transmission of property, or as property itself, and says: "Of course, in considering the power of Congress to impose death duties, we eliminate all thought of a greater privilege to do so than exists as to any other form of taxation, as the right to regulate successions is vested in the states, and not in Congress." And so the precise question whether the United States Constitution forbids inequality in any form of taxation was presented in a mode the most concrete possible, and decided in the negative. Still the question whether any particular form of taxation is more just and equal than some other is a question that must be decided, but not by the judicial department. As to this the court says: "In the absence of constitutional limitation, the question whether it is or is not is legislative, and not judicial."

Is it so, then, that the legislature may make any exaction it pleases under the form of a tax? Clearly not. The legislative power in all its manifestations is limited, including that of taxing, which, however, from its inherent nature, approaches more nearly to arbitrary power. If a tax is laid on the exercise of the duty of voting, or if any exaction is put in the form of taxation as a mere sham, and is, in effect and purpose, a denial to one of the enjoyment of rights indicated in the Constitution, and the enjoyment of which it secures equally to all, or is a seizure of the property of one for the benefit of another, or is an uncompensated confiscation of property, the law authorizing such exaction is in violation of mandates contained in our Constitution, and probably in all American constitutions, and is therefore void. It is neither taxation nor legislation. Such guaranties are not limitations on the power of taxation, but on all power. It is immaterial in these cases whether the exaction, if it could be considered merely as a tax, is wise or foolish, oppressive or just, equal or unequal. The law is not a law solely because it is forbidden by some command of the supreme law. The meaning and scope of these commands present questions on which the judgments of the judicial department are final. The wisdom or necessity of distributing the burdens of taxation according to rules of equality presents questions on which the acts of the legislative department are conclusive. We see no escape from the conclusion that our fundamental law, either state or national, contains no provisions, either expressed or implied, that "taxation must be equal and uniform," and the question seems to be set at rest by the decision in Knowlton v. Moore.

The claim, however, is urged that the 14th Amendment and § 2 of art. 4 of the United States Constitution contain certain provisions inferentially inconsistent with the particular taxation now under discussion. In order to deal with that claim, it is necessary to keep in mind the precise nature of this taxation. The main burden of taxation for municipal purposes falls upon inhabitants of towns proportionally to their ability to contribute to public burdens. Their ability to contribute is determined by lists, prepared under authority of each town, setting to each inhabitant certain sums, according to rules more or less arbitrary, fixed by the legislature. The gross amount of these sums measures the ability of each inhabitant to pay, and taxes are imposed by all municipal corporations authorized to lay taxes upon the individuals according to their ability to pay, thus measured. The rule of measurement was formerly largely arbitrary; but, as now fixed by the legislature, is substantially the present fair market value of property owned, both real and personal. This rule of taxing inhabitants of towns as individuals, according to their ability to contribute, measured by legislative rules, was adopted in 1650, and still prevails as to municipal taxation, and to a limited extent as to state taxation. Yale University v. New Haven, 71 Conn. 316, 330, 43 L. R. A. 490, 42 Atl. 87. When, in later years, local business came to be carried on by corporations rather than individuals or partnerships, a similar rule was applied in taxing such corporations. When banks were first chartered, in 1792, a different rule became necessary as to them, which has since been applied to other corporations of similar character, whenever chartered. As the burden of municipal taxation fell on towns, and as the inhabitants of a large number of smaller towns were proportionately less able to bear their burden than those of larger towns, the legislature sought to give to these smaller towns, in the preparation of their tax list, the benefit of all property that could be considered as increasing the ability of their inhabitants to pay; and this desire to relieve small towns from a practically unfair share of burden has influenced our whole system of taxing corporations. While banks were located generally in the larger towns, their property was equitably owned by individuals resident in many other towns, and so, instead of taxing the banks directly, the shares of their stock were treated as distinct personal property, and were listed to the individual owners in the towns of their residence. Still later, when corporations, such as railroads, savings banks, and mutual insurance companies, came into existence, it was found impracticable to accomplish fair results by taxing them under existing rules, and as to them still another rule was adopted, i. e. that of special taxes, by which the legislature taxed the corporation directly for the support of the state government, fixing the sum to be paid—First, by an arbitrary rate fixed by the legislature; and second, by an arbitrary ascertainment of a sum which might be considered as approximating the value of the property owned. And these two factors, i. e. the rate and the sum to which the rate applies, are arbitrarily determined by the legislature, but, with the intent, in adjusting each to the other, that the result shall be a fair and just tax. It was early found that these two modes, i. e. that of taxing shares as the distinct property of the individual owner, and that of special taxes, must be combined in the taxation of banks and similar corporations. Shares of stock owned by nonresidents of any town could not be listed as the personal property of an inhabitant of any town, and for a time the corporations, in respect to shares so owned, escaped all taxation. Eventually a special tax was laid upon the corporation in respect to these shares of nonresidents. Like other special taxes, the amount of the tax depends on two factors, i. e. the rate, and the sum on which the rate is laid, arbitrarily fixed by the legislature, having regard to the other in fixing each. As such non-resident shareholders would otherwise substantially escape that contribution to the taxation of the corporation which is forced from the resident shareholder, the law also compels them, proportionately to the number of their shares, to reimburse the corporation for the special tax so paid in respect to their shares. It follows that, in taxing one class of corporations, the law divides the members of the corporation into two classes, one consisting of shareholders whose property rights can be listed for municipal taxation in the towns of their residence, and the other of those whose property rights cannot be so listed; that it recognizes a similar distinction in the corporate property and interests which belong to the members who constitute the corporation; that the corporate property and interest represented by the former class of members is subjected to municipal taxation, and exempted from special taxes, and that represented by the latter class is exempted from municipal taxes, and subjected to special taxation; that the portion represented by municipal shareholders is taxed under rules governing rate, and sums to which the rate applies, including valuations, determined by the necessities of municipal taxation, and that the portion represented by the state shareholders is taxed under different rules, determined by the necessities of special taxation; that all taxes thus laid are to be paid by the shareholders proportionately to the number of shares respectively owned by the members in each class, in one case through the form of a tax as on distinct personal property, and in the other through the form of reimbursing the corporation for an expense which properly belongs to the shareholders on account of whom it was incurred.

The precise thing, therefore, claimed as void is treating the members of one corporation, together with the proportional part of the corporate property pertaining to them as members, as forming two classes, and subjecting one class to municipal taxes only, and the other class to state or special taxes only, and fixing the amount to be contributed for these diverse objects by members of one class under rules which necessarily differ in form from those applicable to the other. We have seen that such taxation is not void, because it may be regarded as neither uniform nor equal, nor because it may seem to the judges of this court to be unfair and unjust. Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 548, 19 L. ed. 482.

The only remaining claim is that for some other reason it is in violation of the constitutional provisions mentioned. The 14th Amendment seeks to add the security of national protection to the two guaranties common to the state Constitutions, by which life, liberty, and property are free from invasion, except under authority of law consistent with the Constitution, and by which any person or class of persons within state jurisdiction is secured against hostile discrimination, in providing equal protection under the law in the enjoyment of rights belonging to all. It was not intended to otherwise affect the existing control of states over the civil rights of its citizens. United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 554, 23 L. ed. 588, 592; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 31, sub nom. Bowman v. Lewis, 25 L. ed. 989, 992; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 237, 33 L. ed. 892, 895, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533.

The occasion, purpose, scope, and effect of the 14th Amendment were authoritatively stated by the United States Supreme Court, speaking through Justice Miller, shortly after the adoption of the last three amendments. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394. The underlying thought of the opinion in that case has never been intentionally departed from, and in a very recent case has been deliberately affirmed by the same court, in an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Peckham, reviewing adjudications of the intervening twenty-seven years. Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448. The reasoning of these two leading cases excludes the idea of the 14th Amendment placing any new limitations on the power of the people of the states to determine their civil rights by their fundamental law, unless in the hardly thinkable case of a rescission of the guaranties relative to the supremacy of the law of the land and equality in the enjoyment of constitutional civil rights. If, then, the legislation complained of is invalid, as invading any civil right secured by our Constitution, and thus deprives the defendant's shareholders of property contrary to the law of the land, or is otherwise obnoxious to these guaranties, it may violate the provisions of the 14th Amendment; otherwise, it does not.

It would seem idle to claim the invasion of any such right, unless the right to "equal and uniform taxation" is one. Our fundamental law establishes no such right. And so the appeal to the 14th Amendment fails by reason of the primary error of supposing that our Constitution contains such a maxim. The Constitutions of other states contain a maxim of that kind, and in these states a legislative act imposing an unequal tax on anyone is not law; and therefore the collection of such tax might be the seizure of property without due process,—i. e. contrary to the "law of the land,"—or the imposition of such a tax on one person or a select number of persons might invade the right to equal protection of this constitutional exemption from such taxation, and so be a violation of the 14th Amendment. That such taxation comes within the purview of this amendment solely by force of an express prohibition of the state fundamental law (unless, indeed, the legislative act is not really one of taxation, but, in effect and purpose, an act of confiscation, or in other ways a direct assault upon some limitation of the Constitution affecting all legislative power) is illustrated by the cases cited. Whatever extension may properly be given to the provision which forbids the denial by any state to any person or selected number of persons within its jurisdiction of equal protection in the enjoyment of those civil rights secured by its fundamental law to all citizens, it cannot cover the establishment by this amendment of a constitutional rule of "equality in taxation." The broad dictum of the United States Supreme Court, speaking by Justice Miller, that, while state constitutions may contain provisions against unequal taxation, "the Federal Constitution imposes no restraints on the states in that regard" (Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 105, 24 L. ed. 616), has been fully confirmed by the logic of recent decisions. Another line of cases, culminating in Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, brings into sharp relief the impossibility of inferring from the provisions of the 14th Amendment any maxim of "equality in taxation." It was claimed that the 14th Amendment imposed upon each state the limitations of power imposed upon the United States by the first eight amendments. This claim had been denied in several decisions, and in Maxwell v. Dow it was held that the state of Utah, through its local Constitution, could deny to everyone within its jurisdiction the common-law right of trial by jury, and such denial was not obnoxious to the 14th Amendment, which acted on fundamental rights as they existed in each state. The right of trial by jury, until recent years, has been generally regarded as the most essential of those secured by the muniments of English liberty. With other rights protected by the first eight amendments it forms the body of "privileges and immunities," which our American constitutions have, in general, placed beyond the reach of legislative power. "Equality in taxation" finds its source as a fundamental maxim in the brilliant speculations of the Encyclopedists, formulated into a declaration of the "rights of man," and adopted by the revolutionary assembly of France in 1789. The proposition that the 14th Amendment gives the national protection to the equal enjoyment of civil rights as established in each state, and should not be extended by inference, is demonstrably sound; and, this being so, through what considerations of public policy, or by what process of reasoning, can an inference be drawn which leaves the right of trial by jury subject to the control of the state sovereignty, and places the theory of "equality in taxation" beyond its power; which holds that sovereignty competent to define and alter the hard-won civil rights of freemen as embodied in the petition of rights, the bill of rights, our local and national declaration of rights, but powerless to reject the theories of doctrinaires embodied in the "rights of man?"

The defendant's claim of a special violation of § 2 of art. 4 of the United States Constitution is greatly narrowed by the elimination of his initial error of treating the maxim, "Taxation must be equal and uniform," as a mandate of our fundamental law. If the defendant were right as to the existence of such a mandate, then exemption from unequal taxation might be considered a civil right or "privilege" secured by our Constitution to every citizen of this state, and a law which deprived citizens of other states of that privilege might be treated as obnoxious to this particular clause. But, the claim being untenable, the clause has no application, unless the legislation in question deprives citizens of our sister states of some other privilege, and one to which our citizens, by virtue of their citizenship, are entitled. The mere fact of discrimination is immaterial. The exercise of the legislative function necessarily involves discrimination. While discrimination in itself may be harmless, it does sometimes serve to mark the character of legislation. Thus, a law purporting to be a police regulation may, by reason of its discriminations, be shown to be a regulation of commerce. So, a law purporting to be mere taxation may, by the nature of its discrimination, be shown to be in fact a deprivation of citizens of other states of some civil right secured to our own. "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." The meaning and effect of this language in substantial particulars is settled. It is confined to the single purpose of preventing an exercise of the independent power left to each state in favor of its own citizens in respect to their common personal rights as citizens and against a participation in the same rights by citizens of other states. "Privileges and immunities" are those civil rights belonging to all citizens of the state. Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448; Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562. They are not special privileges, such as any state may grant to portions of its citizens, but those "which are common to its citizens under its Constitution and laws by virtue of their citizenship." Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737. The discrimination must be personal (Shipper v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 47 Pa. 338), and against citizens of another state as natural subjects of that state; and so corporations cannot be citizens within the meaning of the clause (Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. ed. 972). To render a state law obnoxious to this clause, it is essential (1) that the privilege claimed by the citizen of another state should be a civil right common to the citizens of the enacting state; (2) that the privilege claimed should be denied to a natural citizen of another state in this capacity as such citizen. The legislation complained of does not come within either of these requirements. The "privilege" claimed is under our tax legislation, and must be one of the following: The right of all citizens of this state, being members of a state corporation, to be taxed in respect to their interests in the corporation (1) for the same objects of taxation; or, if taxed for differing objects, (2) by the same modes of taxation; or, if taxed for differing objects and by different modes, (3) by the same rules of valuation; and (4) to a gross amount of taxation, which shall be the same for each member in proportion to his interest. Neither our legislation nor our Constitution entitles our citizens to such rights. The distinctions made by our law are within the legislative power of taxation, and their wisdom or folly cannot present a judicial question. It may be noted, in reference to the fourth privilege claimed, that equality in the gross amount of taxation falling upon two classes of shareholders taxed under our law for the differing objects of municipal taxation and state taxation is impossible, and the different modes of taxation are adopted with a view of roughly obtaining some equality which cannot be so nearly approximated in any other way; and it may be further noted that the taxation is not claimed to be oppressive; indeed, it was urged in argument that the stress of taxation falling on this defendant and its stockholders is far less than that falling on other corporations transacting a similar business. All these claims resolve themselves into the one claim of a fundamental right to the application of a theory of uniformity and equality in taxation.

If the defendant is treated as representing its "nonresident" shareholders, there is no discrimination against them in their capacity as "citizens of other states." The discriminations are between members of our state corporations by reason of their participation in its grant of corporate franchise. In accepting the rights of property inherent in that grant, they voluntarily put themselves, for purposes of taxation, under our jurisdiction. The state discriminates in the manner of compelling members of a corporation to share the gross amount which the corporation should contribute under all forms of taxation by reason of the property created and accumulated and of the privileges enjoyed through the state's grant of incorporation. The obligation of the members to submit to such discrimination is an incident to their acceptance and enjoyment of the grant. Shares of stock in the hands of the shareholders may be treated for certain purposes, including some forms of taxation, as a property distinct from that of the corporation; but nevertheless the real interest of the shareholder is a corporate interest, and one element of the taxation the state may impose on the corporation. Delaware Railroad Tax, 18 Wall. 206, sub nom. Minot v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. 21 L. ed. 888. It may assess the shares, and compel the corporation to pay the tax. First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 363, 19 L. ed. 701, 704; Tappan v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Wall. 490, 500, 22 L. ed. 189, 194. Chief Justice Waite, speaking for the court, stated the principle thus: "That in corporations four elements of taxable value are sometimes found: First, franchises; second, the capital stock in the hands of the corporation; third, corporate property; and, fourth, shares of the capital stock in the hands of the individual stockholders." Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 129, 136, 29 L. ed. 830, 832, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 647; Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 560. The state may tax one or all these elements, and discriminate in the taxation, unless restricted by some special constitutional provision. It is held that, where the Constitution forbids unequal taxation, the state may nevertheless discriminate in the taxation of those rights of property growing out of an exercise of its power to regulate the law of succession and wills. A fortiori, the state may prescribe the terms on which rights of property growing out of its grant of special corporate privileges may be enjoyed. In the law complained of, in so far as it taxes a corporation on account of the interest of its nonresident shareholders, the whole force of "nonresident," as used, is to designate such persons as, by reason of their nonresidence in some particular town, cannot be listed for municipal taxation. It is the same in purpose and effect as if the law had directed the stock of all shareholders resident in towns having a grand list of less than $5,000,000 to be subjected to municipal taxation in the town where the owner resides, and directed the corporation, on behalf of all nonresidents of such towns, to pay a tax to the state of 1 per cent on that portion of its franchise and property exempted from municipal taxation and represented by the interests of said nonresident shareholders, the amount of that portion to be ascertained in any manner the legislature might deem just. Such a law would not discriminate against citizens of other states in their capacity as such citizens; and just as clearly, under any fair reading of our legislation, the existing statute does not so discriminate.

The distinction between this case and others where this clause of the Constitution has been applied to taxation is broadly marked. In all others there was an invasion of that right of everyone secured in the state Constitution to freedom of harmless action in respect to person and property, equal before the law, to that enjoyed by all other citizens under the same conditions and in the same circumstances. The discrimination was not a mere incident of legitimate taxation, but one aimed directly at citizens of other states, calculated and intended to deny or limit as to them a clearly defined civil right. We believe the right to equality of privilege in all members of a corporation under the grant of corporate franchise is not secured in any constitution; certainly not in our own. In Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 418, 20 L. ed. 449, the right to freedom of occupation was invaded by a discriminating tax against nonresident traders. In Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165, the same right was invaded by a law preventing creditors, citizens of other states, in sharing equally with those of Tennessee in the distribution of an insolvent estate of a Tennessee citizen. "Certain creditors, solely because of their being citizens of Tennessee, are accorded advantages in the distribution of the assets in question which are denied to other creditors solely because of their being citizens of another state than Tennessee." 176 U. S. 67, 44 L. ed. 374, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307, decided January 8, 1900. The same distinction appears in the state cases cited. In Sprague v. Fletcher, 69 Vt. 69, 37 L. R. A. 840, 37 Atl. 239, the equality of right, as above defined, in the enjoyment of tangible property, was claimed to be invaded. Without stopping to investigate the application, the principle sought to be applied is similar to that in the Federal cases. In Farrington v. Downing, 67 N. H. 441, 30 Atl. 345, there is the further distinction that the New Hampshire Constitution contains a clause forbidding inequality in taxation, and the case involved the interpretation of the enabling act of Congress. The invalidity of the New Hampshire law in this particular was not fully considered, as the case had to be disposed of on other grounds. Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268, turns on the fact that the thing taxed was tangible property situate in Massachusetts. The conclusion of the court that a dividend after declaration, and before payment, is a "commodity" belonging personally to the shareholder, the same as his money in the hands of any agent, is the foundation of the opinion. It was contended that the state law was valid whether it were considered as imposing a tax or an excise duty. The court held it void from either point of view. If a tax, it violated the Massachusetts Constitution forbidding unequal taxation; if an excise, it was laid solely on citizens of other states on account of such citizenship, and so denied to them a privilege or civil right secured to its own citizens. We have been referred to no case where a state law has been held void as violating the provision that "citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," unless the "privilege" was a civil right belonging to all citizens of the enacting state, and the law discriminated against citizens of other states in their capacity as such citizens.

But it is urged that ownership in a share of stock is practically of the same nature as ownership of bonds or debts, or even of tangible property; that our tax law practically affects individuals as directly as a tax on their tangible property; that for all practical purposes, in adopting a different mode of ascertaining the tax to be collected for shares of residents and nonresidents, the law imposes a larger tax upon citizens of other states than upon our own citizens; and that under the form of corporate taxation the law in reality and intent discriminates against citizens of other states in respect to that individual equality before the law secured to our own citizens. If, in fact, our law is a mere sham, devised for the sake of screening an actual purpose of excluding citizens of other states from participation in those civil rights secured to our own, then we cannot sustain the law. The light of justice can pass unimpeded through all coverings of form, and lay bare any hiding substance of disobedience to paramount law. When occasion demands, the court cannot shrink from its duty in discovering the real purpose of any legislation; on the other hand, it is worse than folly to apply the microscope to the tangled web of taxation, seeking some broken threads that may suggest a defective origin. It is not, however, true, in the sense suggested, that ownership of a share of stock is practically of the same nature as ownership of tangible property. The latter rests upon a right universally recognized from earliest time, which is common to all, and secured in its enjoyment by constitutional guaranties; while the former is of comparatively modern origin, dependent for its existence upon a legislative grant of special privileges to a few, subject in this and in most cases to alteration and repeal.

57 L. R. A.

It is true of all corporate taxation that it affects individuals directly, whether it is collected from the corporation before the declaration of a dividend or afterwards from its members, and it may be true that under the latter mode individuals are affected more directly, but this does not alter the fact that in prescribing the mode of taxation in question the state is exercising its power of limiting the conditions on which the grant of corporate franchise may be enjoyed. While, under this mode of taxation, a heavier burden may fall on some who are citizens of other states than on some who are citizens of this state, as a heavier burden may fall upon some than upon others of our own citizens, members of the same corporation, yet it does not appear from the record that the effect of the law as a whole is to impose a larger tax upon citizens of other states than upon our own. We see nothing in this legislation to furnish any justification for the claim that while it is in form only a permissible mode of corporate taxation, it is in purpose and effect a hostile discrimination against citizens of other states in the enjoyment of property rights common to all, unless it be in a provision contained in Gen. Stat. § 3836. The provision was first enacted in 1877. For a long period prior to that time the law taxing banks, insurance companies, and other corporations treated the shares owned by residents of towns as a property distinct from that of the corporation, and directed the assessors to list such shares at the market value thereof on October 1st to the owners, like all other personal property; and directed the cashier or secretary of every such corporation to make a return to the assessors of each town informing them of the names of shareholders resident in that town, of the number of shares held by each, and the market value thereof during the preceding month. The law also laid a special tax in respect to shares owned by nonresidents of towns, whose amount was arbitrarily determined, as before explained, by a valuation measured by the market value of the stock on October 1st, and a legislative rate of 1 per cent, now fixed at 1½ per cent. In 1877 the legislature, in re-enacting the law directing assessors to list the shares of resident shareholders at their market value, added the following proviso: "But so much of the capital of any such company as may be invested in real estate, on which it is assessed and pays a tax, shall be deducted from the market value of its stock, in its return to the assessors." This proviso is the provision of § 3836, in question. The plaintiff claims that the provision applies only to the information to be included in the returns of the corporations to the assessors to aid them in listing the property owned in their town, and in fixing the market value thereof on October 1st, and does not otherwise affect the duty of the assessors to list all such stock at its market value. In the preceding case of Chase's Appeal, 73 Conn. 288, 47 Atl. 243, the provision is construed as controlling the action of the assessors. The defendant claims that the provision, thus construed, is equivalent in meaning to an enactment that "owners of shares of stock in corporations paying taxes on land in which their capital is invested shall be entitled to a deduction from the amount of their assessment for taxation of a sum for each share owned equal to the assessed value of the corporation's land divided by the whole number of its shares, but citizens of other states shall not be entitled to such deduction from the assessment for taxation of shares owned by them." It is unnecessary to consider what might be the effect of the provision if it expressed this meaning, for such is not its meaning. We have held that the provision, thus construed, is not a direction to the assessors to make an arbitrary deduction from the amount of the shareholders' list, but is a direction to make a different valuation, so that the statute in respect to corporations owning taxable real estate no longer treats the shareholder as owner of a piece of property distinct from that of the corporation, but treats him as owning an interest in a proportional part of the capital of the corporation,—i. e. of the assets representing the amount of the original capital and profits in excess of existing debts,—and therefore in the valuation of this property for municipal taxation a deduction shall be made of the capital invested in land already taxed in this state and elsewhere, and the sum to be deducted must bear the same relation to the shareholder's interest in the taxable value of the real estate as the market value of his share bears to his interest in the actual value of the assets in excess of existing debts. Batterson v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 558, 561; Dennis's Appeal, 72 Conn. 369, 44 Atl. 545; Re Chase (Conn.) 44 Atl. 1099; and Batterson's Appeal, 72 Conn. 375, 44 Atl. 549. This change as to the valuation of the property and franchise of a corporation owning taxable real estate for the purposes of municipal taxation may produce in some instances more inequality, may be uncalled for or unwise (upon such considerations the action of the legislature is conclusive), but it certainly does not transmute the legislation in question from permissible taxation to a denial to citizens of other states of that common right in the use and enjoyment of property secured to our own citizens. The plan of taxation remains the same. After the change in valuation as before, it is simply a mode of securing to towns for purposes of municipal taxation the benefit of that part of the corporate property represented by shares owned by their inhabitants, and subjecting to state taxation that part represented by shares owned by nonresidents, and which cannot be thus subjected to municipal taxation. Here is no hidden purpose to attack the rights of citizens of other states, no evidence that the underlying intention and real substance of the legislation is to hinder citizens of other states in acquiring and holding property. The alleged hindrance is confined to those who buy stock in corporations paying taxes on real estate. Only a small number of the corporations within the scope of the act own taxable real estate to any appreciable amount. Can it be said that the law regulating the taxation of half a dozen different kinds of corporations is really intended to hinder citizens of other states from owning stock in the small number of these corporations that may, from time to time, invest in taxable real estate, or that the real substance of the law changes from legitimate taxation to hostile and forbidden discrimination with each change of its investments by a corporation? Clearly, the legislature is free from any sinister motive in this legislation. Nor in its practical effect does the law justify the charge. The claim here is that nonresident shareholders pay a larger tax than residents. This, in itself, means nothing. The plan of taxation includes a tax as to the two classes of corporate property for different purposes, whose amount is to be ascertained in a different manner. It necessarily involves inequality in the contributions of members of the corporation for corporate taxation; inequality in the gross amount falling upon the two classes, and inequality in the several contributions of members of the same class. It necessarily rejects a theory of uniformity. This the legislature may do. The claim now under consideration is that in doing this the legislature has produced such a gross inequality between the two classes as, in purpose and effect, constitutes a denial or hindrance to citizens of other states in the enjoyment of property rights common to all, and secured to our own citizens. It is unnecessary to consider whether, or under what circumstances, the limitations imposed by a state in respect to the mutual relations of members of its corporations in the matter of taxation may transform legislation for that purpose into a denial of rights secured to citizens of other states. It is enough for present purposes that a mere inequality in the stress of taxation cannot produce that effect. But the claim that in this case the inequality operates against nonresidents or citizens of other states as a class is unfounded. While the admissions of the demurrer assume the tax in respect to the defendant for this year to bear more heavily on nonresidents than on residents, the general effect of the law is matter of common knowledge. The average rate of taxation for municipal purposes for the 168 towns approximates 15 mills, which is the rate for the special tax imposed in respect to nonresident shares; but the average rate for municipal taxation in the 10 larger towns (representing much more than half the grand list of the state) is about 21 mills. The clear purpose of the legislature in fixing the mode of valuation for the property subject to a single rate for special taxation, and the valuation for the property subject to widely varying rates for municipal taxation, was to approximate a general equality in the burden that should fall on the two classes of property; and it well may be that the rule objected to in respect to the valuation of the interests of resident shareholders in corporations investing in taxable land still leaves, as a whole, a lighter burden of contribution resting upon nonresident shareholders. There is no more in this last than in the other claims of the defendant, unless our Constitution requires uniformity, and forbids inequality, in taxation. Our fundamental law, state and national, contains no such mandate or maxim. Eliminating from the discussion the notion that some theory of uniformity and equality in taxation constitutes a limitation on legislative power, and confers upon the judicial department authority to supervise the legislature in the performance of its legislative duty of fairly and wisely distributing the burden of taxation, it seems to us apparent that our plan of taxing corporate property and franchise, first adopted more than half a century ago, and in force in its present form for some twenty-five years, is constitutional, and is not obnoxious either to § 2 of article 4 nor to the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution. If a change is desirable, it may be feasible to preserve to towns the income now derived from taxes on the stock of their resident shareholders, and to collect all forms of corporate taxation from the corporation; thus distributing the burden proportionably among its members. The wisdom of any change must be determined by the legislature.

We have not considered the question whether it is competent for the defendant in this action to make the claims presented on behalf of its nonresident shareholders. In assuming, as the parties have, that such claims are properly presented, we wish to exclude from any implication of settlement some nice questions that may be involved in the assumption.

There is no error in the judgment of the Superior Court.

Andrews, Ch. J., and Torrance and Hall, JJ., concur.

Baldwin, J., concurring in the judgment, but dissenting from part of the opinion of the court:

The opinion of the court rests upon three propositions to which I fully assent. These are that there is nothing in the Constitution of Connecticut, nor in the 14th Amendment to that of the United States, which either expressly or by implication requires that all taxation by this state shall be uniform or equal; that there is no fundamental principle of free government or natural justice that all taxation shall be uniform or equal; and that a citizen of another state, who participates as a shareholder in the defendant corporation in the enjoyment of a special franchise granted by this state, with a reservation of the power of amendment or repeal at pleasure, is not deprived by the tax laws which are in question in this cause of any privilege or immunity coming within the meaning of § 2, 57 L. R. A.

art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States. I dissent from so much of the opinion as asserts that, if it were a fundamental principle of free government and natural justice that all taxation shall be uniform and equal, the judicial power would be incompetent to declare a statute which violated that principle to be no law. The Constitution of Connecticut (art. 2) declares that "the powers of government shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them confided to a separate magistracy, to wit, those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judicial, to another." It then proceeds (art. 3) to vest "the legislative power of this state" in the general assembly, and (art. 5) "the judicial power of the state" in this and other courts. This language assumes that a free state has a power of government known as "legislative" and another known as "judicial." The leading men among the framers of our Constitution were familiar with certain limitations of legislative power described in the institutional works upon English law. That "if a statute be against common right or reason . . . the common law shall control it, and adjudge it void," had been laid down in Bacon, Abr. Statute, A, 12-14, repeating the words of Coke in his report of Bonham's Case, 8 Coke, 118. So in Wood, Laws of England (p. 10), it had been stated that "acts of Parliament that are against common justice and reason . . . shall be judged void." These principles had been acted upon by American courts. In the Symsbury Case, in this state, it had been adjudged in 1784, and again in 1785, that an act of our general assembly to confirm a patent of lands which it had granted, but which trench upon the limits of a prior grant, was, so far as it did thus trench upon them, void, because it took the property of one man and gave it to another. Kirby, 447, 452. We had then no constitution, unless it were the colonial charter, and that contained no particular provision affecting laws of such a character. In 1792 the supreme court of South Carolina had come to a similar determination under like circumstances. Bowman v. Middleton, 1 Bay, 252. This doctrine had not been universally accepted. Blackstone, so far as the powers of the British Parliament were concerned, had thrown the weight of his authority against it. In a cause taken up from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and familiar to every Connecticut lawyer in 1818, it had been, twenty years before, the subject of a difference of opinion between the justices of that tribunal. Mr. Justice Chase had maintained that "the nature and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it," adding the remark that "an act of the legislature (for I cannot call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact cannot be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority." Mr. Justice Iredell had taken the opposite view. Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 388, 398, 1 L. ed. 648,

653. The question was debated before this court shortly after the adoption of our state Constitution, and thoroughly considered in an opinion by Chief Justice Hosmer, which received the unanimous assent of the court. His conclusion was that, should the general assembly pass a statute authorizing a direct and palpable infraction of vested rights, too unjust to admit of vindication, it would be a violation of the social compact, and within the control of the judiciary. Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 225, 10 Am. Dec. 119. No Connecticut jurist has gone beyond Chief Justice Daggett in upholding the plenary authority of the general assembly prior to the adoption of our Constitution; but he, speaking for this court, defined it as "a legislative power capable of making all laws necessary for the good of the people not forbidden by the Constitution of the United States, nor opposed to the sound maxims of legislation." Starr v. Pease, 8 Conn. 548. The power of this court to declare a statute void which clearly abrogated vested rights because it would "stand opposed to the true spirit of the Constitution" was affirmed, though with cautious reserve, in 1843, in an opinion by Chief Justice Church. Bridgeport v. Housatonic R. Co. 15 Conn. 491. In 1856 it was discussed by Chief Justice Storrs, and the suggestion made that it could not exist when the power exercised was "properly legislative in its character." State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 297, 298. That by the expression "properly legislative in character" was meant within the sphere of proper legislation, as that sphere may be finally determined in case of controversy, by a consideration of the fundamental principles of civil government and natural justice, seems to me demonstrated by another case, reported in the same volume, in which a legislative grant of a corporate monopoly was adjudged void in these words: "And although we have no direct constitutional provision against a monopoly, yet the whole theory of a free government is opposed to such grants, and it does not require even the aid which may be derived from the bill of rights, the 1st section of which declares that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community, to render them void." Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co., 25 Conn. 19, 38. In 1861 we again deliberately recognized the general doctrine that a statute directly and unjustly impairing vested rights is void, not because of any constitutional provision, but as in violation of "the fundamental principles of the social compact," which, as we then said, through Chief Justice Butler, "underlie all legislation, irrespective of constitutional restraints." Welch v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 155, 79 Am. Dec. 236. The same great judge soon afterwards stated, with his accustomed clearness and precision, the foundation of the judicial power thus to declare, in extreme cases, a statute not to be a legitimate act of legislative power. The 57 L. R. A.

question then before us was whether the general assembly could allow towns to vote bounties to men volunteering for military service in the field. "It must be conceded," he said, speaking for a unanimous court, "that the people, if convened and organized as a whole, and acting upon the fundamental principle that what the majority prescribe shall be law, could be under no restraint except that imposed by the principles of natural justice; and the general assembly, in the exercise of that conferred legislative power, and irrespective of the bill of rights, are restrained by the same principles, and no other. The first question, therefore, may be further narrowed to the inquiry whether it is contrary to natural justice that A and B and the rest of the inhabitants of the state should be taxed for gratuities to C and D when C and D are called upon to render military service to the general government." Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 127, 128. I believe that the doctrine of Goshen v. Stonington, since so often reaffirmed, is sound, and that the term "legislative power," as it is used in our American Constitutions, refers only to what is "legitimate legislation." Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 305; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 657, 7 L. ed. 627. This is the view which was finally adopted and acted on by the Supreme Court of the United States in the leading case of Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 662, 663, 22 L. ed. 455. If such be not the law, then the inadvertent omission in a bill of rights of any of the guaranties against oppression which are usually enumerated would leave the citizen in that respect subject to the uncontrollable pleasure of the legislature. Our liberties are not, in my judgment, held on so precarious a tenure.

The importance of the point which has been discussed has seemed to me to justify this full statement of the reasons which lead me to dissent from what is said in regard to it in the opinion of the court. So far as I can discern, however, it has no importance in the cause, and has simply become the occasion of an obiter dictum. We all agree that the statutes in question are not unfair nor unjust. The counsel for the defendant, in their argument, rested their case on the effect of certain provisions of the Constitution of the United States. In the disposition which has been made of the objections thus raised I fully concur. It seems to me, therefore, that it was quite unnecessary to consider whether, if the statute under examination had been flagrantly subversive of fundamental principles underlying our Constitution and characterizing all free governments, its operation could not have been controlled by that department of the government in which the people have reposed all their judicial power.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States, May 5, 1902.

Patrick KELLY, Admr., etc., of John B. Kelly, Deceased,
v.
NEW HAVEN STEAMBOAT COMPANY,
Appt.

(74 Conn. 343.)

The duty of using a fender provided by the owner of a vessel to aid in docking it does not rest upon him, and therefore he is not liable for injuries to an employee resulting from the neglect of the mate to use it in bringing the vessel into the dock, although the injured employee works under the immediate orders of the mate.

(January 8, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death, which were alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Torrance, Ch. J.:

The material facts found are these: The defendant corporation, on the day of the injury, owned and ran the steamboat Continental, on which Kelly, the plaintiff's intestate, was a deck hand. On that day said boat arrived at its dock in New Haven when a strong ebb tide was running. When this was the case, it was the custom, in docking the boat, to turn it about by means of a hawser put out on the starboard side of the boat, passed around the stern, carried forward on the port side, and fastened to a post on the dock. This being done, upon reversing the engines, the hawser holding the stern, the bow would swing around. During this operation, to prevent the hawser from slipping from under the stern, the defendant had provided a beam of wood (hereinafter called a "fender"), which, being put out of a chock hole in the stern under which the hawser passed, effectually prevented such slipping. On the day of the injury, while the boat was being turned about in the customary manner, but without using said fender, the hawser slipped, and caused the injuries to Kelly described in the complaint. The sole cause of the slipping was the failure to use the fender. It was the duty of the mate to employ the deck hands, to receive orders from the captain to get ready the lines, and thereafter to see that the appliances were in readiness and in proper condition, that the hawser was put out and taken ashore and fastened to a pile on the wharf, and to give orders and directions to the deck hands in the performance of their duties. The boat was in command of a captain, whose special duty it was to take charge of its navigation, and he did not assume the immediate direction or supervision of the deck hands. It was the duty of the deck hands to assist in docking the boat under the immediate orders of the mate, and it was the duty of the mate to determine, from the condition of the tide and the depth to which the boat was loaded, whether or not the fender should be used, and, if it was to be used, "to give an order to a deck boy to put out the same." It was not the duty of the deck hands to use the fender without express orders from the mate to do so. The use of the fender at the time in question was necessary for the reasonable safety of the deck hands in the place where they were required to work, "and its proper use would have rendered the appliances used and the method of docking proper and suitable." The fender was a beam of wood about 3 feet long and 4 or 5 inches in diameter. It was kept on the main deck, loosely tied to the flag pole at the stern, and at the time of the accident was in its place ready for use. At the time Kelly was injured he was in the exercise of due care, and at the place where he was ordered to be by the mate; and the court finds that such place was "at that time an unsafe and dangerous place, and the defendant failed to furnish proper and suitable appliances to render the place safe, and the appliances then in operation by the defendant were unsafe and dangerous, by reason of the facts aforesaid." Upon these facts the defendant, among other things, claimed that the injury to Kelly was caused solely by the negligence of a fellow servant, and this claim, with others, the trial court overruled, and rendered judgment as on file.

Mr. Edward H. Rogers for appellant.
Messrs. James H. Webb, Arnon A. Ailing, and Martin & Coyle, for appellee:

It is the master's duty to exercise reasonable care to provide for his servant a reasonably safe place in which to work, reasonably safe appliances and instrumentalities for his work, and fit and competent persons as his collaborators. It is equally well settled that performance of these duties cannot be effected by the simple giving of an order,—by their execution being intrusted to another. The designation of an agent, however fit and competent that agent may be for the execution of the master's duties, does not fill out the sum of the master's obligation, nor serve to relieve the master from further responsibility.

Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 27 Atl. 235; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 22 Atl. 1094.

Those higher officers, agents, or servants cannot, with any degree of propriety, be termed fellow servants with the other employees who do not possess any such extensive powers, and who have no choice but to obey such superior officers, agents, or servants. Such high officers, agents, or servants must be deemed, in all cases when they act within the scope of their authority, to act for their principal, and in fact to be the principal.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to vice principalship as determined with reference to the character of the act which caused the injury, see Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen (C. C. App. 7th C.) 54 L. R. A. 53, and note; Norton Bros. v. Nadebok (Ill.) 54 L. R. A. 842; and 57 L. R. A.

Wellston Coal Co. v. Smith (Ohio) 55 L. R. A. 99.

As to vice principalship considered with reference to the superior rank of a negligent servant, see note to Stevens v. Chamberlin (C. C. App. 1st C.) 51 L. R. A. 513.

Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 468, 47 Am. Rep. 653.

Torrance, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial court has found that, legally speaking, the sole cause of the accident to Kelly was the negligent failure to use the fender; and one of the important questions in the case is whether the defendant was responsible to Kelly for that failure. It was so responsible if, in law, the negligence of the mate was the negligence of Kelly's master; while it was not if such negligence was that of Kelly's fellow servant. The common-law rule that a master is not liable to his servant for injuries caused to the latter solely by the negligence of a competent fellow servant is recognized as the settled law of this state. Burke v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 34 Conn. 474; Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Zeigler v. Danbury & N. R. Co. 52 Conn. 543; Griswold v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 53 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115, 4 Atl. 261; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 70 Conn. 159, 43 L. R. A. 305, 39 Atl. 115. The rule seems plain enough in itself, but in applying it no universal fixed and reliable principle or test for determining who are fellow servants within its meaning has been agreed upon. Different courts have adopted and applied different tests, and the natural result is conflicting decisions in the different jurisdictions, and a confused and unsettled state of the law of master and servant. Speaking generally, two rules, applied as tests in questions of this kind, have obtained a wide acceptance. Under one the test is whether the duty violated by the offending servant was one resting upon the master, or solely upon the offending servant; while under the other the test is whether the offending servant, in what he did or omitted to do, was or was not pro hac vice the master. Under the first rule the test is mainly the nature and character of the duty violated by the offending servant. If it was a duty resting upon the master, the master, as a general rule, is liable to the injured servant for the negligence of the offending servant; if it was not such a duty, he is not. Under this rule the rank or grade of the offending servant in the master's business or the department of it in which he is employed, as compared with that of the injured servant, is not of primary importance in determining the master's liability. Under the second rule the test is mainly the relation of the offending servant to the master and to the injured servant. If in what he does he acts for and represents the master, and therefore pro hac vice is the master, then his negligence is the master's negligence. Under this rule the rank or grade of the offending servant in his master's business and the department in which he works is regarded as of primary importance in determining the master's liability. The first of these tests—the nature and character of the duty violated—is the one adopted in this state. This is the test applied in Wilson v. Willimantic Linen Co. 50 Conn. 433, 47 Am. Rep. 653; in McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 22 Atl. 1094; and in Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 62 Conn. 209, 25 Atl. 711. It is also the one, if not in form, in fact at least, applied in Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Gerrish v. New Haven Ice Co. 63 Conn. 9, 27 Atl. 235, and Sprague v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 68 Conn. 345, 37 L. R. A. 638, 36 Atl. 791, for in each of these cases the duty violated by the offending servant was held to be a duty resting upon the master. In the case at bar the trial court has found that the master violated its duty to furnish Kelly a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe appliances; but this conclusion is based entirely upon the fact that the fender was not used. With that in use, it is found that the place and appliances were reasonably safe. The controlling question in the case is whether it was the duty of the defendant to see that the fender was used. We think it was not. It had furnished a sufficient fender, and a place in which it could be used, and it kept the fender in a proper and convenient place at all times ready for use. In doing this it had performed its full duty in this respect. It was not obliged to be there, every time the boat was docked, to use the fender, or to see to it that it was used. It was the duty of the defendant to furnish the appliances. It was the duty of the servants to use them when necessary. When the owner of a vessel furnishes proper guard rails, gang planks, and hatchway covers for the use of the crew, we know of no case that has gone so far as to hold that he is liable to one of the crew for the negligence of a fellow servant in leaving the guard rail down, the hatchway uncovered, or the gang plank insecurely fastened. Such negligences are incidental to the use by the crew of the appliances furnished by the master, and the only way the master is required to guard against them is to appoint a sufficient number of competent servants. Our conclusion is that the court below erred in holding that the defendant was liable for the negligence of the mate upon the facts in this case. The following are a few of the many cases outside of our own Reports which might be cited in favor of the conclusion reached in this case: Benson v. Goodwin, 147 Mass. 237, 17 N. E. 517; Kalleck v. Deering, 161 Mass. 469, 37 N. E. 450; Geoghegan v. Atlas SS. Co. 146 N. Y. 369, 40 N. E. 507;

McLaughlin v. Camden Iron Works, 60 N. J. L. 557, 38 Atl. 677; Sofield v. Guggenheim Smelting Co. 64 N. J. L. 605, 50 L. R. A. 417, 46 Atl. 711.

There is error. The judgment is set aside, and the cause remanded to be proceeded with according to law.

The other Judges concur.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Mary A. O'ROURKE

v.

JOHN HANCOCK MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(.....R. I.....)

1. Evidence of statements to the agent taking an application for insurance, different from those written therein, are not admissible in an action on the policy, where he is the agent of the applicant.
2. Preliminary evidence is not necessary of the truth of warranties in an application for life insurance, in a suit on the policy.
3. Statements of an insurance solicitor to one making an application for insurance, as to the immateriality of facts brought to his attention, do not bind the insurer, where he is the agent of the applicant.
4. An insurance company which has rejected and retained an application cannot take advantage of a warranty in a subsequent application by the same applicant that an application by him for insurance had never been rejected.
5. An insurance company will be bound to know that an applicant for insurance is the same as the maker of a prior rejected application, where not only the name of the applicant, but the date of birth, age, town, occupation, and parents' names, are the same in both applications.

6. A statement in a rejected application for insurance that applicant has consulted a physician for rheumatism does not charge the company with knowledge that he has that disease, so that its acceptance of a subsequent application in which applicant states that he has never had it will constitute a waiver of the falsity of the statement.
7. An infant is not bound by his warranties in a contract for life insurance.
8. The beneficiary in an insurance policy on the life of a minor is not prevented from recovery thereon because of false warranties in the contract, if he did not procure the insurance with knowledge of them.

(January 6, 1902.)

PETITION by defendant for new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—Insurance on the life of a minor.

- I. Policies taken out by minors, 496.
- II. Insurance to secure creditors, 497.
- III. Policies taken out by others on infant's life, 499.
- IV. Insurance in benefit societies, 502.
- V. Surrender or disaffirmance of policy on infant's life, 504.
- VI. Summary, 506.

I. Policies taken out by minors.

A policy of insurance taken out by a minor on his own life is recognized as a valid contract voidable only at the instance of the minor, and if not avoided by him during minority the company will be held liable thereon. (As to surrender of policy, see subd. V., infra.)

In the following cases on such a contract the insurance of minors was recognized as binding on the insurance company:

In O'ROURKE v. JOHN HANCOCK MUT. L. INS. CO. it was held that a defense of breach of warranty could not be made on the ground that, as the warranties were not binding on the minor, they would not be binding on the beneficiaries without notice.

In this case a mother beneficiary brought an action on a policy taken out on the life of her son, a boy fifteen years old when the policy was issued. The defense was breach of warranty and misrepresentation, the insured having died during minority. It was held that during the minority of the applicant his warranties could not be set up as a defense to a suit upon the policy, and that, as the warranties were not binding upon the minor, they were not a part of the contract, and the beneficiary was not estopped by them, she not having procured the insurance with knowledge of false statements. It was argued by the company that the answer of infancy was a privilege personal to him, and could not be taken advantage of by anyone else. The court said: "Undoubtedly this is a general rule, but its chief application is for the protection of the infant in cases where an adult seeks to avoid a contract upon that ground, when the contract has not been disaffirmed by the infant. To apply the rule in this case would amount to holding the contract good during the minority of the infant, because, the policy being on his life, no suit could be brought upon it until after his death."

In PIPPEN v. MUTUAL BEN. L. INS. CO. it was held that an administrator of an infant who had insured and surrendered the policy to the company could not claim that the surrender was a voidable contract, and set aside the disaffirmance of the infant, holding that the disaffirmance rendered the policy void ab initio.

In Johnson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 372, 26 L. R. A. 189, 59 N. W. 992, Overruling 56 Minn. 365, 26 L. R. A. 187, 57 N. W. 934, where an infant attempted to disaffirm the contract on becoming of age, it was held that a policy of insurance in an insurance company, in the absence of fraud, was a reasonable contract for an infant to make; but, as this policy provided for a surrender, the infant, on arriving at majority, could maintain an action for the surrender value of the policy.

And, where a minor effected insurance on his own life for the use of his father, and died after an illness of four months, aged twenty-

Messrs. Doran & Flanagan, for defendant:

Watson merely had a right to solicit applications and to collect money. This defendant is not affected by verbal communications made to such an agent.

Reed v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L. R. A. 496, 24 Atl. 833.

Where there was a copy of the application on the back of the policy, showing that false answers had been given, it was the duty of the insured or beneficiary to notify the company, and it could not hold the policy after such notice without becoming a party to the fraud.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

This contract of defendant was made with plaintiff, an adult.

Mary A. O'Rourke warrants the statements, or, by accepting the policy, she agrees that if they are not true she is not entitled to collect. She cannot get away from the effect of her adoption of the statements by any reference to the infancy of the person whose statements she adopted. Her situation is the same as though she signed the application.

Prudential Ins. Co. v. Fredericks, 41 Ill. App. 419; Armour v. Transatlantic F. Ins. Co. 90 N. Y. 450; Cooper v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 299, 88 Am. Dec. 544; Vose v. Eagle Life & Health Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 42; Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Huntzinger, 98 Pa. 41; 2 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1346.

If the application is annulled the policy is annulled.

one years and one month, it was held that the father was entitled to the services of his son until he attained his majority, and after that age this son, in case of indigence of his father, might be compelled to aid in his support. It was also held that the father had an insurable interest in the life of this son, and he, being also the executor of the insured, was entitled to recover. The policies were in terms payable to the executors or administrators of the insured for the use of P. G. and his father. The insured having named his father as executor of his will, the father was held entitled to recover the money in that capacity. Grattan v. National L. Ins. Co. 15 Hun, 74.

A minor signed an application for insurance on his life, and his father gave a note for the first premium on the condition that the policy was to be payable to the father and his heirs. The policy was made payable to the father and after his death to the son, and no objection was made until after the maturity of the note. It was held that the failure of the maker of the note to object within a reasonable time after knowledge was a waiver, and that the benefit of the policy for a year was a part consideration, and the father was liable on the note. Roddey v. Talbot, 115 N. C. 287, 20 S. E. 375. In this case the court does not discuss the question of the validity of a policy on an infant except as stated, the defense being that the maker of the note never received the policy at all, and the policy as written was not the kind contracted for.

An infant was insured, the policy being payable to his executors or administrators. He executed an instrument authorizing the com-

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

As against the plaintiff, and for the purposes of this suit, the warranty in the application made by the infant is valid, because an infant's contracts are only voidable and are good until disaffirmed, and the right to disaffirm is a right personal to the infant himself, or to his personal representatives or privies in the contract or estate involved.

2 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1346; Roberts v. Wiggins, 1 N. H. 73, 8 Am. Dec. 38; Manfield v. Gordon, 144 Mass. 168, 10 N. E. 773; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L. R. A. 462, 59 N. E. 230.

Whether the infant's warranty is good or not, if the application contained no warranty the condition remains in the policy. The promise on which plaintiff sues, on its face provides that it shall be void if any of the answers are untrue.

An infant may validly contract as agent, act as trustee, or execute a power.

Talbot v. Bowen, 1 A. K. Marsh. 436, 10 Am. Dec. 747; Sheldon v. Newton, 3 Ohio St. 494.

Insurance upon the life of an infant, issued upon an application made by him, is not a nullity, but valid and binding upon both infant and company until disaffirmed by the minor.

Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L. R. A. 462, 59 N. E. 230; Roddey v. Talbot, 115 N. C. 287, 20 S. E. 375; Chicago Mut. L. Indemnity Assn. v. Hunt, 127 Ill. 257, 2 L. R. A. 549, 20 N. E. 55.

pany to pay the benefit to his aunt in case he died first, and he died before reaching majority. It was held that the right of the aunt to recover was not affected by his infancy, and that the assignment by him was valid, although she had no insurable interest in his life. It was further held that while the infant might have disaffirmed the policy on reaching majority, yet the insurance company could not avail itself of that fact as a defense against the person who was authorized by the insured to receive the money, and to give a complete release and discharge for the same. Grogan v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 90 Hun, 521, 86 N. Y. Supp. 687.

See also next subdivision for other cases in which infants have taken life insurance, where this was done to secure creditors.

II. Insurance to secure creditors.

There are but few cases on this question, and these seem to sustain the validity of a policy issued to a minor and assigned by him as security for debts. The reasoning in the North Carolina case is to the effect that if the administrator of an infant could claim that the assignment was void, and take the proceeds, it would be a premium on the spendthrift, who ran into debt and then obtained the security for the same for his estate without any payment being made. In the Ohio case the policy then held by the insurance company as collateral for a mortgage of another was attacked by a lien holder claiming that it was void. The infant had arrived at age, and had not disaffirmed the contract, and was not a party

It passes our comprehension how this plaintiff can be allowed to affirm and set up the application, as she must by suing upon the policy issued upon it, and then claim the annulment of the condition in the policy on the ground that the application was void, and especially, considering that the application was executed by her son in her presence.

If the application was avoided it would seem to be a necessary consequence that the policy itself was also avoided.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 46 Me. 394, 74 Am. Dec. 469; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Fredericks, 41 Ill. App. 419; Re Globe Mut. Ben. Assn. 63 Hun, 263, 17 N. Y. Supp. 852; McQuitty v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 15 R. I. 573, 10 Atl. 635.

On petition for rehearing.

The opinion establishes the law now in Rhode Island to be that a company may not rely upon the applicant's answer to the question, whether he had been rejected; that if this question is asked, an applicant who has been rejected may with impunity falsely deny rejection.

The weight of authority is against the doctrine expressed in this part of the opinion.

Mr. Irving Champlin for plaintiff.

Stiness, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a policy of life insurance, in which the plaintiff is the beneficiary, upon the life of her son, a boy fifteen years old when the policy was issued. The defense is that the application contained false answers to questions which are made warranties by the terms of the policy. To the question, "Has this company ever refused to issue a policy on this life?" the answer was, "No." The plaintiff admits in her testimony that she knew that the boy had been previously rejected by this company, and says that she and her husband so stated to the agent who took the application and wrote in the answers, but that she did not know what he wrote. A question and answer of the same import is repeated on the back of the application in the state-to the action. It was held that it could not be attacked collaterally. An English case holds the policy void where a gambling debt was secured.

A mortgagor obtained a loan of $12,500, from an insurance company, secured by a mortgage. He also gave another mortgage on the same land to secure four notes of $532 each. These were for advance premium notes on a policy issued on a minor's life and assigned by him to the insurance company as collateral for the mortgage notes. The administrator of the mortgagor held another mortgage on the same land, and claimed that the mortgage of the insurance company was usurious, and that the policy was void by reason of infancy. The court held that it was not usurious, and that it would not be adjudged void, the infant, having reached majority, not having elected to repudiate the same, and not being a party to this action. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L. R. A. 462, 59 N. E. 230. The court said: "In the present case the record does not show that the insured has elected to avoid the contract, although it does show that he has long since reached his majority. Nor is he a party in the case, and his rights in the matter, whatever they may be, cannot be adjudicated here. . . . It does appear to work a hardship as it has turned out. But had the young man died soon after the issuing of the policy, or during the time for which the premiums had been paid, the apparent hardship would have been on the other party. It was held by a fast bargain, and would have been compelled to pay, for no court would have listened to a defense by the company, had such been interposed, based on the ground here urged by defendants in error, viz., the inability of the minor to make a binding contract."

In Rivers v. Gregg, 5 Rich. Eq. 274, an infant married at eighteen and died at twenty, and during that time, through extravagance, wasted a large amount of money. In an action to settle the estate, the administrator claimed the proceeds of policies effected on the infant's life by creditors who had sold him a large amount of goods. The insurance was paid to the creditors under an agreement that it was to be held 57 L. R. A.

subject to the order of the court. It was held that the creditors, having negotiated the policies at their own expense and for their own benefit and security, were fairly entitled to have the net proceeds applied as payments upon their claim against the intestate. The court said: "A third party, who is sui juris, may become bound for the debt of an infant, though the infant should be discharged. And I apprehend it would make no difference whether the third party were a corporation or a natural person. If the creditor of an infant, for a consideration paid by himself, obtains a guaranty of the infant's debts from a third party, I see no reason why such third party should not be bound, nor why the creditor should not have the benefit of his bargain. This I think is the true nature of the transaction. The infant certainly is not entitled to the funds thence arising. This would be to give him the whole of the creditor's goods, on the plea of infancy, and, as a premium on the plea, the whole proceeds of the policies." These policies were negotiated in the name of the minor and assigned to his creditors by him.

But the holder of a note given by an infant for money won at play was held to have no insurable interest in the minor's life. Dwyer v. Edie, 2 Park, Marine Ins. 914. In this case an action was brought on a policy on the life of James Russell from the 1st of June, 1784, to the 1st of June, 1785. Russell was warranted in good health, and by a memorandum at the foot of the policy it was declared that it was intended to cover the sum of $5,000 due from Russell to the plaintiff, for which he had given his note payable in one year from the 14th of May, 1784. Two objections were made on the part of the defendant: (1) That part of the consideration for the note was money won at play; (2) that Russell at the time he gave the note was an infant. Mr. Justice Buller nonsuited the plaintiff upon the ground that part of the consideration of the note was for a gaming transaction; and therefore there was a want of interest in the plaintiff. But, as to the other objection on account of infancy, it was held that the interest must be contingent, for Russell might or might not avoid his note; and ment to the medical examiner. Another question, "When did you last consult a doctor, and for what?" was answered, "Two years ago; bronchitis; not predisposed." Another question, asking if the boy had ever had any serious illness from either one of fifteen diseases named, including rheumatism, was answered, "No." A previous application had an answer that the boy had consulted a doctor for rheumatism in January, 1893. The case was tried to a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $243.40, the amount claimed, and the defendant petitions for a new trial, upon the grounds that the verdict was against the evidence, and that there were errors of law in rulings at the trial.

The first, third, fifth, and sixth exceptions were to the admission of testimony by the plaintiff that at the time of this application the defendant's agent was told that the applicant had been previously rejected by this company, and as to the powers of the agent. Taken by themselves, the rulings were erroneous. In Reed v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L. R. A. 496, 24 Atl. 833, this court adhered to the rule, recognized in this state since Wilson v. Conway F. Ins. Co. (1856) 4 R. I. 141, that an agent in simply procuring insurance is the agent of the applicant, and not of the company, in drawing the application, and that the applicant is responsible for his mistakes and false answers. See also Bryan v. National Life Ins. Assn. 21 R. I. 149, 42 Atl. 513. Testimony of what was stated to or by the solicitor was therefore immaterial. The effect of these rulings will be considered later.

The second exception related only to the form of a question claimed to be leading, which is not important.

The fourth exception was to the refusal of the trial judge to direct a verdict for the defendant, because of failure to prove the warranties embraced in the questions and answers stated above. It was held in Sweeney v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 19 R. I. 171, 38 L. R. A. 297, 36 Atl. 9, that such answers are warranties, which must be proved by the plaintiff, but which, for convenience of trial, may stand on presumption or prima facie evidence until contradicted, like the signature and consideration of a promissory note. There was, however, tes-he doubted much whether, till so avoided, the note must not be taken against a third person to be the note of an adult, for the maker of the note only could take the objection.

III. Policies taken out by others on infant's life.

In policies taken on the life of an infant for the benefit of another the question involved usually is: Had the beneficiary sufficient interest in the infant's life? Where this is the chief question the subject of the propriety of insuring the lives of minors is seldom discussed. A New York statute authorizes a person liable for the support of an infant to take out insurance on his life in a limited amount. But this is held not to limit the number of policies. A Canada statute also recognizes the right of parents to take out insurance on the lives of their children. The question of insuring infants' lives was discussed and discouraged in Prudential Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, 15 Ind. App. 297, 43 N. E. 1036, holding a policy void for want of interest in the life of a nephew. In that case the insured had no knowledge of the insurance, and had been exposed to diphtheria. It may be said that, in the absence of a restrictive statute, insurance on infants' lives for the benefit of persons having an insurable interest therein will be sustained. The policy of such insurance is very questionable, as it opens up an avenue to the neglect of the lives of those of tender years, and possibly may lead to murder.

In the following cases it was held that policies were valid:

A father who effected insurance on the life of a minor son who was about proceeding to California, and to whom he had made large advances, was held to have a pecuniary interest in the life of his son, and the insurance was held valid. Mitchell v. Union L. Ins. Co. 45 Me. 104, 71 Am. Dec. 529. In this case the court said: "The father is entitled to the earnings of his minor child, and may maintain an action for their recovery. If the child be injured, he is entitled to an action per quod creditum amittit. He has a pecuniary interest in the life of a minor child, which the law will protect and enforce. An insurance, therefore, on the life of such child is not within the rule of law by which wager policies are declared void."

And where a father assented to his minor son's entering the employ of a trading company, and relinquished any claim to his services so far as said company was concerned, and furnished an outfit out of his boy's former earnings, and effected an insurance on his life,—it was held that the father had an insurable interest in his life. Loomis v. Eagle Life & Health Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 396. The court said that in this case the assured had a direct and pecuniary interest in the life of his son. "But, upon broader and larger grounds, we are of opinion that, independently of the fact that the son was a minor, and the assured had a pecuniary interest in his earnings, the assured had an insurable interest sufficient to maintain this action."

In McCoy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 133 Mass. 82, a policy was issued to a mother on the lives of three of her children. One of the children was sick at that time, and an action was brought on the policy. A count in the declaration also claimed for money had and received. The defense was misrepresentations in the application as to the health of the child. The plaintiff claimed that these had been inserted by the agent, and that she had given him true statements. But it was held that if so they were part of the contract, and it could not be proved by oral evidence that the company knew the representations were untrue. It was further held that, as the question of recovery of premiums was not made in the trial, it would not be heard on appeal. The case does not show that the insured were minors, but it is evident from the language used that they were.

And in Anderson v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 27 N. Y. S. R. 275, 7 N. Y. Supp. 601, a policy had been taken out by a mother for her benefit on the life of her child. A collector was accustomed to call for weekly premiums, but failed to call for several weeks. The mother applied at the office for reinstatement, and signed a paper. At the trial she timony that the answers were true, except as to rheumatism and the previous rejection, which will be considered under the seventh and eighth exceptions.

The seventh exception relates to an alleged statement by the solicitor that the former rejection was an immaterial matter, which statement, if made, would bind the company. It does not appear from the charge that the judge so ruled, but, inasmuch as the jury were allowed to consider the fact whether the agent made the statement, the exception is applicable. The solicitor in making the application, being, as we have said, the agent of the insured, would not bind the company by his statements. But another question is presented which renders this question of fact of what the agent said quite unimportant. The previous application was in the hands of the company. The rejection of it was by the defendant itself. The purpose of warranties in a policy is not to set a trap for applicants, but to inform the company about important facts upon which the contract is based. When, therefore, a company is in actual possession of knowledge of a fact, and by turning to its own record can assure itself better than by the imperfect memory of an applicant, it is a perversion of the purpose of a warranty to allow it to avoid a contract. It is evident injustice for one party to allow another to enter into a contract which the former knows, or is bound to know, is invalid. As stated in Reed v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L. R. A. 496, 24 Atl. 833, it is taking advantage of one's wrong. See also Greene v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 11 R. I. 434.

The defendant argues that it is unreasonable to hold that a company is bound to have present knowledge of all that appears on its previous files. To this suggestion at the trial the judge asked the pertinent question: "Any more so than it was to ascertain that fact just after the boy died? They have taken the money. Now, just as soon as the boy died, and the beneficiary asks to be paid, then their records are looked up; then they saved the record." The company had exactly the same information in its possession at the time the contract was made that it has now. If it is available at one time, it ought to be imputable at the other. But it is said that the company cannot be supposed to know that it is the same per-claimed that when she signed the paper she was ignorant of its contents, and that there was no inquiry made of her as to whether the child was sick. The paper stated that the child was well at the time of the reinstatement of the policy. The court left it to the jury to decide whether the plaintiff was guilty of fraud or misrepresentation, and they found a verdict for plaintiff. No discussion appears in the case as to the right to insure infants.

In Hilliard v. Sanford, 4 Ohio N. P. 363, 6 Ohio Dec. 449, where insurance was issued on the life of a minor, it was held that a grandfather has an insurable interest in the life of his grandchild, because the relationship is such that it will support—as a good consideration for—a gift, or a deed, or a grant.

And in an action to recover the amount of a policy of insurance upon the life of a child ten years of age, the plaintiff's step sister, evidence was given of a promise made by the plaintiff to the mother of the child to take care of her and help maintain her. No objection was made on behalf of defendants that the plaintiff had not in fact incurred any expenditure in respect of the child. It was held that the plaintiff had an insurable interest in the child's life, and was entitled, in the absence of any objection as to the amount in fact expended by her, to recover the amount of the policy. Barnes v. London, E. & G. L. Ins. Co. [1892] 1 Q. B. 864.

In Valley Mut. Life Assn. v. Teewalt, 79 Va. 421, it was said: "It is now well settled that a father has an insurable interest in the life of his child, whether a minor or of full age, and the child in the life of his father."

In O'Rourke v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 Misc. 405, 31 N. Y. Supp. 130, in an action on a policy where the defense was that it was in contravention of N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 55, providing that a person liable for the support of a child of the age of one year and upwards may take out a yearly renewable term policy of insurance thereon, not exceeding the sums specified in the following table " . . . between the ages of one and two years, $30,"—it was held that this statute, in so far as it limits the amount of insurance to be carried, is in derogation of the rights of a parent at common law to effect insurance upon the life of a minor child, and is therefore to be given that strict construction which must obtain in the case of such an enactment. It was further held that such statute did not prohibit making more than one such contract, and that a policy taken upon the life of a child, by virtue of its provisions, cannot exceed the sums specified in the schedule set forth, and that a later statute (Laws 1893, chap. 175), clothed the mother with the powers, rights, and duties with regard to her children equal to those of her husband.

In Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bowser, 20 Ind. App. 557, 50 N. E. 86, where a mother insured the life of her minor daughter and others without their knowledge, and brought an action to recover the premiums, it was held that, in the absence of any evidence showing that such policies were void, she could not recover the premiums paid.

An infant was insured, the policy being payable to the beneficiary as provided in the application, but the application named no beneficiary. On the bill of interpleader the fund was claimed by the executor of the step mother of the insured, the latter being a child eight years of age when the policy was issued, and the fund was also claimed by the husband and administrator of the insured. It was held that the step mother was the contracting party, the application being made by her. The evidence showed that the insured paid the premiums in part after her marriage. It was held that the fact that the step daughter was the person insured raised no implication in her favor as beneficiary when the contract was not made by her and did not run to her benefit by its terms, and that the fund was payable to the executor of the step mother. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lawder, 22 R. I. 416, 48 Atl. 883.

In Weber v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 172 Pa. 111, 33 Atl. 712, the policy was issued to an aunt on the life of her nephew, who was a minor nineteen years of age and living with the plaintiff, who was his aunt and stood as to him in loco parentis. In an action on the polson, even though the name may be the same. While this might be so in some cases, we do not see that there would be any uncertainty in this case, because the applications identify the same applicant by date of birth, age, town, occupation, and parents' names. There was ample opportunity for examination, as the application was dated July 22, 1896; the medical examination was August 22, 1896; it is stamped, doubtless by the company, September 2, 1896; and the policy was not issued until September 9, 1896. In Jerrett v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. 18 R. I. 754, 30 Atl. 793, there had been a previous rejection, but the policy was held to be invalid because neither application stated the fact, called for by a question, that a sister of the assured had died of consumption. This was a fact that the company could not be held to know, and hence the case was essentially different from the case at bar. The answer about rheumatism stands in a somewhat different relation. The first application was dated March 3, 1893, and it stated that the boy had consulted a physician for about four attacks of rheumatism in January. The company had no possible knowledge from this that he had rheumatism, and may have relied upon the denial of it in the present application as showing that his trouble which he thought to be, turned out not to be, rheumatism. The evidence of the plaintiff was that he had rheumatism. This might have been after the first application, and so outside of any implied notice. Up to this point we find no ground for a new trial, because the statements to the solicitor did not prejudice the defendant, by reason of the knowledge of the facts imputed to it in its previous rejection of the applicant.

The answer about rheumatism is included in the general ground of defense raised by the eighth exception, which is to the refusal of the court to charge as follows: "If the boy did sign an application containing a material untrue statement, the beneficiary is bound, and the policy is void." The defendant had notice from the application itself that it was dealing with a minor and taking his warranties. The question, therefore, is whether an infant is bound by his warranties in a contract of insurance. In considering it we have not the advantage of weighing the reasons given in previous decisions, for we have been unable to find a where the defense was misrepresentation and breach of warranty, and a verdict was had for plaintiff. On appeal the judgment was affirmed on a division of opinion. The case does not construe the question of infancy.

Under 55 Vict. chap. 39, § 35, subsec. 5, Ont. 1892, providing that in respect of all insurance effected on the life of a person under twenty-one years of age, when such insurance has been effected by a parent on the life of a child, such insurance shall not be deemed to be invalid by reason only of the parent's want of pecuniary interest in the life of the child, it was held that policies issued on applications made by the mother on her child's life (seven years old) with the mother as beneficiary were not void at the instance of the father, who sued to recover back the premiums advanced. He claimed that it was done without his knowledge, but after he had knowledge he acquiesced in the payment of the premiums thereon. Wakeman v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 30 Ont. Rep. 705. In this case the court said: "A great part of the argument was occupied in discussing what law, whether of Ontario or of New York, was applicable. No point of this kind is made in the pleadings; on the contrary, the contention of the fourteenth paragraph of the claim is that Canadian law governs the policies, and there is really no proper evidence to lay a basis for determination on this point. If Ontario law governs, then the insurance on the life of the child by the mother is legalized by retroactive legislation, which binds this company. 55 Vict. chap. 39, § 35, subsec. 6 (Ont.). This statute coming into force on April 14, 1892, made valid all such insurances theretofore affected, covering, therefore, these two of 1890 and 1891. If New York law obtains, then I find it decided, long before the making of this insurance, that a parent has an insurable interest in the life of a child. Grattan v. National L. Ins. Co. (1878) 15 Hun. 74, 76; Loomis v. Eagle Life & Health Ins. Co. (1856) 6 Gray, 396; and Reif v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 17 Ins. Chron. p. 3, cited in May on Insurance, 4th ed. § 107, p. 190. In this regard the American law is more liberal than the English, 57 L. R. A.

as expounded in Halford v. Kymer (1830) 10 Barn. & C. 724."

But in Prudential Ins. Co. v. Jenkins, 15 Ind. App. 297, 43 N. E. 1056, holding that a policy was void where an insurance was taken out by a beneficiary on his nephew, thirteen years old, without his knowledge, after he had been exposed to diphtheria, it was said: "The insurance of children who are helpless and under the control and authority of others is susceptible of such possibilities of evil that it should not be encouraged, and the evidence ought to establish an insurable interest most clearly and satisfactorily before a verdict should meet the approval of a trial court."

And in Halford v. Kymer, 10 Barn. & C. 724, where a father insured the life of his son before he attained the age of twenty-one, for the father's benefit, and the son made a will shortly after arriving at majority giving all his property to his father, it was held that the father had no pecuniary interest in the life of his son when he effected the policy, under 14 Geo. III. chap. 48, § 1, providing that no insurance shall be made on the life of any person wherein the person for whose use or benefit, or on whose account, such policy shall be made, shall have no interest, and that every insurance made contrary shall be null and void; and the father could not recover on the policy.

For a discussion of the principles of this case, see Life Insurance Clearing Co. v. O'Neill (C. C. App. 3d C.) 54 L. R. A. 225, note, Insurable interest in life of parent or child or other relative by blood.

In Innes v. Equitable Assur. Co., a nisi prius case, before Kenyon, J. (Followed in Halford v. Kymer, 10 Barn. & C. 724), the plaintiff effected a policy on the life of his daughter. In order to show his interest he produced a purported will showing that he was entitled to £1,000 in the event of his daughter dying under the age of twenty-one. Innes was convicted of forgery of the will, and an attesting witness was convicted of perjury. Lord Tenterden, Ch. J., in the Halford Case, said: "It was in effect admitted in that case that it was necessary to prove that the father had a pecu-case like this reported. Certain principles, however, are well settled in regard to infancy. It is an elementary rule that infants are incapable of making contracts, except for necessities. Such contracts are voidable, but not void. The infant may avoid his contract, but an adult contracting with him cannot. A contract may thus be binding on an adult when it is not binding on an infant. Dearden v. Adams, 19 R. I. 217, 36 Atl. 3; Shurtleff v. Millard, 12 R. I. 272, 34 Am. Rep. 640.

As an infant is not liable on his contract, he is not liable for warranties or representations upon which the contract is based. Thus, in West v. Moore, 14 Vt. 447, 39 Am. Dec. 235, it was held that infancy was a bar to an action founded upon a false and fraudulent warranty upon the sale of a horse. Prescott v. Norris, 32 N. H. 101. In New Hampshire Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Noyes, 32 N. H. 345, the contract was for fire insurance on the property of an infant. It was held that it was not a contract for necessities, and that the infant was not liable on his premium note. In Doran v. Smith, 49 Vt. 353, it was held that infancy was a bar to an action on the case for false and fraudulent representations by a vendor or pledgee as to his ownership of property sold or pledged. In Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 311, 88 Am. Dec. 659, the court said that an infant is liable in an action ex delicto for an actual and wilful fraud only in cases in which the form of action does not suppose that a contract has existed, but that, when the gravamen of the fraud consists in a transaction which really originated in contract, the plea of infancy is a good defense. See notes to this case in Ewell, Lead. Cas. 206; Freeman v. Boland, 14 R. I. 39, 51 Am. Rep. 340. The principle of these cases is that infancy is a bar for misrepresentations based upon a contract. It is to be noted that the cases cited were brought by the adult against the infant. But if the plaintiff cannot sue the infant upon his warranties, upon what principle can he set up the same warranties in defense? In either case he is seeking to enforce the contract as made by the infant. In Derocher v. Continental Mills, 58 Me. 217, 4 Am. Rep. 286, where a minor who had agreed to work for the defendant for six months at least, and to give no less than two weeks' notice before leaving, left within six months, and niary interest in the life of his daughter, otherwise there would have been no occasion to go into the question as to the will, and unless it were a fact material in the case the witness could not have been convicted of perjury."

In Cronin v. Vermont L. Ins. Co. 20 R. I. 570, 40 Atl. 497, it was held that the English act of 1774, 14 Geo. III. chap. 48, § 1, has never been taken as a part of our law, but its rule was generally followed in this country as declaratory of the common law. But in defining the term "interest" the tendency of the decisions, both in England and this country, has been inclusive rather than exclusive; and it was held that an aunt had an insurable interest in the life of her niece. The case does not show whether the niece was of age or not. (See subd. II. supra.)

As to Insurable interest in life of parent or child or other relative by blood, see Life Insurance Clearing Co. v. O'Neill (C. C. App. 3d C.) 54 L. R. A. 225, note.

As to Consent of the person whose life is insured as a condition of insurance thereon, see Martin v. McAllister (Tex.) 56 L. R. A. 585, note.

IV. Insurance in benefit societies.

The right of an infant to become a member of a benefit society with all the privileges incident thereto is questionable. The duties of the members and the business of such institution would seem to require that the members should be free from all disabilities. In a majority of the cases that have arisen it has been held that, under the statutes of the several states that were involved, an infant cannot be a member of a mutual benefit society. The contrary was held in Illinois, and in an English case a contract with a benefit society was held binding on an infant. An English statute seems to allow the insurance of minors by friendly societies.

In Re Globe Mut. Ben. Asso. 135 N. Y. 280, 17 L. R. A. 547, 32 N. E. 122, it was held that a mutual benefit association, organized under N. Y. Laws 1883, chap. 175, providing for the incorporation of co-operative life and casualty companies, had no power to receive as members infants of such tender years that they were incapable of exercising any choice in becoming members, or of appointing a beneficiary, or of exercising the powers with which members are invested by this statute. The court said: "There is nothing in the statute which permits the inference that a child may be made a member of the corporation upon the application of the parent, or that a beneficiary may be designated or changed by any person except the member himself." The court further said "that it appears from a consideration of the statute of 1883 and the nature and object of co-operative insurance companies and the relation which members hold to corporations, that adult persons only were contemplated as entitled to membership."

In People v. Industrial Ben. Asso. 92 Hun, 311, 36 N. Y. Supp. 903, Affirmed in 149 N. Y. 606, 44 N. E. 1127, it was said that the act of 1883 was repealed by the insurance law, and, construing the insurance law, it was held: "It seems to be reasonably clear that, taking article 6 by itself, it must be deemed to have been the intention of the legislature to limit the business of any corporation engaged in life insurance upon the co-operative or assessment plan to that business as defined by § 201. It is practically conceded that under article 6, standing alone, the business here in controversy could not be done. Section 201 is, so far as this question is concerned, substantially like § 5 of the act of 1883, and the case cited from the court of appeals would apply."

And Mich. pub. act 1887, chap. 187, § 16, providing that corporations doing business in this state, under the provisions of this act, shall not issue any policy or certificate of membership upon any person not capable in law of making contracts, operates to prevent persons under the age of twenty-one from becoming members of corporations organized under that act for the purpose of doing a life insurance business, except for necessities. Re Insurance of Minors, 5 Det. L. N. (Atty. Gen.'s Op.) No. 18. In this opinion it was said "that a contract of insurance (fire) has been held not to be a contract for necessities. Monaghan v.

without giving such notice, the question was whether the defendant could deduct the damages occasioned thereby from what he would otherwise be entitled to recover from his labor. The court held that no deduction could be made, saying: "To compel the minor thus to make good the loss occasioned by the nonperformance of his contract is virtually to enforce the contract, and thus to enforce the contract is, in effect, to abrogate the rule of law that a minor is not bound by his contract." This language was quoted in Shurtleff v. Millard, 12 R. I. 272, 34 Am. Rep. 640, apparently with approval, although the decision of the court in that case proceeded upon the theory that, as there was no binding contract, the plaintiff could recover reasonable compensation, which might include a deduction for injury done. We think the reasoning of De-rocher v. Continental Mills is sound, and that the terms of a minor's contract can no more be set up defensively than offensively.

The defendant argues that the answer of infancy is a privilege personal to him, and that it cannot be taken advantage of by anyone else. Undoubtedly this is a general rule, but its chief application is for the protection of the infant in cases where an adult seeks to avoid his contract upon that ground, when the contract has not been disaffirmed by the infant. To apply the rule in this case would amount to holding the contract good during the minority of the infant, because, the policy being on his life, no suit could be brought upon it until after his death. He could only disaffirm it by refusing to pay premiums, and thus forfeiting the policy. If it were an endowment policy maturing before his majority, it follows, from what we have said, that he could sue upon it without being bound by his warranties. If after majority he should continue to pay premiums, he might be regarded as having affirmed the contract, as in Morrill v. Aden, 19 Vt. 505.

Our conclusion is that during the minority of the applicant his warranties cannot be set up in defense to a suit upon the policy. But, even if this is so, the defendant argues that the beneficiary cannot recover, because, the policy being conditional upon the truth of the statements, she is estopped by false statements on the face of the contract. Undoubtedly this would be the rule

Agricultural F. Ins. Co. 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797.

In People v. Industrial Ben. Asso. 92 Hun, 311, 36 N. Y. Supp. 963, Affirmed in 149 N. Y. 606, 44 N. E. 1127, it was held that a benefit association was not entitled to the benefit of a general provision (N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 55) that "no policy or agreement for insurance shall be issued upon the life or health of another or against loss by disablement by accident, except upon the application of the person insured. . . . A person liable for the support of a child of the age of one year and upward may take a yearly renewable term policy of insurance thereon, the amount payable under which may be made to increase with advancing age, and which shall not exceed the sums specified in the following table, the ages wherein specified being the age at time of death, and which, after the age of thirteen, may become an ordinary life policy for an amount not exceeding the sum specified in the table. Between the ages of one and two years, $30. . . . Between the ages of twenty and twenty-one years, $900." In respect of insurance heretofore or hereafter, by any person not of the full age of twenty-one years but of the age of fifteen years or upwards, effected upon the life of such minor, for the benefit of such minor or for the benefit of the father, mother, husband, wife, brother, or sister of such minor, the assured shall not, by reason only of such minority, be deemed incompetent to contract for such insurance, or for the surrender of such insurance, or to give a valid discharge for any benefit accruing, or for money payable under the contract. This construction bars a benefit association from embarking in such insurance, but recognizes that the right to issue such policies is given to corporations engaged in a general life insurance business. A careful reading of this statute to validate insurance of infants fifteen years old, although it authorizes them to surrender or discharge such insurance, seems to indicate that the surrender and discharge contemplated are such as adult policy holders may make. In other words, it seems to change the infant's relations in insurance contracts so that they are not voidable at the 57 L. R. A.

election of the infant. But this question does not appear to have ever arisen.

And under Pa. act May 23, 1891, P. L. 107, providing that it shall be lawful for beneficial and protective associations to pay, and to enter into contracts to pay, to each member thereof certain sums of money, it was held that the capacity for membership was to be tested by the ordinary rules of law. It was also held that minors under twenty-one years of age were incapable of contracting, and could not qualify as members of such association. It was further held, in a quo warranto proceeding, that such insurance was not lawful. Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. People's Mut. Life & Relief Asso. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 561.

In Com. v. Keystone Ben. Asso. 171 Pa. 465, 32 Atl. 1027, referring to this statute and a similar benefit society, it was said: "The constitution and by-laws provide for membership by persons between two and sixty years of age. Infants cannot make the contract of membership for themselves, and it is not clear how the parents can make it for them, and, as the statute only authorizes insurance of members, not of other persons in whom members may have an insurable interest, the legality of this branch of the business would seem to be open to question. On this, however, we do not pass. It was not raised or argued, and we only refer to it now to make this fact clear."

A minor was insured in a railroad benefit society, agreeing that part of his wages should be retained monthly as fees. He constituted his uncle his beneficiary, and at his death the fund was paid into court and claimed by his father. It was stipulated that, if the uncle was not entitled to the same, judgment should go for the father. It was held that the direction in the application that the money should be paid to his uncle was voidable for the reason that an infant or person under age could not give such direction by reason of his minority, as the designation of the beneficiary by a member of the society is a testamentary act, and to make it valid it requires a person to execute it of full and lawful age. It was further held that while the rules would give the fund to the father the court was only required to in the case of a valid contract, because she could recover only on the terms of the contract. This contract purports to have been made with the minor. The beneficiary has made no statements of her own. If the warranties are not binding upon the minor, then, in legal effect, they are not a part of the contract, and the beneficiary is not estopped by them. This does not mean that a beneficiary may not be estopped by fraudulent conduct of her own; for example, if she had procured the insurance on this application with knowledge of the false statements. But we do not find that fact in this case.

A copy of the medical examination is on the back of the policy, and it is claimed that notice is imputed to her of its contents. Even so, it shows only a denial of any serious illness from rheumatism, and, while it appears from testimony that "he has had rheumatism," it does not appear that it was serious, so as to charge the plaintiff with knowledge of a false warranty. There was a conflict of testimony as to her knowledge of the statements, and it does not clearly appear from the record that much stress was laid upon the fact. We may assume, however, that the question was before the jury, otherwise the testimony would have no relevancy, and from the verdict for the plaintiff that she did not know the contents of the application. It therefore appears that she is not estopped by the terms of the contract, nor by any conduct of her own which precludes her from recovery.

We think that the defendant is not entitled to a new trial either upon the ground of erroneous rulings or verdict against the evidence.

Rehearing denied.

pass upon the question as to whether the uncle was entitled to the fund. Burst v. Welsenborn, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 276.

In Newbold Friendly Soc. v. Barlow [1893] 2 Q. B. 128, it was held that a friendly society was liable for a penalty, under friendly societies act 1875, § 28, providing that no society shall pay any sum on the death of a child under ten years of age except upon production of a certificate of death issued by the register of deaths. In this case the society had paid a sum of money on the death of a child under ten years of age without the production of a certificate of death. The articles of association were to provide subscriptions for the relief and maintenance of members during sickness, and for insuring money to be paid for funeral expenses, and for all other purposes incident; and "it is hereby declared that the society does not intend, nor shall it be empowered, to issue policies of assurance on human life, or grant annuities on human life, within the meaning of the life assurance companies act 1870." In this case the court said: "If such bodies of the appellants are not within the section, the lives of children under ten are deprived of the protection intended to be thrown around them by the section in question."

But in Chicago Mut. Life Indemnity Asso. v. Hunt, 127 Ill. 257, 2 L. R. A. 549, 20 N. E. 55, which was an information to dissolve a benefit association, it was held that minors were not, merely because of their minority, disqualified from becoming members of mutual benefit societies, and that their admission was not such a violation of public policy as would subject such a society to dissolution in the absence of any statute. In this case the court said: "The contention is, that the certificate of membership is a personal contract between the member and the association, and that, as an infant is capable of making only a voidable contract, his admission to membership is a violation of those principles of mutuality which lie at the basis of mutual benefit societies. . . . While the certificate of membership is a contract, such contract, in the absence of express stipulations to the contrary, is purely unilateral. . . . If he fails to pay his assessments or dues, or does any act forbidden by the certificate of membership, the certificate becomes void and the membership ceases. . . . We do not assent to the view that, as a further consequence of his disability, he may recover back the dues and assessments he may have already paid. . . . Nor are we able to see any force in the suggestion that minors should not be admitted to membership because of their incapacity to act as trustees, or to perform the duties of members at corporate meetings, such as consulting or giving advice for the mutual benefit of the members, voting for officers, and the like. . . . There would seem to be no legal obstacle in the way of minors taking part in corporate meetings, consulting, advising, or even voting."

One of the exceptional cases holding that an infant may become a member of a benefit association is Clements v. London & N. W. R. Co. [1894] 2 Q. B. 482, 9 Reports, 223, 42 Week. Rep. 338, 58 J. P. 816, where the point decided was that the infant could not repudiate the contract; and the decision is placed upon the ground that the contract was beneficial and to his advantage.

V. Surrender or disaffirmance of policy on infant's life.

The extent of the right of an infant who seeks to surrender a policy, to disaffirm the contract and recover back the money paid by him, on the ground of minority, is a question which does not seem to have been fully determined in all respects. In the case of PIPPEN v. MUTUAL BEN. L. INS. CO. the surrender had been accepted by the insurance company, and the question in that case was whether the administrator of the infant could avoid the infant's disaffirmance. The administrator insisted that the disaffirmance was a void contract, and that he could take advantage of that and set aside the surrender. It was held otherwise by the court, saying: "The disaffirmance of the contract by voluntarily surrendering it rendered the contract void ab initio, and the intestate then became entitled to be restored to his original status, which is not the subject of this controversy." In this case the court said: "His disaffirmance could have been made, either by refusing to perform his part of the contract, and then pleading his disability in a suit for its enforcement, or by a voluntary annulment or cancellation made by agreement with the company. And it appears that he adopted the latter course, by a voluntary surrender of the policy and receiving its cash value."

In the case of Johnson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 372, 26 L. R. A. 189, 59 N. W. 992, Overruling 56 Minn. 365, 26 L. R. A. 187, 57 N. W. 934, the infant on becoming of age attempted to disaffirm the contract and recover the money paid. It was held that life insurance by infants in a reasonable amount

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

F. L. PIPPEN, Admr., etc., of J. H. Pippen, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(130 N. C. 23.)

1. An infant's surrender of a policy on his life for a cash value, fairly made without undue influence, cannot be avoided by his administrator and the insurance contract enforced, although the infant did not receive the whole amount to which the contract entitled him.
2. A surrender of an insurance policy to the insurer for its cash value is not a sale which can be disaffirmed by the administrator of the insured on the ground of the latter's infancy, but it is merely a rescission of the contract.

(March 4, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Halifax County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Day & Bell for appellant.

Messrs. Burwell, Walker, & Cansler and Thomas N. Hill, for appellee:

The application and policy constitute the contract of insurance, to be construed as other contracts. It is a promise to pay money upon certain conditions and upon the happening of a certain event.

would be sustained, saying that if insurance was taken so as to impose on the infant such a contract would be set aside. It was also held that the risk in carrying the insurance while the policy was not disaffirmed would prevent a recovery of the premiums on that risk. But it was held that, as under the contract he would be entitled to recover the surrender value of the policy, he was entitled to maintain the action therefor. In this case the court said: "Life insurance in a solvent company, at the ordinary and usual rates, for an amount reasonably commensurate with the infant's estate, or his financial ability to carry it, is a provident, fair, and reasonable contract, and one which it is entirely proper for an insurance company to make with him, assuming that it practises no fraud or other unlawful means to secure it; and if such should appear to be the character of this contract the plaintiff could not recover the premiums which he has paid in, so far as they were intended to cover the current annual risk assumed by the company under its policy. But it appears from the face of the policy that these premiums covered something more than this. The policy provides that after payment of three or more annual premiums the insured will be entitled to a paid-up nonparticipating policy for as many twentieths of the original sum insured ($1,000) as there have been annual premiums so paid. The complaint alleges the payment of four annual premiums. Hence, the plaintiff was entitled, upon the surrender of the original policy, to a paid-up, nonparticipating policy for $200, and it therefore seems to us that, having elected to rescind, he was entitled to recover back in any event the present cash "surrender" value of such a policy. For this reason, as well as that the burden was on the defendant to prove the fair and honest character of the contract, the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled."

In Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bowser, 20 Ind. App. 557, 50 N. E. 36, a woman brought an action against an insurance company to recover the premiums paid for insurance taken out for her benefit by plaintiff at the instance of the agent of the company, on the lives of her minor daughter, son-in-law, brother, two nieces, and the mother-in-law of the niece, on the ground that such policies had been taken out without the knowledge of the insured, and that they were void. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover where no rule, by-law, or statute was shown rendering such policies void for want of consent, and there were no facts found showing that she did not have an insurable interest in the lives insured. In regard to the infant, the court said: "The liability to return the premiums paid depends upon whether there is a contract of insurance under which a risk is run by the insurer in favor of the insured. To constitute such a contract there must be parties capable of contracting. If the case could be said to present for consideration a contract of insurance with an infant, such a contract for his benefit is not void, but only voidable at his election. The insurance company in such a case could not avoid the policy merely upon the ground of the infancy of the insured. Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co. 53 Mich. 238, 18 N. W. 797. Where a minor takes out a policy of insurance on his own life, he cannot, on reaching majority, in the absence of fraud and unfairness, recover back premiums paid by him upon the ground alone of his infancy, such a contract not being void. Johnson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 365, 26 L. R. A. 187, 57 N. W. 934, 59 N. W. 992."

And where an infant at the time of entering the employ of a railway company made a contract, as part of the contract of service, that in case of injury he was to be compensated by an insurance company formed among the employees of the railway, and towards which the railway company contributed, it was held that it was a contract for the advantage of the infant, and therefore he could not repudiate that contract and recover directly from the railway company for injuries received. Smith, L. J., said: "In my judgment it is a fair contract for the infant. First of all, no matter how the accident may happen to him, and whether he has a remedy in a court of law or not, he is to have payments made to him according to the scale set out in the rules of the society. He avoids litigation, . . . to pay costs as between solicitor and client out of the damages he may recover. He avoids also the uncertainty of getting a verdict and the difficulty of establishing a cause of action. In my judgment, the agreement, instead of detrimental to the infant, is, on the whole, manifestly to his advantage." Clements v. London & N. W. R. Co. [1894] 2 Q. B. 482, 9 Reports, 223, 42 Week. Rep. 338, 58 J. P. 816.

But, so far as the above case sustains the validity of a contract by an employee to accept benefits from a relief organization as his sole remedy for injuries and not to sue the employer, it is not in accord with many of the decisions in this country, such, e. g., as Pitts-

Bobbitt v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 66 N. C. 70, 8 Am. Rep. 494; Cuthbertson v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480, 2 S. E. 258; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789.

It is an executory contract.

Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 264, 28 L. ed. 423, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

The policy became personal property when delivered.

Conigland v. Smith, 79 N. C. 303; Simmons v. Briggs, 99 N. C. 236, 5 S. E. 235; Hooker v. Sugg, 102 N. C. 115, 3 L. R. A. 217, 8 S. E. 919.

A policy may be surrendered when there is no forfeiture.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, 44 L. ed. 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Sears, 178 U. S. 345, 44 L. ed. 1096, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 178 U. S. 351, 44 L. ed. 1098, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 178 U. S. 347, 44 L. ed. 1097, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914.

The intestate had possession of the policy more than a year before its surrender, and had an opportunity fully to understand the character and nature of the contract.

The receipt and the return of the policy created a cessation and complete determination of all relations between the intestate and the company in regard to the policy, and the contract of insurance was thereby disaffirmed and became void.

Skinner v. Maxwell, 66 N. C. 45.

A contract is disaffirmed by any conduct which is inconsistent with the existence of the contract, and shows an intention not to be bound by it.

Clark, Contr. ¶ 129, p. 252; Crown Point v. Aetna Ins. Co. 127 N. Y. 608, 14 L. R. A. 147, 28 N. E. 653; Hoyle v. Stowe, 19 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. L.) 320.

Disaffirmance renders the contract absolutely void ab initio, and the rights of the parties are determined as if there had never been a contract between them.

Clark, Contr. ¶ 134, p. 258.

There is no question of necessities in this case.

Mustard v. Wohlford, 15 Gratt. 329, 76 Am. Dec. 209; McCormio v. Leggett, 53 N. C. (8 Jones L.) 425.

Contracts which relate to persons or personal property may be avoided by an infant during his infancy by any act which clearly manifests such a purpose.

burg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore (Ind.) 44 L. R. A. 638.

In O'Bourke v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. the court said: "Certain principles, however, are well settled in regard to infancy. It is an elementary rule that infants are incapable of making contracts, except for necessities. Such contracts are voidable, but not void. The infant may avoid his contract, but an adult contracting with him cannot. A contract may thus be binding on an adult when it is not binding on an infant." But this point was not actually involved in this case.

So, in Grogan v. United States Industrial Ins. Co. 90 Hun, 521, 36 N. Y. Supp. 687, the court, though not having that point in issue, said: "While the instrument, as is contended by the learned counsel, might have been disaffirmed by Peter Grogan in his lifetime, on the ground of infancy, on arriving at his majority, had such an event happened, yet I fail to see how the defendant in this action can avail itself of that fact as a defense against the person who was clearly authorized by the assured by this instrument [the assignment] to receive the money, and give ample and complete release and discharge for the same."

Again, in Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hilliard, 63 Ohio St. 478, 53 L. R. A. 462, 59 N. E. 230, it was said, as a dictum only, "that a contract [of insurance] by a minor is voidable only, and that at his election. The other contracting party cannot avail himself of the lack of power on the part of the minor to conclusively bind himself as a reason for refusing performance on his part. Hence, the contract cannot be said to be absolutely void."

As to contract for surrender, see also New York statute in People v. Industrial Ben. Assn. 92 Hun, 311, 36 N. Y. Supp. 963, subd. IV., supra.

The above cases do not seem to deny the right of an infant to surrender his policy and to that extent disaffirm his contract. Indeed, the usual course of business allows that privilege to all policy holders. But the right of an infant to repudiate what has previously been done and make the contract void ab initio, and recover 57 L. R. A.

back money that he has already paid to the insurance company, is the chief question on this subject. The most important case upon it is that of Johnson v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 365, 26 L. R. A. 187, 57 N. W. 934, 59 N. W. 992, which denies his right to recover moneys formerly paid as premiums so far as the insurance company has earned those premiums by the risk that has been carried, and so far as the contract was provident, fair, and reasonable for the infant. Notwithstanding the general language of some dicta that might be so interpreted, there is no decision sustaining the doctrine that an infant who has been carrying life insurance can repudiate his contract to the extent of recovering back all the premiums that he has paid.

VI. Summary.

An infant's right to take insurance on his life seems to be generally upheld. Insurance by creditors on the life of an infant to secure their debts is recognized as valid to the extent of their claims that are not invalidated by other considerations, as, for instance, a gambling debt. Where insurance is taken out by others on the infant's life, the question of the invalidity of the policy on the ground of infancy seems to have been a minor consideration in the cases, the question of the interest of the beneficiary in the life insured being the controlling question. An ordinary life policy is allowed to be taken out by certain named relatives on the life of an infant in a limited amount, under a New York statute. This statute is held, however, not to limit the number of policies on such life. It is held in Illinois that an infant may become a member of a benefit association. This was also recognized in England as to a railway association, where the contract absolved the railway from any action for injuries covered by the benefit certificate. In several of the states, however, it is held that a benefit association, organized under the statutes, cannot have infant members.

I. T.

State v. Howard, 88 N. C. 652; Poe v. Horne, 44 N. C. (Busbee L.) 398; Tipton v. Tipton, 48 N. C. (3 Jones L.) 552; Rogers, Dom. Rel. 741; Yarborough v. Yarborough, 59 N. C. (6 Jones Eq.) 209; Dube v. Beaudry, 150 Mass. 448, 6 L. R. A. 146, 23 N. E. 222; Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 1362.

Ratification of a contract after it has once been disaffirmed comes too late.

Clark, Contr. p. 260; McCarty v. Woodstock Iron Co. 92 Ala. 463, 12 L. R. A. 136, 8 So. 417; Edgerton v. Wolf, 6 Gray, 453.

Cook, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by the administrator of Joseph H. Phippen to recover the sum of $1,000, alleged to be due upon the death of said Joseph by reason of a certain life insurance policy issued by defendant company to said Joseph. It appears from the facts agreed that Joseph was an infant when he applied for and obtained the policy, and died during his infancy. The application was made on the 4th day of February, 1897, and the policy was issued to him on the 10th day of said month. It was agreed in its policy by the defendant company that in consideration of $40.54 to it in hand paid, and of the annual premium of $40.54, to be paid on the 10th day of February in every year until twenty full years' premiums shall have been paid, it would on the 10th of February, 1917, pay to the assured $1,000, or, should he die before that time, then, upon his death, and proof thereof, to pay said amount to his executors, administrators, and assigns. After the issuance of the policy, and while the same was in force, plaintiff's intestate, pursuant to a provision contained in said policy, in consideration of the sum of $54.40 (the then cash value of said policy) paid to him by the company, fully surrendered and delivered the said policy to the defendant company, and thereafter, to wit, on the 17th day of February, 1899, died. The good faith and fairness of these transactions with the infant (intestate) is not questioned; and it is expressly stated in the case agreed that "the said surrender was voluntarily made and executed in writing by the said intestate, bona fide, and without compulsion or undue influence on the part of the defendant."

The main contention of the plaintiff is that the surrender of the policy by his infant intestate was a voidable contract, which he, in this action, seeks to avoid, and sues to recover upon the original contract of insurance, which he endeavors to affirm. His honor, upon the facts agreed, rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff appealed. We sustain his honor, and hold that plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

The contract of insurance made with the infant, plaintiff's intestate, was not for necessities, and was therefore voidable at his election, but binding upon the defendant company. It was an executory contract (Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 284, 28 L. ed. 423, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390), 57 L. R. A.

relating to personality (Conigland v. Smith, 79 N. C. 303; Simmons v. Biggs, 99 N. C. 236, 5 S. E. 235; Hooker v. Sugg, 102 N. C. 115, 3 L. R. A. 217, 8 S. E. 919), and could therefore be avoided by him during his infancy (State v. Howard, 88 N. C. 650, on page 652; Clark, Contr. p. 244). His disaffirmance could have been made either by refusing to perform his part of the contract, and then pleading his disability in a suit for its enforcement, or by a voluntary annulment or cancellation made by agreement with the company. And it appears that he adopted the latter course, by a voluntary surrender of the policy and receiving its cash value.

But it is argued by the learned counsel for plaintiff that the intestate did not receive the full amount to which he was entitled by reason of the terms expressed in a "note" or condition appearing on the policy. Be that as it may, the disaffirmance of the contract by voluntarily surrendering it rendered the contract void ab initio, and the intestate then became entitled to be restored to his original status, which is not the subject of this controversy.

It is further insisted by plaintiff that the surrender or delivering up of the policy in consideration of the sum paid to him by the company was a sale of the policy made by his intestate to the company, and in this action he, having affirmed the contract of insurance, disaffirms the sale, and is therefore entitled to recover upon the policy, although it had been delivered to the company. This contention cannot be sustained because the property or interest so vesting in the intestate was a contingency liable to be defeated, and incapable of delivery, actual or constructive, and therefore not the subject of sale; or, should it be considered an assignment, the instant the interest of intestate passed out of him into the company, eo instanti the obligations therein imposed ceased, and the contract was rescinded. In the case of Edgerton v. Wolf, 6 Gray, 453, the defendant, an infant, purchased a horse, which was delivered to him, with the right to return the horse if he could not get the money to pay for him, and, after failing to get the money, returned the horse to the vendor plaintiff, but afterwards took the horse from plaintiff's possession and sold him. The court there held that the sale made to the infant was voidable at his election, and his returning the horse voluntarily, intending to give up all his interest in the property, was an avoidance of the contract, and all the rights of the vendor revested in him, and the infant defendant ceased to have any right over the property, and could not retake the same against the will of the vendor plaintiff. So, it appearing that the surrender of the policy was a disaffirmance of the original contract of insurance, rendering the same absolutely void ab initio (Clark, Contr. p. 258), a "disaffirmance cannot be retracted. Ratification of a contract, after it has once been disaffirmed, comes too late. . . . When the infant has exercised the privilege to rescind his contract, he cannot afterwards abandon or repudiate the rescission, and take the other alternative. . . . The contract, having been made void, cannot be revived, except by mutual consent," —says the court in McCarty v. Woodstock

Iron Co. 92 Ala. 463, 12 L. R. A. 136, 8 So. 417.

There is no error, and the judgment of the court below must be affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Catherine O'BRIEN et al., Appts.,
v.
CENTRAL IRON & STEEL COMPANY et al.

(.....Ind.....)

The permanent obstruction of a street within 200 feet of the property of an abutting owner, cutting him off from his usual and only direct access to the business portion of the town, thereby depreciating the value of his property, inflicts special injury on him for which he may recover damages.

(March 18, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clay County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the obstruction of a street upon which plaintiffs' property abutted, which rendered their access to the business portion of the city somewhat more difficult. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. S. Holliday and F. A. Horner for appellants.

Mr. George A. Knight, for appellees:

An injury to real estate by cutting off direct approach thereto in one direction by discontinuing a highway across a railroad at a point not in front of the premises, even if it is a serious and permanent injury, is one which the owner suffers in common with the rest of the community although in greater degree, and gives him no individual remedy, either to recover damages, or to review the order of discontinuance.

Davis v. Hampshire County, 153 Mass. 218, 11 L. R. A. 750, 26 N. E. 848; Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254; Stanwood v. Malden, 157 Mass. 17, 16 L. R. A. 591, 31 N. E. 702; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 645, 646; Buhl v. Ft. Street Union Depot Co. 98 Mich. 596, 23 L. R. A. 392, 57 N. W. 829; Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265, 6 Am. Rep. 332.

Mere trouble and inconvenience are not sufficient grounds upon which to predicate a claim for damages in a case like this, because the same trouble and inconvenience affect the public at large.

Dantzer v. Indianapolis Union R. Co. 141 Ind. 604, 34 L. R. A. 769, 39 N. E. 223; Decker v. Evansville Suburban & N. R. Co. 133 Ind. 403, 33 N. E. 349; Indiana, B. &

W. R. Co. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 547, 59 Am. Rep. 225, 11 N. E. 467; Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90; Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 153; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 N. E. 59; Haslett v. New Albany Belt & Terminal R. Co. 7 Ind. App. 603, 34 N. E. 845; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsgar, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332; Sohn v. Cambern, 106 Ind. 302, 6 N. E. 813; Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Bissell, 108 Ind. 113, 9 N. E. 144.

In the case at bar no new burden is imposed on the soil owned by appellants. The structure in the street is 200 feet from their property, and damages are claimed because of the trouble and inconvenience in going to and from their property in an easterly direction, and the same trouble and inconvenience are suffered by the community in general, and, this being true, appellants are without legal remedy.

McCowan v. Whitesides, 31 Ind. 235; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Matlock v. Hawkins, 92 Ind. 225; Dwenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 153; Powell v. Bunger, 91 Ind. 64.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes to us from the appellate court under § 15 of the act concerning appeals, approved March 12, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 569). Appellants prosecute the action to recover of appellee damages for the obstruction of a street upon which their property abuts. Judgment against appellants upon demurrer to the complaint. The sufficiency of the complaint is therefore the only question presented.

In substance, it is averred in the complaint that the plaintiffs owned a house and lot abutting on Church street, in the city of Brazil, which they now and have for many years occupied for a residence; that when they purchased and first occupied said lot, which was before the grievances complained of, Church street was a regularly platted, dedicated, improved, and traveled street, and constituted the only way, and was exclusively used by the plaintiffs in going from, and returning to, their home, and that in purchasing said real estate they took into consideration its location on said street, which gave them convenient access to all parts of the city, and particularly to that part of the city lying east of their residence, where the business of the city is principally carried on; that in 1899 the defendant constructed, and still maintains, a permanent building on, over, and across said street, thereby completely obstructing the street, and preventing travel thereon; that said obstruction is located about 200 feet east of the plaintiffs' said residence and between said residence and the business portion of the city; that there is no cross street or other outlet between said obstruction and the plaintiffs' said property, and plaintiffs' egress and ingress to and from their property to the east is wholly barred, cut off, and destroyed; that by reason of the obstruction plaintiffs are put to great trouble and inconvenience in getting to and from their property, and their property has been thereby greatly diminished in value; that their property immediately before the obstruction was of the value of $1,200; that by reason of the obstruction of the street as aforesaid their property became and is worth not exceeding $600; and that said depreciation was caused wholly by the wrongful act of the defendant in obstructing said street.

NOTE.—As to private right of action for obstruction of street, see note to Charlotte v. Pembroke Iron Works (Me.) 8 L. R. A. 828; also, in this series, Flynn v. Taylor (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 556; Megargee v. Philadelphia (Pa.) 19 L. R. A. 221; Bradley v. Pharr (La.) 19 L. 57 L. R. A.

R. A. 647; Buhl v. Ft. Street Union Depot Co. (Mich.) 23 L. R. A. 392; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Thompson (Fla.) 26 L. R. A. 410; and Mahler v. Brumder (Wis.) 31 L. R. A. 695.

Appellees contend that the injury of appellants, exhibited by the complaint, is different only in degree from the injury suffered by the community at large, and hence no action for the recovery of damages will lie. On the other hand, appellants contend that the injury complained of is private and special, and different in kind from the public injury, and that damages are recoverable therefor as for any other private wrong. This particular controversy is the question for decision.

The erection and maintenance of a permanent building across a public street, thereby closing it against travelers, constitutes a public nuisance, subject to indictment and abatement by the state. Valparaiso v. Booth, 153 Ind. 536, 47 L. R. A. 487, 55 N. E. 439, and cases cited on page 538, 153 Ind. page 488, 47 L. R. A., and page 439, 55 N. E. But the individual has no right of action to recover damages from the author of such public nuisance, unless he is able to show that he has sustained some particular or peculiar injury differing in kind and not common to the general public. Martin v. Marks, 154 Ind. 549, 555, 57 N. E. 249. This doctrine springs from the principle that the law affords no private remedy for anything but a private wrong; that the damages resulting from a common or public nuisance, such as affects all the public in the same way, though perhaps in different degrees, is of a nature to be impossible of apportionment among the injured public, and therefore the only action maintainable is by the state. 3 Bl. Com. p. 219; Fossion v. Landry, 123 Ind. 136, 140, 24 N. E. 96; Dantzer v. Indianapolis Union R. Co. 141 Ind. 604, 610, 34 L. R. A. 769, 39 N. E. 223; Manufacturers' Gas & Oil Co. v. Indiana 57 L. R. A.

Natural Gas & Oil Co. 155 Ind. 566, 58 N. E. 851.

The inquiry therefore is, Does the complaint show that, by reason of the obstruction placed in Church street by the appellees, appellants have suffered an injury peculiar to themselves, and of a kind different from that suffered by the other residents of the community? The complaint alleges that, when appellants purchased their property and took up their residence therein, Church street, upon which it abuts, was a regularly platted, dedicated, improved, and traveled street, and furnished them the only means of going to and from their residence. Under our law, when land is platted into lots, streets, and alleys, and recorded, the act is accepted as a dedication by the owner to the public of a continuing right to travel such streets and alleys, and a conveyance of a lot abutting on such a street carries with it, not only the fee in the soil to the center of the street, but also the right to use such street, as dedicated, in perpetuity, for the purposes of egress and ingress to the premises. And, so far as such street is necessary to a free and convenient way for travel to and from the lot, the right of the lotowner to use it for the purpose is appurtenant to his premises, is essential to its enjoyment, and is as inviolable as his right to the use of the property itself. In this respect the abutter's right is distinct, and altogether different, from the rights of the general public in the street. The abutter has a right, in common with the community, to use the street from end to end for the purpose of passage; but, in addition to this common right, he has an individual property right, appendant to his premises, in that part of the street which is necessary to free and convenient egress and ingress to his property. That this latter right is private and personal, and unshared by the community, and cannot be taken away, or materially interfered with, without the wrongdoer being answerable in damages, has been many times declared by this court. Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 38; Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 139; Ross v. Thompson, 78 Ind. 90; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 501, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Indiana, B. & W. K. Co. v. Eberle, 110 Ind. 542, 546, 59 Am. Rep. 225, 11 N. E. 467; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Eisert, 127 Ind. 156, 26 N. E. 759; Decker v. Evansville Suburban & N. R. Co. 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nofstger, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332; Martin v. Marks, 154 Ind. 549, 555, 57 N. E. 249. See also Pennsylvania Co. v. Stanley, 10 Ind. App. 421, 37 N. E. 288, 38 N. E. 421.

In the Haynes Case, 7 Ind. 38, it is said: "These decisions establish the principle that, besides the right of way which the public has of passage over a street in a town or city, there is a private right which passes to the purchaser of a lot upon the street, and as appurtenant to it, which he holds by implied covenant that the street in front of his lot shall forever be kept open to its full width."

In Eberle's Case, 110 Ind. 542, 546, 59 Am. Rep. 225, 11 N. E. 467, Mitchell, J., for the court, says: "Whatever may be the rule of decision elsewhere, nothing is better settled in this state than that the owners of lots abutting on a street may have a peculiar and distinct interest in the easement in the street in front of their lots. This interest includes the right to have the street kept open and free from obstruction which prevents or materially interferes with the ordinary means of ingress to, and egress from, the lots. It is distinguished from the interest of the general public, in that it becomes a right appendant, by legally adhering to the contiguous grounds and the improvements thereon as the owner may have adapted them to the street. To the extent that the street is a necessary and convenient means of access to the lot, it is as much a valuable property right as the lot itself. . . . Nor can the street be invaded so as to inflict special and peculiar damage or injury upon the adjacent lot owner's property without rendering the wrongdoer liable for such damages."

This complaint alleges that the defendants have erected a permanent building across Church street about 200 feet east of the plaintiffs' residence, thereby effectually barring all passage in that direction, and have thus cut off the plaintiffs from their usual and only way of direct travel to and from the east and business portion of the city, and have thus imposed upon them great trouble and inconvenience in getting to and from their property, by reason whereof their property has been depreciated in value from $1,200 to $600. These facts show that the wrongful act of appellees has not only deprived appellants of their common right to use a regularly dedicated, improved, and traveled street in front of their property, but it has placed that property in a cul de sac, with the base in the direction of the business and most frequented part of the city, thus making it necessary in going to market, or to the eastern part of the town, to travel in the opposite direction to the first cross street.

If appellees may close this street on the east within the same square, without special injury to appellants, why may they not also close it on the west within the same square, and completely fence appellants in and render valueless their property without special injury? Surely the injury would be the same in kind. In such case it seems absurd to say that the injury sustained by appellants in their property rights would be the same, but only greater in degree, as that sustained by the community in general. We have a class of cases which hold that when an obstruction does not exclude the abutter from ingress and egress, but only imposes upon him, in common with other travelers, that inconvenience which results from a more circuitous way, his injury is in common, for which there can be no recovery; as, for instance, if the obstruction in this case had been placed east of an intersecting cross street. Then it could not be said that appellants were excluded from approaching or leaving their premises in any direction originally afforded by the street.

That there may be others affected in a similar manner to appellants does not affect the question. Martin v. Marks, 154 Ind. 560, 57 N. E. 249. In such cases an action for damages is maintainable by a person, or any number of persons, who are able to show that they have sustained special and peculiar damage different in kind from that sustained by the public in general. We think the complaint states a cause of action.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

PENNSYLVANIA COMPANY for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities, Exr., etc., of Sarah B. Van Syckel, Deceased,

v.

PHILADELPHIA CONTRIBUTIONSHIP for Insurance of Houses from Loss by Fire, Appt.

(201 Pa. 497.)

The loss to be made good under a policy of fire insurance is not limited to NOTE.—As to insurer's option to rebuild, see, in this series, Platt v. Aetna Ins. Co. (Ill.) 26 L. R. A. 853, and note; and Henderson v. Crescent Ins. Co. (La.) 35 L. R. A. 385.

For another case as to effect of municipal police regulations on insurer's liability, see Monteleone v. Royal Ins. Co. (La.) 56 L. R. A. 784.

57 L. R. A.

the cost of replacing the structure described in the survey, if, when the fire occurs, the statutes require, as a condition of rebuilding, more substantial and expensive structural work.

(February 24, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, for Philadelphia County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, which was delivered by WILLSON, J., and was as follows:

On the 14th of October, 1851, the defendant company issued a policy of insurance against fire to William Wurts, in the amount of $5,000, on a brick store and counting house, situated on the north side of Market street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, as per a survey of the same, which was attached to the policy, signed and agreed to by the assured. In the survey the walls were described as 18, 14, and 9 inch walls. By subsequent transfers, approved by the defendant company, the ownership of the said policy of insurance became vested in the plaintiff's testatrix, who was at the time of her death the owner of the property referred to. She also held another policy of insurance upon the same property for $10,000, issued by the Franklin Fire Insurance Company, and the defendant company indorsed upon the policy now in suit that such insurance was allowed; the loss, if any, in case of fire, to be borne proportionately. Subsequent to the issuing of the policy by the defendant company, various other privileges were given to the assured upon additional deposits being made, but for the purpose of this case it is not necessary to refer to such matters in detail. On the 29th of November, 1899, a portion of the building covered by the insurance was destroyed by fire. It was then found that in consequence of an act of assembly regulating the construction, maintenance, and inspection of buildings in cities of the first class, which was approved the 5th day of May, 1899 (P. L. 193), it was not possible to reconstruct the part of the building which was destroyed in the same manner in which it existed before the fire. Under the provisions of the act the municipal authorities in charge of such matters required that the wall should be constructed of a thickness greater than that which was stated in the survey referred to. This necessitated either the tearing down and the rebuilding of those walls, or strengthening them by means of a steel construction. This latter plan was in point of fact adopted because of a smaller expense being thus made possible. If the building could have been reconstructed, after the fire, without the demolition of the walls in order to comply with the requirements of the law, the cost of construction would have been $6,650; but the actual cost of rebuilding in the method prescribed was $11,330.36. In point of fact, the market value of the building after its reconstruction according to those requirements was no greater than it would have been if it had been rebuilt according to its original plan as described in the survey. The foregoing résumé of the case is, in substance, that which is agreed to by the parties in their agreement for the case stated. The controversy between the parties arises upon these recited facts. The plaintiff demanded from the defendant one third, or its proportionate share, of the cost of rebuilding the premises according to the requirements of the law, namely, $3,776.79. The defendant declined to pay that sum, but offered to pay $2,216.87, which is admitted to be its one third or proportionate share of what would have been the cost of rebuilding according to the description contained in the survey. Indeed, this sum has been paid by the defendant company to the plaintiff, so that the amount which is involved in this controversy is the difference between the amount paid and the amount claimed, namely, $1,516.12. If the last-named amount shall be found by the court to be due to the plaintiff, then it is agreed that judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff for that amount, with interest from March 1, 1900, but otherwise that judgment shall be entered in favor of the defendant. The point involved in this controversy is a novel one. The industry of the counsel for plaintiff and for defendant has not succeeded in finding any precedents which throw light directly upon the case, and we have not been able to make any more fruitful search. It is necessary, therefore, to attempt to dispose of the question involved in the case on principles which are equitable and reasonable, in view of the nature of the contract which existed between the parties. Without any elaboration of the thought, it is hardly necessary to say that the contract was intended to give to the party assured indemnity and protection against loss by fire up to a certain specified amount. The liability of the insuring company could not, whatever the loss might be, be carried beyond the amount designated in the policy. But up to that amount, whatever the loss might be, the insuring company would be liable, either fully or proportionately, according to the circumstances of the case. This position must be regarded as unquestionable, in view of the well-recognized doctrine of the law in regard to such contracts. The difficulty in the case arises when the effort is made to determine what was the loss against which the company insured; or, in other words, upon what basis the plaintiff can estimate the damages which are proper to be included in the loss insured against. Are such damages only such as are to be arrived at by a computation of the cost of the reconstruction of the building exactly according to the description contained in the survey attached to the policy, or is the true result to be reached by taking the cost of reconstruction according to the conditions existing and lawfully imposed at the time when the fire occurred? Certainly it would not be claimed that the insurers are only liable for such an estimate of cost as would be based upon the market price of materials at the time when the contract of insurance was made. It would seem, also, if the materials out of which the building was originally constructed were not to be obtained at the time of the fire and reconstruction, that the insurers would be liable for the cost of reconstruction out of such materials as were reasonably proper and adequate at the time of rebuilding. These illustrations indicate that a contract of insurance may need to be interpreted with regard to changed conditions for the purpose of arriving at a proper standard for estimating the extent of the liability of an insuring company at the time of loss. It is our judgment that the case in hand must fall under such a general classification. It has long been well recognized that building regulations and restrictions were matters properly within the scope of legislative and municipal authorities. This must have been known to the contracting parties at the time when the policy involved in this suit was issued. The defendant company did not, by the terms of the policy, become liable only for the loss which might accrue to the owner of the policy in case of fire to the extent of what it would cost to rebuild the premises injured according to the actual dimensions of the walls of the building as described in the survey. It did insure a building which corresponded to the description therein contained, but the insurance was against loss to the owner by reason of the destruction or injury of that building by fire; and if, in consequence of a state of the law existing at the time of the fire, the loss was increased above what it would have been by reason of regulations which required the rebuilding to be done in some other way, according to some different plan, for the protection of the community, it seems to us that there is nothing in good reason or in law why the insuring company would not be held liable for the actual loss thus incurred up to the extent of the amount designated in the policy, provided the proportional amount of the loss falling upon the company reached that sum. Applying such a principle would not involve the insuring company in any loss greater in extent than that which it undertook to assume when the policy was made, and the method of arriving at the extent of the loss which we have adopted appears to us a just, reasonable, and lawful one. The decision in Brown v. Royal Ins. Co. 1 El. & El. 853, while not ruling the exact question involved in this case, yet may be regarded as in general harmony with the view already expressed, so far as the differing facts of the two cases would allow. Brady v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 11 Mich. 445, and Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Garlington, 66 Tex. 103, 59 Am. Rep. 613, 18 S. W. 337, were referred to in the agreement, but they turned upon a different point, and they are only mentioned here for the information of those who may hereafter be interested in the question under discussion. Judgment will therefore be entered for the plaintiff for the sum of $1,658.92.

57 L. R. A.

Mr. W. W. Montgomery, for appellant:

The parties to a contract of insurance may stipulate in regard to the manner of estimating the loss if it should occur, or as to the time which shall be the period of the valuation of the property destroyed.

Phillips, Ins. chap. 1, § 3; Ostrander, Fire Ins. § 183, p. 463; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Sennett, 37 Pa. 205, 78 Am. Dec. 418.

If a man insures an old and dilapidated building, which by reason of its position or the use to which it is put may rent as well, and while it stands be as valuable to him, as a new one, he cannot, in case of its destruction by fire, recover from the insurer the cost of a new building.

Ætna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 11 Bush, 587, 21 Am. Rep. 223; Waynesboro Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Creaton, 98 Pa. 451.

Mr. John G. Johnson, for appellee:

Insurance is a contract of indemnity, and if the parties stipulate for the manner in which that indemnity shall be made, on the contingency of liability, it is their right to do so, and the law will carry out their contracts as made, if there is no fraud in them, as in other cases.

Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Sennett, 37 Pa. 208, 78 Am. Dec. 418; Grandin v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 107 Pa. 35; Brown v. Royal Ins. Co. 1 El. & El. 853; Fire Assn. of Philadelphia v. Rosenthal, 108 Pa. 474, 1 Atl. 303; May, Ins. 1900, § 423 A.

Per Curiam:

We affirm the judgment in this case on Judge Willson's opinion.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

UNION NATIONAL BANK of Chicago, Respt.,
v.

Elizabeth J. CHAPMAN, Impleaded, etc.,
Appt.

(169 N. Y. 538.)

The contract of a surety on a note is complete when his signature is affixed and the instrument delivered to the payee, and is therefore governed by the law of the place where those transactions occur, although the note is payable in another state, and as against the makers has no valid inception until its negotiation in the latter state, if the surety has no knowledge that it is to be negotiated there, or intention that his contract shall be governed by the laws of that state.

(Bartlett and Vann, JJ., dissent.)

(January 31, 1902.)

NOTE.—Conflict of laws as to capacity of married woman to contract.

- I. As between lex loci contractus and lex domicilii.
 - a. General rule, 513.
 - b. Exceptions; when domicil is at forum, 517.
- II. As between lex loci contractus and lex fori; remedy, 520.
- III. As between lex loci contractus, or lex domicilii, and lex rei sitæ.
 - a. Personal property, 523.
 - b. Real property, 524.

Scope.

This note is confined to the question, what law governs the capacity of a married woman to contract, as between the law of the place where the contract was made or that of the place where it was to be performed, on the one side, and the law of the place of the domicil, or of the forum, or of that where the property is situated, on the other. It does not take up the question, what law governs as between the law of the place where the contract was made, on the one side, and the law of the place where it was to be performed, on the other. That question is much broader than the subject of this note, and is reserved for treatment in a separate note in which the entire subject may be covered. As to the capacity of a woman to marry, see note to Hills v. State (Neb.) ante, 155.

I. As between lex loci contractus and lex domicilii.

a. General rule.

Waiving, then, the question as to whether the law of the place where the contract was made, or that of the place where it was to be performed, governs, when the two are in conflict, it may be confidently asserted that the general principle of international law, supported by the American decisions, is that, as between the law of the place where the contract was made (lex loci contractus) and the law of the place where the woman was domiciled (lex domicilii), the former governs as to 57 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by defendant, Elizabeth J. Chapman, from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Monroe County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce her liability as surety on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. O. F. Hurd and David B. Hill, for appellant:

The capacity of Mrs. Chapman to make the note in question, and to become a surety for her husband, was governed by the law of Alabama.

1. She was a resident of Alabama at the time she executed the note.

2. Her consent to become a surety was obtained in Alabama.

3. Every act on her part in becoming a surety took place in that state.

4. She did not consent that her liability the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract,—at least when the domicil is not at the forum.

In the following cases, which support that doctrine, the married woman was not domiciled at the forum: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt, 52 Conn. 592; Young v. Bullen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687; Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Hill v. Chase, 143 Mass. 129, 9 N. E. 30; Smith v. Frame, 3 Ohio C. C. 587; Pearl v. Hansborough, 9 Humph. 433.

In Wheeler v. Constantine, 39 Mich. 62, 33 Am. Rep. 355, the decision was that a court of Michigan could not presume, in the absence of evidence to that effect, that there was anything in the law of Indiana, the domicil of a married woman, which would render void notes made by her and which were authorized by the law of Michigan; but the court said that it did not wish to be understood as intimating that the laws of Michigan would not govern the notes of a married woman made in that state, though she were domiciled in another state.

In Nichols & S. Co. v. Marshall, 108 Iowa, 518, 79 N. W. 282, the rule that the law of the place of the contract, rather than the law of the domicil, governs with respect to the capacity of a married woman to contract, was applied so as to hold unenforceable in Iowa a contract of suretyship, made and to be performed in Indiana, by a married woman domiciled in Iowa, because she was incapable of contracting by the law of Indiana, notwithstanding that she was capable according to the law of Iowa.

In Pearl v. Hansborough, 9 Humph. 433, the principle was also applied so as to hold invalid a contract which, though valid by the lex domicilii, was invalid by the lex loci contractus, because of the married woman's lack of capacity. In this case, however, the domicil was not at the forum as it was in the preceding case.

It is thus apparent that when, by the lex loci contractus the contract would be invalid, the principle applies, and the contract is condemned without reference to whether the domicil is at the forum or not. As subsequently shown (infra, I. b) the fact, in that on the note was to be regulated by the law of any other state.

Felix, Droit Inten. Trivi, § 9; Story, Confli. L. 19, § 18; Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562; 2 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. 569; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 502; Dicey, Confli. L. p. 547; 2 Kent, Com. 458; Westlake, Private International Law, §§ 401-404.

The Alabama statute deprived her of any capacity to become her husband's surety.

The lex loci contractus between herself and her husband was in Alabama, and she was under the protection of the laws of that state.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 518; Hill v. Pine River Bank, 45 N. H. 300.

The validity of the note is governed by the law of Alabama. By the law of that state the note was void as to Mrs. Chapman at the time she signed it and delivered it to the payee.

Union Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 7 App. Div. 450, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1051; 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 100; Bell v. Leggett, 7 N. Y. 179; Barton v. Port Jackson & U. F. Pl. Road Co. 17 Barb. 397; Continental Bank v. Clarke, 117 Ala. 292, 22 So. 988; Hawkins v. Ross, 100 Ala. 459, 14 So. 278; Heard v. Hicks, 82 Ala. 484, 1 So. 639; Lansden v. Bone, 90 Ala. 447, 8 So. 65; Schening v. Cofer, 97 Ala. 726, 12 So. 414; McNeil v. Davis, 105 Ala. 657, 17 So. 101.

When a contract is declared void by the laws of the state where made, but is valid in the state where it is to be performed, the contract cannot be enforced in either state.

Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; 2 Parsons, Contr. 8th ed. 576; Story, Promissory Notes, § 150.

respect, may be important when it is sought to apply the principle to a contract, valid by the lex loci contractus, but invalid by the lex domicilii.

In the following cases, which also hold that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, governs, the domicile was at the forum; and in each of these cases the contract was upheld and enforced, being valid by the lex loci contractus, although invalid by the lex domicilii and lex fori. Bowles v. Field, 78 Fed. 742; First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. 542, 92 Fed. 565, Reversing 84 Fed. 90; Robison v. Pease (Ind. App.) 63 N. E. 479; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons, 52 Mo. App. 357; Brigham v. Gilmartin, 58 N. H. 346.

Whether the cases last cited are correct, or incorrect, in applying the principle when the party sought to be charged was domiciled at the forum (as to which see infra, I. b), they certainly lend strong support to the principle as applied to cases where the domicile was not at the forum.

In the following cases the contract was made at the domicile, so that there was no conflict between the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii, the only conflict being between the lex loci contractus et domicilii, on the one side, and the lex fori, on the other; but the decisions are expressly put upon the ground that the lex loci contractus governs, and, so, may be regarded as some support for the principle that, as between the lex loci contractus and lex domicilii, the former governs.—at least when the domicile is not at the forum. Nixon v. Halley, 78 Ill. 611; Bond v. Cummings, 70 Me. 125; Partee v. Silliman, 44 Miss. 272; F. B. Hauck Clothing Co. v. Sharpe, 83 Mo. App. 385; Hill v. Pine River Bank, 45 N. H. 300; Miller v. Campbell, 140 N. Y. 457, 35 N. E. 651; Evans v. Cleary, 125 Pa. 204, 17 Atl. 440.

In Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L. R. A. 214, 11 S. W. 38, where the note in suit was made and payable in Kentucky by a married woman domiciled there it was held that the lex loci contractus (in the sense of the place of performance) would prevail over the law of the domicile if the two were different.

In Dulin v. McCaw, 30 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681, where the place of the contract and of the domicile were the same, it was held that the coincidence was an additional reason for applying the lex loci contractus.

In Taylor v. Sharp, 108 N. C. 377, 13 S. E. 138, in which the presumption was indulged 57 L. R. A.

that the married woman was domiciled in the state where the contract was made, the contrary not appearing, the court approved of the position taken in Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, supra, that a contract which by the law of the place is recognized as lawfully made by a capable person is valid everywhere, although the person would not, under the law of the domicile, be deemed capable of making it.

In Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 25 L. R. A. 188, 17 S. E. 14, infra, I. b, it was also held that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, in general, furnishes the test of capacity, though, as subsequently shown (infra, I. b), the circumstances of the case were held to bring it within an exception to that general principle. In Graham v. First Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 393, 38 Am. Rep. 528, the court said, obiter, that the disability of coverture is to be determined by the rule of the place of the contract and performance.

The provision of the Alabama Code that the separate estates of married women shall be liable for all contracts for certain articles of comfort and support of the household does not apply to a contract made and to be performed outside of Alabama. Judge v. Wright, 73 Ala. 324.

The status obtained by a married woman, while domiciled in Alabama, by a decree of a chancery court in that state relieving her of the disability of coverture as to her statutory, or other, separate estate, so far as to invest her with the right to buy, sell, hold, convey, and mortgage real and personal property, and to sue and be sued as a feme sole,—cannot be insisted on in Florida, after the removal of her domicile to that state, as to transactions had in Florida. Walling v. Christian & C. Grocery Co. 41 Fla. 479, 47 L. R. A. 608, 27 So. 40.

In the following cases, in accordance with the principle above stated, the law of the place (other than that of the domicile) where the contract had its legal inception was held to govern, notwithstanding that the contract was signed or assented to by the married woman at the domicile and there left her hands, being delivered to the other contracting party through the mails or by some third person. First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. 542, 92 Fed. 565, Reversing 84 Fed. 90; Robison v. Pease (Ind. App.) 63 N. E. 479; Young v. Bullen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687; Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep.

If Mrs. Chapman did not possess the power or capacity to obligate herself as security for her husband, the note is not a valid obligation against her.

Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245; Brown v. American Finance Co. 31 Fed. 516.

Notes declared void by statute, or which are so by necessary implication, are void even in the hands of a bona fide holder.

Edwards, Bills & Notes, 333-337; Rockwell v. Charles, 2 Hill, 499; Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615; Grimes v. Hillenbrand, 4 Hun, 354; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 197, 807; 3 Kent, Com. 80; Voreis v. Nussbaum, 131 Ind. 267, 16 L. R. A. 45, 31 N. E. 70; Johnson v. Sutherland, 39 Mich. 579; Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281, 34 N. W. 575.

As between Mrs. Chapman and her husband and her husband's partners, the note in question had its inception in the state of Alabama, if it can be said that it ever had any inception at all as to her.

Konitzky v. Meyer, 49 N. Y. 571; Freeman's Appeal, 68 Conn. 533, 37 L. R. A. 452, 37 Atl. 420; Thompson v. Taylor (N. J. L.) 46 Atl. 567; Hager v. National German-American Bank, 105 Ga. 116, 31 S. E. E. 141.

Mr. John A. Barhite, for respondent:

The note had no inception until it was delivered to the bank for value in Chicago. It was an Illinois contract, and the liability of Mrs. Chapman is governed by the laws of that state.

Stearns v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 4 N. Y. S. R. 715; Pickering v. Cording, 92 Ind. 306, 47 Am. Rep. 145; Dubois v. Mason, 127 Mass. 37, 34 Am. Rep. 335; Voigt v.

251; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons, 52 Mo. App. 357; Smith v. Frame, 3 Ohio C. C. 587; Brigham v. Gilmartin, 58 N. H. 346.

In Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westervelt, 52 Conn. 592, while there was no decision as between the law of the place where the contract had its legal inception by delivery, and the law of the place of performance, it was held that the law of one or the other of those places governed, and not the law of the domicile, although the completed contract was handed by the wife to her husband at the domicile, it being delivered by the husband to the other contracting party in another state.

In Freeman's Appeal, 68 Conn. 533, 37 L. R. A. 452, 37 Atl. 420, however, it was held that the validity of a guaranty of the payment of her husband's debt, performable in Illinois, executed by a married woman in Connecticut and there delivered to her husband and mailed by him to Illinois to the other party, was governed by the law of Connecticut rather than that of Illinois, and was therefore invalid. The decision is upon the ground that, though whatever delivery there was took place in Illinois when the guaranty was there received, yet the effectiveness of that delivery depended upon the validity of the wife's act in constituting her husband agent for the purposes of the delivery, and that her attempt to confer such authority upon him in Connecticut was invalid. The court said that if the wife had been within the state of Illinois when she signed the guaranty, it might be that her personal presence would have so far made her a resident of that state as to subject her to its laws in respect to acts done within its jurisdiction. The decision in this case was disapproved by the circuit court of appeals in First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565, supra.

The question as to where, under various circumstances, a contract will be deemed to have been made, is a separate and distinct one, depending upon considerations equally applicable to a large class of cases not coming within the subject of this note, and is therefore not discussed; but it is apparent from the cases cited that when the place where the contract was, in a legal sense, made (that is, where it had its legal inception), has been determined, its law furnishes the test of capacity of the married woman to make it, notwithstanding that she may never have been out of her domicile.

There is, however, some authority, both in England and America, for the doctrine, which is favored by the foreign jurists, that, as between the lex loci contractus and the lex domicilii, the latter governs with respect to the capacity of a married woman to make personal contracts.

In LeBreton v. Nouchet, 3 Mart. (La.) 60, 5 Am. Dec. 736, the court said that, according to the principles of the law of nations, "personal incapacities communicated by the laws of any particular place, accompany the person wherever he goes. Thus he who is excused the consequences of contracts for want of age in his country, cannot make binding contracts in another." This was said in discussing the question whether the property rights, as affected by the marriage in Mississippi of a minor domiciled in Louisiana, were to be determined by reference to the law of Louisiana or of Mississippi.

In Garnier v. Poydras, 13 La. 177, it was held that the capacity of a married woman to contract in Louisiana, without the assent of her husband, was to be determined by the law of France, their domicile, rather than the law of Louisiana, the lex loci contractus.

In Roberts v. Wilkinson, 5 La. Ann. 369, the court seems to have been of the opinion that notes made and payable in Mississippi, by a married woman domiciled in Louisiana, would be held valid against her in Louisiana, notwithstanding that they would be invalid by the law of Mississippi. This position is referable only to the doctrine that the lex domicilii furnishes the test of capacity, and cannot be referred to the public policy doctrine, since, as subsequently shown (infra, I. b), that doctrine only operates to invalidate contracts valid by the lex loci but invalid by the lex fortis, never to validate contracts invalid by the lex loci but valid by the lex fortis.

The statutes regulating the privileges and disabilities attaching to married women are purely domiciliary in their character, and, unless otherwise expressly declared, do not affect married women domiciled in another state. Hyman v. Schlenker, 44 La. Ann. 108, 10 So. 623.

In Baer Bros. v. Terry, 105 La. 479, 29 So. 886, the court, referring to the capacity of a married woman, said that the capacity to contract is tested by the law of the domicile. The note in question, in this case, was executed in Missouri by a woman domiciled in that state, but was payable in Louisiana. The court rejected the contention of counsel that, because the note was payable in Louisiana, the capacity of defendant to make it must be tested by the law of Louisiana, holding, as already stated, Brown, 42 Hun, 394; First Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 34 C. C. A. 542, 92 Fed. 565; Miliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241; Bell v. Packard, 69 Me. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 251; Johnston v. Gawtry, 83 Mo. 339; Lee v. Selleck, 33 N. Y. 615; Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, 33 Am. Rep. 671; Merchants' Bank v. Griswold, 72 N. Y. 472, 28 Am. Rep. 159; Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 38 Am. Rep. 518; Story, Conf. L. § 280; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. 65, 10 L. ed. 61; Ludlow v. Bingham, 4 Dall. 47, 1 L. ed. 736; Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. 241, 22 L. ed. 632; Cook v. Litchfield, 9 N. Y. 279; Wharton, Conf. L. § 429.

The laws of New York would make Mrs. Chapman liable upon the note, and the courts have the right to construe the contract with reference to these laws if such contention will protect the rights of one of our citizens.

Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 38 Am. Rep. 518; Story, Promissory Notes, § 156; Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y. 207; Re Waite, 99 N. Y. 433, 2 N. E. 440; Edgerly v. Bush, 81 N. Y. 199; Smith v. Godfrey, 28 N. H. 379, 61 Am. Dec. 617;

Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419.

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon a promissory note made in Tuscumbia, in the state of Alabama, by the defendants, Chapman, Reynolds, & Co., a copartnership engaged in business at that place, in the building of a lock in the Tennessee river for the government of the United States, of which note the following is a copy:

$5,000.

Tuscumbia, Alabama, May 1st, 1894.

Six months after date, we promise to pay to the order of E. P. Reynolds, Jr., five thousand and no 100ths dollars, value received, with interest at eight per cent per annum from date, payable at Union National Bank, Chicago, Illinois.

Chapman, Reynolds & Co.

W. P. Chapman.

Elizabeth J. Chapman.

Ella Howard.

C. W. Howard.

that the capacity must be tested by the law of Missouri, the domicile. In this case it will be observed that the law of the place where the note was made and the law of the domicile were the same, but the decision is squarely put on the ground that the law of the domicile governs. The court cites, in support of this position, Rorer's Interstate Law, p. 263, but that author takes exactly the contrary position, holding that the capacity to contract as to all personal matters depends upon the law of the state or country where the transaction takes place, whether the subject-matter contracted about or involved be within the state or without. The decision, moreover, is obiter, since the action was not on the notes, but was to recover the purchase price of the property for which the notes were given.

In Guepratte v. Young, 4 DeG. & S. 217, it was held that while the law of England, where a contract by a married woman was made, determined the form, the law of France, where she was domiciled, determined her capacity, and the contract was upheld in accordance with the law of France, although by the law of England she would be incapable of making such a contract.

In Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell, 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156, the court said that the general rule was that the capacity of a married woman to make contracts in respect to her separate personal property, when situated in a country other than that of the domicile of her husband, is that the law of the domicile of the husband governs unless the property, from its peculiar nature, necessarily has an implied locality, or unless the contract is made in the country where the property is situated. (Italics ours.) It will be observed that this case impliedly supports the lex loci contractus, as against the lex domicilii, when the two are opposed.

A married woman, incapacitated by the law of her domicile from binding herself by a note, cannot be made liable on such a note because, though executed at the place of her residence, it is made payable in another state by the law of which she is authorized to make such a contract. Hager v. National German-American Bank, 105 Ga. 116, 31 S. E. 141. 57 L. R. A.

It is to be observed that in the last case there was no conflict between the law of the place where the contract was made and that where the married woman was domiciled.

It will be observed that the reason for applying the law of Alabama in UNION NAT. BANK v. CHAPMAN was not that the married woman was domiciled there, but that the note was an Alabama contract, it having been signed and delivered there, although payable in Illinois.

In Waldron v. Ritchings, 3 Daly, 288, the opinion was expressed that the New York statute permitting married women to carry on trade or business did not extend to contracts made in New York by married women domiciled in another state, where, presumptively, the common-law rule was in force. In this case, however, it was held that the contract was not made in New York, so that the question did not actually arise.

In Dalton v. Murphy, 30 Miss. 59, a deed of trust of personal property, executed by a married woman domiciled in Mississippi, was held invalid, though valid by the law of Alabama, where it was executed. The decision, however, is not upon the ground of her lack of capacity to contract, but upon the ground that the deed was not executed by her in the manner prescribed by the law of Mississippi, where the performance of the contract was contemplated.

The liability of a wife who, with her husband, was domiciled in Connecticut, for property purchased upon the credit of the husband in New York and used for the benefit of both husband and wife in New York, is to be governed by the law of Connecticut (the domicile), rather than by the law of New York. It was provided by a statute of Connecticut that all purchases made by either husband or wife, in his or her own name, shall be presumed, in the absence of notice to the contrary, to be on his or her private account and liability, but both shall be liable for any actual purchases by either that shall have in fact gone for the support of the family, or for the joint benefit of both. It was held that the statute applied to the case, although it did not, by its terms, purport to have an extraterritorial operation. The

The trial court has found as facts that the defendant Elizabeth J. Chapman was the wife of William P. Chapman, who was a member of the firm; that she signed the note at the request of her husband as surety for the firm, and that, while it was the intention of the firm that the note should be negotiated and discounted in the state of Illinois, she did not know of such intention, except from what appeared on the face of the note; that she signed the note for the purpose of raising money for the firm, to enable it to continue its work upon the government contract in Alabama, and after the note was executed it was delivered to Reynolds, the payee therein named, who took it to the plaintiff's bank, in Chicago, Illinois, indorsed it, and delivered it to the bank for the purpose of securing loans already made to the firm, and for the purpose of procuring additional loans. The defense interposed by the defendant Elizabeth J. Chapman was that she had no capacity to make the contract in question, under § 2349 of the Code of 1886 of the state of Alabama, which provides that "the wife shall not, directly or indirectly, become surety for her husband," and it was therefore invalid and of no binding force against her. On behalf of the plaintiff it is contended that the note had no legal inception until it was discounted by the plaintiff's bank in Illinois, and that it then became a valid contract of that state, and under its laws the wife was not disqualified from becoming surety for her husband. The question thus presented is as to whether this was an Alabama or an Illinois contract.

As we have seen, the note was drawn, signed, and delivered to the payee at Tusculumbia, Alabama, and Mrs. Chapman signed as surety for her husband. She did not authorize it to be discounted in Illinois, or know that the members of the firm intended to have it negotiated there. She only knew that it was payable at the plaintiff's bank, in that state. It is true, the note did not have a valid inception, in such a sense as to create a liability on the part of the makers, until it was discounted and passed over to the bank; but this does not necessarily make it an Illinois contract, so far as the surety is concerned. Mrs. Chapman's contract to become surety was com-court said the action was not brought on the express contract made by the husband, but upon an implied promise which the statute raised from the beneficial use of the husband and wife of the goods purchased, and that, therefore, the express contract made in New York might be laid out of the case. Buckingham v. Hurd, 52 Conn. 404.

In Ritch v. Hyatt, 3 McArthur, 536, it is expressly held that a married woman's capacity to contract is to be determined by the lex domicilii rather than by the lex loci contractus.

In Goldsmith v. Ladson, 9 Mackey, 220, it was held that the validity of a purchase of goods on credit by a married woman domiciled at Washington, from a merchant domiciled at New York, and her title to the goods purchased, depended upon the law of the District of Columbia. The court said that it was immaterial whether the transaction was in New York (where a married woman was enabled by statute to carry on business as a sole trader, and for that purpose to make contracts to a limited amount), or at Washington (where a married woman was incapable of purchasing goods on credit), since the New York statute related only to married women acting as sole traders in that state. There is an apparent inconsistency between the decision in this case, which applies the law of the District of Columbia to determine the capacity of the married woman, and the implication that the New York statute would have been applied if it had, in terms, covered a contract made in New York by a married woman domiciled elsewhere. Even if the New York statute had expressly covered such a case, its application by a court of the District must have proceeded on the principle that the capacity of a married woman is to be determined by the law of the place of the contract, rather than the law of the place of her domicile; and if so, it would seem that the law of New York must govern, whether there was a statute expressly applicable or not. There being no statute of New York applicable, it would seem that resort should have been had to the common-law rule in New York on the subject; and, as a matter of fact, the contract seems to have been held invalid upon common-law principles, though it was apparent that it would have been upheld if the enabling statute of the District had been held to cover such a case.

The provision of Mass. Stat. 1862, chap. 198, § 2, that if a married woman, proposing to do business on her separate account, shall fail to file the certificate provided for by the statute, the husband shall be liable upon "all contracts lawfully made in the prosecution of such business," applies to purchases made in the prosecution of a business carried on in Massachusetts by parties domiciled here, even if they are made by married women outside the state, and contemplate payment at the place where they are made. Ridley v. Knox, 138 Mass. 83. The court said it was unnecessary to consider what would be the effect of a New York statute covering the present case and prohibiting the imposition of any liability on the husband, since it was enough to say there was no such statute, without intimating that the result would have been different had such a statute existed.

b. Exceptions; when domicil is at forum.

While, as already shown, the weight of authority establishes the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, as the general international test of the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract, this principle, like all other principles of private international law, is subject to the qualification that the law of another state or country will not be enforced if contrary to the public policy of the forum. It is conceivable, at least, that a court might take the view that it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce the contract of a married woman valid according to the lex loci contractus but invalid according to the lex fori, although she was not domiciled at the forum (see Spearman v. Ward, 114 Pa. 634, 8 Atl. 430, infra). But when the married woman was domiciled at the forum at the time the contract was made, and would have been incapable by the law of the forum, there is much greater reason for holding that the contract, though valid according to the lex loci contractus, is contrary to the public policy plete when the instrument was signed and delivered to the payee. It was then a contract beyond her recall, upon which she in the future might become liable when negotiated by the payee, if otherwise valid; and the place of the negotiation could not, under the circumstances, in any manner change the force or effect of her contract. One of the essential elements in a contract is the meeting of the minds of the contracting parties upon the matter which is the subject of the contract. In this contract Mrs. Chapman agreed with the payee of the note that she would become surety for her husband to the amount thereof, and this agreement was made in the state of Alabama. She did not agree that it should be negotiated in Illinois and made an Illinois contract. Her mind did not meet the intention of the payee upon that subject, and she cannot, therefore, be held to have agreed that it should become a contract of that state. She knew by the terms of the instrument that it was payable at the plaintiff's bank, but this did not advise her that it was intended to discount it there, or to constitute it a contract of that state. It appears from the evidence that the firm kept its accounts with, and made its deposits in, the plaintiff's bank, and she might well have assumed that it was made payable there for the convenience of the firm.

We have had occasion to examine many cases bearing upon the question under consideration. It may not be profitable to here indulge in an extended discussion of the authorities, for we have found none that are exactly in point. We shall therefore extract from them some general principles which appear to be settled beyond contro-of the forum, and therefore will not be enforced. If the court, upon the ground of public policy, should refuse to enforce a contract of a married woman not domiciled at the forum, there would, of course, be no chance to impute to it an intention to hold that capacity is to be determined by the lex domicilii, rather than the lex loci contractus. But when the married woman was domiciled at the forum, a decision refusing to enforce the contract is likely, unless careful discrimination is made, to be interpreted as a decision that the capacity is to be determined by the lex domicilii, even when the real ground is that it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce, against persons domiciled at the forum, contracts which, though valid where made, are condemned by the lex fori. Strictly and technically speaking, a decision which rests upon this ground does not apply the lex domicilii to the question of capacity, but, since the public policy is derived from, and evidenced by, the law of the forum, which, ex hypothesi, is also the law of the domicile, it is sufficiently accurate, for the purposes of the disposition of such a case, to say that the capacity is determined by the lex domicilii. The use of that term, however, in such a case is objectionable because it is calculated to create an impression that the court is announcing a general principle of international law which is applicable wherever the domicile may happen to be. The reality and importance of the distinction here alluded to, between the theory that the lex domicilii determines capacity, and the theory that denies enforcement of a contract against a married woman domiciled at the forum because contrary to its public policy, are shown by the fact that the first theory would operate to validate contracts valid according to the lex domicilii but invalid according to the lex loci contractus, as well as to invalidate contracts, valid according to the lex loci contractus, but invalid according to the lex domicilii; while the second theory would only operate to invalidate contracts, valid according to the lex loci, but invalid according to the lex domicilii (using the latter term as synonymous with lex fori), and never to validate contracts invalid by the lex loci contractus but valid by the lex domicilii. Again, according to the first theory, the lex domicilii would determine the question of capacity wherever that question might arise, even if in the state where the contract was made, while the second theory leaves the question to be determined by the lex loci contractus, if it arises in any state or country other than that 57 L. R. A.

of the domicile. The distinction above discussed is well brought out in Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 25 L. R. A. 188, 17 S. E. 14. In that case it was held that a contract made in Maryland by a married woman domiciled in North Carolina (the forum) was not enforceable in the latter state, by the law of which a married woman is incapable of making such a contract, notwithstanding that she would be capable according to the law of Maryland (lex loci contractus). The decision is not upon the ground that the capacity of a married woman is, in general, to be determined by the law of her domicile. Upon the other hand, the court expressly says that the weight of authority establishes that such capacity is, in general, to be tested by the law of the place where the contract is made, and that if the action at bar had been brought in the courts of Maryland, the defendant could not have availed herself of her incapacity under the law of her domicile. The decision is upon the ground that the enforcement of the contract against a married woman domiciled in North Carolina would be contrary to the public policy of the latter state, and that the case therefore falls within the qualification which attaches to all principles of private international law, to the effect that no state or nation will enforce a foreign law which is contrary to its fixed settled policy.

In Hanover Nat. Bank v. Howell, 118 N. C. 271, 23 S. E. 1005, it was held, following the decision in Armstrong v. Best, 112 N. C. 59, 25 L. R. A. 188, 17 S. E. 14, that a married woman, domiciled in North Carolina, could not be held liable on a note signed as surety for her husband in North Carolina, although it was payable in New York, according to the law of which she was capable of making such a contract. This decision was on the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of North Carolina to enforce such a contract against one of its own citizens. In this case it is true that the lex loci contractus and lex domicilii were the same; but if the domicile had not been at the forum, the court would, perhaps, have applied the law of the place of performance upon the ground that, as between the law of the place where a contract is made and that where it is to be performed, the latter should govern, if it does not violate the public policy of the forum.

In Spearman v. Ward, 114 Pa. 634, 8 Atl. 430, the court said: "It is true that the lex loci contractus governs as to the legality and construction of a contract. But the lex fori will not always enforce a contract because it versy and apply them to the question under consideration: (1) All matters bearing upon the execution, the interpretation, and the validity of contracts, including the capacity of the parties to contract, are determined by the law of the place where the contract is made; (2) all matters connected with its performance, including presentation, notice, demand, etc., are regulated by the law of the place where the contract, by its terms, is to be performed; (3) all matters respecting the remedy to be pursued, including the bringing of suits and the service of process, depend upon the law of the place where the action is brought. In the case of Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245, a bill of exchange was drawn by a party in Chicago upon a firm in St. Louis, and verbally accepted by a member of the St. Louis firm, then present in Chicago. Under the law of Missouri, acceptances were required to be in writing, but under the law of Illinois a parol acceptance was valid. The bill of exchange, as we have seen, was drawn in Chicago, Illinois, and therefore all matters pertaining to its execution, interpretation, and validity had to be determined by the laws of that state. It was made payable in St. Louis, Missouri, and ordinarily the laws of that state would control with reference to acceptance and performance; but a member of the firm in that state was present in Chicago, and he there accepted the bill of exchange, without waiting for it to be sent on to St. Louis, to his firm in that city. It was therefore held to be an Illinois acceptance. In the case of Voight v. Brown, 42 Hun, 394, the husband and wife resided in the state of New York. The wife here was lawful where made. It will not be enforced by the courts of other states where the contract is against public morals, or the public interests. The lex loci always governs as to the disability of minors, married women, etc., to contract; and sometimes it governs as to their ability to contract. But I do not think it should always govern." The court then intimates that it might be a question whether the public policy of Pennsylvania would not forbid the enforcement in that state of a contract made in another state, where it would be valid, notwithstanding that in this case the married woman was not domiciled in Pennsylvania. The decision against the enforcement of her liability, however, was not put upon that ground.

So, in Hayden v. Stone, 13 R. I. 106, the court said: "And a contract valid by the laws of one state cannot be enforced in another, unless such a contract made between its own citizens could be enforced there, or, in other words, it depends on the lex fori." It was said in the subsequent case of Brown v. Browning, 15 R. I. 422, 7 Atl. 403, however, that the court did not, in the former case, mean to make a rule as broad as the language above quoted might imply, and that the reasoning of the court in the former case did not go to the validity of the contract, but to the remedy sought, which is always subject to the lex fori. In Brown v. Browning a contract made in Connecticut after sunset on Sunday, being valid according to the law of that state, was held to be enforceable in Rhode Island, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if made in the latter state. The case is distinguished from Hayden v. Stone on the ground that the enforcement of the contract violated no law of remedy in force in Rhode Island.

It is a prerogative of the sovereignty of every country to define the conditions of its members, not merely its resident inhabitants, but others temporarily there, as to capacity and incapacity. But capacity and incapacity as to acts done in a foreign country, where the person may be temporarily, will be recognized as valid, or not, in the forum of his domicile, as they may infringe, or not, its interests, laws, and policies. Bank of Louisiana v. Williams, 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319.

In Thompson v. Taylor (N. J. L.) 46 Atl. 567, the court held that a contract of suretyship by a married woman domiciled in New Jersey could not be enforced in that state, although valid according to the law of the place where it was made. This decision is not upon the ground that the lex domicilii determines the capacity of a married woman, but upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of New Jersey to enforce such a contract against one of its own citizens.

In Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L. R. A. 214, 11 S. W. 38, supra, the court said that if the suit were against a married woman, a citizen of Tennessee, on a contract made out of the state, there would be much force in the insistence of counsel that, inasmuch as it was the fixed policy of Tennessee to throw around married women the shield of disability, a court of that state should not, under any supposed obligation of comity, entertain a suit based upon such a contract.

It will be observed that in one group of cases cited in division I. a, supra, to sustain the general principle that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, determines the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract, the domicile was at the forum. Some of these cases do not recognize, or at least do not advert to, any distinction arising from the fact that the domicile of the married woman was, or was not, at the forum. In Bowles v. Field, 83 Fed. 886, however, the court said that, upon the assumption that the consideration for the note and mortgage in suit rested upon notes executed and made payable in Ohio, by a married woman domiciled in Indiana, as surety for her husband, their enforcement by a Federal court sitting in Indiana would not be precluded by the public policy of the latter state. The court further said that if there were an irreconcilable conflict in the public policy of the two states on the subject, the Federal court ought to be governed by the more liberal policy indicated by the act of Congress touching the rights of married women in the District of Columbia, rather than by the public policy indicated by the statutes of Indiana. In Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, the court conceded that, under some circumstances, the fact that the married woman was domiciled at the forum at the time the contract was made might bring the case within the exception with reference to contracts contrary to the public policy of the forum, to the rule that the lex loci contractus, rather than the lex domicilii, furnishes the test of capacity. The court said in this connection: "It is possible also that in a state where the common law prevails in full force, by which a married woman was deemed incapable of binding herself by any contract whatever, it might be inferred that such an ut-authorized her husband to sign her name to an accommodation note. He then went into Connecticut, and there executed a note payable to the order of the firm of which he was a partner, and signed her name thereto. He then took the note to New York, and had it discounted by the plaintiffs, and received the money. Under the laws of Connecticut a married woman could not contract, except for the benefit of herself, her family, or her separate or joint estate. Under the laws of New York, her contract was valid. It was held to be a New York contract. The learned appellate division cite this case as supporting their contention, but to our minds it widely differs from that which we have under consideration. In that case the wife, as we have seen, resided in this state, and remained in this state. The authority of her husband to sign her name to the note was given here. When he, therefore, as her agent, drew the note and signed her name thereto, he acted upon authority derived in this state, and the paper became of the same force and effect as if the wife had actually signed it here. It was taken to the city of New York, and there negotiated. We thus have it drawn as a New York contract, and negotiated as a New York contract, and, it evidently was so understood by the parties. In the case of Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, 28 Am. Rep. 241, a wife guaranteed the payment by her husband of $500 to one Pratt of Portland, Maine. The guaranty was in writing, and was dated at Portland, January 29, 1870. She, however, actually signed the paper in Massachusetts, but she sent it to Pratt at Portland, and caused it to be delivered to him there. Acting upon it he delivered goods to her husband which ter incapacity, lasting throughout the joint lives of husband and wife, must be considered as so fixed by the settled policy of the state for the protection of its own citizens that it could not be held by the courts of that state to yield to the law of another state in which she might undertake to contract." The court held, however, under the circumstances, that there was no reason of public policy which should prevent the maintenance of the action, because, although at the time the guaranty was made the law of Massachusetts did not authorize a married woman to make contracts of that kind, yet even then she had a very extensive power to bind herself by contract, and that power had been extended at the time of the commencement of the action so as to cover guaranty contracts.

So, in Holmes v. Reynolds, 55 Vt. 39, while it was held that the validity of a contract of a married woman was to be determined by the law of Massachusetts, where it was made, though apparently she was domiciled in Vermont, the court said that contracts are not proprio vigore of any efficiency beyond the territory of the state where made; the effect given them elsewhere is from comity, and not of strict right; and that how far comity ought to extend is left to the courts in the jurisdiction where the remedies are sought. It does not prevail where the contract is in violation of the laws of that jurisdiction, of God, or nature, against good morals, religion, public rights, or public policy. The case, however, was held not to fall within any of the foregoing exceptions. It appeared that after the contract in question the legislature of Vermont passed a statute authorizing such contracts.

In Case v. Dodge, 18 R. I. 661, 29 Atl. 785, it was held that a purchase of goods by a married woman in Massachusetts, being valid according to the law of that state, was enforceable in Rhode Island, although, at the time it was made, it would not be valid according to the law of the latter state. It does not appear in this case whether the married woman was domiciled in Rhode Island or Massachusetts. At the time the action was brought such a contract would have been valid even according to the law of Rhode Island. The court takes the general position that if a contract is valid by the law of the place where it was made an action upon it in another forum will be sustained, unless the contract contravenes the law or policy of that forum. It is obvious that the court here distinguishes between a contract which is contrary to the statute of the forum and one which is contrary to its public policy, for in this case the contract, when made, was contrary to the law of Rhode Island, but it was enforced notwithstanding.

In Brigham v. Gilmartin, 58 N. H. 346, where a contract, made in Massachusetts, was held to be enforceable in New Hampshire, the domicile of the married woman, the court said that the Massachusetts liability of the defendant to pay for the property she brought there is not in conflict with the New Hampshire law of married women, nor hostile to New Hampshire interests, nor contrary to good morals.

II. As between lex loci contractus and lex fori; remedy.

Even when it is admitted, or conceded, that the capacity of a married woman is to be tested by the law of some place other than that of the forum, and that by the law of that place she had the requisite capacity to make the contract in question, there may still be a difficulty in the way of enforcing the contract at the forum, with the same effect as if the action had been brought at the place whose law determines the married woman's capacity, either because the lex fori, which necessarily determines the remedy, furnishes no remedy at all, or a remedy which is too broad or too restricted to protect the rights of the parties as fixed by the law of the place which determines the existence and extent of the capacity of the married woman, it being impossible to borrow the remedy from the latter place.

Thus, in Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L. R. A. 178, 27 S. W. 412, it was held that, notwithstanding that a married woman by the law of Dakota, where the matrimonial domicile was established and the contract was made, might bind herself by contract, yet her personal property in Missouri was not subject to attachment for the debt created by such contract. The decision is not upon the ground that the validity of the contract was to be determined by the law of Missouri, but upon the ground that the creditor was only entitled to the remedies allowed by the law of Missouri, and that at the time the suit was commenced the property of a married woman could not be attached in that state. There was an able dissenting opinion in this case in which the position was taken that while the lex fori governs as to the remedy, yet the status of the party with reference to the contract was established by the lex loci, and that, relatively to such contract, she had the status of a feme sola.

he then purchased. The guaranty was valid under the laws of Maine, but void under the laws of Massachusetts. It was held that the contract was governed by the laws of Maine. In this case it will be observed that the guaranty not only purports to have been executed in Maine, but that the wife caused the instrument to be sent to Maine, and there delivered to the plaintiff. She therefore knew and understood that the contract was to have its inception there, and consequently must have intended it to be controlled by the laws of that state. In line with this is the recent case of Grand v. Livingston, 4 App. Div. 589, 38 N. Y. Supp. 490, Affirmed in this court (158 N. Y. 688, 53 N. E. 1125), in which it was expressly held that the contract must be construed and determined under the law of the state where it was executed, unless it could fairly be said that the parties at the time of its execution clearly manifested an intention that it should be governed by the laws of another state. Applying these principles to the question under consideration, it seems clear that the capacity of Mrs. Chapman to contract must be determined by the law of the state where the contract was executed, unless it can fairly be said that she, at the time of the execution of the instrument, clearly understood and intended that it should be governed by the laws of another state. Such an intention or understanding is not manifest in this case. Instead thereof, it is found that she did not know where the paper was to be discounted.

The judgment should be reversed, and a

The decision in Hayden v. Stone, 13 R. I. 106,—where it was held that neither real nor personal property in Rhode Island belonging to a married woman domiciled in Massachusetts could be attached in an action upon a promissory note made by her in Massachusetts and valid in that state but invalid according to the law of Rhode Island,—as explained in the subsequent case of Brown v. Browning, 15 R. I. 422, 7 Atl. 403,—seems to rest on substantially the same ground as the decision in the preceding case.

The court in Gibson v. Sublett, 82 Ky. 596, seems to take the same position that was taken in the dissenting opinion in Ruhe v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L. R. A. 178, 27 S. W. 412, supra. In that case it was held that a contract made in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in that state, and which was valid by the law of that state and enforceable against her separate property there, could be enforced against her real property in Kentucky, notwithstanding that the obligation was not one which, by virtue of the Kentucky statute, could be enforced against such property. The decision is upon the ground that when it is ascertained that a contract made by a married woman in another state is valid and binding, the remedy provided for the satisfaction of judgments should be applied as though the judgment were against a feme sole, or a married woman invested with the rights, and subject to the responsibilities, of a feme sole. The same position was taken in Young v. Bullen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687.

In Hinkson v. Williams, 41 N. J. L. 35, it was held that an action could not be maintained in New Jersey against a husband and wife for goods sold to the wife in Pennsylvania upon her credit, by virtue of a statute of Pennsylvania which provides, in effect, that suit may be brought and judgment recovered against both husband and wife upon such liability, but that after judgment execution must first issue against the husband alone, and shall issue against the wife only in case no property of his is found. The decision is upon the ground that there was no mode of procedure by which the wife's right, under the Pennsylvania statute, to have the judgment satisfied out of the husband's property before resorting to hers could be preserved, since, under the law of New Jersey, the effect of a judgment in the action would be merely that of a common-law judgment against two defendants, to be carried into effect by execution against both, and the wife's separate property might thus be made primary.

ly liable for the entire debt,—a result manifestly repugnant to the policy of the Pennsylvania act.

In Spearman v. Ward, 114 Pa. 634, 8 Atl. 430, it was held that a note given in Ohio by a married woman domiciled in that state could not be enforced against her personally, or even against her separate property in Pennsylvania, notwithstanding that it would be enforceable against her separate estate in Ohio. The decision is upon the ground that the proceeding on a married woman's contract in Ohio is practically a proceeding in rem, not against the feme covert personally, but against her property; and that the law which authorized it has no extraterritorial effect. Whitehurst's Estate, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 12, is to the same effect.

In Dulin v. McCaw, 39 W. Va. 721, 20 S. E. 681, it was held that while the capacity of a woman to bind herself and her property was to be determined by the law of Pennsylvania, where the contract was made, the form of the judgment, whether against her generally or against her separate property in that state, was to be determined by the law of West Virginia (lex fori); and in this case it was held that the judgment ought to be limited to her separate property, according to the law of West Virginia at the time the suit was commenced, although according to the law of Pennsylvania a personal judgment could have been entered against her.

So, in Bank of Louisiana v. Williams, 46 Miss. 618, 12 Am. Rep. 319, the court, while conceding the general principle that the validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place where it is made, or by the law of the place of performance, held that notwithstanding that a note made by a married woman would be a personal charge against her by the law of the place where it was made and was payable, it would not support an action in Mississippi, her domicile, for a personal judgment, but that the remedy would be limited, as in case of a contract made in that state, to her personal property.

While it is probably true, as held in the two cases last cited, that if the lex fori limits the remedy to the separate property of the wife, a personal judgment cannot be recovered although allowed by the law of the place which determines the validity of the contract, the converse of that proposition, namely, that if the lex fori permits a personal judgment, such a judgment may be recovered although not allowable by the law of the other place, does not seem to be true.

new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, O'Brien, and Martin, JJ., concur.

Vann, J., dissenting:

While Mrs. Chapman signed her name in Alabama, she promised to pay in Illinois. If there is doubt as to the state where the contract was made, there is none as to the state where it was to be performed. Although in fact a surety for her husband's firm, there is nothing on the face of the note to show it; for she contracted as a maker, and her promise is absolute in form. Uniting with that firm and others as joint makers, she promised to pay the sum in question to the order of E. P. Reynolds, Jr., at the "Union National Bank, Chicago, Ill." The payee was a member of her husband's firm, and she knew it when she signed the note. She also knew that it was an accommodation note, made to raise money for the use of the firm, and that until negotiated it was without binding force upon anyone. After signing it she entrusted it to the payee, knowing that, in behalf of the firm, he intended to negotiate it somewhere, and that he was at liberty to negotiate it anywhere. When the payee thus received the note signed by her, she had made no contract, for the paper had no inception as yet. The contract of a surety rests upon the contract of the principal, and until the latter becomes operative the former is not binding. The promise of the surety has nothing to act upon until the promise of the principal is in force as an effective contract. When the firm negotiated the paper in Illinois, as they had a right to do, by selling it to a bona fide purchaser for value, that which theretofore had been merely a note in form first became a note in fact. It then became a contract, and for the first time acquired the quality of commercial paper. Until then the law did not recognize Mrs. Chapman as a surety. She had made no enforceable contract, but merely an inchoate promise, which was Thus, in Bradley v. Johnson, 46 N. J. L. 271, it was held that an action would not lie in that state to recover a personal judgment against a married woman upon a contract made in New York, notwithstanding that such an action would lie if the contract had been made in New Jersey. The decision is upon the ground that, as no statute of New York on the subject was proved, it must be presumed that the equity rule is in force in New York, by which a liability assumed by a married woman will be enforced against her separate estate, but will not render her personally liable.

So, an action cannot be maintained in Colorado to obtain a personal judgment against a married woman domiciled in Missouri upon a contract made by her in that state, where, by the law of Missouri, the contract would only constitute a charge against her separate property. Hochsradter v. Hays, 11 Colo. 118, 17 Pac. 289. The decision is upon the ground that by the law of Missouri, which governs the effect of the contract, there was no personal obligation.

But a charge by a married woman in Tennessee, of her separate estate at the place of contract or elsewhere, for the payment of notes given for her own debt, may be enforced in Mississippi, although the contract might not uphold a personal judgment in Tennessee against her. Read v. Brewer (Miss.) 16 So. 350.

In Halley v. Ball, 66 Ill. 250, it was held that the question whether an action against a married woman should be at law or in equity must be determined by the law of the forum, rather than by the law of the place where the contract was made. In this case, however, the contract was enforceable at law in both states. The court said that a party seeking to enforce a contract valid by the laws of another state must avail himself of the remedy provided by the laws of the forum.

The law of the state in which a contract is executed by a married woman must be resorted to, to determine the nature of the obligation it imposes. But if it only constitutes a charge against her separate property, and does not bind her personally, the question whether it is enforceable in an action at law, or only by suit in equity, is governed by the lex fori. Burchar v. Dunbar, 82 Ill. 450, 25 Am. Rep. 334. 57 L. R. A.

In this case the contract was made in New York, and, by the law of New York, did not bind her personally, but was a charge upon her separate property. It was held that an action at law would not lie on the contract in Illinois, since by the law of that state the remedy would be exclusively in equity, notwithstanding that by the law of New York an action at law might be brought. It does not appear where the married woman was domiciled.

In Robinson v. Queen, 87 Tenn. 445, 3 L. R. A. 214, 11 S. W. 38, it was said that the court of Tennessee would recognize and enforce so much of the law of Kentucky as determined and fixed the liability of a married woman domiciled in that state upon a contract made and payable in that state; yet, with respect to the necessity of joining her husband as a defendant, the law of Tennessee, rather than that of Kentucky, governed.

The result of the foregoing cases on the question of remedy seems to be that whatever law determines the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract, the lex fori must be looked to for the remedy to enforce the contract. If the lex fori furnishes no remedy at all, it is obviously impossible to enforce the contract at the forum, even conceding it to be perfectly valid. But the question whether the particular contract in suit, if made at the forum, would have been enforceable, does not furnish the proper criterion of the existence, or nonexistence, of a remedy at the forum. Often, the very necessity of holding that the law of some place other than the forum determines the capacity of a married woman arises from the fact that if it were governed by the law of the forum it would be unenforceable, not because there would be no remedy, but because there would be no right upon which the remedy could act. It follows, therefore, that there may be a remedy at the forum for the enforcement of contracts of married women, which will attach to contracts, made outside of the forum, of a kind that are prohibited by the lex fori, if made at the forum.

Thus, it was held in Wood v. Wheeler, 111 N. C. 231, 16 S. E. 418, that a personal judgment may be rendered in North Carolina against a married woman upon a note signed by her in South Carolina, where she was domiciled at the time, it being valid according to the law of without legal life until what was done in Alabama with implied authority to complete it elsewhere ripened into a lawful obligation by what was done in Illinois. All that was done in Alabama did not make a contract, and therefore the contract was not made in that state. It was made in Illinois, because there was no contract, either of principal or surety, until the paper was used in that state. That use of the note was necessarily within the contemplation of Mrs. Chapman when she signed it and gave it to Mr. Reynolds, the payee, with her implied consent that he or his firm might negotiate it anywhere, and hence within a state where the law permits a wife to become surety for her husband. As the law presumes a lawful, and not an unlawful, intent, when possible, the presumption arises, in the absence of evidence upon the subject, that she intended the note should be used in a state where she could become such a surety. Hence she is presumed to have contracted, not with reference to the laws of Alabama, where her action would not be binding, but with reference to the laws of any jurisdiction where her promise would be lawful, provided the paper should subsequently be used within such a jurisdiction. Otherwise she must have intended to aid in imposing upon someone, which will not be presumed, but must be proved. As the note was made payable in Illinois, was delivered by Mrs. Chapman with leave to negotiate it anywhere, and it was actually negotiated and had its first inception in that state, the mere fact that it was written in another state, where she had a temporary residence only, and where she knew it could not be enforced, and hence could not be honestly used, did not make it a contract of that state, nor prevent it from becoming a contract of the state within which she promised to pay it. I think it was an Illinois contract, and should be governed by the laws of that state.

For these reasons, I dissent from the conclusion reached by the majority of the court, and record my vote in favor of affirming the judgment appealed from.

Bartlett, J., concurs with Vann, J.

that state, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if executed in North Carolina because her husband did not assent thereto, and notwithstanding that it was secured by a mortgage upon land in North Carolina which is void because not executed in the manner required by the law of North Carolina.

And in Benton v. German-American Nat. Bank, 45 Neb. 850, 64 N. W. 227, it was held that an action would lie in Nebraska to recover a personal judgment against a married woman domiciled in Missouri, upon an indorsement. In the latter state, of a note executed and delivered and payable in such state, notwithstanding that it would have been invalid if governed by the law of Nebraska, because it was not made with reference to, or upon the faith and credit of, her separate estate or business, as required by the Nebraska statute. In this case it will be observed that the place where the contract was made, where it was payable, and where the indorser was domiciled, was the same, and the conflict was merely between the law of that state and the law of the forum.

There must, however, be, not only a remedy at the forum, but it must be such that it will protect the rights of the married woman, and not extend her liability beyond that fixed by the law which governs the contract. Thus, as already shown (Hinkson v. Williams, 41 N. J. L. 35, supra), the action at the forum may fail because the remedy at the forum is too broad, and extends the liability beyond that fixed by the law which governs the contract. Sometimes, however, when the remedy at the forum is broader than that at the other place, the difficulty may be avoided by foregoing a part of the remedy at the forum and taking advantage only of that part which is coextensive with the remedy at the other place (Bradley v. Johnson, 46 N. J. L. 271; Hochstadter v. Hays, 11 Colo. 118, 17 Pac. 289, supra). Again, when the remedy at the forum is too narrow and restricted to reach the full liability of the married woman under the law of the place governing the contract, the other party can avail himself of it, such as it is; but he must be content with it, and cannot supplement it by borrowing the remedy from the other place.

57 L. R. A.

III. As between lex loci contractus, or lex domicilii, and lex rei sita.

a. Personal property.

As a general rule, the general rights, capacities, and disabilities of a married woman, in regard to her personal property, are governed by the law of her domicile, rather than the law of the place where the property is situated. Lofthus v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 133 Pa. 97, 7 L. R. A. 313, 19 Atl. 847. The point involved was as to the validity of a transfer, by a married woman domiciled in Great Britain, of certificates of loan issued by the city of Philadelphia. The court said that the question how far the lex loci contractus might affect the rights of property arising therefrom was not necessary to consider, evidently because the transfer was executed in Great Britain. In this case, however, it was held, by way of exception to the general rule, that the mode of transfer was to be governed by the law of Pennsylvania, it being held that the act regulating the mode of transfer applied to foreign, or nonresident, married women owning such securities.

In Union Nat. Bank v. Hartwell, 84 Ala. 379, 4 So. 156, the court said that the general rule is that the capacity of a married woman to make contracts in respect to her separate personal property, when it is situated in a country other than that of the domicile of her husband, is that the law of the domicile of the husband governs unless the property, from its peculiar nature, necessarily has an implied locality, or unless the contract is made in the country where the property was situated. In this case it was held that the capacity of a woman to give her husband a power of attorney to pledge stock in an Alabama corporation was to be governed by the law of Louisiana, where the woman was domiciled and the transaction took place, rather than by the law of Alabama, where the stock had its situs, there being no rights of creditors involved.

The court, in Kerr v. Urie, 86 Md. 72, 38 L. R. A. 119, 37 Atl. 789, while conceding, for the purposes of the argument, that a subscription made in one state to capital stock of a corporation which exists in and carries on its business in another is a contract to be performed in the latter state, and is governed by the laws of that state, nevertheless held that a transfer of stock in a national bank in another state made in Maryland to a married woman, who was competent by the law of that state to be a stockholder, is valid, irrespective of the law of the state in which the bank is situated.

The liability of a married woman under an agreement executed in New Jersey, where the parties resided, to repay to her husband for advances made by him in New Jersey for the support of the family, out of her interest in an estate which was being administered in New York, is determined by the law of New Jersey, rather than by the law of New York. Hendricks v. Isaacs, 46 Hun, 239. In this case it was held that, as no statute of New Jersey had been proved, the right of the husband to maintain an action on the agreement must depend upon the general principles of equity which have been applied to the solution of controversies arising between husband and wife.

With reference to the right to subject personal property in one state to the discharge of a debt contracted in, and governed by, the laws of another, see supra, II.

As between the lex loci contractus and lex domicilii, the capacity of a married woman to contract with reference to her personal property would seem, upon principles applicable to contracts generally (see I. a, b, supra), to be governed by the former,—at least when the domicile is not at the forum. It is to be remembered, however, in this connection, that the lex domicilii determines, as between the husband and wife, the existence and extent of her title to personal property, so that, conceding her capacity to contract with reference to personal property owned by her is to be determined by the lex loci contractus rather than the lex domicilii, we must nevertheless look to the latter to ascertain what personal property is owned by her. Obviously, if the common-law rule, by which the personal property of the wife vests in the husband, prevails at the domicile, a contract by the wife with reference to such property is ineffectual, even if by the law which governs the contract she has as full capacity to contract as a feme sola.

b. Real property.

The capacity of a married woman to contract with reference to real property is determined by the law of the place where the property is situated, at least so far as her capacity depends upon a law which operates directly on such property, as distinguished from one which operates on the person.

Thus, it has been held that the capacity of a married woman, with or without the assent of her husband, to convey or mortgage real property, is determined by the law of the place where the property is situated (lex rei sitæ). Irrespective of the place where the deed or mortgage was executed, or the married woman was domiciled. McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 463; Thomson v. Kyle, 39 Fla. 582, 23 So. 12; Walling v. Christian & C. Grocery Co. 41 Fla. 479, 47 L. R. A. 608, 27 So. 46; Sell v. Miller, 11 Ohio St. 331; Otis v. Gregory, 111 Ind. 504, 13 N. E. 39; Swank v. Hufnagle, 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303; Cochran v. Benton, 126 Ind. 58, 25 N. E. 870; Doyle v. McGuire, 38 Iowa, 410.

And, not only the form of execution of a power of attorney executed by a married woman domiciled in Louisiana authorizing her husband to convey real property in Arkansas, but her capacity to give such a power of attorney at all, is to be determined by the law of Arkansas (lex loci sitæ), and not by the law of Louisiana, where she was domiciled and where the power of attorney was executed. McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 463.

So, the capacity of a married woman to convey land directly to her husband (Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 284, 73 N. W. 363); or to receive a conveyance directly from him (Rush v. Landers, 107 La. 549, 32 So. 95. Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 36 L. R. A. 771, 43 N. E. 737).—is to be determined by reference to the law of the place where the land is situated, irrespective of the domicile or the place where the deed was executed.

Sometimes, however, while a contract of a married woman with reference to real property would be invalid if executed in the state where the property is situated, it would be so, not because of a law which operates directly on the property, but because of one which operates on the person, or, to use the language of the civil jurists which has been adopted in Louisiana, it would be because of a personal statute, and not because of a real statute. When that is so, if the contract would be valid by the law of the place where it was made and where the married woman was domiciled, it is at least a serious question whether it should not be upheld, even as affecting real property, at another place. Such a case was presented in Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. v. Morton, 3 La. Ann. 417. In that case a mortgage executed in Maryland, by a married woman domiciled there, upon immovables in Louisiana, to secure a debt of her husband, was upheld in the latter state, notwithstanding an article of the Louisiana Code which provided that a wife could not bind herself for the debts of her husband. The decision is upon the ground that by the law of Maryland a married woman could bind her separate property to secure a debt of her husband, and that article of the Code above referred to was a personal, and not a real, statute, i. e., that it operated on persons rather than on property, and that her personal capacity was governed by the law of Maryland. In Swank v. Hufnagle, 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303, a contrary result was reached. It was there held that a mortgage on land in Indiana to secure a debt of the husband was invalid, although executed in Ohio, because by the statute of Indiana a married woman was prohibited from mortgaging her land as surety for her husband. This case, however, is distinguishable from the preceding case because the Indiana statute expressly related to property, and was therefore real, and not personal. It was held in Thomson v. Kyle, 39 Fla. 582, 23 So. 12, however, that a mortgage executed by a married woman on her separate real estate in Florida, as security for a debt of her husband, was valid and enforceable, notwithstanding that by the law of Alabama, where the mortgagor was domiciled, the mortgage executed, and the debt payable, a wife could not bind herself, or her property, for a debt of the husband. As the statute of Alabama was evidently a personal statute, it would seem that the principle of the decision in the Louisiana case would have made the law of Alabama govern. In Evans v. Beaver, 50 Ohio St. 190, 33 N. E. 643, it was held that a mortgage upon land in Ohio, executed by a married woman domiciled in Indiana, to secure notes given by her husband in Indiana and payable in that state, was invalid because by the law of Indiana she was not capable of becoming surety for her husband, although she was by the law of Ohio. The decision, however, does not rest upon the theory adopted in the Louisiana case, but upon the ground that a mortgage was only security for the performance of the personal obligation, and, that obligation being invalid by the law of Indiana, which governed it, there was nothing to support the mortgage. This result was avoided in Thomson v. Kyle, 39 Fla. 582, 23 So. 12, supra, by holding that the personal obligation of the husband, which was valid by the lex loci contractus, was sufficient to support the wife's mortgage, notwithstanding that she was not personally bound because of her incapacity by the lex loci contractus.

Apparently upon the same principle that controlled the decision in Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. v. Morton, 3 La. Ann. 417, it was held in Kelly v. Davis, 28 La. Ann. 773, that the capacity of a married woman to take a deed of real property situated in Louisiana from her husband was to be determined by the law of Mississippi, where the parties resided, though its effect on real property in Louisiana would be determined by the law and policy of Louisiana. In this case the deed, which was executed in Mississippi, was held invalid in accordance with a law of Mississippi, making such a deed void as to existing creditors. The court said that, even if tested by the law of Louisiana, the deed would be invalid; but the decision is clearly on the ground that the law of Mississippi governed apparently because it was personal.

The weight of authority seems to establish that a contract made in one state by a married woman there domiciled, with reference to, or upon the credit of, real property situated in another, may be enforced against such real property in accordance with the lex rei sitæ, notwithstanding that it was invalid by the law of the place where it was made.

Thus, a promissory note given in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in that state, as surety for her husband, although void according to the law of Louisiana, will nevertheless be enforced in Mississippi against her separate real property in that state, where she contracted with reference to such estate and intended to charge it by the note. The decision is upon the ground that, while the capacity of a married woman to make a personal contract will be determined by the law of her domicile, yet her capacity to contract with reference to her real property is determined by the lex rei sitæ, and that the note in question was a contract with reference to her real property. It was conceded in this case that the note, as a personal obligation of the wife, would have been adjudged void out of comity to Louisiana, even if it were not so by the law of Mississippi. Frieron v. Williams, 57 Miss. 451.

And in Shacklett v. Polk, 51 Miss. 378, it was held that a note given in Tennessee by a married woman domiciled in that state, in consideration of services rendered in respect of a plantation owned by her in Mississippi, would be enforced against her property in Mississippi, although by the law of Tennessee (lex loci and lex domicilii), she was incompetent to contract.

Whenever a married woman, having a separate estate in lands in Missouri, makes a contract which, if made in Missouri, would be enforced in equity against her separate estate there, her capacity to make it, and its validity, when the attempt is made in Missouri to enforce it against her separate estate there, are governed by the laws of Missouri. Johnston v. Gawtry, 11 Mo. App. 322, Affirmed in 83 Mo. 339.

In Griswold v. Golding, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 777, 8 S. W. 535, however, it was held that a note executed and payable in Missouri, by a woman domiciled there, and which, by the law of Missouri, was not chargeable against her personally, or against her general estate, was not chargeable against real property in Kentucky belonging to her general estate, although the note, if made and payable in Kentucky, would have been chargeable against such property. In this case, however, it is stated in the opinion that it did not appear that the married woman promised the creditor that the note should be a charge upon, or that it should be paid out of, her Kentucky estate, or, indeed, that she made any representation whatever as to the debt or her estate. The implication would seem to be that if the contract had been made with reference to, or upon the credit of, the Kentucky estate, it would have been held enforceable against such estate.

The converse of the foregoing proposition, however,—namely, that real property will not be liable unless so by the lex rei sitæ,—does not seem to follow.

Thus, it was held in Gibson v. Sublett, 82 Ky. 596, supra, II., that a contract made in Louisiana by a married woman domiciled in that state, which was valid by the law of that state and enforceable against her separate property there, could be enforced against her real property in Kentucky, notwithstanding that the obligation was not one which, by virtue of the Kentucky statute, could be enforced against such property.

So, in Young v. Bullen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687, supra, II., it was held that a contract executed by a married woman, in a state where it is legal and binding, may be enforced against her real and personal property in Kentucky, notwithstanding that it would not be so enforceable if executed in Kentucky.

So, the laws of Iowa providing that a married woman may create a liability against her separate real estate are properly applied in an action in Texas to attach the separate property of a married woman residing in Iowa, upon a promissory note executed by her in the latter state. Merrillees v. State Bank, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 24 S. W. 564.

The Kentucky decisions, as already shown (supra, II.), are upon the ground that, relatively to such a contract, the married woman has acquired the status of a feme sole which will be recognized even by a court of the state or country where the land is situated. The question is discussed as though the only obstacle in the way of enforcing the contract against the real property in Kentucky was the general principle that the lex fori governs as to the remedy. There is no allusion to the general principle that the lex rei sitæ governs with respect to contracts relating to real property. It is true that in neither of these cases did the contract relate to real property; but, if the position of the court is sound, and the general principle referred to is conceded, the rather singular result follows, that while a mortgage upon the Kentucky land, though executed elsewhere as collateral security for the personal obligation, would not have been valid, yet that land may be subjected to the payment of that personal obligation by means of an execution or other process.

The position taken in the majority opinion in Rube v. Buck, 124 Mo. 178, 25 L. R. A. 178, 27 S. W. 412, supra, II., though that case did not involve real property, is, as already shown, contrary to the theory upon which Gibson v. Sublett, 82 Ky. 596, and Young v. Bullen, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1561, 43 S. W. 687, rest; but that theory is consistent with the position taken in the dissenting opinion in Ruhe v. Buck.

The law of Illinois, where the deed was delivered, governs with respect to the interpretation and validity of a married woman's covenant, in a deed of her husband's land in that state, to pay and discharge a certain trust deed or mortgage on the property, notwithstanding that the deed was acknowledged by her in Kentucky. Western Springs v. Collins, 40 C. C. A. 33, 98 Fed. 933. It did not appear in this case where the woman was domiciled.

In Brown v. Dalton, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1484, 49 S. W. 443, it was held that an action would not lie in Kentucky against a married woman, domiciled in that state, upon her covenant in a deed to land in Virginia, executed by her husband to herself in Kentucky, whereby she assumed the payment of a note executed and payable in Virginia which had been given by the husband in part payment of the land. The decision is not upon the ground that the deed was made in Kentucky, but apparently upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of Kentucky to enforce such a covenant against a married woman domiciled in that state. The court said: "The wife was entitled, not only to the protection of the husband, but to his counsel and guidance in the management of her affairs, and she had learned that it was her duty to submit to him. If, when the law had imposed this duty upon her, it shall allow him to make contracts with her to pay his debts and enforce these contracts against her because the debt is payable in another state, it will defeat the purposes of the statute framed to protect married women and prevent their property being wasted."

A rather curious result was reached by the Massachusetts supreme court in Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 36 L. R. A. 771, 45 N. E. 737. The court there held that a covenant executed by a husband in North Carolina, where the parties were domiciled, to "surrender, convey, and transfer" certain property to the wife and her heirs could be specifically enforced in Massachusetts with reference to real property in Massachusetts. Holmes, J., who wrote the prevailing opinion, admitted that a deed directly from the husband to the wife would have been invalid, although it had been executed, and the parties had been domiciled, in North Carolina, according to the law of which the wife would have been capable of receiving such a deed. He also apparently conceded what is expressly stated in the dissenting opinion of Field, Ch. J., that the covenant would have been invalid and unenforceable if the parties had been domiciled in Massachusetts and the contract had been made there, for he said that the competency of the wife to receive the covenant is established by the law of her domicile and of the place of the contract. Then, starting with the competency of the parties to make the covenant, he holds that it can be specifically enforced in Massachusetts because everything essential to its performance can be done consistently with the law of Massachusetts. Proceeding evidently on the theory that the parties must be regarded as having contemplated the enforcement of the covenant in a manner which would be consistent with the law of Massachusetts (which, as already shown, forbade a conveyance directly from the husband to the wife), he summarizes the undertakings of the husband as follows: First, not to disturb his wife's enjoyment while she kept her property; secondly, to execute whatever instrument was necessary in order to release his rights if she conveyed; and thirdly, to claim no rights on her death, but to do whatever was necessary to clear the title from such rights. He then says all these were as capable of performance in Massachusetts as they would have been in North Carolina. The suit was brought by the wife's administrator; but the opinion says that all the purposes of the covenant could have been secured at once in the lifetime of the wife by a joint conveyance of the property to a trustee upon trusts properly limited. To revert again to the distinction based on domicile and the place of the contract it would seem, from the reasoning of the opinion, that the reason the covenant could not have been enforced 'if the parties had been domiciled in Massachusetts and the covenant had been made there, would have been that the parties would have no capacity to make the covenant at all, and therefore that, though everything which was necessary to its performance might be voluntarily performed by the husband, he could not be compelled to do any of such acts because in legal effect, the covenant was as if it had never been executed. Field, Ch. J., says in his dissenting opinion: "It seems to me illogical to say that we will not permit a conveyance of Massachusetts land directly between husband and wife wherever they may have their domicile, and yet say that they may make a contract to convey such land from one to the other, which our courts will specifically enforce." If he meant a contract to convey directly from one to another, the quotation does not represent the position of the majority, for it is impliedly admitted, in the prevailing opinion, that such a contract could not have been enforced because it would call for an act which would be contrary to the law of Massachusetts. The position of the majority on this point seems practically to amount to this: That the capacity of the parties to contract to do any act with reference to real property that might be done voluntarily, consistently with the lex rei sitæ, is to be determined by the law of their domicile and of the place of the contract, and, if capable according to that law, the contract may be enforced, although they would not be capable by the lex rei sitæ of binding themselves to do such act.

In Wick v. Dawson, 42 W. Va. 43, 24 S. E. 587, which proceeded upon the assumption that the validity of a contract was to be determined by the law of Ohio, where it was made, and that by the law of such place it was valid, it was held that the law of the state where land, the separate property of a married woman, is situated, must determine the question of its liability to be subjected to the payment of claims against her, without reference to where the contract upon which the claim was based was made. This language is broad enough to make the lex rei sitæ govern, even if it operates to prevent the enforcement against real property of a contract made in a state by the law of which it would be enforceable against such property, and is thus opposed to the decisions reached in the cases last cited; but, as a matter of fact, the lex rei sitæ was applied in this case so as to hold the contract enforceable against real property in West Virginia, although it was executed and to be performed in Ohio.

In Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 24 Atl. 620, Reversing 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 222, it was held that the law of Delaware governed with respect to the capacity of a married woman domiciled in Pennsylvania to execute a bond for the purchase price of land in Delaware. There were three alternative grounds of decision. The first was that, the bond being payable by its own terms in Delaware, the law of that state governed without reference to where the contract was made; but it was further held that the contract was really made in Delaware, although signed in Pennsylvania, since it was delivered to the obligee in Delaware. The third ground was that, as it was a contract relating to real property, it was governed by the lex rei sitæ. G. H. P.

Abraham S. ROSENTHAL et al., Respts.,
v.

Levi C. WEIR, President of Adams Express Company, Appt.

(170 N. Y. 148.)

A carrier's contract limiting liability for loss to a specified amount has no application to the damages to be recovered for its failure to comply with a notice of stoppage in transitu after it had agreed to do so.

(March 4, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for New York County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for failure to stop goods in transitu. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff and R. R. Rogers, for appellant:

The limit of responsibility undertaken by the defendant as a carrier of the goods in question is defined by the bill of lading, under which in no event could plaintiffs recover in excess of $50, the agreed value of the goods.

Belger v. Dinsmore, 51 N. Y. 166, 10 Am. Rep. 575; Kirkland v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 171, 20 Am. Rep. 475; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35, 20 Am. Rep. 442, 70 N. Y. 410, 26 Am. Rep. 608; Zimmer v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 137 N. Y. 460, 33 N. E. 642; Rathbone v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 140 N. Y. 48, 35 N. E. 418; Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151.

The acceptance of the bill of lading by the shipper or his agent makes the contract a binding one, and, in the absence of fraud, it is immaterial whether or not the contract was read.

Steers v. Liverpool, N. Y. & P. S. S. Co. 57 N. Y. 1, 15 Am. Rep. 453; Germania F.

NOTE.—As to right of common carrier to limit the amount of its liability in case of negligence, see Ballou v. Earle (R. I.) 14 L. R. A. 433, and note; Alair v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.) 19 L. R. A. 764; J. J. Douglass Co. v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 860; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Taber (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 685; Pierce v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 40 L. R. A. 350; Harman & Crockett v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.) 44 L. R. A. 289; and Ullman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 56 L. R. A. 246.

57 L. R. A.

Ins. Co. v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 72 N. Y. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 113; Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 351, 29 Am. Rep. 163.

A loss occasioned by a neglect or violation of the carrier's duty, on proper notice, to stop goods in transit, is incidental to the transportation, and covered by the shipping contract.

Rubens v. Ludgate Hill S. S. Co. 48 N. Y. S. R. 732, 20 N. Y. Supp. 481; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35, 20 Am. Rep. 442.

No presumption of negligence arises from the mere fact that the goods were not stopped in transit after notice.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 356, 357.

Mr. Julius J. Frank, for respondents: Defendant was a common carrier and as such bound to respect plaintiffs' notice to stop in transit.

Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co. 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. ed. 872; Benjamin, Sales, Corbin's ed. § 1231; 2 Kent, Com. 542; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 565.

The defendant was under the additional obligation to stop and return the merchandise, arising out of its express agreement so to do.

Bloomingdale v. Memphis & O. R. Co. 6 Lea, 618.

The transaction in question is not governed by the shipping receipt.

Compania de Navegacion v. Brauer, 103 U. S. 104, 42 L. ed. 398, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12; Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 425, 26 N. E. 626; Wheeler v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 125 N. Y. 161, 26 N. E. 248; Bermel v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 62 App. Div. 394, 70 N. Y. Supp. 804.

Assuming that the shipping receipt applies to defendant's duty to stop in transit, as an incident to the contract of carriage, its limiting clauses do not exempt the defendant from liability in this action.

Stipulations of this character will not bind the shipper unless he is shown, or under the circumstances of the case must be presumed, to have had knowledge or notice of their terms.

Springer v. Westcott, 166 N. Y. 117, 59 N. E. 693.

The presumption of knowledge or notice cannot arise in this case. The form of the instrument is such as to shut out the presumption that the shippers regarded it as a contract.

Grand v. Livingston, 4 App. Div. 589, 38 N. Y. Supp. 490.

No consideration is shown for the alleged exemption from, or limitation of, liability.

Vanderbilt v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. 392; Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75.

The defendant was guilty of gross negligence.

2 Redfield, Leading Am. Ry. Cas. 392; Wheeler v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 125 N. Y. 155, 26 N. E. 248; Canfield v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 93 N. Y. 532, 45 Am. Rep. 268; Pearce v. Lungfit, 101 Pa. 511, 47 Am. Rep. 737; Rice v. Montgomery, 4 Biss. 75, Fed. Cas. No. 11,753; Burnell v. New York C. R.

Co. 45 N. Y. 184, 6 Am. Rep. 61; Rathbone v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 140 N. Y. 48, 35 N. E. 418.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs on March 31, 1897, sold to Goldsmith & Co., in Dallas, Texas, certain silk goods, and delivered them to the Adams Express Company for carriage to the buyers. They received a bill of lading from the express company, which, among other things, provided that it should not be liable for loss or damage "from any cause whatever unless in every case the same be proved to have occurred from the fraud or gross negligence of said express company or their servants; nor, in any event, shall the holder thereof demand beyond the sum of $50, at which the above property forwarded is hereby valued, unless otherwise herein expressed, or unless specially insured by them, and so specified in this receipt." There was no insurance for special value, and upon the bill of lading were stamped the words, "Value asked and not given." The plaintiffs, learning that Goldsmith & Co. were insolvent, on April 1st sent to the office of the express company and demanded that it stop the goods in transit. The express company's agent agreed to do so, after ascertaining that it could be done, if the plaintiffs would pay for a telegram. They assented, and the telegram was at once made out by the agent and sent to the agent at Dallas, where it was received. For some reason the merchandise was nevertheless delivered to the buyers, and the goods were never returned by them to the plaintiffs, except a small part, of the value of $37.41. Thereupon the plaintiffs commenced this action to recover damages of the defendant, to the extent of the value of the goods, by reason of its failure and neglect to obey the directions of the plaintiffs and to return the goods. At the conclusion of the trial both parties moved for the direction of a verdict, whereupon the court directed a verdict for the plaintiffs, and the judgment upon that verdict has been affirmed.

As the case comes here, all the facts must be regarded as having been determined in the plaintiffs' favor, inasmuch as there was no request made for the submission of any questions of fact to the jury, and there was sufficient evidence to support the decision of the trial judge in directing the verdict. Therefore the question upon this appeal is one which relates to the measure of the liability of the defendant. On the one hand, it is claimed for the appellant that that liability is necessarily limited by the terms of the bill of lading to a recovery of $50, while, on the other hand, it is insisted for the respondents that the recovery is not so limited, as the transaction was not governed by the bill of lading. The appellate division has taken the latter view; holding, in effect, that the defendant had undertaken to perform the duty, at the request of the plaintiffs, of stopping the merchandise in transit, and, for its neglect to use reasonable care in performing that duty, it is liable, to the extent that the plaintiffs suffered by the loss of their property. It was the view of the learned court that this undertaking of the defendant was something apart from, and independent of, the contract of carriage, as expressed in the bill of lading.

I think the judgment is right. The plaintiffs had the right to stop the goods in transitu, by giving notice of their claim to the carrier, in whose possession the goods were, actually or constructively. The notice need not be given to the person in actual possession of the goods and may be given to the principal. In the latter case, to be effectual, it must be given at such time and under such circumstances that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, may communicate it to his agent in time to prevent a delivery of the goods to the buyer. The defendant was, as forwarder, a principal, to whom notice was properly given. The rule appears to be settled upon authority. See Benjamin, Sales, p. 180, where the authorities are collated. The appellant does not dispute the rule with respect to the right of stoppage in transitu, but contends that the limitation in the bill of lading defining the liability of the carrier by the agreed value of the goods controls, in all events. As the case comes to us, the neglect of duty or the wrongful conduct of the defendant in delivering the goods after the notice must be regarded as established. The action, therefore, is actually founded on the tortious act of the defendant, and not on its contract of carriage. The exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu by the plaintiffs put an end to the contract of carriage, and revested the possession of the property in them. They are to be regarded as having retaken the goods. Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169, 23 English Ruling Cases, p. 411; Cross v. O'Donnell, 44 N. Y. 661, 665, 4 Am. Rep. 721; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. American Oil Works, 126 Pa. 485, 493, 17 Atl. 671; Reynolds v. Boston & M. R. Co. 43 N. H. 580, 592; Jones v. Earl, 37 Cal. 630, 99 Am. Dec. 338. The relation of the parties changed. The defendant, from the time it was notified, and directed its agent not to deliver the goods to the buyers, in legal contemplation, held the plaintiffs' property as their bailee. When, through the disobedience or neglect of its agent or servant, the goods were delivered to the buyers, the defendant became liable for their then value to the plaintiffs, not upon contract, but in tort. As it was said in a case quite similar in its facts, though not involving the same legal question, by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn (Pontifex v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 23), "the contract of the defendants was to carry and deliver. But under the circumstances which arose, the law gave the plaintiff the right to put an end to that contract and to demand back the possession of the goods, and he did so. From that time the retention of the goods and the dealing with them by the defendants became tortious." If the carrier delivers the goods to the purchaser after notice not to do so, it is liable in trover to the seller. Litt v. Cowley, 7 Taunt. 169, 23 English Ruling Cases, p. 411. The bill of lading, however broad its language with respect to the value of the goods, which the holder might demand, must be read with reference to its purpose. It related to the undertaking to carry and forward the goods to the consignees, and to the incidents attendant upon its execution. The price paid for the carriage by the shippers was fixed by the reduced valuation of the goods. Upon the stoppage in transitu, the defendant held the goods as the plaintiffs', and the law created a new relation, to which the bill of lading had no reference. The goods were to be returned to the plaintiffs. We must assume that it was possible for the defendant to do so, and its failure or neglect was wrongful, and created a liability altogether different from that which was intended to be governed by the bill of lading.

For these reasons, I think the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

O'Brien, Martin, Vann, and Werner, JJ., concur.

Cullen, J., concurring:

I concur in the result on the ground that the trial court might, on the evidence, have found that the plaintiffs were not notified at the time of shipment of the conditions and limitations prescribed in the receipt, nor asked the value of the goods. Springer v. Westcott, 166 N. Y. 117, 59 N. E. 693. I dissent, however, from the view that the provision of the receipt limiting the liability of the carrier to the sum of $50 unless the value of the goods is declared does not apply to a claim of the character of that now before us. This condition is not similar to those often found in contracts for shipment, by which it is sought to relieve the carrier from the consequences of its own negligence and fault,—provisions which the courts so strictly construe against the carrier, and the effects of which they are so astute to avoid, that it may be doubted whether it would not be better, even for the carrier, were they held void as against public policy, which is the law in many jurisdictions. The limitation under consideration is fair and reasonable. Not only is the compensation for carriage based on the value of the goods, but the care and attention given by the carrier and his servants is necessarily influenced and affected by the knowledge that the goods are of great or of little value. Concealment of value, though without any improper motive, on the part of the shipper, is therefore considered an imposition on the carrier, and relieves the latter from liability in excess of the stipulated amount, "unless something more in its conduct is shown than negligence to carry safely and to deliver promptly." Magnin v. Dinmore, 62 N. Y. 35, 20 Am. Rep. 442. Contracts of this character should be upheld and construed as fairly as other contracts. Hart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 112 U. S. 331, 28 L. ed. 717, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161.

57 L. R. A.

The action is for negligence. Defendant's line did not extend to Dallas, but ended at Kansas City, and the delivery complained of was made by the connecting company. Therefore there was in fact no conversion by the defendant, but its fault lay in its failure to promptly notify the connecting carrier. The action was therefore necessarily brought in its present form, and not for conversion. The right of stoppage in transitu, as the term indicates, springs out of the contract of transportation. It exists only where the possession is in a person employed to forward or transport the property to its destination, and it ends with delivery at the termination of the transit. Harris v. Pratt, 17 N. Y. 249. The right of the shipper to stop the delivery is absolute, "and the carrier is bound to obey, leaving the justification of the stoppage with the seller as concerns the sale parties, since the due exercise of this right is at the seller's, and not the carrier's, peril." Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 565. The right of stoppage in transitu is therefore a necessary incident of the contract of carriage, and though it may be that after notice of its exercise the strict liability of the carrier ceases, and it thereafter becomes responsible only as a warehouseman, which is the case where the consignee fails to accept the goods, still the relation of warehouseman is contractual, and in either case the carrier assumes that relation solely by the virtue of its original contract of carriage. In other words, when a carrier contracts to carry, it also contracts to stop the goods, or to hold them as a warehouseman, in certain contingencies; and there is no reason why the limitation of its liability for the value of the goods should not equally apply to all the responsibilities it assumes under the contract, whether of one kind or another. The only point decided in Pontifex v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 23, was that an action against a carrier for his failure to stop the goods in accordance with directions from the shipper was in tort, not on contract. I do not see how that doctrine is material to the question under discussion. It is sufficient, however, to say that an action against a carrier, even for breach of its contract of carriage, may be brought indifferently on the contract or in tort. Oatlin v. Adirondack Co. 11 Abb. N. C. 377.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Parker, Ch. J., concurs with Cullen, J.

De Frees CRITTEN et al., Respts.,
v.

CHEMICAL NATIONAL BANK, Appt.

(171 N. Y. 219.)

1. To relieve itself from liability to NOTE.—As to liability of bank to depositors for payment of altered or raised checks, see also cases in note to Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke (Ga.) 2 L. R. A. 96.

As to duty of depositor in respect to forged make good the amounts which it has paid on raised checks, a bank must affirmatively establish negligence on the part of the drawer which facilitated the commission of the fraud.

2. The drawer of a check is not bound to prepare it so that no one else can successfully tamper with it, to charge the bank with the loss in case it pays it after its amount has been fraudulently raised.
3. Whether or not the drawer of a check was negligent in signing it in the condition in which it was prepared is a question of fact to be determined largely by an inspection of the check itself.
4. A depositor owes the bank the duty to exercise reasonable care to verify the vouchers returned by the bank on balancing the account by the record of issued checks, if he has kept one.
5. By failing to discover forgeries among the vouchers returned by the bank on balancing the depositor's account, and to notify the bank thereof, the depositor does not adopt the checks as genuine, ratify their payment, or estop himself from asserting that they are forgeries.
6. A depositor who, by negligence in failing to detect forgeries among the vouchers returned by the bank, and give the bank notice thereof, causes loss to the bank, either by enabling the forger to repeat his fraud, or by depriving the bank of an opportunity to obtain restitution, will be responsible for the damage caused by his default.
7. The drawer of a check owes no duty to detect a fraudulent alteration of it, to a bank in which it is deposited for collection, and to which the proceeds are paid by the drawee.
8. The knowledge of the clerk of a bank depositor that he has made fraudulent alterations for his own benefit in checks drawn by his employer is not to be imputed to the latter.
9. A depositor who delegates to his clerk the verification of canceled checks returned as vouchers by the bank is chargeable with notice of fraudulent alterations which a mere comparison of the vouchers with the stubs in the check book would have disclosed, as that the name of the payee had been erased and the word "cash" substituted therefor, although the clerk himself made the alteration.
10. A bank which pays to a clerk of the drawer a plainly altered check without requiring an explanation of the alteration from his employer cannot throw the loss occasioned by subsequent payment of a series of such checks upon the employer, on the ground that he negligently failed to detect the frauds when the vouchers were returned to him.
11. An action on contract to recover a balance from a banker is not converted into an action in tort by a reply setting up defendant's negligence to defeat a defense that the money was paid out according to what the bank believed to be plaintiff's directions.

(Vann and Martin, JJ., dissent.)

(May 13, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment entered in the office of the Clerk of New York County upon a report of a referee in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover deposits made with defendant. Reversed upon condition.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George H. Yeaman and George O. Kohbe, for appellant:

The drawer is bound for the whole amount if his own negligence has facilitated or invited the fraud done by raising the check.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1075; Bank of Commerce v. Union Bank, 3 N. Y. 230; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 2d ed. § 1059, p. 608; Goddard v. Merchants' Bank, 4 N. Y. 147; Land Title & T. Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 196 Pa. 230, 50 L. R. A. 75, 46 Atl. 420; Iron City Nat. Bank v. Ft. Pitt Nat. Bank, 159 Pa. 47, 23 L. R. A. 615, 28 Atl. 195.

The bank is not responsible if the depositor has been negligent in examining his accounts and vouchers.

Myers v. Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 44 Atl. 290; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Crawford v. West Side Bank, 100 N. Y. 50, 53 Am. Rep. 152, 2 N. E. 881; Weinstein v. National Bank, 69 Tex. 38, 6 S. W. 171; De Feriet v. Bank of America, 23 La. Ann. 310, 8 Am. Rep. 597; Dana v. National Bank, 132 Mass. 156; First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L. R. A. 426, 14 So. 335; August v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 15 N. Y. S. R. 956, 1 N. Y. Supp. 139.

Messrs. A. J. Simpson and Benjamin N. Cardozo, for respondents:

As between the bank and its depositor, the bank's liability is the same whether the forgery relates to the signature of the depositor, or to the signature of the payee, or to the body of the check.

Winslow v. Everett Nat. Bank, 171 Mass. 534, 51 N. E. 16; Crawford v. West Side Bank, 100 N. Y. 50, 53 Am. Rep. 152, 2 N. E. 881; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Importers' & T. Bank, 119 N. Y. 200, 23 N. E. 540.

Where the bank has paid its moneys to an innocent holder under mistake as to the genuineness of the drawer's signature no recovery can be had, since the bank should have known its customer's signature, and hence must be presumed to have acted negligently.

Price v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1354; Continental Nat. Bank v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 36

checks charged to him by bank, see First Nat. Bank v. Allen (Ala.) 27 L. R. A. 426, and note. As to recovery by payor of forged check of money paid, see Iron City Nat. Bank v. Ft. Pitt Nat. Bank (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 615; First Nat. Bank v. Marshalltown State Bank (Iowa) 44 L. R. A. 181; and Land Title & T. Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank (Pa.) 50 L. R. A. 75.

Pitt Nat. Bank (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 615; First Nat. Bank v. Marshalltown State Bank (Iowa) 44 L. R. A. 181; and Land Title & T. Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank (Pa.) 50 L. R. A. 75.

App. Div. 113, 55 N. Y. Supp. 545; Bank of Commerce v. Union Bank, 3 N. Y. 234.

There is no such presumption of negligence where the money was paid under mistake as to the genuineness of the body of the instrument (Bank of Commerce v. Union Bank, 3 N. Y. 234), or of an indorsement thereon (Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill, 287); and in such cases, unless there is affirmative proof of negligence, a recovery may be allowed.

Continental Nat. Bank v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 36 App. Div. 112, 55 N. Y. Supp. 545.

The bank would not excuse itself by showing that the forgery defied detection.

Clark v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 32 App. Div. 316, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1064.

The plaintiffs exercised due care in issuing the checks.

Crawford v. West Side Bank, 100 N. Y. 50, 53 Am. Rep. 152, 2 N. E. 881; Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1659; Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank, 27 L. T. N. S. 849; Scholfield v. Lonsborough [1896] A. C. 514 [1894] 2 Q. B. 665; Union Credit Bank v. Mersey Docks & Harbor Board [1899] 2 Q. B. 211; Shepard & M. Lumber Co. v. Eldridge, 171 Mass. 516, 41 L. R. A. 617, 51 N. E. 9; Belknap v. National Bank, 100 Mass. 380, 97 Am. Dec. 105.

The plaintiffs were not negligent in confiding to Mr. Davis the examination of the canceled vouchers.

Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501; Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175; Shipman v. Bank of the State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L. R. A. 791, 27 N. E. 371; Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731; Wachsman v. Columbia Bank, 8 Misc. 280, 28 N. Y. Supp. 711; Clark v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 164 N. Y. 498, 58 N. E. 659, 32 App. Div. 316, 52 N. Y. Supp. 1064.

The doctrine of imputed knowledge has no application where the agent is acting in hostility to the principal, or has turned aside from his agency to perpetrate a fraud.

Benedict v. Arnoux, 154 N. Y. 715, 49 N. E. 326; Henry v. Allen, 151 N. Y. 1, 36 L. R. A. 658, 45 N. E. 355; Bienenstok v. Amidown, 155 N. Y. 47, 49 N. E. 321; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 157, 42 L. ed. 977, 986, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 675; Kettlewell v. Watson, L. R. 21 Ch. Div. 685; Shipman v. Bank of the State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L. R. A. 791, 27 N. E. 371; Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175; Allen v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 200, 5 L. R. A. 716, 22 N. E. 917.

If the depositor has adopted such safeguards for the examination of the accounts that, unless his agents are criminals, an error will be discovered, he has not been negligent.

Union Bank v. Kent, L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 248; Baendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 530.

The plaintiffs owed no duty to the defendant. 57 L. R. A.

ant to exercise reasonable diligence in the examination of the canceled checks.

Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731; Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175.

The defendant was guilty of negligence in honoring the checks; and hence it is liable even if the plaintiffs were negligent in examining the vouchers.

Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 112, 29 L. ed. 817, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Vagliano Bros. v. Bank of England, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 262; Voorhis v. Olmstead, 66 N. Y. 116; Continental Nat. Bank v. National Bank, 5 N. Y. 575.

For the bank to continue to cash checks for Davis after notice that he had presented a forged check, or after its suspicions had been aroused as to that fact, was as plainly negligent as the plaintiffs' continued employment of Davis would have been after notice of his wrongdoing had reached them.

Know v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 460, 31 L. R. A. 779, 42 N. E. 988.

If the plaintiffs were negligent in their comparison of the vouchers, the negligence was not the proximate cause of the payment of the checks, and hence it cannot constitute a defense to this action.

Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501; England v. Bank of England, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 170; Bank of Ireland v. Evans's Charities, 5 H. L. Cas. 389; Suan v. North British Australasian Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 175; Know v. Eden Musee American Co. 148 N. Y. 461, 31 L. R. A. 779, 42 N. E. 988; Schmidt v. Garfield Nat. Bank, 64 Hun. 306, 19 N. Y. Supp. 252; People v. Bank of North America, 75 N. Y. 547.

Cullen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs kept a large and active account with the defendant, and this action is to recover an alleged balance of a deposit due to them from the bank. The plaintiffs had in their employ a clerk named Davis. It was the duty of Davis to fill up the checks which it might be necessary for the plaintiffs to give in the course of business, to make corresponding entries in the stubs of the check book, and present the checks so prepared to Mr. Critten, one of the plaintiffs, for signature, together with the bills in payment of which they were drawn. After signing a check Critten would place it and the bill in an envelope addressed to the proper party, seal the envelope, and put it in the mailing drawer. During the period from September, 1897, to October, 1899, in twenty-four separate instances Davis abstracted one of the envelopes from the mailing drawer, opened it, obliterated by acids the name of the payee and the amount specified in the check, then made the check payable to cash and raised its amount, in the majority of cases, by the sum of $100. He would draw the money on the check so altered from the defendant bank, pay the bill for which the check was drawn in cash, and appropriate the excess. On one occasion

Davis did not collect the altered check from the defendant, but deposited it to his own credit in another bank. When a check was presented to Critten for signature the number of dollars for which it was drawn would be cut in the check by a punching instrument. When Davis altered a check he would punch a new figure in front of those already appearing in the check. The checks so altered by Davis were charged to the account of the plaintiffs, which was balanced every two months, and the vouchers returned to them from the bank. To Davis himself the plaintiffs, as a rule, intrusted the verification of the bank balance. This work having in the absence of Davis been committed to another person, the forgeries were discovered and Davis was arrested and punished. It is the amount of these forged checks, over and above the sums for which they were originally drawn, that this action is brought to recover. The defendant pleaded payment, and charged negligence on plaintiffs' part, both in the manner in which the checks were drawn and in the failure to discover the forgeries when the pass book was balanced and the vouchers surrendered. On the trial the alteration of the checks by Davis was established beyond contradiction, and the substantial issue litigated was that of the plaintiffs' negligence. The referee rendered a short decision in favor of the plaintiffs, in which he states as the ground of his decision that the plaintiffs were not negligent either in signing the checks as drawn by Davis or in failing to discover the forgeries at an earlier date than that at which they were made known to them.

The relation existing between a bank and a depositor being that of debtor and creditor, the bank can justify a payment on the depositor's account only upon the actual direction of the depositor. "The questions arising on such paper [checks] between drawee and drawer, however, always relate to what the one has authorized the other to do. They are not questions of negligence or of liability of parties upon commercial paper, but are those of authority solely. . . . The question of negligence cannot arise unless the depositor has in drawing his check left blanks unfilled, or by some affirmative act of negligence has facilitated the commission of a fraud by those into whose hands the check may come." Crawford v. West Side Bank, 100 N. Y. 50, 53 Am. Rep. 152, 2 N. E. 881. Therefore, when the fraudulent alteration of the checks was proved, the liability of the bank for their amount was made out, and it was incumbent upon the defendant to establish affirmatively negligence on the plaintiffs' part to relieve it from the consequences of its fault or misfortune in paying forged orders. Now, while the drawer of a check may be liable where he draws the instrument in such an incomplete state as to facilitate or invite fraudulent alterations, it is not the law that he is bound so to prepare the check that nobody else can successfully tamper with it. Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank, 27 L. T. N. S. 849; Belknap v. National Bank, 100 Mass. 380, 97 Am. Dec. 105. In the present case the fraudulent alteration of the checks was not merely in the perforation of the additional figure, but in the obliteration of the written name of the payee and the substitution therefor of the word "Cash." Against this latter change of the instrument the plaintiffs could not have been expected to guard, and without that alteration it would have no way profited the criminal to raise the amount. Apart, however, from that consideration, the question was clearly one of fact to be determined largely by an inspection of the checks themselves. They are not produced before us, and we cannot say that the finding of the referee, that the plaintiffs were guilty of no negligence in signing them in the condition in which they were presented for signature, was without sufficient evidence for its support.

We are now brought to the consideration of the finding of the referee that the plaintiffs were not guilty of negligence in failing to discover the forgeries after the return of the checks and the balancing of the account in the pass book. Preliminarily we must determine what duty the depositor owes to his bank by way of examination and verification of his checks and account, for the learned counsel for the respondents asserts that no such duty in reality exists. This contention is principally based on the authority of Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731. In that case a depositor sued his bank for the amount of certain checks to which his signature was forged by his clerk. His pass book was balanced and vouchers returned at intervals as in the present case. At the trial he recovered a verdict for the full amount of the forgeries. On appeal the general term of the superior court ordered a reversal of the judgment unless the plaintiff would reduce his recovery to the amount paid on the forged checks prior to the time when the bank book was first balanced and vouchers returned. To this reduction the plaintiff assented, and, on the defendant's appeal, the judgment as modified was affirmed by this court. In the opinions delivered by two distinguished judges the doctrine is asserted that the depositor owes no duty to the bank to examine his pass book or vouchers with the view to the detection of forgeries, but the decision itself is not authority for more than the proposition that the bank was not relieved from liability for forged checks which it had paid before the account was balanced by the failure of the depositor to subsequently discover the forgeries. As was said by Judge Johnson as to these checks: "Whatever loss the bank has sustained, it has suffered from its own negligence or want of skill in a matter as to which, in the first instance, it and it only was bound to exercise skill and diligence. To this loss no act of Weisser has contributed." The question again came before this court in the case of Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501. That action also was brought to recover the amount of a series of checks forged by the depositor's clerk. A recovery by the plaintiffs was upheld, though not on the principle that the depositor owed no duty to his bank, but on the ground that he had discharged that duty. In the opinion there delivered Judge Andrews said: "It does not seem to be unreasonable, in view of the course of business and the custom of banks to surrender its vouchers on the periodical writing up of the accounts of depositors, to exact from the latter some attention to the account when it is made up, or to hold that the negligent omission of all examination may, when injury has resulted to the bank which it would not have suffered if such examination had been made and the bank had received timely notice of objections, preclude the depositor from afterwards questioning its correctness. But where forged checks have been paid and charged in the account and returned to the depositor, he is under no duty to the bank so to conduct the examination that it will necessarily lead to the discovery of the fraud. If he examines the vouchers personally and is himself deceived by the skilful character of the forgery, his omission to discover it will not shift upon him the loss which in the first instance is the loss of the bank." In that case the depositor compared the returned checks with the stubs in the check book, but was deceived by the fact that the forger had abstracted the forged checks from the package. In the Supreme Court of the United States and in several of our sister states the rule is settled that the depositor owes his bank the duty of a reasonable verification of the returned checks. In Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657, it was held that a depositor is bound personally or by his agent, and with due diligence, to examine the pass book and vouchers, and to report to the bank without unreasonable delay any errors which may have been discovered therein, and that, if he fails to do so and the bank is thereby misled to its prejudice, he cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the balance shown in the pass book. In Dana v. National Bank, 132 Mass. 156, the supreme court of Massachusetts said: "The mistake was in the payment of the money upon an altered check, believed to be genuine; it was not for the advantage of the defendant, and its condition was changed by it. It was in the course of dealings between the parties in relation to which each owed duties to the other. . . . The plaintiffs [depositors] owed to the defendant [bank] the duty of exercising due diligence to give it information that the payment was unauthorized; and this included, not only due diligence in giving notice after knowledge of the forgery, but also due diligence in discovering it." In Myers v. Southwestern Nat. Bank, 193 Pa. 1, 44 Atl. 280, it was held that the bank was entitled to have the vouchers which it surrendered with the pass book examined and, if rejected, returned within a reasonable time, and that if this was not done because of the depositor's failure to perform his duty in that regard he should not be permitted to recover. The same rule of law obtains in Louisiana (De Feriet v. Bank of America, 23 La. Ann. 310, 8 Am. Rep. 597), in Texas (Weinstein v. National Bank, 69 Tex. 38, 6 S. W. 171), and in Alabama (First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L. R. A. 426, 14 So. 335). The course of dealings between banks and their depositors is well known and is considered at length in the three cases first cited from other jurisdictions. The methods of depositors in drawing checks on their accounts have become much more uniform than at the time of the decision in Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731. The practice of taking checks from check books and entering on the stubs left in the book the date, amount, and name of the payee of the check issued has become general, not only with large commercial houses, but with almost all classes of depositors in banks. The skill of the criminal has kept pace with the advance in honest arts, and a forgery may be made so skilfully as to deceive, not only the bank, but the drawer of the check, as to the genuineness of his own signature. But when a depositor has in his possession a record of the checks he has given, with dates, payees, and amounts, a comparison of the returned checks with that record will necessarily expose forgeries or alterations. It is true that it will give no information as to the genuine character of the indorsements, and because the depositor has no greater knowledge on that subject than the bank, it owes the bank no duty in regard thereto. Welsh v. German American Bank, 73 N. Y. 424, 29 Am. Rep. 175; Shipman v. Bank of the State, 126 N. Y. 318, 12 L. R. A. 791, 27 N. E. 371. It is also true that verification of the returned checks would not prevent a loss by the bank in the case of the payment of a single forged check, and probably not in many cases enable the bank to obtain a restitution of its lost money. It would, however, prevent the successful commission of continuous frauds by exposing the first forgeries. That this is a numerous class of frauds is apparent from the number of cases which we have cited, in all of which the forgery was not a single act, but a series of acts extending over a considerable period of time, and the crime was committed by a clerk or employee of the depositor. Considering that the only certain test of the genuineness of the paid check may be the record made by the depositor of the checks he has issued, it is not too much, in justice and fairness to the bank, to require of him, when he has such a record, to exercise reasonable care to verify the vouchers by that record.

While we hold that this duty rests upon the depositor, we are not disposed to accept the doctrine asserted in some of the cases, that, by negligence in its discharge or by failure to discover and notify the bank, the depositor either adopts the checks as genuine and ratifies their payment or estops himself from asserting that they are forgeries. Such a doctrine would be in conflict, not only with the opinions rendered in Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, but with the decision there actually made. That authority has stood for nearly fifty years, and we would not feel justified in now overruling it. Nor, if the question were an open one in this state, would we deem the rule of estoppel or that of ratification a just one. If the depositor has by his negligence in failing to detect forgeries in his checks and give notice thereof caused loss to his bank, either by enabling the forger to repeat his fraud or by depriving the bank of an opportunity to obtain restitution, he should be responsible for the damage caused by his default, but beyond this his liability should not extend. In the cases cited from the Supreme Court of the United States, from that of Massachusetts and that of Pennsylvania, it is conceded that, if the bank has been guilty of negligence in paying the forged checks, then the doctrine of ratification and estoppel does not apply. It seems to us that the exception is somewhat inconsistent with the principle on which the doctrine rests. Moreover, we see no reason why the bank should be entitled to anything more than indemnity for the loss the depositor's negligence has caused it. In the present case a check altered by Davis from the sum of $22 to $622 was paid by the defendant to the Colonial Bank, in which Davis had deposited it. Against that bank the defendant has ample recourse. If it were to be held that the plaintiffs are estopped from denying the genuineness of that check as against the defendant, the latter could have no claim against the Colonial Bank, nor is it clear that the plaintiffs would have any direct right of action against that bank. The Colonial Bank took the check solely on the responsibility of Davis. To it the plaintiffs owed no duty. If the plaintiffs and the defendant had never settled their accounts the Colonial Bank could have had no complaint against either party for that cause. A rule which might operate to relieve that bank from the liability it assumed when it collected an altered check, merely because the plaintiffs failed in their duty, not to it, but to a third party, should not be upheld. Nor would it operate justly in a case in which the bank had paid a single forgery unless by the depositor's default and delay the bank had lost its opportunity to secure restitution. This question is well discussed by the supreme court of Alabama in the case of First Nat. Bank v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 27 L. R. A. 426, 14 So. 335, and we concur in the view expressed by that court that the liability of the depositor for neglect of his duty to examine and verify his account with the bank is limited to the damages sustained by the bank in consequence of such neglect.

In the present case Davis falsified the additions or totals at the foot of the pages in the check book. But with a few exceptions he did not alter the amounts expressed in the stubs. In no case did he change in the stubs the name of the payee of the check. It is clear, therefore, that at all times a comparison of the returned checks with the stubs in the check books would have exposed the alterations made in the checks. Of course, the knowledge of the forgeries that Davis possessed, from the fact that he himself was the forger, was in no respect to be attributed to the plaintiffs. But we see no reason why they were not chargeable with such information as a comparison of the checks with the check book would have imparted to an innocent party previously unaware of the forgeries. The plaintiffs' position may be no worse because they intrusted the examination to Davis instead of to a third person; but they can be no better off on that account; if they would have been chargeable with the negligence or failure of another clerk in the verification of the accounts, they must be equally so for the default of Davis, so far as the examination itself would have disclosed the facts. We think it plain, therefore, that the finding of the referee that the plaintiffs were not negligent in the examination of the pass book and vouchers is without evidence to sustain it, unless the plaintiffs discharged their duty to the defendant when they committed the examination to a proper clerk, and were not responsible for the manner in which the clerk performed the task. From the language of the report of the learned referee it would seem as if this last were the theory on which his decision proceeded. We do not think it can be sustained. If any duty rested on the plaintiffs, we do not see why the ordinary rule of principal and agent or master and servant, that the principal or master is liable for the fault of his servant or agent in the master's business, did not apply. This was so held in the case of Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657, and nothing to the contrary is to be found in Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501. There it is said: "The alleged duty, at most, only requires the depositor to use ordinary care; and if this is exercised, whether by himself or his agents, the bank cannot justly complain, although the forgeries are not discovered until it is too late to retrieve its position or make reclamation from the forger." In that case, however, the question of the liability of the principal for the negligence of his clerk did not arise, for the plaintiff made the examination personally. There are exceptions to the general rule of the liability of the master for his employee. But this case does not fall within those exceptions, nor within the principle on which those exceptions are based.

These views would render it necessary to reverse the judgment appealed from except for another fact now to be noted. The referee's report is in the form of a short decision, and on appeal it is to be presumed that all facts warranted by the evidence and necessary to support the judgment have been found. Amherst College v. Ritch, 151 N. Y. 282, 37 L. R. A. 305, 45 N. E. 876; Bartlett v. Goodrich, 163 N. Y. 421, 47 N. E. 794; Marden v. Dorthy, 160 N. Y. 39, 46

L. R. A. 694, 54 N. E. 726. The sixth in sequence of these forgeries was a check of June 20, 1898, for $12.49, altered to the sum of $112.49, with the name of the payee erased and "Cash" written in the place thereof. The teller of the defendant, who paid the check and was a witness on its behalf, testified that the check showed on its face that the word "Cash" had been written in the place for the payee's name over an erasure; that the number of dollars was also written over an erasure; that he did not like the appearance of the check; and that it was in such a mutilated condition when it was presented to him that, before paying it, he required Davis to indorse upon the check a receipt for its amount. That the defendant was grossly negligent in paying the check, and has only itself to thank for that loss, is apparent. But the effect of that negligence did not cease with the payment of the check. The referee might well have found that, had payment of the check been refused, or had Davis been required to obtain the indorsement or guaranty of the plaintiffs as to its correctness, the forgeries of Davis would have been exposed, and their repetition would not have occurred. That Davis was able to successfully continue from this time to his arrest a series of forgeries is as fairly attributable to the folly of the bank in paying to a clerk a check of his employers which had plainly been altered, without making inquiry as to the reason or authority for the alteration, as it was to any carelessness of the plaintiffs in failing to detect the alteration when the checks were returned to them from the bank. Since we have held that the question in the case was not one of ratification or estoppel, but that the liability of the plaintiffs to the bank was solely for the loss caused by their negligence, it is a complete answer to the defendant's claim that its own negligence contributed to the loss.

The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the plaintiffs' cause of action is not based on negligence, and that the plaintiffs cannot sue on contract and recover in tort. This claim is without force. The action unquestionably was brought on contract, but it remains such. The plaintiffs sue for a debt to which the defendant answers: "We have paid the money, true, not according to your direction, but in compliance with what we believed to be your directions, and your negligent conduct in your duty towards us led us into that error;" to which the plaintiffs rejoin: "Your own negligence contributed to the loss." All this may be true, yet the plaintiffs recover, not in tort, but on contract, for the allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant is used only to defeat its claim for relief on account of the plaintiffs' negligence.

It follows that, under the authority of Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 68, 61 Am. Dec. 731, the defendant is not entitled to credit for the two checks paid by it before the account was balanced and vouchers returned. For the third, fourth, and fifth checks, amounting to $300, it is entitled to credit unless it was guilty of negligence in their payment, a fact which is neither found by the referee nor established by the evidence. For the sixth check and the subsequent ones it is not entitled to credit because of its negligence in paying the sixth check.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, costs to abide the event, unless the plaintiffs consent to deduct from their recovery the sum of $300, with interest from November 15, 1899, in which case the judgment, as modified, should be affirmed without costs of this appeal to either party.

Parker, Ch. J., Haight, and Werner, JJ., concur.

Vann, J., dissenting:

Whether the plaintiffs exercised reasonable care in examining the checks returned as vouchers by the defendant was a question of fact, and, as they intrusted the work to a competent agent and took other precautions, there was evidence to support the finding in their favor which, after affirmation by the appellate division, is conclusive here. Amherst College v. Ritch, 161 N. Y. 282, 37 L. R. A. 305, 45 N. E. 876.

In my opinion the judgment below should neither be reversed nor modified, unless the court reaches the conclusion that the plaintiffs had constructive notice of what their agent discovered in examining the checks. The rule which imputes to a principal knowledge acquired by his agent rests upon the presumption that the latter has disclosed all the material facts to the former. This presumption does not extend to a fact which, if disclosed, would subject the agent to a prosecution for crime or defeat a scheme in which he was engaged to defraud his employer. Henry v. Allen, 151 N. Y. 1, 9, 36 L. R. A. 658, 45 N. E. 355; Benedict v. Arnoux, 154 N. Y. 715, 728, 49 N. E. 326; Bienestok v. Ammidgen, 155 N. Y. 47, 60, 49 N. E. 321; Pom... 875. The dishonesty of the agent changes the situation, for the necessity of concealing his dishonest acts, in order to prevent exposure and punishment, destroys the presumption which would otherwise prevail that he had made the facts known to his principal. A presumption must be reasonable or it cannot exist, and it would not be reasonable to expect one engaged in executing a fraudulent project to make a disclosure which would not only defeat his purpose, but would send him to prison. Knowledge is not imputable when the agent is acting in hostility to his principal, or is engaged in perpetrating or concealing a fraud. In this case the agent committed the furtive acts, and knew all about them long before he examined the vouchers returned by the bank. He discovered no fraud while making that examination, for he knew all before, and could not discover what he already knew. He found out nothing while acting as agent, but only while acting on his own account.

He was still engaged in his scheme to defraud when he made the examination, and concealment was as necessary then as it had ever been. In concealing the fraud he did not act as agent, and he was engaged in concealing the fraud all the time after he began to carry on his system of forgery, and was so engaged when he examined the checks. In Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209, 38 Am. Rep. 501, the court said: "It was only because Goodheim was the criminal that the examination did not disclose to them the forgeries. He was not the plaintiffs' agent in issuing the forged paper, nor was he their agent in abstracting the false vouchers and falsifying the books, which was done in aid of his criminal purpose." If Goodheim, whose duty it was to examine the vouchers, discovered nothing imputable to the plaintiffs in that case, how could Davis, in examining the checks, make a discovery binding upon the plaintiffs in this case? Goodheim abstracted the false vouchers, so that the examination made by himself and the depositor would disclose no wrong, except by their absence, and Davis, whose duty it was to use the check punch, so used it as to leave sufficient space next to the dollar sign in which to subsequently cut a figure and thus raise the amount of the check. He also changed the footings at the bottom of the stub page of the check book so as to prepare for the examination. If what Goodheim did was not binding on his principal, how can we say that what Davis did was binding on the plaintiffs? In neither case can the duties of the dishonest agent be so separated as to distinguish the fraud in concealing the forgery from the forgery itself, for each act was part of a single scheme. The forgery, the preparation for concealment, and the constant concealment were successive steps in the same transaction. It cannot be held that what Davis would have discovered if he had not been the forger, but somebody else, is imputable to the plaintiffs, without also imputing to them knowledge of the space left to punch out another figure, as well as of the false footings, for these acts were within the scope of his employment as much as the examination of the vouchers. In every case of successful fraud by an agent, it is the nature of the duties intrusted to him that enables him to perpetrate the fraud, and it is erroneous reasoning to say that if a part of those duties had been intrusted to another clerk, as he would have found out the facts, they must be imputed to the principal, because the latter in good faith assigned such duties to the criminal.

Under the circumstances, it cannot be presumed that Davis disclosed facts which an honest agent might have discovered in looking over the checks, but which the former knew before the checks came to his hands for examination, without subverting the reason upon which the rule of imputed knowledge is founded. Entertaining these views, I am compelled to dissent from those 57 L. R. A.

expressed in the prevailing opinion, so far as they are inconsistent with this memorandum, and to vote in favor of affirmance.

Martin, J., concurs with Vann, J.
Bartlett, J., takes no part.

Re Application of Margaret C. DEVOE for Order Directing Payment of Funds Held by Miln P. Palmer, Trustee, etc., of Frances B. Hegeman, Deceased.

(171 N. Y. 281.)

The widow of a beneficiary is not entitled to share under a will directing that in case of death of a beneficiary before the time for distribution arrives his share shall be paid over to his next of kin as, according to the statute of distributions, his personal estate would be divided and distributed.

(O'Brien and Bartlett, JJ., dissent.)

(May 20, 1902.)

A PPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming an order of a Special Term for Kings County refusing to direct payment to her of money claimed under the will of Frances B. Hegeman, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hitchings, Palliser, & Moen, for appellant:

The principal of the fund in question vested in Edmund M. Devoe at the time of the death of the testatrix.

Barker v. Woods, 1 Sandf. Ch. 129; Embury v. Sheldon, 68 N. Y. 227; Nelson v. Russell, 135 N. Y. 137, 31 N. E. 1008; Byrnes v. Stilwell, 103 N. Y. 453, 57 N. E. 760; Palmer v. Dunham, 52 Hun, 468, 6 N. Y. Supp. 46; Cropley v. Cooper, 86 U. S. 167, 22 L. ed. 109; Jones v. Knappen, 63 Vt. 391, 14 L. R. A. 293, 22 Atl. 630; Wengerd's Estate, 143 Pa. 615, 13 L. R. A. 360, 22 Atl. 869; Connelly v. O'Brien, 166 N. Y. 406, 60 N. E. 20; Goebel v. Wolf, 113 N. Y. 405, 21 N. E. 388; Re Brown, 154 N. Y. 313, 48 N. E. 537; Re Young, 145 N. Y. 535, 40 N. E. 226; Re Tienken, 131 N. Y. 391, 30 N. E. 109; Brightly's Dig. p. 4546.

The vested remainder of Edmund M. Devoe was not and could not be divested, changed, or altered, except by his death before the testatrix.

Paget v. Melcher, 156 N. Y. 405, 51 N. E. 24.

The fund in question must be turned over to the estate of Edmund M. Devoe to be administered in accordance with the laws applicable thereto.

Mr. Joseph S. Wood, for respondents:

If a remainderman dies before the life tenant, the remainder which he would have received had he survived the life tenant must,

NOTE.—As to who are next of kin, see also note to French v. French (109a), 15 L. R. A. 300.

under the substitutionary clause, go to his next of kin.

Palmer v. Dunham, 125 N. Y. 68, 25 N. E. 1081; Kelso v. Lorillard, 85 N. Y. 177.

The remainders given in the will under consideration are contingent.

Clark v. Cammann, 160 N. Y. 315, 54 N. E. 709; Steinway v. Steinway, 163 N. Y. 200, 57 N. E. 312; Bisson v. West Shore R. Co. 143 N. Y. 130, 38 N. E. 104; Warner v. Durant, 76 N. Y. 136; Colton v. Fox, 67 N. Y. 349; Delaney v. McCormack, 88 N. Y. 174; DeLafield v. Shipman, 103 N. Y. 464, 9 N. E. 184.

If the will is of doubtful construction, that interpretation must be followed which gives the legacy to the testatrix's blood relatives, rather than to strangers.

Clark v. Cammann, 160 N. Y. 315, 54 N. E. 709.

Inasmuch as Edmund M. Devoe died before his mother, the life tenant, the remainder in question went to his next of kin under the substitutionary clause of the will. He left him surviving a mother and a widow. His mother was his next of kin; his wife was not.

Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 389; Luce v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 39; Keteltas v. Keteltas, 72 N. Y. 315, 28 Am. Rep. 155; Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 21, 47 Am. Rep. 1; Platt v. Mickle, 137 N. Y. 106, 32 N. E. 1070; Betsinger v. Chapman, 88 N. Y. 487.

If any statute of distributions is to govern in this case, it must be the statute of distributions of the state of New York.

Harrison v. Nison, 9 Pet. 484, 9 L. ed. 201; Story, Conf. L. p. 410; Trotter v. Trotter, 4 Bligh. N. S. 502; Dayton, Surrogates, p. 410; Anstruther v. Chalmers, 2 Sim. 1; Lanewille v. Anderson, 2 Swabey & T. 24; Dannelli v. Dannelli, 4 Bush, 62.

Cullen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I concur in the view of Judge O'Brien regarding the difficulties and perplexities which attend the construction of wills. I admit that they proceed largely from the inaccurate use of language in the instruments, but I insist that they are also largely occasioned by the conflicting decisions of the courts. I think a review of the numerous antagonistic decisions cited by Mr. Jarman in his work on Wills makes it apparent that this is a most potent factor in the creation of the difficulties. The trite aphorism that the intention of the testator is to be deemed the polar star in the interpretation of a will has, it seems to me, but little application where the very subject in controversy is, What was that intention? The state has a great interest in this subject, for it is certainly to the public detriment that the construction of wills should create such a large and increasing field for litigation, thus involving not only uncertainty in the tenure and titles of property, but imposing a great cost on the state itself. It is conceded that in its primary meaning the term "next of kin" includes neither a widow nor a husband. I think that it is settled by authority in this state 57 L. R. A.

that a direction that the property shall be distributed among the next of kin the same as in the case of intestacy is not sufficient to extend the meaning of the term "next of kin" to include either of the relatives named, though he or she would share in the property of the deceased if it were a case of actual intestacy. The clause of the will in construction on this appeal is: "In case of the death of any of the beneficiaries or persons entitled to share in the investments herein directed to be made, before the time limited for the payment thereof, my will is that the same be paid over to their next of kin as, according to the statute of distributions, their personal estates would be divided and distributed." The argument is that the property cannot be paid over according to the statute of distributions unless the widow is allowed to share. I am not disposed to underrate the force of this contention, and, if it were an original proposition, it might command my assent. Let us see, however, how far it is consistent with the decided cases. In Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, the will provided that, upon the death of the beneficiaries without receiving the principal, then it was "to be equally divided among and paid to the persons entitled thereto as their, or either of their, next of kin, according to the laws of the state of New York, and as if the same were personal property, and they, or either of them, had died intestate." The same argument was there made for extending the meaning of "next of kin" as has been advanced in this case. Yet this court held, reversing the decision of the general term, that the widow did not take. In Luce v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 36, the will, after a gift to testator's wife of the homestead and a legacy, proceeded: "All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real and personal, present and hereafter to be acquired, and wherever situated, I give, devise, and bequeath, and do desire and will that the same shall be divided among my heirs and next of kin in the same manner as it would be by the laws of the state of New York had I died intestate." It was held that the widow did not take, and it is to be remarked that in that case the decision was against the testator's own widow,—not, as here, against the widow of a legatee. Speaking of the argument made here, Judge Rapallo said: "This same position was taken and argued by counsel with much force in the case of Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, and it was urged that a distribution could not be made according to the statute without including the widow. Some of the judges, while the case was under consideration in this court, were strongly inclined to maintain the position contended for; but a full examination of the authorities constrained them to abandon it, and it was finally held that, where the bequest was to the next of kin, the addition of the words, 'according to the statute as in case of intestacy,' was not sufficient to enlarge the class of legatees, so as to include the widow." The question again came before this court in Platt v. Mickle, 137 N. Y. 106, 32 N. E. 1070. In that case the will read: "And I thereupon after his [the life tenant's] decease give . . . said rest and residue . . . to such person or persons as shall then be the heirs at law and next of kin of my said grandson George Benjamin, respectively, in such parts, shares, and proportions as, having regard to the form in which the said estate shall then exist, such heirs and next of kin would have been then respectively entitled thereto and therein by law if my said grandson had been seised thereof in fee simple as an inheritance on the part of his mother, or possessed of the same, and he had died intestate, and they had inherited or become entitled thereto from my said grandson." Again it was held that under such a provision the widow was not entitled to share in the estate. Judge Gray there wrote: "The case is governed by Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, and the other authorities cited below by Judge Lawrence in his careful opinion. I find no authority for giving to these words an enlarged sense, in the absence of something in the context or of some requirement of a statute which would furnish the court with a reason for doing so." Plainly, the learned judge did not deem the qualification that the distribution should be made as in case of intestacy to constitute "something in the context" to justify interpreting the term "next of kin" in an enlarged sense. Of course, the language used differs in the different cases, but the effect of it is the same in all. In fact, the appellant's argument could have been more forcibly made in any of the cases cited than in the one before us. Nor is there any such uniformity of sentiment on this subject as there is with reference to the disinheritance of children,—an intent to effect which the courts are loath to impute to a testator unless it be unmistakably expressed, and properly loath, because in all probability the testator had no such intent. It might be more decent, where a large estate is given to a man for life, the principal to go to his issue or to his heirs, to make some provision for his wife in case she survives him. An examination of the cases, however, shows that it is not the prevalent practice, and that a testator rarely makes provision for the surviving wife of the life tenant, and in the analogous case of a surviving husband practically never makes provision for him, unless in a few exceptional instances where the husband is in existence at the time, and known to the testator.

Reliance is placed by the appellant on the case of Betsinger v. Chapman, 88 N. Y. 487. It was there held that a widow could bring an action to recover her distributive share under §§ 9 and 10 of title 5 of chapter 6 of part 2 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing such suits to be maintained "by any legatee or by any of the next of kin." That decision proceeded, however, on the ground that unless the term "next of kin," in this title of the statute, was given this extended meaning, no provision was to be there found providing for the citation of the widow on an accounting, for making a decree thereon conclusive against her, or for enabling a creditor of the estate to recover from her the value of the assets thereof she might have received. In that case Judge Andrews refers to the cases of Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387, and Luco v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 36, but in no respect does he criticise either. The decision cannot, therefore, be considered as impairing the authority of the earlier cases. However that may be, Platt v. Mickle, 137 N. Y. 106, 32 N. E. 1070, is the last authority in this court and is controlling. I think that the decisions of this court on the construction of provisions in wills similar to the one now before us have created a rule of property which we are not justified in overthrowing, especially where the proposition that the testator might have had a different intent from that we have ascribed to him is the merest surmise. Probably he never thought on the subject, and what testamentary disposition he would have made had the contingency that has arisen been called to his attention, no one can tell.

The order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs payable out of the estate.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, Haight, and Werner, JJ., concur:

O'Brien, J., dissenting:

The original proceeding in this case took the form of an application to the court, by petition, for an order directing the payment to the petitioner of the fund in the hands of a trustee under the will of Frances B. Hegeman, who died in the year 1878. The will was executed two years before, and disposed of a large estate. It contained various trusts to terminate in the distant future, only one of which is involved in this appeal. The corpus of this trust amounts to the sum of $7,336.95, and the only question is in what manner and to what persons it should be distributed under the terms of the will. This will is now before this court for the third time (Palmer v. Horn, 84 N. Y. 516; Palmer v. Dunham, 125 N. Y. 68, 25 N. E. 1081), and the history of the litigation confirms the familiar observation of Lord Coke in Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Bulst. 130, that "wills and the construction of them do more perplex a man than any other learning, and to make a certain construction of them, this excedit jurisprudentum artem." The wisdom of this remark is even more apparent now than it was in his day, owing to the complex nature of human affairs, the poverty of language, or the inaccurate use of it in the instrument. Arbitrary rules frequently have to yield to circumstances and conditions, and a word, a phrase, or a sentence in one will may have a clear and certain meaning, while the same word, phrase, or sentence in another will may have a different scope and meaning, where the circumstances, conditions, and general purpose of the testator are different. The question in this case, in its last analysis, involves only an inquiry as to the sense in which the testatrix used the term "next of kin." That term, we know, comprehends, in its primary and strict legal sense, only blood relations, but in a broader and more general sense it is used to designate the persons who are entitled to share in the distribution of personal property in cases of intestacy. There is little room for dispute with respect to the general scope and purpose of the two short provisions of the will in which the term is to be found, and reference need be made to only one of the trusts, since it is the disposition of the corpus of that trust that constitutes the present controversy. The testatrix gave to the trustees $20,000 in trust, to be divided into as many shares as there were children of her niece, who was named, "living at my death, and that they keep the same invested, and apply the income or interest from one of the said shares to the use of said children, respectively, and on the death of said children, respectively, that they pay over the principal and accumulations of interest to their issue and descendants according to the statute of distributions in case of intestacy." By a subsequent provision of the will the testatrix provided as follows: "In case of the death of any of the beneficiaries or persons entitled to share in the investments herein directed to be made before the time limited for the payment thereof, my will is that the same be paid over to their next of kin as according to the statute of distributions their personal estate would be divided and distributed." The event suggested in this clause actually happened, and that is what gives rise to the present controversy.

One of the children of the testatrix's niece provided for in this trust for her life was Letitia Devoe. She had one child, Edmund M. Devoe, who became a resident of Colorado in 1892, and died there August 4, 1899, at the age of thirty-three, leaving his mother and his widow, the petitioner in this proceeding, him surviving. This young man must therefore have been about ten years old at the date of the will, and twelve when the testatrix died. Letitia, his mother and the life tenant, however, survived him, and died in Colorado in the same year as her son, and about three months thereafter. The courts below have held that although the fund would have gone to Edmund, had he survived his mother, yet, he having died before her, she became and was his sole next of kin, and took the fund as such, and that upon her death it passed to her administrator, and that the widow of Edmund, who is the petitioner, was not entitled to share in the distribution at all. It was held by the courts below, and both sides now insist, that the remainder vested on the death of the testatrix, and we have affirmed the judgment in which that point was distinctly decided. Palmer v. Dunham, 52 Hun, 468, 6 N. Y. Supp. 46; Affirmed in 125 N. Y. 68, 25 N. E. 1081. There was, however, the substitutionary gift in the event of Edmund's death before his mother that operated upon his power of disposition, and affected the right of transmission in any other way than as directed in the will. Hence nothing passed under the laws of Colorado, since at the time of Edmund's death his interest was not absolute, but subject to the provisions of the will, which directed that it should pass to his next of kin, who were entitled to share in his other personal estate under the statute of distributions. The statute referred to as the guide was doubtless the statute of this state, since it cannot be supposed that the testatrix, who was domiciled here, intended that the final distribution of the remainders should be made according to the statute of some other state. Of course, the statute which she had in mind when the will was made was the statute of this state.

The case, then, is this: Letitia, the mother, was entitled to a life estate in the fund, with remainder to Edmund, her only child; but as the latter died before his mother, and therefore before the time for distribution, the remainder went to his next of kin, who were entitled to share in the distribution of his other personal property under the laws of this state. It remains only to identify these persons according to the directions of the will. That direction was that, in the event of Edmund's death before the fund was payable to him (that is to say, before the death of his mother), then it should be paid to his next of kin in the same manner that his personal estate would be distributed under the statute of this state. Therefore the case is the same as if Edmund had been domiciled and had died in this state. When a person dies here intestate, without issue, leaving a widow and a mother, but no father, one half of his personal estate passes to the widow, and the other half to the mother or her personal representatives. It is legally impossible in such a case to distribute the personal estate according to the statute, and at the same time ignore the widow; and since the learned courts below have awarded it all to the mother, or, rather, to her administrator in Colorado, it would seem to be a plain violation of the directions of the will. That result was reached by giving controlling effect to the words "next of kin," and no effect whatever to the words which follow and qualify that term. Of course, in the primary and strict legal sense, the widow is not the next of kin of her husband, nor is the husband the next of kin of his deceased wife; but the testatrix used other words which showed that she intended to use the term in the statutory, and not in the common-law, sense. When the testatrix used this language Edmund was ten years old, and it would be unreasonable to suppose that she did not contemplate the possibility of his marriage in the near or distant future, and his death without issue, leaving a widow to be provided for. It is plain, therefore, that the decisions below cannot be sustained unless we are compelled to give to the words "next of kin" their narrowest meaning, and to ignore the important words that follow.

The learned courts below have doubtless found some color of authority for these views in certain cases which are cited. Murdock v. Ward, 67 N. Y. 387; Luce v. Dunham, 69 N. Y. 36. In regard to these cases it may be observed generally that the qualifying language was not so clear and explicit as that found in the present will. Moreover, the court found in the facts surrounding the disposition a clear indication that the testatrix could not reasonably have intended to include the widow within the scope of the language used. But in this case all the circumstances point in a contrary direction. The most conclusive answer, however, is to be found in the later utterances of this court on the question. In Betsinger v. Chapman, 88 N. Y. 487, this court held that the words "next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate" included the widow of a deceased person. No substantial difference can be found in the language of the statute in that case and the language of the will in this case. The words are as broad in the one case as in the other. It would be very difficult to state any good reason for giving a meaning to the words of a statute when used by lawmakers presumptively familiar with legal terms that is broad and liberal, and when the same words are used by a layman in his will a meaning which is narrow and technical. If in the nature of things any distinction is to be made, it should be in favor of the words used in the will. Judge Andrews, who spoke for the court, called attention to the earlier cases, and remarked that they construed the words according to their strict legal definition, and added: "But in the construction of wills, statutes, or other written instruments, the intention is the controlling consideration, and words of description will be held to include subjects to which they are not strictly applicable, if it appears from the context, or other circumstances which may be legitimately referred to, that such inclusion was intended, and this was conceded in the cases cited." He also called attention to the fact that primarily the husband, in popular, though inaccurate, speech was said to be next of kin to his wife, and, conversely, the wife the next of kin to the husband, and that in Schuyler v. Hoyle, 5 Johns. Ch. 206, Chancellor Kent said that the wife's choses in action vest in the husband, by the statute of distributions, "as her next of kin," and that similar language was used in the case of Whitaker v. Whitaker, 8 Johns. 112. It is impossible to read this case without finding in it a clear indication that the court intended to adopt a broader construction of the words "next of kin," when followed by a reference to the statute in such terms as are found in this will, than was given in the earlier cases referred to. The case was in some respects a clear departure from the adherence to strict legal definitions which controlled in these cases. But there is still a more recent case in this court that is very instructive upon this question. The strict legal meaning of the words "next of kin" is not clearer or better settled than the legal import of the words "personal representatives." The latter words almost universally mean executors or administrators, and yet in an action between an administrator and the widow and children of a deceased person, involving the right to money payable by the terms of a policy of insurance to the "legal representatives" of the deceased, it was held that the money belonged, not to the administrator, but to the widow and children. Griswold v. Sawyer, 125 N. Y. 411, 26 N. E. 464. Here, again, the court abandoned the technical legal meaning of terms, and took a broader view of the case, based upon the intention of the deceased when he procured the policy. So that in any reasonable view of this case the widow of the remainderman came within the scope of the provisions of the will, as one of the persons entitled ultimately to share in the fund. It is proper to observe that the broader meaning is the one adopted by the English courts when by the terms of a will personal property ultimately devolves upon "next of kin" or "heirs." These words in such cases are construed to mean "distributees." Withy v. Mangles, 10 Clark & F. 215; Evans v. Salt, 6 Beav. 266; Jacobs v. Jacobs, 16 Beav. 557; Re Newton's Trusts, L. R. 4 Eq. 171; Re Steevens' Trusts, L. R. 15 Eq. 110; Wingfield v. Dingfield, L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 658. And the same meaning is given to these words by the courts of many of our sister states when used in a will or other instrument with respect to the succession to personal property under such instruments. Sweet v. Dutton, 109 Mass. 589, 12 Am. Rep. 744; McGill's Appeal, 61 Pa. 46; Eby's Appeal, 84 Pa. 241; Welsh v. Crater, 32 N. J. Eq. 177; Freeman v. Knight, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 72; Croom v. Herring, 11 N. C. (4 Hawks) 393; Corbitt v. Corbitt, 54 N. C. (1 Jones Eq.) 114; Alexander v. Wallace, 8 Lea, 569; Collier v. Collier, 3 Ohio St. 369.

57 L. R. A.

The order appealed from should be modified by directing that one half of the fund be distributed to the widow, and the other half to the administrator of the mother, with costs to the administrator in this court, and to the widow in all the courts, payable out of the fund.

Bartlett, J., concurs with O'Brien, J.

Re Transfer Tax upon the ESTATE of Walden PELL, 1st, Deceased.

(171 N. Y. 48.)

1. A vested remainder cannot be made the subject of a transfer tax, although it does not come into possession of the re-

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that a statute taxing a right, already vested, to take shares of an estate of a person who died before the act was passed, is not an unconstitutional impairment of vested rights, see State ex rel. Gelsthorpe v. Furnell (Mont.) 39 L. R. A. 170.

As to inheritance tax on residuary estate, see Re Swift (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 709.

As to taxation of future contingent interests under collateral inheritance tax laws, see Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401, and note; Re Stewart (N. Y.) 14 L. R. A. 836; and Howe v. Howe (Mass.) 55 L. R. A. 626.

mainderman until after the passage of the statute, since such tax would diminish the value of a vested estate, impair the obligation of a contract, and take private property for public use without compensation.

2. A statute, the manifest purpose of which is to tax transfers of property, cannot be construed as imposing a direct tax upon the property to save it from being declared unconstitutional.
3. A tax on all remainders or reversions which vested prior to a certain date, but which shall not come into possession until after the passage of the act, even if it can be regarded as a tax on property, and not on transfers, is invalid as not bearing equally upon the entire class to which the property belongs.
4. A tax on remainders when they come into possession, of 5 per cent on some, 1 per cent on others, and on others nothing, even if it can be regarded as a tax on property, and not on transfers, is void for not apportioning the burden equally among the owners of the estates sought to be taxed.

(May 6, 1902.)

APPEAL by the administrator of the estate of Walden Pell, 1st, deceased, from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of the Surrogate for New York County denying his application to declare the estate exempt from taxation under the act relating to taxable transfers. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. Ellery Anderson, with Messrs. William Temple Emmet and P. Chauncey Anderson, for appellant:

The provisions of the transfer tax law cannot apply when there is no transfer of property whatever.

Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 330, 38 N. E. 311; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 6, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; Re Harbeck, 161 N. Y. 218, 55 N. E. 850; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

If the amendment under consideration be considered as imposing a succession or transfer tax upon the estate which vested April 14, 1863, it is retroactive and affects rights which had vested before its passage.

A retroactive statute which impairs the value of a vested estate is unconstitutional.

Germania Sav. Bank v. Suspension Bridge, 159 N. Y. 362, 54 N. E. 33; Benson v. New York, 10 Barb. 223; People ex rel. Fountain v. Westchester County, 4 Barb. 64; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; Sayre v. Wisner, 8 Wend. 661; New York & O. Midland R. Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 473; Berley v. Rampacher, 5 Duer, 183; Calkins v. Calkins, 3 Barb. 305; Danks v. Quackenbush, 1 Denio, 128, 3 Denio, 594; Wood v. Oakley, 11 Paige, 400; Young v. Henderson, 76 N. C. 420; Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lives & G. A. v. McClain, 105 Fed. 367; Brevoort v. Grace, 53 N. Y. 245.

If the amendment under consideration be considered as imposing a direct tax upon the property of the persons designated by 57 L. R. A.

the act, it cannot be sustained, because it is not uniformly imposed upon any class of property or class of persons.

Cooley, Taxn. chap. 5, p. 241; Lexington v. McQuillan, 9 Dana, 513, 35 Am. Dec. 159; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 599, 39 L. ed. 825, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502, 10 N. E. 685; San Bernardino County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 422, 30 L. ed. 127, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1144; Railroad Tax Case, 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. 722; Santa Clara Railroad Tax Case, 9 Sawy. 165, 18 Fed. 385; Northern P. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681; Fraser v. McConway & T. Co. 82 Fed. 257.

Messrs. Jabish Holmes, Jr., and Edward H. Fallows, for respondent:

The bequests of money and estates in remainder are clearly taxable under the provisions of § 230 of the taxable transfer law, as amended by chap. 76 of the Laws of 1899.

This amendment was passed March 14, 1899, and, as the life tenant did not die until December 20, 1899, the case is controlled by the provisions of that law.

The state has the general power to fix the time at which the right of succession shall be taxed and the time when the transfer shall take place.

Before the property is distributed the rights of the remaindermen are subject to the conditions, formalities, and administrative control prescribed by the state in the interest of its public order; and, if the state sees fit to impose a tax, there is not constitutional objection to its doing so.

Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 310, 39 L. R. A. 170, 51 Pac. 267; Oyon's Succession, 6 Rob. (La.) 504, 41 Am. Dec. 274; Deyraud's Succession, 9 Rob. (La.) 357.

The power of taxation possessed by the state extends to all species of property within the state, and its exercise does not deprive a person of property without due process of law.

Cooley, Taxn. p. 3; People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 423, 55 Am. Dec. 266; People v. Equitable Trust Co. 96 N. Y. 395; Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502, 10 N. E. 685; Re Dows, 167 N. Y. 232, 52 L. R. A. 433, 60 N. E. 439; Re Sherwell, 125 N. Y. 376, 26 N. E. 464.

Equal protection of the laws does not prohibit classification for taxation, provided the classification is reasonable, and all within the same class are treated the same under like circumstances.

Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

The amendment of 1899, even if retroactive, is not unconstitutional because the right to inherit or receive these future expectant estates, although created in 1863, was a continuing right and, like any other civil right created by the state, can be taxed at any time during its continuance, and before the right is exhausted by the actual receipt of the property.

People ex rel. Griffin v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 424; Astor v. New York, 62 N. Y. 591; Guliford v. Chenango County, 13 N. Y. 149; People ex rel. Crowell v. Lawrence, 41 N. Y. 141; Hersce v. Porter, 100 N. Y. 411, 3 N. E. 338; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 69, 41 N. E. 401; Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Re Vanderbilt, 50 App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1079; Orr v. Gilman, 193 U. S. 278, 46 L. ed. 196, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Re Doica, 167 N. Y. 227, 52 L. R. A. 433, 60 N. E. 439; Gelathorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 310, 39 L. R. A. 170, 51 Pac. 267; Wright v. Blakeslee, 101 U. S. 174, 25 L. ed. 1048; Wilcox v. Smith, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 596; Atty. Gen. v. Middleton, 3 Hurlst. & N. 125; Pennsylvania Co. for Ins. on Lives & G. A. v. McClain, 105 Fed. 367.

The law can be made retroactive because the tax is imposed on an existing right, which is valuable property.

Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 327, 38 N. E. 311; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252; Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 75, 41 N. E. 401.

The circumstance that when the right arose it was not covered by a tax law gives no such vested right as would save it from future taxation.

Re Vanderbilt, 50 App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Supp. 1079; People ex rel. Cunningham v. Roper, 35 N. Y. 629; People ex rel. Galatin Nat. Bank v. New York Tax & A. Comrs. 67 N. Y. 519; People ex rel. Sears v. Brooklyn, 84 N. Y. 613.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The testator, Walden Pell, 1st, died in the city of New York on the 14th day of April, 1863; and by the terms of his will he gave a life estate in all his property to his widow, with remainders over at her death, in equal shares (after making various bequests of personal property), to his nephews and nieces, and the issue of any deceased nephew or niece, together with one equal share thereof to his sister Emma. The life tenant, the widow, died on the 20th day of December, 1899, at which time all the estates in remainder came into the actual possession and enjoyment of the beneficiaries under the will and codicil. It is not disputed that under this will the bequests of personal property and the estates upon remainder of real estate vested in the beneficiaries at the time of the testator's death. Notwithstanding the vesting of these estates in the year 1863, it is contended on behalf of the comptroller of the city of New York that they are subject to the payment of the transfer tax, under an amendment of the general statute providing for taxable transfers (Laws 1899, chap. 76), being article 10 of an act in relation to taxation, constituting chapter 24 of the General Laws 57 L. R. A.

(Laws 1896, chap. 908, pp. 795, 868), which reads as follows: "All estates upon remainder or reversion, which vested prior to June 30th, 1885, but which will not come into actual possession or enjoyment of the person or corporation beneficially interested therein until after the passage of this act shall be appraised and taxed as soon as the person or corporation beneficially interested therein shall be entitled to the actual possession or enjoyment thereof." This amendment of 1899 became a law on March 14th of that year, the life tenant dying in the following December. It is conceded that the remainders in this case are controlled by this amendment, if it can be sustained as a valid exercise of legislative power.

The appellant insists that this amendment imposing a succession or transfer tax upon estates which vested April 14, 1863, is retroactive, and attempts to tax estates and rights which had vested long before its enactment; that, this being so, it violates the Constitution of the United States, which forbids any law impairing the obligations of contracts, and also the Constitution of the state of New York, which prohibits the taking of private property for public use without compensation. The appellant does not attack the constitutionality of the law simply because it is retroactive, but for the reason that it is both retroactive and effective to impair vested rights.

The language of this amendment of 1899 would seem to include all remainders created by deed or will which come within the restrictive time limitation therein fixed. Legislation which impairs the value of a vested estate is unconstitutional. Germania Sav. Bank v. Suspension Bridge, 159 N. Y. 362, 54 N. E. 33. In this case the legislature sought to confer the right of appeal after the expiration of the statutory limitation. In so far as this statute applied to existing judgments, it was held unconstitutional, but valid as to judgments thereafter recovered. Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291; Sayre v. Wisner, 8 Wend. 661; Danks v. Quackenbush, 3 Denio, 594; Wood v. Oakley, 11 Paige, 400; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, 62 Am. Dec. 160; New York & O. Midland R. Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 473. This court, in Re Seaman, 147 N. Y. 69, 41 N. E. 401, held that the taxable transfer act of 1892, which provided that "such tax shall also be imposed when any such person or corporation becomes beneficially entitled, in possession or expectancy, to any property or the income thereof by any such transfer, whether made before or after the passage of this act," was to be restricted to the case of grants or gifts causa mortis, mentioned in the preceding portion of the subdivision, and did not extend to transfers by will or intestacy, so as to subject to taxation rights of succession which accrued before the statute came into existence. Judge Finch said: "We have held that the tax is not upon the property which is transferred, but upon the right of succession which passes to the successor. Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 88, 18 L. R. A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096. A right of succession passed to the four living children of George at the death of testator. It came from him. It was transferred by him, taking effect at his death, and passed then or never. But the right itself, although vesting in the successors at once, had its own peculiar character. It could not ripen into possession or enjoyment until the death of the life tenants, and, before that event, was contingent solely as to the persons who should eventually take, and the proportions to be observed. The legatees, as a class, were certain. The particular individuals were alone uncertain. . . . To say that no beneficial interest passed into hands where it was taxable is very different from saying that no beneficial interest passed at all. The doctrine of the case [Re Ourtis, 142 N. Y. 219, 36 N. E. 887], and its manifest trend, was that, where the particular persons who were to have the beneficial possession were uncertain, the appraisal and collection must be adjourned until the uncertainty ended; but no new doctrine of the passing of the right of succession at a date later than that of the will was at all asserted. It is said, however, that the right of succession passing in remainder by the will was, at best, merely technical and nominal, and that the beneficial interest did not pass until the termination of the life estates. In one sense, that is true. The right of succession to specific individuals might prove barren, and for that reason the claim of the state should be adjourned, and the law of 1892 fully recognizes and provides for such an adjournment; but a necessary and admissible delay in appraisal and collection is a very different matter from an assertion that no beneficial right of succession passed at all until after the decease of the life tenants."

Under the original statute of 1885 it was the practice in some of the surrogates' courts of the state to assess the transfer tax on vested remainders not yet in possession, and in regard to which there was a contingency as to the members of a class who would take. This was obviously unjust, and this court determined that the assessment and collection of the tax should be postponed until the persons were known who should ultimately come into possession. Re Roosevelt's Estate, 143 N. Y. 120, 25 L. R. A. 695, 38 N. E. 281; Re Hoffman's Estate, 143 N. Y. 327, 38 N. E. 311. The rule thus laid down was clearly just, as otherwise a remainderman named in a will might be called upon to pay a succession tax upon property which he might never enjoy. The legislation of 1899, now under consideration, obviously proceeds upon a misapprehension of the effect of the absolute vesting of a remainder. Expectant future estates, as defined in the statute, expressly include all remainders, whether vested or contingent; and they are by statute descendible, devisable, and alienable. Moore v. Little, 41 N. Y. 66, 84. Mr. Fearne, in his work on Contingent Remainders (p. 364), says: "In general, it seems that contingent interests pass to the real or personal representatives, according to the nature of such interests, as well as vested interests, so as to entitle such representatives to them when the contingencies happen." Kenyon v. Sec, 94 N. Y. 563, 568. This court and the Supreme Court of the United States have held in numerous cases that the transfer tax is not imposed upon property, but upon the right of succession. It therefore follows that where there was a complete vesting of a residuary estate before the enactment of the transfer tax statute, it cannot be reached by that form of taxation. In the case before us it is an undisputed fact that these remainders had vested in 1863, and the only contingency leading to their divesting was the death of a remainderman in the lifetime of the life tenant, in which event the children of the one so dying would be substituted. If these estates in remainder were vested prior to the enactment of the transfer tax act, there could be in no legal sense a transfer of the property at the time of possession and enjoyment. This being so, to impose a tax based on the succession would be to diminish the value of these vested estates, to impair the obligation of a contract, and take private property for public use without compensation.

The learned appellate division reached the conclusion that this amendment of 1899 was unconstitutional, and we agree with them in that regard. They have, however, sustained this legislation on the ground that it is a direct tax upon property, and a legitimate exercise of the taxing power. In so holding, that learned court uses this language: "It may seem incongruous that a transfer tax act, which in principle was intended to impose a tax upon the right of succession, should be construed in such a way as to uphold the tax as one upon property. . . . Our conclusion, therefore, upon the whole case, is that, if the tax sought to be imposed could only be supported upon the ground that it is a tax upon the right of succession, then there would be objections, among them, constitutional ones, to its validity, but that, with reference to the estate here involved, if the act can be construed, — as, with some misgivings, we think it can, — as a tax upon property, it is free from constitutional objections, and the tax may be upheld." We are of opinion that it is a violent presumption as to the intention of the legislature to construe an act, which is avowedly designed to tax the succession of property on the death of its owner, as a direct tax. It would seem to be too clear for argument that the legislative intention in this regard was to deal with the act relating to taxable transfers, and with nothing else. In the first place, we have the title of chapter 76 of the Laws of 1899, enacting this amendment, as follows: "An Act to Amend Chapter 908 of the Laws of 1896, Entitled 'An Act in Relation to Taxation, Constituting Chapter 24 of the General Laws,' as Amended by Chapter 284 of the Laws of 1897, Relating to Taxable Transfers of Property." The 1st section thereof opens with these words: "Section 230 of chapter 908 of the Laws of 1896, . . .

relating to taxable transfers of property, is hereby amended to read as follows," etc. To say that the act was not an amendment of the law relating to taxable transfers of property is to contradict what plainly appears upon its face. We will once more quote the amendment: "All estates upon remainder or reversion, which vested prior to June 30th, 1885, but which will not come into actual possession or enjoyment of the person or corporation beneficially interested therein until after the passage of this act, shall be appraised and taxed as soon as the person or corporation beneficially interested therein shall be entitled to the actual possession or enjoyment thereof."

The intention of the legislature being so absolutely clear in the premises,—for it must be remembered that ever since the death of the testator this property has borne and discharged its annual taxes, just the same as other property,—we might well be justified in declining to further consider the question of whether this is an effort to impose a direct tax upon property.

Assuming, however, that the legislature intended to exercise its power of direct taxation, the learned counsel for the appellant insists that it is invalid for two reasons: (1) The law does not subject to the tax a class of property, but does subject certain designated persons, defined by the character of their ownership, to the payment of the tax; (2) the law does not apportion the burden equally upon all the owners designated, but discriminates between different owners, so that the share of the burden imposed as to some owners is 5 per cent, as to other owners it is 1 per cent, and as to still other owners it is nothing at all.

It is the undoubted rule that the legislature possesses unlimited power of taxation, except as restrained by constitutional provisions. These restraints require the taxation to be imposed according to well-settled general rules. In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 599, 39 L. ed. 825, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696, the Supreme Court of the United States lays down the following rule: "The inherent and fundamental nature and character of a tax is that of a contribution to the support of the government, levied upon the principle of equal and uniform apportionment among the persons taxed, and any other exaction does not come within the legal definition of a tax." Mr. Cooley, in his work on Taxation, at page 596 [2d ed. p. 215] says: "It is difficult to conceive of a justifiable exemption law which should select single individuals or corporations, or single articles of property, and, taking them out of the class to which they belong, make them the subject of capricious legislative favor. Such favoritism could make no pretense to equality. It would lack the semblance of legitimate tax legislation." The Supreme Court of the United States, in a recent case, decided March 10, 1902 (Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431), have considered the subject of classification very fully. The court says: "The difficulty is not met by saying that, generally speaking, the state, when enacting laws, may, in its discretion, make a classification of persons, firms, corporations, and associations, in order to subserve public objects. For this court has held that classification 'must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily, and without any such basis. . . . But arbitrary selection can never be justified by calling it classification. The equal protection demanded by the 14th Amendment forbids this. . . . No duty rests more imperatively upon the courts than the enforcement of those constitutional provisions intended to secure that equality of rights which is the foundation of free government. . . . It is apparent that the mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the 14th Amendment, and that in all cases it must appear, not only that a classification has been made, but also that it is one based upon some reasonable ground,—some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification,—and is not a mere arbitrary selection.' Gulf, C. & St. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 155, 159, 160, 165, 41 L. ed. 666, 668, 670, 671, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. These principles were recognized and applied in Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. 183 U. S. 79, sub nom. Cotting v. Godard, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30, in which it was unanimously agreed that a statute of Kansas regulating the charges of a particular stock-yards company in the state, but which exempted certain stock yards from its operation, was repugnant to the 14th Amendment, in that it denied to that company the equal protection of the laws." The case from which we have quoted above involved the validity of the Illinois trust statute of 1893, which was alleged to be in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The act was held unconstitutional for the reason that the 1st section thereof embraced all persons, firms, corporations, or association of persons who combine their capital, skill, or acts for any of the purposes specified, while the 9th section declares that the statute shall not apply to agriculturists or live-stock dealers, in respect of their products or stock on hand. This discrimination was held to render the statute invalid.

It is to be observed that the amendment of 1899, now under consideration, was further amended in 1900 and 1901 by changing the words, "June 30th, 1885," to "May 1st, 1892." While these changes do not affect the case at bar, still they indicate the legislative intention to narrow the application of this statute to a very limited number of individuals belonging to a larger class. The vice of this legislation is that it does not seek to impose a tax on all estates upon remainder, whether created by will or deed, that vested prior to June 30, 1885, but contains the further provision that the life estate must expire after the passage of the amendment on March 14, 1899. All the vested estates upon remainder or reversion, as to which the intermediate life estate terminated between June 30, 1885, and March 14, 1899, escape taxation, as they are not within the purview of the amendment of the latter year. The tax is therefore imposed upon a limited class of remaindermen, while others who have come into possession and enjoyment by reason of the termination of the life estate long after the early date fixed of June 30, 1885, are not taxed. The learned counsel for the appellant states a very apt illustration in his brief, as follows: "We often hear it declared that the legislature may designate watches and carriages as a class of property, and subject the same to the payment of duties or taxes; but would anyone claim that a law declaring that all watches or carriages which were purchased prior to June 30, 1885, should be appraised and taxed, could be sustained upon the ground that such law merely designated a class of property for taxation?" Where the statute declares that the owners of a particular class of property, acquired at a particular time, shall be taxed, it is equivalent to naming the owners of such property. It is in no sense a general classification. The principle involved in this mode of taxation is illustrated in Re Henneberger, 155 N. Y. 420, 42 L. R. A. 132, 50 N. E. 61, which involved the question whether a statute was a general or a private or local bill. The head-note reads as follows: "Although an act is drawn in general terms, if its provisions are such, in number and in character, as unduly, with reference to the constitutional purpose, to restrict its operation, and, to all intents, to confine it to a particular locality, it comes as much under condemnation as a local bill as though it designated the locality by name."

This amendment is clearly unconstitutional in another aspect, as it does not apportion the burden equally among the owners of estates sought to be taxed, for it imposes on some 5 per cent, on others 1 per cent, and as to other owners nothing at all. It is true, this discrimination was brought about because the legislature was dealing with a succession tax, and consequently maintained the differing rates of taxation found in the act in relation to taxable transfers. This is still further evidence that the intention of the legislature was not to exercise its power of direct taxation.

It follows that the amendment of 1899, whether regarded as a part of the act relating to taxable transfers, or an attempt on the part of the legislature to exercise its general power of taxation, is unconstitutional and void.

The order appealed from should be reversed, with costs, and an order duly entered declaring the estate of Walden Pell, 1st, to be exempt from the transfer tax.

Gray, O'Brien, Haight, Cullen, and Werner, JJ., concur. Parker, Ch. J., concurs only on the ground that chapter 76, § 7 L. R. A.

Laws 1899, does not provide for a direct tax upon property, and, in so far as it aims to tax transfers of estates already vested when the act was passed (which is this case), it is void.

Charles DAVIS et al., Respts.,
v.

NIAGARA FALLS TOWER COMPANY,
Appt.

(171 N. Y. 336.)

A landowner will be enjoined from maintaining a tower on his land in such a way that ice formed on it from freezing rain or spray from a cataract falls onto adjoining property so as to injure it and endanger human life.

(O'Brien, J., dissents.)

(May 29, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Niagara County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to enjoin the maintenance of a tower on defendant's property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bissell & Metcalf, for appellant:

The test of the permissible use of one's own land is not whether the use or the act causes injury to a neighbor's property, or that the injury was the natural consequence, or that the act is in the nature of a nuisance, but the inquiry is, Was the act or use a reasonable exercise of the dominion which the owner of property has by virtue of his ownership over the property, having regard to all interest affecting his own and those of his neighbors and having in view also public policy?

Booth v. Rome, W. & O. Terminal R. Co. 140 N. Y. 267, 24 L. R. A. 105, 35 N. E. 592.

No negligence being charged and the use being reasonable, the plaintiffs are remediless and the injury is damnum absque injuria.

Ibid.; Negus v. Becker, 143 N. Y. 303, 25 L. R. A. 667, 38 N. E. 290; Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co. 134 N. Y. 156, 17 L. R. A. 220, 31 N. E. 328; Vanderwiele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341; Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 487, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Moore v. Gadsden, 87 N. Y. 84, 41 Am. Rep. 352.

NOTE.—As to liability for discharging water from gutter upon neighbor's land, see, in this series, Fitzpatrick v. Welch (Mass.) 48 L. R. A. 278.

As to liability for injury by fall of snow from roof, see Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 695; and Lee v. McLaughlin (Me.) 26 L. R. A. 197.

As to liability for injury caused by escape of water from standpipe maintained on premises, see Defiance Water Co. v. Olinger (Ohio) 32 L. R. A. 736.

Messrs. Cohn & Chormann, for respondents:

The questions as to whether the tower as maintained is a nuisance and the amount of damages sustained by plaintiffs are both questions of fact, and the findings of the trial court having been unanimously affirmed by the appellate division, no question is presented for determination by this court.

New York Const. art. 6, § 9; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 191, subd. 4; Niagara Falls v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 168 N. Y. 610, 61 N. E. 185.

The finding that the maintenance of the tower by defendant constituted a nuisance was the only legitimate finding deducible from the evidence.

Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318; Walsh v. Mead, 8 Hun, 387; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537; Campbell v. Seaman, 63 N. Y. 568, 20 Am. Rep. 567; McKeon v. See, 4 Robt. 449; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L. R. A. 711, 25 N. E. 246; Garvey v. Long Island R. Co. 159 N. Y. 323, 54 N. E. 57; Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265; Penraddock's Case, 5 Coke, 100b; Fitzherbert, Natura Brevium, 184; Smith v. Ingersoll-Sergeant Rock Drill Co. 7 Misc. 374, 27 N. Y. Supp. 907, 12 Misc. 5, 33 N. Y. Supp. 70; Jarvis v. Baxter, 20 Jones & S. 109; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1350 et seq.; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 959; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 103, 104.

The remedy by injunction is proper.

Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 105 N. Y. 319, 11 N. E. 518; Goldschmidt v. New York Steam Co. 7 App. Div. 317, 40 N. Y. Supp. 169; Robinson v. Smith, 25 N. Y. S. R. 647, 7 N. Y. Supp. 38; Trenor v. Jackson, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 115; Dean v. Benn, 69 Hun, 519, 23 N. Y. Supp. 708; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 959; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1350 et seq.; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1662.

Cullen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs and the defendant are owners of adjacent properties on a street called the "Riverway," in the city of Niagara Falls. The plaintiffs have constructed on their land a building used for a museum, with large skylights in the roof. The defendant has built on its land a hotel and a tower or observatory. This tower is about 200 feet high, and is constructed of an open iron framework with braces and cross girders. At the top of the tower there is an observatory. Visitors are carried to and from the observatory by elevators. The whole structure is several feet within the limits of the defendant's land. As found by the trial court, during the winter ice is formed on the structure from sleet, melting snow, and spray from the Falls of Niagara, which accumulates, and when a thaw occurs large quantities of ice fall from the tower upon the roof of the plaintiffs' building, in size and with velocity sufficient to endanger human life, by means of which plaintiffs' building and property have been injured. The action was brought to recover damages, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from so maintaining the tower as to suffer ice to fall therefrom on the plaintiffs' property. The trial court also found that the injury to plaintiffs' building and the accumulation and fall of ice from the tower on the plaintiffs' property recurred each winter during periods of thaw. It further found that the tower was a safe, substantial, and suitable structure for the purpose for which it was used. On these facts it decided, as a matter of law, that the maintenance and construction of the tower was a private nuisance, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from so maintaining the structure that ice would form thereon and fall on the building and premises of the plaintiffs. A reference was ordered to ascertain the plaintiffs' damages. On the report of the referee final judgment was entered for an injunction and damages. This judgment was affirmed by the appellate division (67 N. Y. Supp. 1131) and an appeal has been taken to this court.

The affirmance below having been unanimous, the question presented here is whether the facts found entitle the plaintiffs to judgment. The court has not found any negligence in the character or plan of the structure maintained by the defendant. The element of negligence being thus eliminated, the plaintiffs' right to recover depends on the duty that the defendant owed to adjacent owners with reference to ice that might accumulate on its building. The law with reference to rainfall seems well settled. So long as the owner of land leaves it in its natural condition, he is not required to adopt any measures to prevent the flowage of surface waters from his premises on the adjoining land (Vanderwiele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341), but when he puts a structure on the land a contrary rule prevails. Then he must take care of the water that falls on his premises, except in the case of extraordinary storms. In Washb. Easements & Servitudes, *390, it is said of the right to eaves' drip: "It grows out of the fact that for one to construct the roof of his house in such a manner as to discharge the water falling thereon in rain upon the land of an adjacent proprietor is a violation of the right of such proprietor, if done without his consent, and this consent must be evidenced by express grant or prescription." In Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96, it was held that the defendant could not maintain a building upon his lot, the water falling from the roof of which injured the plaintiff's building, whether the water actually fell in the first instance on the defendant's land or not. In Walsh v. Mead, 8 Hun, 387, it was held that, where the roof of a building was so constructed as to render the snow falling upon it liable to be precipitated on the sidewalk without an adequate guard at the edge to retain it, it is in law a nuisance. The doctrine of Bellows v. Sackett was followed in Jutte v. Hughes, 67 N. Y. 267. There this court said: "The proof showed that the defendant had paved the yard, thus causing the water to accumulate, and render the yard less penetrable to the same, and conducted from the roofs of his houses to the privy in leaders and drains an unusual quantity of water beyond the capacity of the drains to carry away. This he had no right to do, and he was bound to take care of such water as fell and accumulated upon his own premises, and to prevent its causing any injury to the property of the plaintiff. Bellows v. Sackett, 15 Barb. 96; Foot v. Bronson, 4 Lans. 51. It matters not that the defendant did all that he reasonably could do to take the water off, if he suffered it improperly to increase on his own premises, and so as to flow on the plaintiff's premises." The decisions in other states appear to be uniformly to the same effect. In Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 194, 8 Am. Rep. 318, it was held that maintaining a building with a roof constructed so that snow and ice collecting on it from natural causes will probably fall onto an adjoining highway renders the owner liable to a person injured. It was there said: "It is not at all a question of reasonable care and diligence in the management of his roof, and it would be of no avail to the party to show that the building was of the usual construction, and that the inconvenience complained of was one which, with such a roof as his, nothing could prevent or guard against. He has no right so to construct his building that it will inevitably, at certain seasons of the year, and with more or less frequency, subject his neighbor to that kind of inconvenience; and no other proof of negligence on his part is needed. . . . He must, at his peril, keep the ice or the snow that collects upon his roof within his own limits, and is responsible for all damages if the shape of his roof is such as to throw them upon his neighbor's land, in the same manner as he would be if he threw them there himself." In Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 297, 27 Am. Rep. 705, the plaintiff's building was higher than the defendant's rear building, on the roof of which, on account of the height of adjacent buildings, water accumulated, and soaked through the plaintiff's wall. The defendant was held liable, and it was there said: "Having pitched his roof so as to carry the rainfall against and into the wall, it was his duty to raise the apron or flushing so high as effectually to protect the plaintiff's store from being flooded by the water thus brought down. He had no right to carry the rainfall on his premises into and upon the premises of the plaintiff. This was a wrongful act, which he could not justify by averring the openness of the wall of the plaintiff." In Tanner v. Volentine, 75 Ill. 624, it is said: "It is well settled that, if the owner of a building causes the water to flow from the roof upon the lot or ground of another, such other may recover of him for the damages sustained, unless prevented by some agreement." Hazeltine v. Edgmand, 35 Kan. 202, 57 Am. Rep. 157, 10 Pac. 544, is to the same effect. It is to be observed that the structure of the tower is not on the division line between the land of the plaintiffs and that of the defendant, and therefore the ice that is formed on the posts, beams, and girders is accumulated wholly on the defendant's land. If the shape of the tower was such that rain falling on the defendant's premises would run down the posts and then be cast on plaintiffs' building, plainly, under the authorities cited, the defendant would be liable. It can make no difference on the question of the defendant's liability that the water, instead of being precipitated on the plaintiffs' land, is allowed to congeal and freeze and fall in the form of ice. Nor is it material on the question of liability whether the ice proceeds from the fall of rain or from the spray and mist of Niagara Falls. The latter is just as much a natural phenomenon as the former. In climates where at certain seasons of the year the rain falls in the form of snow, the owner of land must build his structures with guards that would be unnecessary in places where there is no fall of snow. Likewise, where a structure is built so near Niagara Falls as to be subject to the precipitation thereon of spray and water from the falls, the owner is bound to take the necessary precautions against casting the water which falls on his own premises or the ice that is formed therefrom upon those of his neighbor.

I think the judgment below was right, and that it should be affirmed, with costs.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, Bartlett, and Werner, JJ., concur. O'Brien, J., dissents. Haight, J., not voting.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

BROWN & ALLEN et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
JACOBS PHARMACY COMPANY.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. A combination of mercantile deal-

*Headnotes by FISH, J.

ers to compel another dealing in similar goods to sell at prices fixed by it, or, upon his refusal so to do, to prevent those of whom its members are purchasing customers from selling goods to him, is, upon general legal principles, contrary to public policy and void; and the members of such a combination may, collectively or individually, be, by appropriate injunction, restrained from

NOTE.—For a case in this series similar to the one above, see Doremus v. Hennessy (Ill.) 57 L. R. A.

43 L. R. A. 797, holding that one whose business is injured by the action of a laundry asso-carrying into effect such purpose as that indicated above.

2. The act approved December 23, 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 68), commonly known as the "anti-trust act," is unconstitutional, as § 4 thereof, declaring that the provisions of the act "shall not apply to agricultural products or live stock while in the possession of the producer or raiser," makes the act repugnant to that provision of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States which declares that "no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."
3. There was no error in granting the injunction prayed for, save only as to one of the defendants, and the judgment excepted to being, as to all the others, correct, it will be affirmed, with appropriate direction.

(April 30, 1902.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to its business and to enjoin further injury by combining to prevent it from purchasing goods. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith, Hammond, & Smith, for plaintiffs in error:

It is quite legitimate for any trader to obtain the highest price he can for any commodity in which he deals.

1 Eddy, Combinations, § 193.

A combination is simply the co-operation of two or more persons to achieve a given result.

Id., § 167.

Voluntary associations to provide a standard of business integrity among the members, and adopt rules for just and fair dealing among them, and enforce the same by penalties, are of long standing, and recognized as lawful.

Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604-616, 43 L. ed. 300-306, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50.

It is a part of every man's civil rights that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice. With his reasons neither the public nor third persons have any legal concern.

Cooley, Torts, 278.

The exercise by one man of his legal right cannot be a legal wrong to another. Whatever one has a right to do, another can have no right to complain of.

Cooley, Torts, 688; Payne v. Western & A. R. Co. 13 Lea, 507, 49 Am. Rep. 676.

Damage occasioned by an act not in itself unlawful, done by a combination in the legitimate pursuit of its own lawful business, and with no intent to injure the party damaged, does not give rise to a cause of action.

1 Eddy, Combinations, § 477; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, sub nom. Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Assn. 21 L. R. A. 337, 55 N. W. 1119; Macaulay Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L. R. A. 455, 33 Atl. 1; Brewster v. C. Miller's Sons Co. 101 Ky. 368, 38 L. R. A. 505, 41 S. W. 301; Beywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373; Payne v. Western & A. R. Co. 13 Lea, 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666; Re Greene, 52 Fed. 104.

Messrs. King & Spalding and D. A. Loyless also for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Hamilton Douglas, Rosser & Carter, John L. Hopkins & Sons, and Arnold & Arnold for defendant in error.

Fish, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record in this case discloses that prior to the institution of the present action, and since then, there existed in the United States three organizations, known, respectively, as the Proprietary Association of America, the National Wholesale Druggists' Association, and the National Association of Retail Druggists. These associations occupying each toward the others close and intimate relations, had, among other things, the purpose of keeping up the prices of proprietary medicines, drugs, and other articles usually dealt in by those engaged in the drug trade. A local association was formed in Atlanta, known as the Atlanta Retail Druggists' Association. When it was first organized, Joseph Jacobs, secretary and treasurer of the Jacobs Pharmacy Company, the plaintiff in the present case, cliation in inducing people engaged in the laundry business not to work for plaintiff because she would not charge prices in accordance with a scale fixed by the association may recover damages therefor.

As to right of retail coal dealer injured by combination between wholesalers and favored retailers to monopolize the business and enhance prices, to damages and an injunction, see Hawarden v. Youghloheny & L. Coal Co. (Wis.) 55 L. R. A. 828.

For boycott or conspiracy to injure business generally, see Van Horn v. Van Horn (N. J. L.) 10 L. R. A. 184; Jackson v. Stanfield (Ind.) 23 L. R. A. 588; Graham v. St. Charles Street R. Co. (La.) 27 L. R. A. 416; Macaulay v. Tierney (R. I.) 37 L. R. A. 455; Brewster v. C. Miller's Sons Co. (Ky.) 38 L. R. A. 505; Hartnett v. Plumber's Supply Assn. (Mass.) 38 L. R. A. 194; Boutwell v. Marr (Vt.) 43 L. R. A. 803; Ertz v. Produce Exchange (Minn.) 48 57 L. R. A.

L. R. A. 90; Inter-Ocean Pub. Co. v. Associated Press (Ill.) 48 L. R. A. 568; and Ertz v. Produce Exchange (Minn.) 51 L. R. A. 825.

For other cases as to combinations to prevent competition and control prices, see United States v. Jellico Mountain Coke & Coal Co. (C. C. M. D. Tenn.) 12 L. R. A. 753, and note; Lovejoy v. Michels (Mich.) 13 L. R. A. 770, and note; More v. Bennett (Ill.) 15 L. R. A. 361; Texas Standard Cotton Oil Co. v. Adoue (Tex.) 15 L. R. A. 598; State v. Phipps (Kan.) 18 L. R. A. 657; Queen Ins. Co. v. State (Tex.) 22 L. R. A. 483; People v. Sheldon (N. Y.) 23 L. R. A. 221; Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. (Pa.) 24 L. R. A. 247; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 24 L. R. A. 73; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. (C. C. App. 3d C.) 24 L. R. A. 428; Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Assn. (Ill.) 27 L. R. A. 298; and People v. Milk Exchange (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 437.

was a member of it; but at that time it was distinctly understood and agreed among its members that it was to undertake no action with reference to the cutting of prices by dealers in drugs, or to control prices of the same. Afterwards the plaintiff, either by its methods of advertising, or certain things that it did in the conduct of its business, gave offense to the members of this association, and charges were preferred against Jacobs. He then withdrew from the local association. Some of the members of that association were members of one or more of the large associations above referred to. After the retirement of Jacobs, the local concern put in operation a scheme to prevent the pharmacy company from being able to buy goods with which to conduct its business. The main features of that scheme were that the local concern, by circulars, letters, or otherwise, undertook to notify wholesalers and manufacturers throughout the country that the pharmacy company was an aggressive cutter, and to request the persons or concerns addressed not to sell it any more goods; further, to require all salesmen representing the manufacturers or wholesale houses to procure from the local association a card, in order to procure which such salesmen had to sign an agreement not to sell the pharmacy company any goods; and another part of the scheme was to give the manufacturers and wholesalers to understand that, unless they refused to sell the plaintiff any goods, the members of the local association would not buy any more goods from them. In this condition of affairs, the plaintiff brought its equitable petition against the defendants, alleging, in substance, the facts set forth above, and praying for damages for alleged injuries to its business already done, and for an injunction to prevent the defendants from carrying into effect the scheme above outlined. The petition charged that the scheme was an unlawful conspiracy to destroy the plaintiff's business, and it more fully set out the manner in which this scheme was to be effectuated, by setting forth as exhibits, marked "A," "B," and "C," certain letters, etc., by means of which the defendants were seeking to accomplish the alleged unlawful purpose which the plaintiff was seeking to restrain. These exhibits were as follows:

Exhibit A.

Atlanta, Ga., March 28, 1901.

C. L. Stoney, President; W. B. Freeman, Vice President; R. L. Palmer, Treasurer; W. S. Elkin, Jr., Secretary, Atlanta Druggists' Association.
Gentlemen:—

Inclosed please find a copy of a resolution recently adopted by the Atlanta Druggists' Association. There are fifty-eight retail druggists and three wholesale druggists in this city, and among this number only one, a retailer, is designated as an aggressive cutter. Believing that, from a business standpoint, you would prefer the aid and support of fifty-eight (two of the wholesalers are also retailers) legitimate druggists, rather than that of one cutter, we feel sure that it will afford you pleasure to sign the inclosed agreement.

Awaiting an early reply, I am yours very truly,

[Signed] W. S. Elkin, Secretary.

Exhibit B.

We, the undersigned, hereby agree to sell goods of our manufacture (or manufactured by any other house that we may handle) in the city of Atlanta, Ga., and adjoining districts, only to those druggists who are members of the Atlanta Druggists' Association, and any others who have not been designated as aggressive cutters. We further agree not to sell any goods to department stores in the above-mentioned territory. We reserve the right to cancel this contract by giving notice to the secretary of Atlanta Druggists' Association.

Date, —.

Exhibit C.

A copy of resolution adopted by the Atlanta Druggists' Association, March 22d, 1901: Resolved: (1) That the Atlanta Druggists' Association adopt a card for salesmen reading: "This is to certify that Mr. —, representing—, has qualified, and is hereby recommended to the members of our association. Date, —. —, Secretary. (This card is only good for thirty days from date.)" (2) That salesmen's cards shall be required of all salesmen representing as follows: Drug jobbers; patent medicine manufacturers; pharmaceutical houses; proprietary medicine manufacturers; druggists' sundry houses who carry patent and proprietary medicines, proprietary articles, and medicated soaps; manufacturers of surgical supplies; and manufacturers of paper boxes and labels. (3) That the secretary shall issue cards only to salesmen who sign an agreement not to sell directly or indirectly any aggressive cutter or any department store. This agreement to be binding to house represented by salesmen signing same. (4) That where new remedies are being introduced, the salesmen require each purchaser to sign contract to sell such remedy at full printed or implied price. (5) That a copy of these resolutions be furnished each manufacturer who is requested to sign agreement.

The case was heard before Hon. J. H. Lumpkin, Judge of the Atlanta circuit, upon the application for an interlocutory injunction. A considerable amount of evidence was introduced, concerning which it is sufficient to say that the plaintiff established, substantially, the material allegations of its petition. It claimed an injunction both upon the general principles of the common law, and also under the terms of what is commonly known as the "anti-trust act" (Acts 1896, p. 68), passed by the general assembly of this state in 1896. The defendants attacked the constitutionality of that act, alleging that it is in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it denies to them the equal protection of the law, and deprives them of liberty and property without due process of law, and also abridges their liberties and immunities as citizens of the United States; that it is class legislation, and violates art. 1, § 4, ¶ 1, of the Constitution of Georgia. The judge granted the injunction substantially as prayed. After a careful investigation, we are satisfied that he was right in so doing, except in so far as it was made operative against the Lamar-Rankin Drug Company, one of the defendants which was not a member of the local association mentioned above, and against which, therefore, no injunction should have been granted. This minor error or inadvertency has been corrected by an appropriate direction in the judgment rendered by this court. It would not be profitable to set out, or even summarize, the voluminous evidence which was introduced at the hearing. We have already, in effect, stated that the evidence was sufficient to establish favorably to the plaintiff its contentions of fact. We shall therefore confine our discussion to the questions of law involved in the present writ of error. Their nature will be gathered from what has already been said, and from an examination of the headnotes preceding this opinion. We have been relieved of much labor by reason of the fact that the learned and able judge of the trial court filed in the case an elaborate and carefully prepared opinion. What follows is taken almost literally from the same. We omit, save as to extracts from authorities made by him, the use of quotation marks, for the sake of convenience, as we have seen fit to make some omissions, changes, and additions as to the several propositions stated and discussed by his honor. It is but fair, however, to add that the material which we have rendered available was all supplied by the work done by the judge below.

A conspiracy has been defined as a combination either to accomplish an unlawful end, or to accomplish a lawful end by unlawful means. This form of expression was used by Lord Denman in King v. Seward (1834) 1 Ad. & El. 706; Jones's Case (1832) 4 Barn. & Ad. 345. And though he is reported to have expressed himself somewhat differently in other cases (see passing remark in Queen v. Peck (1839) 9 Ad. & El. 686), this definition has been very widely accepted and quoted. See Bouvier, Law Dict., word, Conspiracy. Mr. Eddy, in his recent work on Combinations, gives the following definition, as comprehensive in its nature, and including both civil and criminal conspiracies: "Conspiracy is the combination of two or more persons to do (a) something that is unlawful, oppressive, or immoral; or (b) something that is not unlawful, oppressive, or immoral, by unlawful, oppressive, or immoral means; (c) something that is unlawful, oppressive, or immoral, by unlawful, oppressive, or immoral means." 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 171, 340. Conspiracies are often spoken of as civil or criminal. The terms "criminal" and "civil" are used, respectively, to designate a conspiracy which is indictable, or a conspiracy which will furnish ground for a civil action. To render a conspiracy indictable at common law, no overt acts in carrying out the design of the conspirators were necessary. The conspiring was sufficient to authorize an indictment. Yet it will be readily perceived that if the conspirators stopped with conspiring, and did nothing further in execution of the design, no injury would have been done which would furnish a basis for a civil action. But if, in carrying out the design of the conspirators, overt acts were done, causing legal damage, the person damaged had a right of action. Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 378. Hence arose the dictum that the gist of criminal conspiracy is the combination, and the gist of civil conspiracy is the injury or damage. And from this came certain rulings applicable to the two, respectively, which need not be discussed. Mr. Eddy says: "The law of civil conspiracy is a wider development and application of the law of criminal conspiracy. So far as rights and remedies are concerned, all criminal conspiracies are embraced within civil conspiracies,—the definition of the latter embraces the former." 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 364. That contracts and agreements in general restraint of trade are contrary to public policy and void is a principle so universally recognized that citation of authority is unnecessary to support it. It has been crystallized in § 3668 of the Civil Code of this state, where the expression is that contracts "in general restraint of trade" are contrary to public policy. Differences of opinion arise only when this general principle is to be applied to a particular case. Thus it is suggested, inasmuch as the evidence shows that not all of the druggists of Atlanta are members of the local association, but only about three fourths of them, that the combination or agreement was not obnoxious to this rule, or the rule declaring agreements or contracts tending to monopoly against public policy, even if it would have been so were all members. We do not think this distinction sound. Nothing is more common than for the courts to declare contracts between only two persons, who by no means control a particular kind of business, void, as contrary to public policy. It is the nature or character and tendency of the agreement which renders it objectionable, whether in fact the parties to it succeed in restraining trade generally, or stifling competition, or not. As to the matter of monopoly, it may also be said that if parties make contracts or agreements seeking to establish a monopoly, and do establish it as far as they can, surely they cannot say that the effort is legal if not completely successful.

In More v. Bennett (1892) 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361, 29 N. E. 888, it was held that an association of stenographers, of which one object was to control the prices to be charged for stenographic work by its members, by restraining all competition between them, was an illegal combination, although only a small portion of the stenographers of the city belonged to it. In the opinion, Bailey, J., page 80, 140 Ill., page 364, 15 L. R. A., page 891, 29 N. E. says: "Contracts in partial restraint of trade which the law sustains are those which are entered into by a vendor of a business and its goodwill with his vendee, by which the vendor agrees not to engage in the same business within a limited territory; and the restraint, to be valid, must be no more extensive than is reasonably necessary for the protection of the vendee in the enjoyment of the business purchased." To this have sometimes been added agreements of partnership or employment. Mr. Tiedeman says: "Following the reason of the rule which prohibits contracts in restraint of trade, we find that it is made to prohibit all contracts which in any way restrain the freedom of trade or diminish competition, or regulate the prices of commodities and services." Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 190. In Anderson v. Jett (1889) 89 Ky. 375, 6 L. R. A. 300, 392, 12 S. W. 670, it was held: "Rivalry is the life of trade. The thrift and welfare of the people depend upon it. Monopoly is opposed to it, all along the line. . . . The combination or agreement, whether or not in the particular instance it has the desired effect, is void. The vice is in the combination or agreement. The practical evil effect of the combination only demonstrates its character; but if its object is to prevent or impede free and fair competition in trade, and may in fact have that tendency, it is void, as being against public policy." See also Texas Standard Oil Co. v. Adoue (1892) 83 Tex. 650, 15 L. R. A. 598, 19 S. W. 274; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 263, 264, 23 L. R. A. 221, 34 N. E. 785. Under such circumstances the agreement is void, although the prices fixed at the time may have been reasonable. India Bagging Assn. v. Kock, 14 La. Ann. 164. Judge Taft, in the circuit court of appeals of the sixth circuit of the United States, in an able decision in the case of United States v. Addystons Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271, et seq., reviews the authorities on this subject. Among other things, he says (46 L. R. A. 131, 29 C. C. A. 152, 54 U. S. App. 748, 85 Fed. 283): "Much has been said in regard to the relaxing of the original strictness of the common law in declaring contracts in restraint of trade void, as conditions of civilization and public policy have changed; and the argument drawn therefrom is that the law now recognizes that competition may be so ruinous as to injure the public, and therefore that contracts made with a view to check such ruinous competition and regulate prices, though in restraint of trade, and having no other purpose, will be upheld. We think this conclusion is unwarranted by the authorities, when all of them are considered. . . . The manifest danger in the administration of justice according to so shifting, vague, and indeterminate a standard would seem to be a strong reason against adopting it." After considering a number of authorities, he says (page 136, 46 L. R. A., page 160, 29 C. C. A., page 60, 54 U. S. App., page 290, 85 Fed.): "In the foregoing cases the only consideration of the agreement restraining the trade of one party was the agreement of the other to the same effect, and there was no relation of partnership, or of vendor and vendee, or of employer and employee. Where such relation exists between the parties, as already stated, restraints are usually enforceable, if commensurate only with the reasonable protection of the covenantee in respect to the main transactions affected by the contract. But in recent years even the fact that the contract is one for the sale of property or of business and goodwill, or for the making of a partnership or a corporation, has not saved it from invalidity, if it could be shown that it was only part of a plan to acquire all the property used in a business by one management, with a view to establishing a monopoly. . . . Upon this review of the law and the authorities, we can have no doubt that the association of the defendants, however reasonable the prices they fixed, however great the competition they had to encounter, and however great the necessity for curbing themselves by joint agreement from committing financial suicide by ill-advised competition, was void at common law, because in restraint of trade, and tending to a monopoly."

This exactly answers one of the arguments advanced in the present case. It is contended that the members of the Atlanta Druggists' Association were not seeking to restrain trade or create a monopoly, but were only seeking to defend themselves against the cutting of prices by the Jacobs Pharmacy Company, and that really they were fighting an effort at monopoly. That fifty-eight druggists in the city of Atlanta should seriously claim to be in danger of a monopoly from one, which is not shown to have any more capital than any of them, or any more facilities for trade, or to be making any combination, or in fact doing anything to cause the present action on their part, except selling some articles of merchandise at low rates, is a position which cannot be sustained. This is the argument which is almost universally advanced by every monopoly or combination in restraint of trade. If it is sustained by the courts, then the rules of law as to such contracts and agreements might as well be wiped off the statute books. The decision just cited was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1899, except as to one mere inadvertence in respect to interstate commerce. In the decision the following is quoted approvingly from the opinion of Judge Taft: "It has been earnestly pressed upon us that the prices at which the cast-iron pipe was sold in 'pay' territory were reasonable. . . . We do not think the issue an important one, because, as already stated, we do not think that at common law there is any question of reasonableness open to the courts with reference to such a contract. Its tendency was certainly to give defendants the power to charge unreasonable prices, had they chosen to do so." 175 U. S. 211, 237, 44 L. ed. 136, 146, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96, 106.

Again, some courts have sought to draw a distinction between what they term "necessaries," or "the necessities of life," or "prime necessities," and contracts or agreements with reference to other articles of commerce or merchandise. But this distinction is not well founded. What is at one time a luxury at another is a necessity. The things which were considered sufficient to satisfy the description of necessities a few years ago, would be considered wholly insufficient now, under present conditions of civilization. How useful must a thing become before it enters the catalogue of necessities, so that contracts to restrain trade in regard to it, or to foster a monopoly in it, are void? The unsoundness in principle of such a distinction was treated of by Judge Taft in the Case of Addystone Pipe & Steel Co. already referred to. But if it were sound, it may be of interest to consider some of the articles which have been held of such necessity. In a note to be found in 74 Am. St. Rep. 268, 269, to the case of Harding v. American Glucose Co. 182 Ill. 551, 55 N. E. 577, the following are set out as having been held of such necessity as to make a combination in regard to them illegal: Beer, alcohol, distilling products, preserves, gas pipes, powder, harrows, capauls, envelopes, wire cloth, bluestone, cigarettes, etc. Now, if these articles are to be ranked as necessities, within the rule, it might as well be said at once that the rule applies to articles of merchandise generally.

The next position of the defendants, and the one which, on first presentation, seems to be their strongest defense on this part of the case, is that at common law contracts or agreements in general or unreasonable restraint of trade were merely void and unenforceable; that either party could defend against an action based on them, but that they were not illegal, in such sense as to give a right of action to third parties. While there may be conflict among the authorities, it seems to us that some confusion might have been avoided by bearing in mind the distinction between a contract or agreement merely in restraint of trade as between the parties, and a combination or contract to stifle competition, or a conspiracy to ruin a competitor. Thus, if one of two rival merchants, not purchasing the business of the other, contracted with him that the latter should cease business, and never enter mercantile pursuits at any time or place, the contract would be in general restraint of trade, and void, and could not be enforced. But it alone would not give a right of action to third parties; and although the retiring from business of one of the merchants might lessen facilities for trading, and incidentally cause inconvenience, or even put it in the power of the other to raise his prices, the contract, as such, would merely be void. But, on the other hand, suppose that two merchants should agree that one should retire from business, and that no other person should open a similar business, and, if he did so, that the two would drive away his customers, or break up his business by violence, threats, or like means; it would get beyond the domain of a mere nonenforceable contract, into the domain of a conspiracy. Or suppose that a number of merchants should agree to fix the price of certain goods, and not to sell below that price; if there were no statute on the subject, and the case rested on the common law, the agreement would simply be nonenforceable; but if they went further, and agreed that, if any other merchant sold at a less price, they would force him to their terms, or drive away those dealing with him, by violence, threats, or boycotting, it would cease to be a mere nonenforceable contract, and if, in its execution, damages proximately resulted to such other merchant, he would have a right of action. For two or more people to make an agreement which neither can enforce at law against the other is one thing; but to further agree, and under that agreement proceed to force another who is no party to it, against his will, to be governed by it, under penalty of financial ruin by driving off his customers, or the like, is, to use a favorite expression of Former Chief Justice Warner, "another and quite a different thing." There is no inherent wrong in the mere act of firing a pistol in a place where not prohibited by law, but it may become very wrong if it is fired at the person or property of another, and may give a right of action to him for resulting injury. A combination, like a revolver, should not be aimed maliciously or with a reckless disregard of the rights of others. Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L. R. A. 797, 802, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524, was an action on the case for damages on the ground that the members of an organization known as the Chicago Laundrymen's Association had fixed a scale of prices for laundry work, and had conspired to injure the plaintiff in her good name and credit, and to destroy her business, because she would not charge prices in accordance with such scale, and they were proceeding to carry out the conspiracy. It was held actionable. The court said: "A combination by them to induce others not to deal with appellee or enter into contracts with her, or to do any further work for her, was an actionable wrong. Every man has a right, under the law, as between himself and others, to full and free disposition of his own labor and capital according to his own will, and anyone who invades that right without lawful cause or justification commits a legal wrong, and, if followed by an injury caused in consequence thereof, the one whose right is thus invaded has a legal ground of action for such wrong. . . . An intent to do a wrongful harm and injury is unlawful, and, if a wrongful act is done to the detriment of the right of another, it is malicious; and an act maliciously done with the intent and purpose of injuring another is not lawful competition."

Boutwell v. Marr (1899) 71 Vt. 1, 43 L. R. A. 803, 805, 42 Atl. 607, 609, was an action for damages. An association of granite manufacturers prohibited, by resolutions, sales by its members to persons engaged in cutting, quarrying, or polishing granite in the New England states, New York city, and Vermont, who were not members, which enumeration included plaintiffs. There was a by-law which prohibited dealing with members not in good standing, and imposed fines for the violation of its rules. The defense did not concede that such a by-law was more coercive than to attempt to compel, by threats or intimidation, persons not members of the association to withdraw their patronage from plaintiffs, but contended that the by-law was less objectionable, because applying to members only. The court held both to be alike unlawful. It said (page 8, 71 Vt., page 805, 43 L. R. A., page 609, 42 Atl.): "Without undertaking to designate with precision the lawful limit of organized effort, it may safely be affirmed that when the will of a majority of an organized body, in matters involving the rights of outside parties, is enforced upon its members by means of fines and penalties, the situation is essentially the same as when unity of action is secured among unorganized individuals by threats or intimidation. The withdrawal of patronage by concerted action, if legal in itself, becomes illegal when the concert of action is procured by coercion. . . . It is clear that if the association had comprised but a small portion of the manufacturers, and had destroyed the plaintiffs' business by compelling the manufacturers to join them in withholding patronage, its members would have been liable." In Inter-Ocean Pub. Co. v. Associated Press (1900) 184 Ill. 438, 48 L. R. A. 568, 574, 56 N. E. 822, 826, an injunction was granted. The court said: "Competition can never be held hostile to public interests, and efforts to prevent competition by contract or otherwise can never be looked upon with favor by the courts. In People ex rel. McIlhenny v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 39 L. R. A. 373, 48 N. E. 1062, it is said (page 566, 170 Ill., 39 L. R. A. 376, and page 1065, 48 N. E.): Efforts to prevent competition and to restrict individual efforts and freedom of action in trade and commerce are restrictions hostile to the public welfare, not consonant with the spirit of our institutions, and in violation of law." Similar language is used in the case last above cited. 184 Ill. 438, 48 L. R. A. 568, 56 N. E. 826. In Reck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union (1898) 118 Mich. 497, 42 L. R. A. 407, 77 N. W. 13, an application for injunction was sustained. The court said (page 525, 118 Mich., page 418, 42 L. R. A., page 24, 77 N. W.): "The boycott condemned by the law is not alone that accompanied by violence and threats of violence, but that where the means used are threatening in their nature, and intended and naturally tend to overcome, by fear of loss of property, the will of others, and compel them to do things which they would not otherwise do." State v. Stewart, 59 Vt. 273, 59 Am. Rep. 710, 9 Atl. 559, arose on a demurrer to an indictment. In the opinion, Powers, J. (59 Vt. 286, 59 Am. Rep. 713, 9 Atl. 567), said: "The Reports, English and American, are full of illustrations of the doctrine that a combination of two or more persons to effect an illegal purpose, either by legal or illegal means, whether such purpose be illegal at common law or by statute, or to effect a legal purpose by illegal means, whether such means be illegal at common law or by statute, is a common-law conspiracy. Such combinations are equally illegal, whether they promote objects or adopt means that are per se indictable, or promote objects or adopt means that are per se oppressive, immoral, or wrongfully prejudicial to the rights of others. . . . The anathemas of a secret organization of men, combined for the purpose of controlling the industry of others by a species of intimidation that works upon the mind rather than the body, are quite as dangerous, and generally altogether more effective than, acts of actual violence." Page 289, 59 Vt., page 715, 59 Am. Rep., and page 568, 9 Atl. In Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 11, 8 Am. Rep. 287, Chapman, J., after giving various illustrations of actionable wrongs, says: "But as new methods of doing injury to others are invented in modern times, the same principles must be applied to them, in order that peaceable citizens may be protected from being disturbed in the enjoyment of their rights and privileges, and existing forms of remedy must be used."

In Gatzow v. Buening (1900) 106 Wis. 1, 49 L. R. A. 475, 81 N. W. 1003, it was held that damages were recoverable. It is true that a contract had been made, but the decision was not put upon that ground, but on the broader ground that the conduct of the defendants constituted an actionable conspiracy. Marshall, J., said (106 Wis. 13, 49 L. R. A. 475, 81 N. W. 1007): "This is an age of trusts and combinations of all sorts. There is clamor against them on the one hand, and for the privilege of combining upon the other, as if the law could be changed to fit the opinions and selfish ends of particular classes. There is clamor for laws to prevent combinations, while law exists that condemns most of them, which is as old as the common law itself, and sufficiently severe to remedy much of the mischiefs complained of that is actual; yet violations of such law are so common, and the remedy it furnishes so seldom applied, that its very existence seems in many quarters to be little understood." In Reg. v. Druiitt, 10 Cox C. C. 593, it was held that any combination of persons to stifle and prevent the free use of labor and capital within legitimate bounds is unlawful, and that the law furnishes a remedy therefor. The liberty of a man's mind and will to say how he shall bestow himself and his means, his talents and his industry, is as much the subject of the law's protection as is his body. A combination to do an act tending necessarily to oppress the public or oppress individuals, by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates, and give effect to the purpose of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief, is unlawful. Bishop, Crim. Law, § 177; Desty, Crim. Law, § 2; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159. Every agreement between two or more persons to accomplish a criminal or unlawful object, or a lawful object by criminal or unlawful means, is an unlawful conspiracy, and any person whose rights are injured by acts done in furtherance of such conspiracy has his action at law for redress in damages."

In Olive v. Van Patten (1894) 7 Tex. Civ. App. 630, 25 S. W. 428, where a petition alleged that defendants, who were lumber dealers, had formed an association and sought to prevent sales by manufacturers or wholesale dealers to any person not a dealer, except a railroad, at points where there was a dealer; that because of the refusal of the plaintiff, a sawmill owner and dealer, who was not a member, to join such association, and his exercising the right to sell to others than dealers, they had maliciously distributed circulars asking that patronage be withdrawn from the plaintiff until he agreed not to sell to others than dealers, thereby influencing others not to deal with plaintiff, to his injury,—it was held to state a good cause of action for damages and injunction. In Barr v. Essex Trades Council (1894) 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881, an injunction was granted, and an able opinion filed by Green, V. C. In Jackson v. Stanfield (1894) 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 588, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14, it was held that a combination of retail lumber dealers to destroy the business of brokers and commission dealers who did not keep a lumber yard with an assorted stock of lumber, by coercing wholesale dealers to refuse to make sales to such brokers, or lose the business of the members of such combination, was unlawful, and rendered a member who procured action by the association, to the injury of brokers, liable to the latter in damages; also that an injunction might be granted against enforcing an illegal agreement of dealers to injure the business of another person. See also Lucke v. Clothing Cutters & Trimmers' Assembly No. 7507; K. of L. (1893) 77 Md. 397, 19 L. R. A. 408, 26 Atl. 505; Code, § 3807; Witham v. Cohen, 100 Ga. 670, 28 S. E. 505.

Courts and text writers have not infrequently asserted that, as a general rule, a conspiracy cannot be made the subject of a civil action unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action. But if this be advanced as a rule of universal application, it does not stand unchallenged. In Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Asso. (1899) 103 Tenn. 99, 46 L. R. A. 561, 52 S. W. 853, 857, it is said: "It is entirely true, as in effect observed in McCaughey Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L. R. A. 455, 33 Atl. 1, and in Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, sub nom. Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Asso. 21 L. R. A. 337, 55 N. W. 1119, that, in the first instance, each member of the association had a perfect legal right to buy material and supplies exclusively from any dealer or dealers he might choose, and each dealer had an equal right to select members for his customers, and to confine his sales to them only. These were inherent rights, which no competitor was authorized to dispute, no court empowered to control or curtail. But in our opinion, it does not follow from this undoubted freedom of individual member and of individual dealer that all of the members may, as ruled in those cases, lawfully enter into a general and unlimited agreement, in the form of by-laws, that they and all of them will make their purchases from only such dealers as will sell to members exclusively. The premise does not justify the conclusion. The individual right is radically different from the combined action. The combination has hurtful powers and influences not possessed by the individual. It threatens and impairs rivalry in trade, covets control in prices, seeks and obtains its own advancement at the expense and in the oppression of the public. The difference, in legal contemplation, between individual right and combined action in trade, is seen in numerous cases. Any one of several commercial firms engaged in the sale of India cotton bagging had the right to suspend its sale for any time it saw fit. Yet an agreement between all of them to make no sales for three months without the consent of the majority 'was palpably and unequivocally a combination in restraint of trade.' India Bagging Asso. v. Kock, 14 La. Ann. 164. Any one of several companies had the right to sell the whole or only a part of its output to only such persons, in only such territory, and at only such prices as it pleased, yet it was inimical to the interests of the public, and unlawful for them to combine and agree that those matters should be determined and controlled by an agency jointly created for that purpose. Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co. 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159. The same was held to be true as to the individual company and the combined companies, respectively, in the Sugar Trust Case, 22 Abb. N. C. 164, 2 L. R. A. 33, 3 N. Y. Supp. 401, and 54 Hun. 354, 5 L. R. A. 386, 7 N. Y. Supp. 406. So one railroad company has the unquestioned right to charge reasonable rates for transportation, but it is not lawful for competing companies to mutually bind themselves to maintain those rates. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25. Individual boat proprietors may establish rules and rates for the conduct of their separate business, but the law does not allow them to form a combination, and by mutual agreement establish joint rules and rates. Hooker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio, 349, 47 Am. Dec. 258; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434, 49 Am. Dec. 282. One grain dealer is perfectly free to decide for himself what price he will offer for grain, but he is not allowed to enter into an agreement with the other grain dealers of his town, and thereby fix the price that all of them shall offer. Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, 22 Am. Rep. 171. A single brewer may fix his own price for the beer he sells. Nevertheless it is unlawful for an association of brewers to regulate the sales of its members. Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. 161 Pa. 473, 24 L. R. A. 247, 29 Atl. 102. Many other cases to the same effect in principle might easily be cited, were their citation deemed at all necessary."

Unquestionably, any person who does not occupy a public or quasi public position, like public officials, railroad companies, etc., or whose property has not become impressed with any public or quasi public use (Munn v. Illinois [1876] 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77), may ordinarily deal with any other person at his option. It may also be conceded, at least for the sake of the argument, that ordinarily a number of persons may, in concert, decline to sell or to buy from another. Yet the facts of the present case go much further than that. Here there was a combination, not merely agreeing not to deal with the plaintiff, but undertaking also to drive off and prevent others from dealing with it, and seeking to ruin its business by destroying its power to purchase goods unless it should submit to regulate its business or fix its prices as they desired. If the defendants, as individuals, or in any way, claim to have the right to fix the prices at which they will sell, how can they claim that plaintiff has no such right as to its own business? In Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L. R. A. 803, 42 Atl. 607, the supreme court of Vermont said that the view above referred to "would preclude a reliance upon the existence of an illegal purpose, and require that the means used be illegal. The agreeing together to effect an illegal purpose being itself illegal, it might seem that any act done in furtherance of the agreement, and resulting in damage, even though itself not a violation of right, would sustain a recovery. . . . If it be true, as a general proposition, that several may lawfully unite in doing to another's injury, even for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose, whatever each has a right to do individually, it by no means follows that the combination may not be so brought about as to make its united action an unlawful means." See also Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881; the strong opinion of Gibson, Ch. J., in Com. ex rel. Chew v. Carlisle, Brightly (Pa.) 36, 41, quoted at some length in one of the opinions in Knight's Case, 156 U. S. 35, 39 L. ed. 337, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 75, 8 Atl. 890, and cases cited in 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 360.

Certain portions of the annual address (in 1899) of the president of the National Association of Retail Druggists, as published in the American Druggist and Pharmaceutical Record, were introduced in evidence, from which it appears that, in discussing the power of combination as compared with individual effort, he said: "Nature, too, forgets the individual always. To the species alone is it kind. In the general uplifting alone does it glory. So must it be with man. Man is of nature, and must follow nature's bent. This tendency to associate, to unite, to combine, everywhere present, strangely active, is as resistless as is yonder great Niagara. Attempt to oppose it, and it spreads far and wide,—spreads with the opposing force, all the while accumulating power, until everything, even the mightiest, is swept before its immensity." And yet, when such mighty power, like a torrent, is turned upon an individual who declines to join or to do the bidding of those who direct the force and sell at prices dictated by them, for the purpose of crushing him and driving off those who would deal with him, under the threat that otherwise they will also be drowned in the resistless Niagara, shall courts of justice find no remedy? To protect the individual against encroachments upon his rights by greater power is one of the most sacred duties of courts. If there is any analogy between a combination of druggists to raise and maintain prices, and a biological species, the Darwinian theory is hardly a rule for a court in administering equity.

In contrast with this idea, the following vigorous language of Mr. Justice Bradley in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 116, 21 L. ed. 421, may be quoted: "For the preservation, exercise, and enjoyment of these rights [life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness], the individual citizen, as a necessity, must be left free to adopt such calling, profession, or trade as may seem to him most conducive to that end. Without this right he cannot be a freeman. This right to choose one's calling is an essential part of that liberty which it is the object of the government to protect, and a calling, when chosen, is a man's property and right. Liberty and property are not protected where these rights are arbitrarily assailed." This occurs in a dissenting opinion, it is true; but there was no difference among the members of the court as to the fact that a man's business is his property, the difference being as to the application of certain amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

It is generally held that, if the injury is malicious, the person injured has a right of action. Indeed, it may be said that malicious injury to the business of another has long been held actionable. See Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 115, 116, 30 Atl. 881, and citations. In the case of Mogul SS. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 608,—a case which will be referred to more fully presently,—Lord Justice Bowen said: "Now, intentionally to do that which is calculated in the ordinary course of events to damage, and which does in fact damage, another in that other person's property or trade, is actionable, if done without just cause or excuse. Such intentional action, when done without just cause or excuse, is what the law calls a malicious wrong." The decision in Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 115, 116, 30 Atl. 881, after citing this and other cases, proceeds: "When we speak in this connection of an act done with a malicious motive, it does not necessarily imply that the defendants were actuated in their proceedings by spite or malice against the complainant, Mr. Barr, in the sense that their motive was to injure him personally, but that they desired to injure him in his business in order to force him not to do what he had a perfect right to do. . . . If the injury which has been sustained or which is threatened is not only the natural, but the inevitable, consequence of the defendants' acts, it is without effect for them to disclaim the intention to injure. It is folly for a man who deliberately thrusts a fire-brand into a rick of hay to declare, after it has been destroyed, that he did not intend to burn it. . . . The law, as a rule, presumes that a person intends the natural result of his acts, and this is true with reference to civil as well as criminal acts." Courts will look at the real substance of things, and do not stop at the mere forms of words that may be employed. See More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L. R. A. 361, 29 N. E. 88.

We will now refer to some authorities cited by defendants. A leading case, in modern times, is the English case of Mogul SS. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 608. It may not be amiss to give briefly its history. It was first heard on application for injunction before Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and Lord Justice Fry in 1885. They held that a confederation or conspiracy by an association of shipowners which was calculated to have, and had, the effect of driving the ships of other merchants or owners, and those of plaintiffs in particular, out of a certain line of trade, even though the immediate and avowed objects were not to injure the plaintiffs, but to secure to the conspirators themselves a monopoly of the carrying trade between certain foreign ports and England, was, or might be, an indictable offense, and therefore actionable, if private and particular damage could be shown. But under the facts disclosed on that hearing, injunction ad interim was denied. L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 476. The case was afterwards heard by Lord Chief Justice Coleridge without a jury, and he rendered judgment for the defendants, holding that the evidence failed to show an actionable conspiracy, as alleged, and that it showed only sharp competition in business, including holding out inducements by rebates, advantages, etc., to those who would deal with defendants exclusively. (1888) L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544. He stated, however, that he had long doubted and hesitated in reaching this conclusion. In the court of appeal, the case was heard before Lord Esher, master of the rolls, and Bowen and Fry, L. JJ. Lord Esher was of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, but was overruled by the other two justices. (1889) L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, 601. In the course of the opinion of Fry, L. J., which has been frequently cited in other cases, he says: "The 57 L. R. A.

ancient common law of this country, and the statutes with reference to the acts known as badgering, forestalling, regrating, and engrossing, indicated the mind of the legislature and of the judges that certain large operations in goods which interfered with the more ordinary course of trade were injurious to the public. They were held criminal accordingly. But early in the reign of George III. the mind of the legislature showed symptoms of change in this matter, and the penal statutes were repealed (12 Geo. III. chap. 71), and the common law was left to its unaided operation. This repealing statute contains in the preamble the statement that it had been found by experience that the restraint laid by several statutes upon the dealing in corn, meal, flour, cattle, and sundry other sorts of victuals, by preventing a free trade in the said commodities, had a tendency to discourage the growth and enhance the price of the same. This statement is very noteworthy. It contains a confession of failure in the past; the indication of a new policy for the future. This new policy has been more clearly declared and acted upon in the present reign; for the legislature has, by 7 & 8 Vict. chap. 24, altered the common law by utterly abolishing the several offenses of badgering, forestalling, and regrating." He also says a reference to the statutes of 1871 and 1875, enlarging the power of combination among workmen and masters, is indicative of public policy in England at the time of the decision. We will presently compare this with the public policy of this state. The majority of the court of appeal found, as matter of fact, that the defendants were not engaged in a conspiracy or unlawful combination, and were not actuated by malice or ill will toward plaintiff, and did not aim at any general injury to plaintiff's trade,—the object being simply to divert the trade from plaintiff to defendants,—and that the damage to be inflicted was to be strictly limited by the gain which defendants desired to win for themselves; in other words, that it was a case of competition only. Of course, the loss which a rival may suffer from legitimate competition does not give a right of action. The case was carried to the House of Lords, and the judgment of the majority was affirmed. (1892) 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295; [1892] A. C. 25. Very full extracts from these decisions are made in 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 249. A careful consideration of the various decisions in this case will show that, in substance, it only held that where competition was lawful, even if sharp and the acts complained of were adopted for the advancement of the defendants' own trade, there was no actionable conspiracy, although plaintiff may have sustained loss thereby. If this decision should be deemed adverse to the views here presented, it may be well to contrast the public policy of this state with that mentioned by Fry, L. J. Engrossing, forestalling, and regrating still stand in our Code as criminal offenses, and the presiding judge is required to give the law in reference to these offenses specially in charge to the grand jury at each term of court. See Penal Code, §§ 662, 846. Our state Constitution declares that the legislature "shall have no power to authorize any corporation . . . to make any contract, or agreement whatever, with any such corporation [i. e., other corporations], which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses or to encourage monopoly; and all such contracts and agreements shall be illegal and void." Code, § 5800. See Central R. Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 583, (6), 629; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. American U. Teleg. Co. 65 Ga. 160, 38 Am. Rep. 781; Atlanta v. Stein, 111 Ga. 789, 51 L. R. A. 335, 36 S. E. 932. What was said arguendo in State v. Central R. Co. 109 Ga. 722, 48 L. R. A. 351, 35 S. E. 37, to the effect that all combinations are not necessarily illegal, has no application to the facts of the present case. As has been shown above, in the light of the evidence, it is futile for these defendants to claim that they were merely resisting an attack on the part of the plaintiff.

The following are some of the cases relied on by the defendants: Herriman v. Mensies (1896) 115 Cal. 16, 35 L. R. A. 318, 44 Pac. 660, 46 Pac. 730, arose on an action to enforce an accounting under an agreement for the formation of an association for doing the business of stevedores. It was held not to be illegal, though one provision included the fixing of prices to be charged by the members. There was no effort to force others to charge such prices; and it was said in the decision that there was nothing to show that the members comprised more than an insignificant part of the trade, in numbers or volume of business, or any such restriction "as to preclude fair competition with others engaged in the business." Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen, 499, will be found to have been decided on the idea of competition; but it is not a well-considered case, reviews none of the authorities (but one being cited), and decides only as to certain allegations on demurrer. It has been criticised by Mr. Eddy, whose book shows that he approached the subject without any prejudice against combinations. 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 571. Mr. Freeman, in his note to Harding v. American Glucose Co. (Ill.) 74 Am. St. Rep. 244, says: "Massachusetts seems also to have gone astray on the question of illegal combinations, . . . having confused the doctrine relating to contracts in restraint of trade and the doctrine against restrictions upon competition." Longshore Printing & Pub. Co. v. Howell (1894) 26 Or. 527, 28 L. R. A. 464, 38 Pac. 547, might be quoted as an authority for the plaintiff, except as to the necessity for injunction. The court says (26 Or. 548, 28 L. R. A. 474, 38 Pac. 553): "While conspiracy in itself is not an indictable offense under our law, all these authorities show conclusively that such a combination for the purpose of doing injury to the public or to individuals is per se wrongful. Civil consequences are not changed by reason of the fact that the combination is not made a statutory offense." When the court came to consider the question of the necessity shown for an injunction (there having been a demurrer), it said (page 552, 26 Or., page 475, 28 L. R. A., and page 555, 38 Pac.), that, although it might be inferred that a boycott was pending, they [certain notices] were not so positive nor so persistently and wickedly repeated and maintained as to authorize an injunction; and again (page 555, 26 Or., page 476, 28 L. R. A., and page 556, 38 Pac.): "There is no such persistent, aggressive, and virulent boycott now in progress," etc. It would seem to be rather too stringent to limit equity jurisdiction by so many adjectives. But in the present case the injury is in progress, and is still threatened. McCauley Bros. v. Tierney (1895) 19 R. I. 255, 37 L. R. A. 455, 33 Atl. 1, is another case relied on by defendants. If this decision is sound, it can only be on the idea that the defendants were seeking to obtain trade for themselves by saying, in effect: "If you deal with us, we will deal with you. If you deal with others, we will withdraw our patronage." Whether such an agreement was legally enforceable need not be discussed. There was no effort to compel or coerce others not members to be bound by their prices or views. If the decision in Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, sub nom Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwest-Lumbermen's Assn. 21 L. R. A. 337, 55 N. W. 1119, can be sustained, it must be on the same idea. No compulsory measures seem to have been used to enforce obedience on members; nor does there appear to have been any effort to drive away from plaintiff others than those voluntarily acting together in concert, and no pressure on outsiders to maintain prices or incur ruin. In truth, however, some of what was said in that decision is unsound, and not in accord with cases already cited. It has been considerably criticised. See Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Assn. 103 Tenn. 99, 46 L. R. A. 561, 52 S. W. 857; Eddy, Combinations, § 560, p. 476, note; Jackson v. Stanfield (1894) 137 Ind. 592, 23 L. R. A. 596, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14. Cote v. Murphy (1894) 159 Pa. 420, 23 L. R. A. 135, 28 Atl. 191, and Buchanan v. Kerr, 159 Pa. 433, 28 Atl. 195, held that where employees had entered into a combination to control by artificial means the supply of labor, preparatory to a demand for an advance in wages, a combination of employers to resist such artificial advance is not unlawful, since it is not made to lower the price of labor as regulated by supply and demand. Certain Pennsylvania statutes were also considered as indicative of public policy on the line of combining to meet combination. The strong statement of Gibson, J., in regard to conspiracies (Com. ex rel. Chew v. Carlisle, Brightly (Pa.) 40), is cited with approval. In Payne v. Western & A. R. Co. (1884) 13 Lea, 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666, there was no question of combination or conspiracy at all; and the supreme court of the same state rendered the decision in the later case of Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Assn., already referred to. John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Assn. 54 App. Div. 223, 66 N. Y. Supp. 615, is cited. We must leave to the honorable courts of that state to reconcile that decision with the principle ruled in John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Assn. 50 N. Y. Supp. 1064, where, as quoted in 1 Eddy, Combinations, § 330, p. 213, it was held: "It is in restraint of trade and unlawful for a manufacturer to become a party to a combination which shall prevent any of his customers from obtaining other goods of other manufacturers because those customers violate the agreement with him in respect to the cutting of prices;" and also with People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L. R. A. 221, 34 N. E. 785. It seems, too, that in some cases in New York and elsewhere an idea has arisen of determining how much competition is desirable, and apparently of holding that extreme competition is undesirable, and a combination to meet it is not unlawful. The fallacy of such a standard is clearly shown by Judge Taft in United States v. Addystone Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271, and by Mr. Freeman in his note to Harding v. American Glucose Co. (Ill.) 74 Am. St. Rep. 268. Breuster v. O. Miller's Sons Co. (1897) 101 Ky. 368, 38 L. R. A. 505, 41 S. W. 301, held that an association of undertakers might lawfully agree to decline to render service in their business to one who had refused to pay a bill to some member of the association for similar services previously rendered. Here, also, there was no effort to compel persons not members to uphold the prices or obey the dictates of the association, or to coerce members or others, but only a voluntary, united refusal to serve a person who would not pay for similar services. Continental Ins. Co. v. Fire Underwriters, 67 Fed. 310, sought to follow the decision in the Mogul Steamship Case, and held that the acts there complained of were for the purpose of competition, and not maliciously done. Here, again, there was no effort to drive out of business companies not members, further than nonintercourse, and not having the same agents. So far as the enforcing of these provisions by a penalty is concerned, the decision is in conflict with Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L. R. A. 803, 42 Atl. 607.

Finally, was the plaintiff entitled to an injunction? The usual grounds for the grant of an injunction in such cases are (1) an injury which threatens irreparable damage; or (2) a continuing injury, when the legal remedy therefor may involve a multiplicity of suits. "The difficulty of satisfactorily estimating damages to business is frequently recognized in applying those principles to suits relating to goodwill, trademarks, patent rights, and copyrights. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1352, 1354." Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 126, 30 Atl. 881 et seq., and authorities cited. Mr. Eddy says: "An injury is irreparable when the damage cannot be measured by any known pecuniary standard. The destruction of, or even injury to, a growing business, cannot very well be measured in damages, since it is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down any rule whereby a jury can definitely ascertain the damages inflicted. The owner of the business himself probably could not estimate his loss, and yet the loss would be beyond dispute." Citing authorities. 2 Eddy, Combinations, §§ 1013, 1024, 1026, pp. 1161, 1169, 1170; Blindell v. Hagan, 54 Fed. 40, affirmed on appeal in 56 Fed. 696. Several of the cases already cited arose upon applications for injunction, and apply to this feature of the case.

It is urged that the plaintiff was not entitled to equitable relief, because it did not come into a court of equity "with clean hands." The specific claim of uncleanness is that on some occasions it sold one drug or mixture, instead of, or purporting to be, another. This is denied. If it were true, it would be no defense to this case. If it is undertaken to coerce a dealer not to sell at reduced prices, and is sought unlawfully to destroy its business if it does so, an application by it for injunction is not successfully met by saying that it sold some spurious goods, or misrepresented some to customers in certain sales. It was money, not morals, that moved the defendants in their conduct toward it for cutting prices. The doctrine that a suitor must enter a court of equity "with clean hands" has reference to the transaction complained of by him. Ansley v. Wilson, 50 Ga. 425. If plaintiff sells adulterated drugs, it and its officers are liable to punishment under the criminal law. Penal Code, §§ 483, 484.

The learned judge did not err in holding that the defendants who are members of the Atlanta Druggists' Association, in the name of such association or otherwise, should be enjoined from sending out to wholesale druggists or proprietors of proprietary medicines, through the mails, or delivering them to them otherwise, the letter and agreement set out in Exhibits A and B to plaintiff's petition, or seeking to cause the latter to be signed by means of the letter set out in Exhibit A, or other like means, or sending out any letter, circular, or agreement of similar character, purpose, directly or indirectly, to wholesalers, jobbers, or proprietors; and from issuing to salesmen, and causing to be signed, the card agreement attached to the petition as Exhibit C, or any card or agreement of similar import or purpose; and from in any manner threatening or seeking to intimidate wholesalers or proprietors, and so prevent them from selling to plaintiff, as a cutter or aggressive cutter; and from conspiring and from seeking to prevent wholesale or other druggists from dealing with or selling to plaintiff by direct or indirect threats of cutting off their means of obtaining goods or merchandise, or of causing such means to be cut off, or of causing them injury or loss of custom if they should deal with or supply the plaintiff; and from taking part in or carrying out any conspiracy or combination for that purpose; and from designating or pointing out the plaintiff to other druggists' associations or their representatives as an aggressive cutter; and from writing or sending through the mails any card, circular, letter, or other written or printed communication conveying or intended to convey to proprietors or wholesalers throughout the United States that plaintiff is an aggressive cutter, and under the ban of the local organization, or of similar import.

2. The learned trial judge based his judgment, in part, upon the act of the general assembly approved December 23, 1896 (Acts 1896, p. 68), commonly known as the "anti-trust act." The defendants in the court below attacked the constitutionality of this act, and one of the exceptions to the judgment is that the court erred in holding it to be constitutional. Since this case was heard and determined in the lower court and argued here, the Supreme Court of the United States, in a decision rendered March 10, 1902, in the case of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, held the anti-trust statute of Illinois, which contained a provision that it should "not apply to agricultural products, or live stock in the hands of the producer or raiser," to be repugnant to the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it denied the equal protection of the laws of that state to those within its jurisdiction who were not producers of agricultural products or raisers of live stock. The anti-trust act of this state, above referred to, exempts from its operation "agricultural products or live stock while in the possession of the producer or raiser." Consequently, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we are constrained to hold that this exemption renders the act unconstitutional. As will have been seen, however, the judgment of the court was right, irrespective of the provisions of this act.

Certain assignments of error in the bill of exceptions complain, in effect, that the injunction was too broad, because it was operative upon the individual members of the association to which the defendants belonged, and therefore had the effect of cutting them off from the exercise of individual rights which it was their privilege to exercise, provided there was no unlawful conspiracy. The reply to this is that the judge found there was a conspiracy. He could not enjoin the combination in the abstract, but, to render any effective protection to the plaintiff, was obliged to enjoin the individual members of the association from doing the unlawful acts which they had conspired to do, and were actually doing when the petition was filed. It was the only possible way in which to make the writ of injunction of any avail. The defendants could not, fresh from the conspiracy, and inspired by the purposes thereof, fail to injure the plaintiff, if allowed to continue their unlawful acts under the guise of doing so upon their individual responsibility.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

All the Justices concur except Lewis, J., absent on account of sickness.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

L. L. WATSON, Appt.,

v.

W. A. DILTS.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. One frightening a woman so as to cause nervous prostration, by stealthily entering her home in the night-time and committing a trespass on her husband's property, is liable to her in damages therefor.
2. The nervous prostration of a woman may be the proximate result of stealthily entering her home in the night-time and committing a trespass on her husband's property.

(April 10, 1902.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Henry County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for injuries produced by fright. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

McGraw, Palmer & Kopp and Watson & Weber, for appellant:

A malicious, wilful, and intentional invasion of the rights of another, an intentional act or trespass which is intended to cause fright and terror, or which as a usual or ordinary result would tend to cause terror and fright, resulting in serious nervous shock, causing physical injury and prostration, and damage, is the basis of an action for damages.

NORM.—As to extent of trespasser's liability for consequential injuries resulting from the trespass, see also note to Wyant v. Crouse (Mich.) 53 L. R. A. 626, especially cases as to fright on page 633.

For fright as a basis for cause of action generally, see, in this series, Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 666, and note; Halle v. Texas & P. R. Co. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 23 L. R. A. 774; Sloane v. Southern California R. Co. (Cal.) 32 L. R. A. 57 L. R. A.

193; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. (N. Y.) 34 L. R. A. 781; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. (Mass.) 38 L. R. A. 512; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. (S. C.) 40 L. R. A. 679; Braun v. Craven (Ill.) 42 L. R. A. 199; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter (Tex.) 47 L. R. A. 325; Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. (Mass.) 47 L. R. A. 323; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller (C. C. App. 9th C.) 49 L. R. A. 77; and Tuttle v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. L.) 54 L. R. A. 582.

1 Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. § 43; Lombard v. Lennox, 155 Mass. 70, 28 N. E. 1125; Fillebrown v. Hoar, 124 Mass. 580; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 679, note, 52 S. C. 323, 29 S. E. 905; Hill v. Kimball, 7 L. R. A. 618, note, 76 Tex. 210, 13 S. W. 59; Barbee v. Reese, 60 Miss. 908; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Latimer, 128 Ill. 163, 21 N. E. 7, 28 Ill. App. 552.

Messrs. McCoid & Finley and Babb & Babb, for appellee:

Fright caused by defendant's negligence, unaccompanied by physical injury to the plaintiff except what might arise from the fright itself, will not serve as a basis for a cause of action.

Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 401, 42 L. R. A. 199, 51 N. E. 657; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666, 23 Atl. 340; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L. R. A. 781, 45 N. E. 354; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; White v. Sander, 168 Mass. 296, 47 N. E. 90; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L. R. A. 512, 47 N. E. 88, 172 Mass. 488, 43 L. R. A. 832, 52 N. E. 747; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 30 N. W. 435; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 202, 47 N. E. 694; Haile v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 L. R. A. 774, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. 557; Victorian R. Comrs. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, 47 L. R. A. 323, 55 N. E. 380; Mahoney v. Dankwart, 108 Iowa, 321, 79 N. W. 134; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 85 N. W. 618.

The allegations of the petition are not sufficient to bring it within the category of wilful injuries. The mere statement that an act was wilfully done, or that it was wrongfully done or maliciously done, is not an allegation of a wilful injury.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. *690, p. 832; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 202, 47 N. E. 695.

Wilfulness, or even malice, will not generally make an act actionable which is not so already.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. *688, p. 830; Bishop, Non Contract Law, § 143.

Damage from fright "is such an unusual occurrence that the law will not consider it the proximate result of the alleged negligence." The damage is "too remote."

Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 85 N. W. 618; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L. R. A. 666, 23 Atl. 340; Haile v. Texas & P. R. Co. 23 L. R. A. 774, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. 557; Victorian R. Co. v. Coultas, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 222; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L. R. A. 781, 45 N. E. 354; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 30 N. W. 435; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; White v. Sander, 168 Mass. 296, 47 N. E. 90; Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, 47 L. R. A. 323, 55 N. E. 380; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L. R. A. 512, 47 N. E. 88, 172 Mass. 488, 43 L. R. A. 832, 52 N. E. 747.

57 L. R. A.

Sherwin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition alleges that the plaintiff is a married woman, and that on the 9th day of February, 1900, she resided, with her husband and child, on a farm remote from the traveled highway; that in the night-time of said day, at about the hour of 11 o'clock, and after she, her husband, and her child had gone to bed, the defendant wrongfully, surreptitiously, and stealthily entered her said home, and went upstairs to the second story thereof, and, as the plaintiff then believed, to commit a felony; that the identity of the defendant was not known to her at the time she heard him enter the house and go upstairs, and that she called to her husband to follow him, which he did; that in her apprehension for her own, her child's, and her husband's life, from what appeared to her a threatened danger, she followed her husband up to the room where the defendant was found, and where she found him and her husband in what appeared to her to be an encounter, and an assault upon her husband; that she became greatly terrified thereat, and was attacked with a violent nervous chill of such severity that her nervous system completely gave way, and she became prostrated, and was confined to her bed with threatened neurosis, or paralysis, and suffered great mental and physical pain for nearly six weeks, during all of which time she was confined to her bed, and unable to attend to her household duties. The demurrer to the petition is based on the ground that the damages claimed are too remote and speculative, and that the plaintiff seeks recovery for fright and injuries resulting therefrom without any physical injury to her which caused the fright. The petition alleges physical injuries resulting from the fright caused by the defendant, and the demurrer thereto raises the question whether recovery may be had for physical injuries so caused.

Many cases have been before the courts in which the question of a recovery for mental pain alone, and for physical disability produced by fright, unaccompanied by physical impact, have been decided; and the decisions on these questions are in conflict, though it is probably true that the numerical weight of authority denies the right of action. But the cases so holding are not in harmony as to the reasons given for denying the right of action; some of them held that the injury is not the proximate result of the alleged negligent or wrongful act, while others refuse a recovery for the reason that it is practically impossible to satisfactorily administer any other rule and serve the purposes of justice. The latter rule is the one adopted in Massachusetts. Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L. R. A. 512, 47 N. E. 88. We shall not take the time to review the cases in detail which hold to the doctrine that no recovery can be had. A large majority of them are cases in which the simple charge of negligence was made, and in many of them no claim was made for physical disability resulting from the fright. A review of some of the cases will be found in Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 401, 42 L. R. A. 199, 51 N. E. 657. See also note in Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 666. Our attention has not, however, been called to any case in which the facts averred are precisely parallel to the facts in this case, and in no case to which we have been cited, and in no case which our own investigation has discovered, have we found facts alleged which so strongly condemn the unlimited application of the rule contended for by the appellee as do the facts pleaded in the case at bar. This defendant, in the night-time, stealthily and unbidden invaded the home of the plaintiff and her husband and family. When he entered the house and went to an upper room, she did not know who it was, nor his purpose and intent in thus breaking and entering their home. It was an unlawful and lawless trespass on his part, no matter whether he entered with the intent to steal the personal property of the inmates of the house or whether he was in quest of other game. Nor does it matter, in our judgment, that the trespass was committed on property belonging to the husband. It was her home as well as that of her husband; her right to its peaceful and quiet enjoyment day or night was equal to that of her husband; and any unlawful entry or invasion thereof which produced physical injury to her was a wrong for which she ought to recover. Let us go a little further with the case, and suppose that his purpose had been to ransack the house, and steal therefrom; that he went in masked, and with a deadly weapon in his hand. His discovery there under such circumstances might well cause alarm to the boldest man, and, if it produced nervous prostration and physical disability, the theory, no matter what its reason, that would say there was no actionable wrong, would be too fine spun and too cold for our sanction. Nor could it be said, under such circumstances, that the prostration resulting from the fright so caused was not the proximate or probable result of the defendant's act. "Proximate cause is probable cause; and that the proximate consequence of a given act or omission, as distinguished from a remote consequence, is one which succeeds naturally in the ordinary course of things, and which, therefore, ought to have been anticipated by the wrongdoer." 1 Thomp. Neg. § 156. It is within the common observation of all that fright may, and usually does, affect the nervous system, which is a distinctive part of the physical system, and controls the health to a very great extent, and that an entirely sound body is never found with a diseased nervous organization; consequently one who voluntarily causes a diseased condition of the latter must anticipate the consequence which follows it. The nerves being, as a matter of fact, a part of the physical system, if they are affected by fright to such an extent as to cause physical pain, it seems to us that the injury resulting therefrom is the direct result of the act producing the fright. Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 108 Mass. 285, 57 L. R. A.

38 L. R. A. 512, 47 N. E. 88; Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 7 L. R. A. 618, 13 S. W. 59; Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 52 S. C. 323, 40 L. R. A. 679, 29 S. E. 905; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L. R. A. 203, 50 N. W. 1034; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 14 L. R. A. 85, 50 N. W. 238; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; Lombard v. Lennox, 155 Mass. 70, 28 N. E. 1125; Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72, 62 N. W. 1. It is undoubtedly true that the door should not be thrown wide open for trumped-up claims on account of injuries resulting from fright, and we do not intend to so open it in this case. Each case must, of necessity, depend on its own facts. We held in Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 85 N. W. 618, that no recovery could be had for the death of a horse alleged to have been caused by fright, because death therefrom could not be anticipated, and hence it was not the proximate result of the defendant's negligence. In Mahoney v. Dankwart, 108 Iowa, 321, 79 N. W. 134, the question before us was not decided. That case was disposed of on the facts there presented, and was a case of simple negligence. The reasoning of the Massachusetts cases should not be applied to this case, for greater evil would result from a holding of no actionable wrong than can possibly follow the rule we announced. We do not concern ourselves with what the trial of this case may disclose, but hold a cause of action stated in the petition.

The demurrer should therefore have been overruled. Reversed.

ELLA EDGINGTON by Ida M. Meyers, Her Next Friend,

v.
BURLINGTON, CEDAR RAPIDS, &
NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Appt.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. A child seven years and eight months old cannot be held to be negligent, as matter of law, in playing on an unfenced turntable.
2. A railroad company is liable to infants of tender years for injuries inflicted by a turntable maintained by it in an unfenced lot so near a public way as to be likely to attract children to play on it, unless it exercises reasonable care to keep it safely fastened.
3. The sufficiency of the fastening of a turntable to prevent injury to children playing on it is a question for the jury where it was undone by one of them.

NOTE.—As to liability of railroad company for injuries to children trespassing on turntable, see also, in this series, Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Robertson (Tex.) 14 L. R. A. 781, and note; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. (N. Y.) 27 L. R. A. 724; and Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich (N. J. L.) 41 L. R. A. 831.

For other cases in this series as to contributory negligence of children, see Glason v. Smith (Mass.) 55 L. R. A. 622, and footnotes thereto.

4. A child cannot be held to any greater degree of care than may reasonably be expected from its years, experience, and intelligence.
5. A railroad company is not relieved from liability to a child injured by an improperly fastened turntable by the fact that the fastenings were undone, and the table put in motion, by playmates of the injured child.

(April 12, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Muscatine County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Carskaddon & Burk and S. K. Tracy, for appellant:

The manner of constructing and operating railroads is not to be left to the uncertain and varying opinions of jurors.

Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Driscoll, 176 Ill. 330, 52 N. E. 923.

The law does not require defendant to so fasten or secure its turntables that boys, or children like the one injured, cannot displace such fastenings and put the table in motion.

Kolsti v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 133, 19 N. W. 655.

Plaintiff was, at the date of her injury, seven years and eight months old, and bright in common sense. Children about eight years old are not of such tender years that they may be presumed not to know the danger of being about a railroad track, or not to comprehend the possible result of such an act as plaintiff exposed herself to if she should slip or fall.

Ibid.; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, 39 N. E. 1068; Braque v. Northern C. R. Co. 192 Pa. 242, 43 Atl. 987; Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 571, 52 N. E. 1014.

The law imposed no duty on defendant to use care to keep this turntable in such a condition that a child might not be injured who should go there uninvited and a trespasser.

Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 257, 61 N. W. 967.

Children may be trespassers. Defendant, therefore, owed plaintiff no greater duty than if she had been an adult.

If it was negligence to maintain this pattern of fastening to this turntable defendant is not liable therefor, as it is not, as to a trespasser, liable for mere negligence. If the lock appliance was such as is commonly adopted by railroads, at such places and in general use, it is not negligence to use such a fastening.

Mears v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Iowa, 204, 72 N. W. 509; McCarthy v. Boston Duck Co. 165 Mass. 165, 42 N. E. 568; Shadford v. Ann Arbor Street R. Co. 111 Mich. 57 L. R. A.

390, 69 N. W. 661; Omaha Bolting Co. v. Theiler, 59 Neb. 257, 80 N. W. 821.

Where courts have held railway companies liable for such accidents it has always been where there have been no locks or appliances used. Such was not the fact in case at bar.

Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, 39 N. E. 1068; Casista v. Boston & M. R. Co. 69 N. H. 649, 45 Atl. 712; Twist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 164, 39 N. W. 403; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573, 41 S. W. 62.

There was no proof in the case showing, or tending to show, that the plaintiff was too young to know that it was dangerous for her to attempt to get upon the moving table. On the contrary, her mother testifies that she was a bright and intelligent child, and had good common sense. Upon this proof, and with no evidence in conflict with it, the law must pronounce the plaintiff sui juris, and guilty of contributory negligence.

Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 571, 52 N. E. 1018; Wendell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 425; Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 93 Iowa, 252, 61 N. W. 967; Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602, 27 N. W. 776; Ritz v. Wheeling, 45 W. Va. 262, 43 L. R. A. 148, 31 S. E. 993; Murphy v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 575, 23 N. E. 887; Richards v. Connell, 45 Neb. 467, 63 N. W. 915; Braque v. Northern C. R. Co. 192 Pa. 242, 43 Atl. 987; Talty v. Atlantic, 92 Iowa, 135, 60 N. W. 516; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 91 Tex. 60, 38 L. R. A. 573, 41 S. W. 62; Barney v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 126 Mo. 372, 26 L. R. A. 847, 28 S. W. 1070; 3 Elliot, Railroads, §§ 1259, 1260 et seq.; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, 39 N. E. 1068; Merryman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 634, 52 N. W. 545; Carson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 96 Iowa, 583, 65 N. W. 831.

When the question is, Did a person use ordinary care in a particular case? the test is the amount of care ordinarily used by men in general in similar circumstances.

Kolsti v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 133, 19 N. W. 655; 1 Bailey, Personal Injuries Relating to Master & Servant, §§ 22, 72, 74; Fuller v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 175 Mass. 424, 56 N. E. 574; Black, Accident Cases, p. 45.

Messrs. C. A. W. Kent and Clymer A. Coldren for appellee.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant company owns and operates a line of railroad entering the city of Muscatine, Iowa. In connection with its station and yards at this place, it maintains and uses a turntable, a well-known machine or device for turning locomotives. This table turns about a central point or axis, and, when unfastened, is easily revolved by hand power applied to bars or levers. At and prior to the time of the accident upon which this action is based the table, when not in use, was ordinarily fastened by a pin, bolt, or latch of some kind, the exact description of which is not disclosed by the record before us. This machine stood upon an unfenced lot, owned by the defendant, near the line of a public alley, and at a distance from the street variously estimated at from 80 to 300 feet. Children of the neighborhood were to some considerable degree in the habit of passing through the alley, and at times loitered and played upon and about the turntable. This practice does not seem to have been with the express knowledge or consent of the defendant, and upon at least one occasion its employees drove the children away. There was a box factory not far distant, to which also children resorted by way of the alley, and near the turntable, to gather scraps of wood for fuel. On the 16th day of June, 1899, the plaintiff, then a child of seven years and eight months, living in that neighborhood, started from her home, with several little girls somewhat older, intending to go to the box factory for wood. Passing down the alley, they stopped to play upon the turntable. One of them removed the bolt or catch which fastened the machine, and soon afterward two small boys arrived, and began to revolve it, while the other children rode upon the platform or frame. Under these circumstances the plaintiff in some manner stepped or fell into the space between the outer edge of the table and the wall of the pit in which it revolved, receiving severe, painful, and permanent injuries. Negligence is charged against the defendant upon the theory or claim that the turntable was a dangerous machine, and of such nature and construction as to be specially attractive to children; and that, having placed it upon an open lot near a public way, where they might reasonably be expected to pass or gather to play, it was defendant's duty to use reasonable care to so guard or fasten said machine as to prevent injury to young and inexperienced children who might be tempted to play upon it. Defendant denies that it was charged with any such duty, and denies that it failed to exercise all reasonable and proper care in the premises. It further insists that the children, in playing upon the turntable, were trespassers, and the law imposed upon the defendant no duty to exercise any care for their safety except to refrain from wilful or wanton injury to them after discovering them upon its property. It also claims that in entering upon the company's property without permission and in playing upon the turntable the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and therefore is not entitled to recover damages.

The question of the liability of a railroad company for injuries to children playing upon its turntables is one of interest and importance. During the last thirty years it has called for the consideration of many courts, both state and Federal, throughout the United States, and has developed two opposing and irreconcilable lines of decisions, to which more extended reference is hereinafter made. Two cases of the kind have heretofore been presented to this court (Carrson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 96 Iowa, 583, 65 N. W. 831, and Merryman v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 634, 52 N. W. 545); but in each instance the party injured had reached an age and maturity to be properly chargeable with contributory negligence, and a recovery was denied, without considering whether the company may be held liable under other circumstances. In this case, however, the child is of such tender years that we cannot say, as a matter of law, she was guilty of negligence contributing to her own injury, and we are thus called upon for the first time to assume a position upon the controverted question. In view of its importance, and the wide divergence in the views of eminent courts and lawyers, we have endeavored to give the subject that careful attention which it deserves, and, in our judgment, the conclusion at which we have arrived has the support of the greater weight of authority, and is most nearly in accord with the principles which underlie and pervade the laws of civilized society.

That the ordinary turntable is a very dangerous machine for children to play with, and possesses strong attractions to their sportive instincts, is manifest from the numerous cases of injuries thus received which come before the courts for adjudication. These cases are all strongly alike in their circumstances, and, generally speaking, the story of one is the story of all,—an open lot; a turntable insecurely fastened, or wholly unfastened; children gathering upon it, some riding while others work the levers; a misstep, a fall, and a little body is maimed, or a young life is extinguished. It is useless to moralize upon the instinct for play which controls the action of a child, or argue for its control by parental authority and guidance. It exists, ingrained in the child's being, and we must deal with it as we find it. Nothing seems to appeal to it more strongly than some device in the form of a merry-go-round; and the temptation to ride it, if the opportunity offers, is practically irresistible, until approaching maturity brings some reasonable measure of judgment and discretion. Accepting these facts, we come to the vital question raised by the issue now before us: Is a landowner who exposes dangerous but attractive machinery upon an open lot in close proximity to a public way or other place where he may reasonably expect young children will pass or resort for play under any duty to fasten or guard such machinery, or to exercise care to provide against children interfering with it to their injury? The first instance in which this question, as applicable to turntables, was presented for judicial consideration, appears to have been in the Federal courts. See Stout v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 2 Dill. 294, Fed. Cas. No. 13,504, and the same case on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745. In some of the reviews of this case it is assumed that this decision announces a new principle, and marks the abandonment of rules which prior thereto defined the extent of a man's dominion over his own property. This, as we shall try to demonstrate, is an error. It is true, the facts involved in the Stout Case were new to the courts, but the principle which controlled its decision has its root and life in the fundamental doctrines of the common law. The principle remains invariable, but its application must, of necessity, be extended and adjusted to the varying circumstances of business and of life. With the steady advance in industrial arts and sciences, the rapid expansion and diversification of business interests, and the increasing density of population forcing men into closer contact, and compelling them, in gradually increasing measure, to yield something of individual right for the general good, there arise from day to day for settlement by the courts disputes which are without precedent in their facts and circumstances. But their settlement requires no mere judicial experimentation, for somewhere in the treasure house of the law there is to be found the principle upon which the rights of parties may be justly determined. The basic principles of our jurisprudence have their birth in the enlightened conscience and the ineradicable distinction between right and wrong, and are unchangeable; but, as we have already noted, their use and application extend and expand to meet the demands of changing conditions.

The law thus presents the seeming paradox of a structure which is at once a finished product and a ceaseless evolution, developing new strength with each new demand upon its energies. The exercise of the sovereign power of eminent domain by private citizens for private profit; the extension of railroads to every city and every hamlet; the development of electricity as a source of heat, power, and light; the discovery and development of oil, gas, and other riches concealed beneath the earth's surface,—are but samples of a multitude of new and vastly important interests with which the courts have had to deal as matters of first impression within the memory of living men, and in each instance the seeming chaos of conflicting rights and theories has been reduced to order, and adjusted according to old-time rules wisely construed in the light of the conditions calling for their application. Not that every case has been correctly decided, or that every judicial opinion with which the books are filled is sound; but the great body of the law, as pronounced by the courts, is alive with the spirit of justice, and its tendency is uniformly and irresistibly toward the right. The rules which assure to a person dominion over his own property, and deny protection to the trespasser in his wrongdoing, are of the most ancient origin, and their justice is undisputed; but they are not entirely without limitation or restriction. Ordinarily, the owner of property, real or personal, may use or deal with it as he likes; but this right can never be divorced from the responsibility suggested by the maxim, Sic utere tuo alienum non lēdas. In other words, no man is at liberty, under the law, to so use his own as to endanger the person or property of his neighbor. This is a necessary result of social organization, and an indispensable requisite of social order. So long as one lives in comparative isolation, this rule rests lightly upon him, and he need scarcely feel its restraint; but, as population multiplies, and he is brought into proximity with his kind, he finds the range in which he may exercise absolute control over his own is constantly being narrowed. As a lone dweller upon the prairie, he may indulge in target shooting, may store tons of dynamite in his dwelling, may erect a slaughter house upon his premises, may leave undrained his malaria-breeding swamps, may leave unguarded pits and traps in his open fields; for these things affect none but himself. When neighbors arrive, or his home becomes one of the many in a city or town, he must adjust himself to the changed conditions, and at all times have due regard for the effect which his conduct in the use of his property may have upon others. Railroad companies are comparatively new entities or agencies in the world of business, but in the law they are persons, and hold and manage their property subject to the same limitations and obligations which characterize ownership in the hands of the individual citizen. But we are told that, conceding all this, the law makes no provision for the protection of a trespasser, and that he who enters unbidden upon the land of another assumes all risk of pitfalls, traps, and other sources of danger which may be there encountered, and that he who officiously or needlessly intermeddles with property of any kind to which he has no legal right has no cause of complaint if thereby injured. This is a general rule of unquestioned authority and justice, but, as we have said, like other rules, is not without limitation. If the owner of a lot build a fence around it, or if he cultivate or reside upon it, or beautify it with lawn and ornamental shrubbery, he gives notice to the world of his desire for its exclusive enjoyment, and he who disregards this notice takes upon himself the risk to which his trespass may expose him. If, however, the owner take away the fence, throwing his lot open in unused and unimproved condition, leaving the public to swarm over and across it and children to play upon it, he cannot be held innocent of wrong if by his act this semi-public use of his property is made hazardous to human life, and he fails to take reasonable precaution against the danger thus occasioned. Nor is such responsibility confined entirely to vacant and unused property. Assume, for instance, that a manufacturer of merry-go-rounds desires to erect one, not for public use, but to test the machinery, or to advertise his business to the people passing by, and he chooses for that purpose an open lot, owned by him, bordering immediately upon a much-used street, or immediately adjoining the unfenced grounds of a primary school building. He knows that the sight of this device with its gaudy trappings will be absolutely certain to attract to it a swarm of children, who will just as certainly play with it; and, if he leave it thus exposed and unfastened, and thereby some inexperienced and immature child is caught and crushed in the machinery, it would be a shocking distortion of sound principle to hold that no liability is here incurred. Nor has the law, in its wonderful adaptation to the prosecution of order and promotion of right conduct, waited for the advent of turntables before settling the rule which governs this case. The rule did not have its origin in the Stout Case, nor is its application to turntable accidents an exceptional proposition by which railroad companies are singled out for a liability which does not, under similar circumstances, attach to every property owner. For many years the courts have been gradually approaching unanimity upon the idea that the law which withdraws its protection from the trespasser applies to the unheeding infant with less harshness than to the adult, and under some circumstances does not apply in any degree. So, too, the once prevalent doctrine, based upon mistaken precedent rather than principle, which held the unconscious child by imputation or substitution guilty of the negligence of its parent, has been relegated in most jurisdictions to its proper place among the barbarisms from which the law has happily been redeemed.

Let us now turn to some of the leading authorities bearing upon this discussion. No case directly bearing upon the duty which a property owner may owe to an infant (even when such child is technically a trespasser) has been more often quoted than Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29. The facts giving rise to this case were as follows: The defendant, being the owner of a horse and cart, left them standing unhitched in the street while he entered a shop. During his temporary absence a little child climbed into the cart, while another undertook to lead the animal, with the result that an accident occurred, and the child upon the cart was injured. The court held the defendant liable, Lord Denman pronouncing the judgment. It is there said: Suppose the plaintiff "merely indulged the natural instinct of a child in amusing himself with the empty cart and deserted horse. . . . The defendant cannot be permitted to avail himself of that fact. The most blamable carelessness . . . having tempted the child, he ought not to reproach the child with yielding to that temptation." Speaking also of the claim that the plaintiff could not recover because of contributory negligence, Lord Denman says: "The child, acting without prudence or thought, has, however, shown these qualities in as great a degree as he could be expected to possess them." That this decision was not at once recognized by all English courts is shown by the later case of Mangan v. Atterton, L. R. 1 Exch. 239, in which a child was denied damages for injuries received while meddling with a machine left unguarded upon the street. The reason made use of to justify this result has been the subject of severe criticism, and is now, in effect, overruled by Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 327, where it is said: "It appears to us that a man who leaves in a public place, along which persons, and amongst them children, have to pass, a dangerous machine, which may be fatal to anyone who touches it, . . . is not only guilty of negligence, but of negligence of a very reprehensible character." Of Mangan v. Atterton it is said by an able law writer: "Nothing worse than this as a specimen of judicial reasoning can be found in the reports." Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 139; and a like opinion is expressed in Thomp. Neg. 1045. In Abbott v. Macfie, 2 Hurlst. & C. 744, we have a somewhat peculiar case. A property owner had set up a shutter on his own premises, but without secure fastening, near where children were wont to play. A child tampered with the bolt, and the shutter, falling, injured both this child and another. The latter was permitted to recover damages, the court saying that, while the fastening was sufficient for ordinary purposes, yet, "having regard to the risks to which, in the locality where it was, it was exposed," the jury was authorized to find the owner negligent. The other child was not allowed to recover, because of its direct interference with the shutter,—a nice distinction, which, assuming both children to be too young to exercise care or prudence, few courts of this day would be willing to follow. The relaxation of the strict rule of the law in favor of children is again to be noted in Jewson v. Gatti, 2 Times L. R. 441. Here a little girl, loitering by the way, was looking into a cellar, where persons were engaged in scene painting. While thus engaged, a railing against which she leaned broke, and precipitated her into the area. In discussing the case the court used the following language: "There was painting going on in the cellar, and it must have been known that painting would attract children; and then a bar was put up, ostensibly as a protection, against which children would naturally lean while looking down into the cellar. This was almost an invitation—certainly an inducement—to the children to lean against the bar." In Harrold v. Watney, 78 L. T. N. S. 788, decided by the English court of appeal in 1898, the doctrine of Lynch v. Nurdin is expressly approved; the court saying of it: "That case has never been overruled or questioned." The authority is there cited in support of the right of action for damages in a child who was injured by the falling of a rotten fence upon which it climbed by the roadside, and, among other things, the court says: "When considering whether the nuisance was the cause of the accident, it is a good test to see whether what the child did was something which ought to have been present to the mind of the defendant as a possible and probable result of leaving the fence in a dangerous condition." But, whatever may be said as to the prevailing rule in England, the doctrine of Lynch v. Nurdin has been followed with very little dissent in this country. To this point we have the authority of Mr. Beach (see Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 141) for the statement that the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts "is the only court in this country that has not affirmed Lynch v. Nurdin," and our own investigation tends to confirm the assertion, although in some states the principle involved has been obscured by inconsistent decisions. Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261; Brennan v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 45 Conn. 284, 29 Am. Rep. 679; Brinkley Car Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ark. 545, 31 S. W. 154; Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 12 N. E. 451; Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 332; Schilling v. Abernethy, 112 Pa. 437, 56 Am. Rep. 320, 3 Atl. 792; Kinchlow v. Midland Elevator Co. 57 Kan. 374, 46 Pac. 703; Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 551, 50 Pac. 450; Schmidt v. Kansas City Distilling Co. 90 Mo. 284, 59 Am. Rep. 16, 1 S. W. 865, 2 S. W. 417; Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206, 39 N. E. 484; Siddall v. Jansen, 168 Ill. 43, 39 L. R. A. 112, 48 N. E. 191; Coppner v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Ill. App. 600; Young v. Harvey, 16 Ind. 314; Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 109 Ind. 183, 58 Am. Rep. 387, 6 N. E. 310, 10 N. E. 70; Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 119; Passamaunuck v. Louisville R. Co. 98 Ky. 205, 32 S. W. 620; Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 778, 2 So. 178; Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 514, 51 Am. Rep. 154, 19 N. W. 257, 57 Mich. 107, 23 N. W. 606; Tully v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 2 Penn. (Del.) 537, 47 Atl. 1019; Westerfield v. Lewis, 43 La. Ann. 63, 9 So. 52; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, 98 Am. Dec. 175; Gunderson v. Northwestern Elevator Co. 47 Minn. 161, 49 N. W. 694; Biggs v. Consolidated Barb-Wire Co. 60 Kan. 217, 44 L. R. A. 655, 56 Pac. 4; Woods v. Trinity Parish, 21 D. C. 540; Hutson v. King, 95 Ga. 271, 22 S. E. 615; Barnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 420, 2 Car. & K. 661; Lowe v. Salt Lake City, 13 Utah, 91, 44 Pac. 1050; Morrow v. Sweeney, 10 Ind. App. 626, 38 N. E. 187; Marble v. Ross, 124 Mass. 44; Daley v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 26 Conn. 591, 68 Am. Dec. 413; Kopplekom v. Colorado Cement-Pipe Co. (Colo. App.) 64 Pac. 1047; Ricketts v. Markdale, 31 Ont. Rep. 610.

Some critics have sought to weaken the force of Lynch v. Nurdin, and to distinguish it from the line of cases to which we have referred, by saying that in the former the child was in the public street, and therefore the rule as to trespassers did not apply to it. The suggestion is fallacious and misleading. The cart was also on the public street. It was rightfully there; and the child, when he climbed into it without leave, was as much a trespasser in the eye of the law as it was possible that a child of its years could be,—as much, indeed, as if he had wandered across the boundary line of defendant's land. The defendant was held liable, not because the plaintiff was not a trespasser, nor because the horse and cart were not rightfully upon the street, but because he knew, or, as a reasonable man, ought to have known, that in thus leaving his property exposed he was offering a dangerous temptation to the thoughtlessness of childhood, and used no care to prevent injury therefrom. None of the many precedents we have above cited are turntable cases and in nearly every instance the injured person was a technical trespasser. They unite, however, in giving vigorous expression to the rule that whether the attractive character of the danger and its unguarded condition are to be construed as an implied invitation to the child to enter upon the property of another, or whether such use of one's own property is a violation of the fundamental doctrine requiring the owner to have a care that his neighbor suffers no harm at his hands, no man, even upon his own premises, may rightfully expose to the approach of young children a temptation which is likely to attract them into danger, without using care to avoid their injury. It by no means follows that a property owner is an insurer of the safety of children who come upon his premises. His obligation is simply that which attaches to every member of society when he undertakes to exercise a personal right in a manner which may affect the welfare or safety of another member,—the obligation of reasonable care. Discharging that obligation, he has done his duty, and assumes no liability, whatever happens; but, failing therein, he is justly responsible for the effects of his negligence. In Birge v. Gardiner, 19 Conn. 507, 50 Am. Dec. 261,—a Connecticut case,—the defendant placed a heavy gate upon his own land on or near the border of a private lane, where children were wont to pass. A child took hold of the gate, and it fell upon him. It was held a proper case for the jury to say "whether such child ought to be chargeable with fault, so as to defeat his recovery, or whether or not the acts done by him were not rather the result of childish instinct, which the defendant might easily have foreseen." In Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr,—a Pennsylvania case,—the defendant was the proprietor of a factory within the limits of a city. For its private use it maintained an alley, closed with gates, upon which the words "Private" and "No Admittance" were conspicuously posted. In the alley was a heavy platform, so hinged as to be lifted and lowered for some purpose in connection with the business. The gate was sometimes left open, and on one such occasion several small children strayed into the alley, and were playing under the upraised platform, when it fell, crushing them with its weight. The court says: "It is true that, where no duty is owed, no liability arises; . . . but it has been often said duties arise out of circumstances. Hence where the owner has reason to apprehend danger, owing to the peculiar situation of his property and its openness to accident, the rule will vary.

. . . Can it be righteously said that the owner of such a dangerous trap, held by no fastening, . . . so often open and exposed to the entries of persons on business, by accident or from curiosity, owes no duty to those who will be probably there? The common feeling of mankind, as well as the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas, must say this cannot be true; that this spot is not so private and secluded as that a man may keep dangerous pits or deadfalls there without a breach of duty to society. On the contrary, the mind, impelled by the instincts of the heart, sees at once that in such a place, and under these circumstances, he had good reason to expect that one day or other someone, probably a thoughtless boy in the buoyancy of play, would be led there, and injury would follow,—especially, too, when prompted by knowledge that a fastening was needed." In a later case (Gramlich v. Wurst, 86 Pa. 74, 27 Am. Rep. 684), while holding the circumstances insufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover, the court says of Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr: "No case was ever more justly decided. . . . The children were trespassers certainly; but then they were children, and the defendants were bound to have regard to the reckless and thoughtless tastes and traits of childhood." The Kansas court (Price v. Atchison Water Co. 58 Kan. 551, 50 Pac. 450), applying the rule to the owner of a reservoir which was so constructed that a person falling into it or entering it could not easily escape, by reason of which a young boy was drowned, makes use of this language: "Without doubt the common law exempts the owner of private grounds from obligation to keep them in a safe condition for the benefit of trespassers, idlers, . . . or others who go upon them, not by invitation, express or implied, but for pleasure, or through curiosity. . . . The common law, however, does not permit the owner of private grounds to keep thereon allurements to the natural instincts of human or animal kind without taking reasonable precautions to insure the safety of such as may be thereby attracted to his premises. To maintain upon one's own property enticements to the ignorant or unwary is tantamount to an invitation to visit and to inspect and enjoy, and in such cases the obligation to endeavor to protect from the dangers of the seductive instrument or place follows as justly as though the invitation had been express." The same principle was approved in a somewhat similar case by the supreme court of Illinois. Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206, 39 N. E. 484. The question engaged the attention of the Kentucky court in a case (Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193) where the defendant piled lumber upon his own land, where children were in the habit of playing. One of the piles, being negligently built, fell, killing plaintiff's young son. The rule is there expressed as follows: "As a general rule, the owner of land may retain to himself the sole and exclusive occupation of it; but, as property in lands depends upon municipal law for its recognition and protection, the individual use and enjoyment of it are subject to conditions and restraints imposed for the public good and from a reasonable and humane regard for the welfare and rights of others. Hence, according to the maxim, Sic utere, etc., a party may be made liable for the negligent use of his property whereby the person or property of another has been injured. It has been held that a party is guilty of negligence in leaving anything in a place when he knows it to be extremely probable that some other person will unjustifiably set it in motion to the injury of a third person. . . . It is a reasonable and necessary rule that a higher degree of care should be exercised toward a child incapable of using discretion commensurate with the perils of his situation than one of mature age and capacity; hence conduct which, toward the general public, might be up to the standard of due care, may be gross or wilful negligence when considered in reference to children of tender age and immature experience. While, therefore, the owner of land is not bound to provide against remote and improbable injuries to children trespassing thereon, there is a class of cases which hold owners liable for injuries to children, although trespassing at the time, when, from the peculiar nature and open and exposed position of the dangerous defect or agent, the owner should reasonably anticipate such an injury to flow therefrom as actually happened." In a later case (Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Gastineau, 83 Ky. 119), the same court says: "Undoubtedly children of tender years should not be treated strictly as trespassers when, guided by childish instincts, they stray upon the track or into the yard of a railroad. . . . One may incur liability for an injury to a child of tender years by leaving dangerous machinery where it is accessible to him, although there would be no liability to an adult, or child of years of discretion, under the like circumstances. . . . A child without discretion, although a trespasser, occupies a legal attitude to the company similar to that of an adult who is not a trespasser. . . . Of course, we do not mean by this to say that a railroad company is an insurer against accidents to children, and that it is liable for injuries to them which cannot well be foreseen; but, if they are of such tender years as to be devoid of discretion, then justice and the dictates of humanity require the exercise of reasonable care to prevent their being placed in danger, even though they may be technically trespassers." The Mississippi court, in the case of the death of a child by falling into an excavation, says (Mackey v. Vicksburg, 64 Miss. 778, 2 So. 178): "Whether what was done was reasonably calculated to entice a child, following its instincts of curiosity or love of liberty, to escape from the yard, and enter upon the dangerous path, is determinable as a question of fact, and not of law. If the defendant, by the exercise of reasonable forethought, could have anticipated the probability of the child's action, it should have guarded against the danger. . . . If it failed so to do, it failed in a duty which rested upon it, and is not relieved from responsibility even though the child was a trespasser in going upon the premises." In a Tennessee case (Whirley v. Whiteman, 1 Head, 614) the defendant was the owner of a mill standing upon his own premises and 20 feet away from the street. Upon the outer wall of the mill, near the ground, was some uncovered gearing. Children sometimes played in the space between the mill and street, and a child of three years, being attracted to the place, was caught in the wheels. Judgment for defendant in the trial court was reversed upon appeal, the court saying: "We are of opinion that the verdict is against the evidence. According to the maxim of the common law, Sic utere, etc., every person is held responsible in law for the consequences of his own negligence." The Indiana court speaks of the same doctrine (Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 109 Ind. 183, 58 Am. Rep. 387, 6 N. E. 310, 10 N. E. 70) as follows: "This is a reasonable and humane rule, and any other would be a cruel reproach to the law. But the law merits no such reproach, for throughout all its branches, whether of tort or contract, there runs, like the marking red cord of the British navy, a line distinguishing children of years too few to have judgment or discretion from those old enough to . . . exercise those faculties. This is a doctrine taught by every man's experience and sanctioned by our law. A departure from it would shock everyone's sense of justice and humanity." In the same court, Penso v. McCormick, 125 Ind. 116, 9 L. R. A. 313, 25 N. E. 156. The defendants deposited ashes containing fire in their own mill yard, where children were in the habit of playing, and were held in damages to a young boy who was thereby burned. It is there said: "It is a well-recognized doctrine that persons are required to use greater care in dealing with children of tender years than with older persons, who have reached the age of discretion, and that greater care is required to avoid injury to them even when they are trespassers." This doctrine was also approved by the Michigan court (Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 514, 51 Am. Rep. 154, 19 N. W. 257) in an opinion written by Judge Cooley, the magnitude of whose fame and the weight of whose authority are unexcelled in modern jurisprudence. The defendant in that case had left a box of dynamite cartridges under an open shed on his own land, but near a path along which his tenant's young son had occasion to pass. The boy's attention being attracted to the box, he went to it, removed the cover, took out a cartridge, and was injured by its explosion. The court says: "Children, wherever they go, must be expected to act upon childish instincts and impulses; and others who are charged with a duty of care and caution towards them must calculate upon this, and take precautions accordingly. If they leave exposed to the observation of children anything which would be tempting to them, and which they, in their immature judgment, might naturally suppose they were at liberty to handle or play with, they should expect that liberty to be taken." On a second appeal of the same case Judge Cooley again pronouncing the opinion, the court approved the following instruction to the jury: "If, therefore, gentlemen, you find . . . that this box containing these 'exploders' was placed under the shed in question, and was placed there in such a manner that children . . . who had the right to pass to and fro near it might, in following out their . . . childish instincts, go to it, and get at its contents, I charge you that it would be an act of negligence . . . for which he [defendant] would be liable." In a late case in the United States Supreme Court (Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619), this doctrine is again enforced against the owner of a coal mine, which deposited its slack in an open space near a path upon its own land, where it was permitted to burn, and a boy was injured by falling into it. In holding the defendant liable, the court quotes approvingly the language of Lord Denman: "If I am guilty of negligence in leaving anything dangerous in a place where I know it to be extremely probable that some other person will wrongfully set it in motion to the injury of a third, and if that injury should be so brought about, I presume that the sufferer might have redress against both or either of the two, but unquestionably against the first." "In the present case there was no express invitation to the plaintiff to come upon the premises of the railroad company for any purpose. But, if the company left its slack pit without a fence or anything to give warning of its really dangerous condition, and knew, or had reason to believe, that it was in a place where it would attract the interest or curiosity of passers, can the plaintiff, a boy of tender years, be regarded a mere trespasser for whose safety and protection, while on the premises in question, against the unseen danger referred to, the railroad company was under no duty or obligation whatever to make provision?" This question the court answered in the negative, and affirmed the judgment against the defendant.

This somewhat extensive citation of authorities, though but part of the many bearing in the same direction, we have thought necessary in view of the claim persistently put forth by those who reject the authority of the Stout Case that it is not in harmony with the general principles of the law, and holds railroad companies to a stricter measure of liability than is applied to natural persons. Taking up now the turntable cases proper, we find the pioneer case just referred to was tried at circuit before that distinguished jurist, Judge Dillon. 2 Dill. 294, Fed. Cas. No. 13,504. From his charge to the jury, which was affirmed on appeal, we quote: "Now, the ground of complaint . . . is that the turntable, as it was constructed, was of a dangerous nature and character when unlocked or unguarded; and that, being, as it is alleged, in a place much resorted to by the public, and where children were wont to go and play, it was the duty of the defendant to keep the same securely locked or fastened, so as to prevent it from being turned or played with by children, or to keep the same guarded so as to prevent injuries such as befell the plaintiff. The basis of this action, therefore, is that the defendant owed plaintiff a duty of this kind, that in failing to discharge this duty, the defendant was guilty of negligence. . . . The machine in question is part of the defendant's road, and was lawfully constructed where it was. If the . . . company did not know, and had no good reason to suppose, that children would resort to the turntable to play, or did not know, or had no good reason to suppose, that . . . they would be likely to get injured thereby, then you cannot find a verdict against them. But if defendant did know, or had good reason to believe, under the circumstances of the case, the children of the place would resort to the turntable to play, and that, if they did, they would or might be injured, then if they took no means to keep the children away, and no means to prevent accidents, they would be guilty of negligence, and would be answerable for damages caused to children by such negligence." This judgment, upon appeal (17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745), was unanimously affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and its authority is reaffirmed in Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619. The authority of this precedent has had the express recognition of the courts of every state west of the Mississippi having occasion to pass upon a like question, as well as a large portion of the courts east of that line. Indeed, the courts of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and New York, and more recently the courts of New Jersey and Michigan, are all that seem to be committed to the opposing view; and even in each of these states, unless we except New Hampshire and Massachusetts, the principle which underlies the Stout Case had often been applied to other than turntable accidents. In California (Barrett v. Southern P. Co. 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666), the court, referring to Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220, 9 Atl. 790,—a leading authority in opposition to the Stout Case,—says: "In our judgment, the rule, as broadly announced and applied in that case, cannot be maintained without a departure from well-settled principles. It is a maxim of the law that one must so use and enjoy his property as to interfere with the comfort and safety of others as little as possible. . . . This rule, which only imposes a just restriction upon the owner of property, seems not to have been given due consideration in the case referred to. But this principle, as a standard of conduct, is of universal application, and the failure to observe it is in respect to those who have a right to invoke its protection a breach of duty, and, in a legal sense, constitutes negligence." 57 L. R. A.

. . . If defendant ought reasonably to have anticipated that leaving this turntable unguarded and exposed, an injury such as plaintiff suffered was likely to occur, then it must be held to have anticipated it, and was guilty of negligence in thus maintaining it in its exposed position. It is no answer to this to say that the child was a trespasser, and, if it had not intermeddled with defendant's property, it would not have been hurt, and that the law imposes no duty upon the defendant to make its premises a safe playground for children. In the forum of law as well as of common sense a child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care and self-restraint as belongs to childhood; and a reasonable man must be presumed to know this, and is required to govern his actions accordingly." The rule was reaffirmed by the same court in Callahan v. Ecl River & E. R. Co. 92 Cal. 89, 28 Pac. 104. In Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 691, 31 Am. Rep. 203, the rule is thus stated: "No person has a right to leave, even on his own land, dangerous machinery, calculated to attract and entice boys to it, there to be injured, unless he first take proper steps to guard against all danger; and any person who thus does leave dangerous machinery exposed without first providing against all danger is guilty of negligence. It is a violation of the beneficial maxim, Sic utere, etc." In Minnesota (Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393) the same result is reached on a full discussion of the principle largely independent of the Stout Case. The court says: "Now, what an express invitation would be to an adult the temptation of an attractive plaything is to a child of tender years. If the defendant had left his turntable unfastened for the purpose of attracting young children to play upon it, knowing the danger into which it was thus alluring them, it certainly would be no defense to an action by the plaintiff, who had been attracted upon the turntable and injured, to say that the plaintiff was a trespasser, and that his childish instincts were no excuse for his trespass. In Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East, 277, it was held unlawful for a man to tempt even his neighbor's dogs into danger by setting traps on his own land baited with strong-scented meat, by which the dogs were allured to come upon his land and into his traps. In that case Lord Ellenborough asks: 'What is the difference between drawing the animal into the trap by his natural instinct, which he cannot resist, and putting him there by manual force?' And Grose, J., says: 'A man must not set traps of this dangerous description in a situation to invite his neighbor's dogs, and, as it were, to compel them, by their instinct, to come into the traps.' . . . The defendant therefore knew that, by leaving this turntable unfastened and unguarded, it was not merely inviting young children to come upon the turntable, but was holding out an allurements, which, acting upon the natural instincts by which such children are controlled drew them, by those instincts, into a hidden danger; and, having thus knowingly lured them into a place of danger without their fault (for it cannot blame them for not resisting the temptation it has set before them), it was bound to use care to protect them from the danger into which they were thus led, and from which they could not be expected to protect themselves. We agree with the defendant's counsel that a railroad company is not required to make its land a safe playground for children. . . . We merely decide that when it sets before young children a temptation which it has reason to believe will lead them into danger it must use ordinary care to protect them from harm. What would be proper care in any case must, in general, be a question for the jury upon all the circumstances of the case." In Kolsti v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 134, 19 N. W. 655, cited by defendant in the present case, a judgment for the defendant was sustained, and an instruction to the jury that the company was not bound to so fasten its turntable as to make it impossible for children to unfasten it was sustained, the duty of the company being only to exercise reasonable care. In a later decision—Twist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 167, 39 N. W. 402,—the plaintiff was not permitted to recover, because he was evidently of sufficient age to exercise care and discretion for himself; but in announcing its decision the court expressly disapproves of the New Hampshire doctrine, which applies to a young child the rule that a trespasser cannot recover damages for injuries received, and adds: "Applied to one of sufficient mental capacity to be a conscious trespasser, this is undoubtedly a sound rule, but, if applied to children of tender years, strictly non sui juris, it would seem harsh and inhuman. Properly qualified, and limited in its application, the doctrine of the Keffe Case is, in our judgment, in accordance with both the reason and the dictates of humanity." To the same effect is the opinion in O'Malley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 289, 45 N. W. 440.

Upon the strength of some of the language employed in the Twist Case it has been asserted that the Minnesota court has limited the application of the rule of the Stout Case to turntable cases alone. In Stendal v. Boyd, 67 Minn. 279, 69 N. W. 899, the court takes occasion to correct this error, saying: "We did not mean by this [by what was said in the Twist Case] that we would not apply the doctrine to any but 'turntable cases,' but merely that we would not extend the doctrine to cases which, upon their facts, did not come strictly and fully within the principle upon which those cases rest." Sustaining the same doctrine, see Ferguson v. Columbus & R. R. Co. 75 Ga. 637, 77 Ga. 102; Union P. R. Co. v. Dunden, 37 Kan. 1, 44 Pac. 501; Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418; Bridger v. Asheville & S. R. Co. 25 S. C. 24; Houston 57 L. R. A.

& T. C. R. Co. v. Simpson, 60 Tex. 103; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 77 Tex. 358, 14 S. W. 26; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Bailey, 11 Neb. 332, 9 N. W. 50; Iluaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. 446, 25 Pac. 335.

The Illinois courts are sometimes quoted as being in line with those opposing the doctrine of the Stout Case, but this is a mistake. It is true that in a turntable case decided in that state (St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Bell, 81 Ill. 76, 25 Am. Rep. 269) the plaintiff was not allowed to recover, but the refusal was expressly placed upon the ground that the turntable was shown to be so far removed from any public place, and was so secluded, that it could not properly be said to offer any temptation to children to trespass upon it. The same court, in a later case (Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L. R. A. 206, 39 N. E. 484), takes occasion to approve the Stout Case, and cites the Bell Case as in effect so holding. Again, in Siddall v. Jansen, 168 Ill. 43, 39 L. R. A. 112, 48 N. E. 191, and in Coppner v. Pennsylvania Co. 12 Ill. App. 600, the principle is expressly approved and followed.

The principal cases which are out of harmony with the cases we have cited are Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220, 9 Atl. 790; Daniels v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 154 Mass. 349, 13 L. R. A. 248, 23 N. E. 283; Walsh v. Fitchburg R. Co. 145 N. Y. 301, 27 L. R. A. 724, 39 N. E. 1068; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich, 61 N. J. L. 635, 41 L. R. A. 831, 40 Atl. 682. A late case from Michigan—not a turntable case, however—also holds adversely to the doctrine of the Stout Case. Ryan v. Toucar (Mich.) 8 Det. L. N. 727, 87 N. W. 644. This decision was by a bare majority of the court, and, in our judgment, the dissenting opinion by Montgomery, Ch. J., is supported by the stronger reasoning and a greater weight of authority. These cases are founded upon the one unvarying proposition that, without regard to the age of the trespasser,—whether a mature adult or a creeping infant,—he is in law a wrongdoer, and the landowner owes him no duty except to refrain from his wilful or wanton injury after discovering his intrusion upon the premises; and that, too, without regard to the temptations or enticements which the premises may offer to the childish mind. Hence, if a child too young to have any conception of right and wrong or of the ownership of property, is attracted across the boundary of an unfenced lot by a piece of dangerous and attractive machinery left there exposed without guard or fastening, and such child, led by an instinct as powerful and controlling as that which led the dog into the trap as hereinbefore referred to, is caught and mutilated in the machine, the owner is charged with no liability, although he well knew the habit of children to use the lot as a playground, and as a reasonable man must have known they would be tempted to play with the machine, and, if they yielded to the temptation, were sure to be injured. Not only this, but if one child is caught in the trap thus set, and another, seeing its peril, runs to its rescue, and in his work of mercy is also caught in the relentless machine and injured, he, too, is without remedy because, forsooth, he is a trespasser, and should politely have waited outside of the boundary until he had received due permission to enter and go to the relief of his playmate. That this is no exaggeration, see Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich and Ryan v. Towar, above cited, in both of which cases the plaintiff was injured in attempting to save a younger child from the death to which the defendant's carelessness had exposed him, but was sent from the court without redress, because, in answering a call of duty as imperative as the voice of God, she had made herself a "trespasser!" If this be the law, it well merits the witty thrust which Mr. Beach administers the doctrine of imputed negligence: "On the one hand, it is held that the negligence of a person having charge of a child is the negligence of the child, and imputable to it when the child comes into a court of justice and asks damages for an injury negligently inflicted upon him by the defendant. Waite v. North Eastern R. Co. El. Bl. & El. 719 [and Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273]. But per contra, where a donkey is carelessly run down in the highway, where it is negligently exposed, the defendant is held liable (Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546); and, though oysters are negligently placed in a river bed, it is an injury redressible at law in damages for a vessel negligently to disturb them (Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 377). It appears, therefore, that the child, were he an ass or an oyster, would secure a protection which is denied him as a human being of tender years in such jurisdiction as enforce the English or New York rule in this respect." Beach, Contrib. Neg. Crawford's ed. § 127.

Of the cases referred to as opposing the doctrine to which we adhere, one of the earliest and most often quoted is Frost v. Eastern R. Co. 64 N. H. 220, 9 Atl. 790. The writer of that opinion sees in the principle for which we contend great hardship for the landowner and a source of peril to him in every fruit tree, ladder, fence, and blueberry thicket upon his premises. This language is cited with approval by most courts following that decision, and, in addition thereto, Ryan v. Towar vividly depicts the woes which children inflict upon society in general. We quote: "There is no more lawless class than children, and none more annoyingly resent an attempt to prevent their trespasses. The average citizen has learned that the surest way to be overrun by children is to give them to understand that their presence is distasteful. The consequence is that they roam at will over private premises, and, as a rule, this is tolerated so long as no damage is done. The remedy which the law affords for the trifling trespasses of children is inadequate. No one ever thinks of suing them, and to 57 L. R. A.

attempt to remove a crowd of boys from private premises by gently laying on of hands, and using no more force than is necessary to put them off, would be a roaring farce, with all honor to the juveniles." If this sweeping indictment of boyhood and these gloomy prophecies are intended as a sober argument, they demonstrate a failure upon the part of the author to fairly interpret the doctrine against which they array themselves; and, if intended as sarcasm, it is proper to observe that there is not a rule known to the law, no matter how sacred or universally recognized, which cannot, by an extreme and exaggerated application of its principle, be made to appear ridiculous. But what, in fact, are the workings of the doctrine thus strongly depreciated? For many years the rule of Lynch v. Nurdin, Birge v. Gardiner, Stout v. Sioux City & P. R. Co., and Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. has been recognized as authority in a large majority of the states. Can it truthfully be said that youthful trespassers are any more annoying, or the ownership of property any more burdensome, in Connecticut, Ohio, Kansas, and Minnesota than in New Hampshire, New York, New Jersey, and Michigan? We think the question will receive a negative answer in every unprejudiced mind.

Returning to our quotation from the Michigan case, it is sufficient to say that the hoodlums there described find no immunity or protection in the law as we interpret it. Their mental acuteness is open to no discount or disparagement. They know the difference between right and wrong, and understand the meaning of trespass as well as the property owner. Ordinarily, they are at no loss to care for themselves. They disregard property rights from mere love of mischief, and take risks out of mere bravado, or in conscious defiance of moral and legal restraint. When a boy is thus injured, we may pity his folly, but justly say, as the law says, that, having intelligently assumed the risk, he ought not to recover damages. This has no application whatever to infants who are yet without judgment or discretion, and the argument built upon such circumstances is wholly irrelevant to the question in controversy. The majority opinion in the Ryan Case gives evidence that, while declaring fealty to what it believes the law, it recognizes the rule to which it adheres as being inconsistent with the spirit of civilization, of which law is, and ever must be, the foundation and framework. It says: "However 'Draconic' the common-law rule may be considered, it is the province of the courts to enforce it until changed by the legislature." Draconic, indeed, if the interpretation given in that opinion is correct; but we prefer to believe, as we think a careful investigation justifies us in believing, that the common law does not deserve the reproach thus laid at its door, and that no act of legislature is required to make it reasonable and humane. Montgomery, Ch. J., in his dissenting opinion, well says: "You may call the doctrine of these cases [turntable cases] the result of evolution of the law, or what you please. It is a humane doctrine. . . . I do not feel justified in ignoring the overwhelming weight of authority which makes for this rule, as well as the expressions of our own court." It is noticeable that in the two cases last cited—Ryan v. Towar and Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich—there is expressed a solicitude for the protection of a defendant in a case of this kind from "the risk of having the question of his negligence left to a sympathetic jury." Without for an instant denying or deprecating the inherent power of a court of record to direct a verdict when the case warrants it, or to set aside a verdict which is palpably wrong, we venture the opinion that it is not the province of the courts to stand between a defendant and a jury of his countrymen upon a fair question of fact in an action at law, nor to give the probable sympathies of a jury any weight or influence in determining the question of his liability.

The courts upon whose decisions appellants rely go also to the extent of holding that long, open, and notorious use by the public of a beaten path across a railroad track or a vacant lot, without objection from the owner, makes him who ventures to travel such a path none the less a trespasser, and imposes no duty upon the owner to consider his safety. In the language of Ryan v. Towar: "The pedestrians who insist upon risking their lives by making a footpath of a railroad track and others who habitually shorten distances by making footpaths across the corners of village lots are none the less trespassers because the owners do not choose to resent such intrusion." This court has already refused to follow such precedent. Clampit v. Chicago, St. P. & K. O. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 71, 50 N. W. 673; Thomas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 103 Iowa, 649, 39 L. R. A. 399, 72 N. W. 783. These cases, while not directly in point with the facts of the one now before us, have a legitimate bearing upon the principle involved, and indicate that the extreme theory of the law of trespass which obtains in those jurisdictions is not the law of this state. See also Scott v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 112 Iowa, 54, 83 N. W. 818.

It is profitless to discuss further the decisions of the courts. We have thus far referred only incidentally to the text writers, but the gravity of the question renders it proper to make some reference to the views of authors of repute. This we do by direct quotation without comment: "It is negligent to leave such an [dangerous] instrument on a place of public access, where persons are expected to be constantly passing and repassing, and where such persons are not required to be on their guard, or where children are accustomed to play." Wharton, Neg. § 112. "It is no defense to a suit for negligence in . . . leaving a dangerous machine in a place frequented by children that a child hurt in the machine was a trespasser." Id. § 343. If the owner is aware that persons are in the habit of passing over his grounds, trespassers though they may be, he is liable if he leaves in their way dangerous instruments by which they are injured. Id. § 824a. "The severity of the rule as to trespassers upon railroad property is essentially relaxed in the case of trespassers of tender years." Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 204. "A well-grounded exception to the foregoing principles is that one who artificially brings or creates upon his own premises any dangerous thing, which, from its nature, has a tendency to attract the childish instincts of children to play with it, is bound as a mere matter of social duty to take such reasonable precautions as the circumstances admit of to the end that they be protected from injury while so playing with it or coming in its vicinity." Thomp. Neg. 1024. Referring to the rule which prevails in Massachusetts and New York, Mr. Thompson further says: "This cruel and wicked doctrine, unworthy of a civilized jurisprudence, puts property above humanity, leaves entirely out of view the tender years and infirmity of understanding of the child, indeed, his inability to be a trespasser in sound legal theory, and visits upon him the consequences of his trespass, just as though he were an adult." Id. § 1026. "The rule seems to be well settled that one who recklessly and without necessity leaves exposed dangerous weapons or things by meddling with which ignorant persons or infants may be injured, are liable for such injuries, although in so meddling the injured person was a trespasser." Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 75. "It is apprehended that the rule . . . rests upon the general principle . . . expressed in the maxim, Sic utere, etc." Id. § 76. "But where dangerous instrumentalities, in their nature attractive to children, are left in an exposed and accessible place where children are likely to be, the law is well settled that the proprietor cannot shield himself in an action for injuries caused thereby to an infant by showing that the machine or article was not dangerous, and would have done no harm if the plaintiff had not meddled or tampered with it." Barrows, Neg. p. 69. The turntable cases described as "settled law of the country." 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. 73. "The owner of land where children are allowed or accustomed to play, particularly if it is unfenced, must use ordinary care to keep it in a safe condition; for they, being without judgment, and likely to be drawn by childish curiosity into places of danger, are not to be classed with trespassers, idlers, and mere licensees." 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. 122. "The owner of any machine which he knows to be dangerous to children too young to know the danger, and of too immature judgment or discretion to control their natural instinct to amuse themselves with anything that may attract them as a plaything, and which he knows or ought to know may attract them, and who knows it is so placed that it does attract them to play with it,—is under a duty as to such children to exercise the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would use to prevent its injuring them. Whoever, therefore, does anything in or immediately adjacent to a public street, park, or locality where children may rightfully congregate and are accustomed so to do, calculated to attract children into danger which they cannot appreciate, or are too untrained and inexperienced to resist, owes the imposed duty of protecting them against the temptation he places before them by suitably guarding the source of danger." 1 Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, 28. "It is said that one owes no duty to . . . a trespasser. . . . Is this true as to a young child, known to be in danger of being injured? Is there not an active duty owing to protect the helpless child from known dangers on one's own land? If this duty exists, the doctrine laid down in the New Hampshire . . . cases cannot be true. . . . The real question is not whether a duty is owing to a child which under the same circumstances would not be owing to a grown person, but, putting the case personally, whether, knowing that an act of yours is liable to induce anyone to expose himself to danger, it is not your duty to anticipate such action on his part, and use care to avoid injuring him." Id. 32. A railroad company "may incur liability for injuries to children by leaving dangerous machinery where it is accessible to them, although it would not, under the same circumstances, be liable to an adult." Pierce, Railroads, 336. "The law requires of persons having in their custody instruments of danger that they should keep them with the utmost care." 1 Hilliard, Torts, 3d ed. 127; Pollock, Torts, 407. "The duties which men owe to others are made greater by their greater needs." Bishop, Non-Contract Law, § 589. "A child too young to be controlled by reason, therefore not improperly led by its instincts, receives from the law the protection which its special nature requires. For example, a man who leaves on his own ground, open to the highway, or upon or beside any public place, a dangerous machine likely to attract children, will be liable to one injured while playing with it, if he neglected precautions against such an accident." Id. § 854. "There is a manifest tendency in the cases to recognize the duty of the owner of premises and instrumentalities to avoid doing harm to other persons, even though they be wrongdoers." 2 Jagard, Torts, 890. "Extreme youth of a child is always an important circumstance in its bearing on the question of negligence in the party by whose act or neglect he is injured." Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 822. "Leaving a tempting thing for children to play with, exposed where they would be likely to gather for that purpose, may be equivalent to an invitation to them to make use of it." Id. 356. "Children, being incapable, at a tender age, of exercising the same care and discretion as an adult, are entitled to more consideration, and the greater degree of care should be exercised to avoid injury to them." Harris, Damages by Corp. § 430.

57 L. R. A.

Speaking of the turntable cases: "These cases have been made the subject of some severe criticism, but we are inclined to think that the doctrine finds support both in principle and authority. A man's dominion over his own land is not entirely absolute, but is qualified by that time-honored maxim, Sic utere, etc." 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1291. "A party's liability to trespassers depends on the former's contemplation of the likelihood of their presence on the premises and the probability of injuries from contact with conditions existing thereon. While, as a rule, a party will not be deemed to anticipate the commission of a wilful wrong, yet where, under the circumstances, a technical trespass may reasonably be anticipated, the owner of premises will be liable for a failure to take reasonable precautions to prevent injuries to the trespasser." Watson, Damages for Personal Injuries, p. 288. "The doctrine of the weight of authority seems to be that the owner of uninclosed premises of a situation and character calculated to attract children thereupon is liable in damages if such premises are maintained in a condition likely to cause injuries to infant trespassers, and injuries in fact result from such negligent condition." Id. 290.

There is an opinion in an early Ohio case (Kerchacker v. Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. 3 Ohio St. 172, 62 Am. Dec. 246), which is in itself a very learned and exhaustive commentary on some phases of the law of the case before us. It was called forth by the destruction of a farmer's trespassing pigs upon a railroad track, and we may therefore hope the law it announces is none too good to be invoked in behalf of children: "A maxim of the law, tested by the wisdom of centuries, exacts of every person in the enjoyment of his property the duty of so using his own as not to injure the property of his neighbor. It is in accord with this principle that it has been held that, though a person do a lawful thing, yet, if any damage thereby befalls another, which he could have avoided by reasonable and proper care, he shall make reparation. . . . The right of the defendant to the free, exclusive, and unmolested use of its railroad is nothing more nor less than the right of every other land proprietor in the actual occupancy and use of his lands, and does not exempt it from the duty enjoined by law upon every person so to use his own property as not to do any unnecessary injury to another."

A doctrine which numbers among its adherents such names as Denman, Cockburn, Dillon, Harlan, Cooley, and the other distinguished jurists and law writers, whose opinions and works we have made reference to, is not to be easily discredited.

2. It is urged by the defendant that its turntable is admitted to have been fastened, and therefore no negligence is shown upon its part. It is our opinion that, under the evidence, the question of the fastening was still a matter for the consideration of the jury. The exact description of the method employed is not shown in the abstract, and it is proved that it was unfastened by one of the little girls in the party with plaintiff. If there was any duty upon defendant to fasten or secure the table to prevent its being revolved by children, it must necessarily follow that the fastening employed should be reasonably sufficient for that purpose, and such sufficiency is peculiarly a question of fact. Such, with one exception, seems to be the holding of all the courts which have passed upon this proposition. This does not require the company to furnish the best or most perfect fastening, or to make the table absolutely secure, but simply that it shall exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent and cautious person under the circumstances as they then existed. Kolsti v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 134, 19 N. W. 655. "If the owner [of a turntable], instead of preventing such children getting to it, relies to prevent injury to them upon fastening it so as to prevent their playing with it, it is evident that the character of the means used for fastening must be considered. . . . If such means have no tendency to prevent them so exposing themselves; if they are entirely futile, and leave the machine just as dangerous to such children as before,—it can hardly be said he has used the degree of care required of him. . . . Certainly the mere fact that it used some fastening would not, without regard to the character of the fastening, absolve the company from liability." O'Malley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 43 Minn. 289, 45 N. W. 440. In the same case it was said: "It may be taken as established by the evidence that the methods adopted for fastening the turntable . . . were those ordinarily used by railroad companies." But this fact was held not sufficient to permit the court to pass upon the sufficiency of such fastening as a matter of law. In Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Hedrick, 1 Wash. 446, 25 Pac. 335, the turntable was fastened or tied with a rope, which was cut or removed by children; and the question of defendant's care was held to be one for the jury. Such, also, was the holding in Barrett v. Southern P. Co. 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666, where it is said: "The fact that the turntable was latched in the way such tables are usually fastened, or according to the usual custom of other railroads, although a matter which the jury had a right to consider, . . . was not of itself conclusive proof of the fact." To the same effect, see Callahan v. Eel River & E. R. Co. 92 Cal. 89, 28 Pac. 104. Further, to the effect that proof of the customary method of fastening is not conclusive. Kelly v. Southern Minnesota R. Co. 28 Minn. 98, 9 N. W. 588.

3. Appellant also contends that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and therefore cannot recover. Whatever may have been the rule in earlier times, and whatever may be the holding still in a few states, it is now established beyond all question in this country that a child cannot be held to any greater degree of care than may reasonably be expected from its years, experience, and intelligence, and that it cannot be charged by imputation with the negligence of its parents or guardians. This doctrine is so reasonable, and so consonant with the spirit of justice which pervades the law, that it commands our respect and observance; and if, as claimed, there be precedents for holding infants of five to seven years of age guilty of negligence as a matter of law, we have only to say they do not commend themselves to our reason or judgment. Whether the plaintiff was of sufficient age and intelligence to appreciate the danger to which she exposed herself in going upon the turntable was properly left to the jury. Dowd v. Chicopee, 116 Mass. 93; Plumley v. Birge, 124 Mass. 57, 26 Am. Rep. 645; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Becker, 84 Ill. 483.

4. It is finally said that the negligence, if any, of the defendant, was not the primary cause of the injury complained of, and that no injury would have occurred had not a third person removed the fastening, and still another revolved the table. This contention is not supported by the authorities. In the very nature of things, a child cannot well be injured upon a turntable without the intervention of some other person to revolve the machine. In the very first of the leading cases we have cited—Lynch v. Nurdin—this element was presented and urged as a defense without avail. The company's negligence, if it exist, is in the leaving, without proper care, of a dangerous instrument, in a place where it might reasonably have expected children to resort and put it in motion to the injury of themselves or others. See Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Clark v. Chambers, L. R. 3 Q. B. 327; Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602, 27 N. W. 776; Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418.

The several questions discussed sufficiently dispose of other legal propositions raised by the appeal. The charge of the trial court to the jury was in substantial harmony with the opinions we have expressed, and the objections made thereto are not well taken. We are aware that the doctrine announced by this decision holds railroad companies to what may be thought an irksome responsibility. It is inevitable that in the rush and haste with which the business of railroading is performed, and the handling and care of ponderous machinery, the movements of which cannot be instantly controlled, accidents will happen, by which both old and young are maimed or killed, without any fault being justly chargeable to the company or its employees; and in such cases, of course, no action lies. But the very fact that the business and appliances are of such dangerous nature imposes a corresponding obligation to avoid casualties which reasonable care may anticipate and guard against. Reasonable care may, at times, seem to be a burden, but its enforced observance is never a wrong, whether applied to railroad companies or to individuals. If it be observed, no liability follows; if it be neglected, it is simple justice that reparation be made to one who is thereby injured.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

N. F. FRAZIER, Piff. in Err.,

v.

Clara A. JEAKINS.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. Trustees for the sale of land will not be permitted, directly or indirectly, to make profit for themselves out of the trust estate.
2. The guardian of the property of a minor cannot legally buy it at his own sale; nor can his wife or her husband buy at such sale; nor, if they do, will the non-existence of fraud and the payment of full consideration validate the purchase.
3. It seems that if a guardian, or her husband or his wife, wishes to buy at the guardian's sale, the proper practice is to obtain leave of court to do so on a showing of reasons therefor.
4. The confirmation of a guardian's sale is res judicata as to irregularities only, and not as to matters of substance.
5. A deed that recites that the grantors are husband and wife, the names of which grantors are identical with those of the grantor and grantee in a recent guardian's deed of the same land, imparts notice to the purchaser that his grantors were also husband and wife at the date of the former deed.
6. The title of land sold and deeded by a guardian to her husband does not pass to a purchaser who has notice of their relationship, and ejectment for its recovery may be maintained by the ward.

(Cunningham, J., dissents.)

(March 8, 1902.)

ERROR to the District Court for Butler County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Buck & Spencer, for plaintiff in error:

Where no actual fraud is present, but the trustee at the sale becomes the purchaser directly, or through the intervention of a third person who pays no consideration, nearly all the courts hold such sale voidable only.

*Headnotes by DOSTER, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to power of guardian to sell or lease lands of ward, see, in this series, Wilson v. Hughes (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 292.

As to right of guardian to mortgage ward's property, see Warren v. Union Bank (N. Y.) 43 L. R. A. 256, and Andrus v. Blazzard (Utah) 54 L. R. A. 854.

As to right of person acting in a fiduciary capacity to purchase trust property, see also notes to Tyler v. Sanborn (Ill.) 4 L. R. A. 218; Wilson v. Brookshire (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 792; Anderson v. Butler (S. C.) 5 L. R. A. 166; Manhattan Cloak & Suit Co. v. Dodge (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 369; and Hindman v. O'Connor (Ark.) 18 L. R. A. 490.

Brannan v. Oliver, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 47, 19 Am. Dec. 37; Wiswall v. Stewart, 32 Ala. 433, 70 Am. Dec. 549; Carter v. Thompson, 41 Ala. 375; James v. James, 55 Ala. 525; Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627, 13 L. R. A. 490, 16 S. W. 1052; Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19, 87 Am. Dec. 146; VanDyke v. Johns, 1 Del. Ch. 93, 12 Am. Dec. 76; Smith v. Granberry, 39 Ga. 381, 99 Am. Dec. 464; Worthy v. Johnson, 8 Ga. 236, 52 Am. Dec. 399; Flanders v. Flanders, 23 Ga. 249, 68 Am. Dec. 523; Grubbs v. McGlawn, 39 Ga. 674; Houston v. Bryan, 78 Ga. 181, 1 S. E. 252; Candler v. Clarke, 90 Ga. 554, 16 S. E. 645; James v. Kelley, 107 Ga. 446, 33 S. E. 425; Martin v. Wyncoop, 12 Ind. 266, 74 Am. Dec. 209; Crawford v. Gray, 131 Ind. 53, 30 N. E. 885; Murphy v. Teter, 56 Ind. 545; Morgan v. Wattles, 69 Ind. 263; Comegys v. Emerick, 134 Ind. 148, 33 N. E. 899; Thorpe v. McCullum, 6 Ill. 615; Lagger v. Mutual Union Loan & Bldg. Asso. 146 Ill. 283, 33 N. E. 946; Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21 N. E. 193; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Sypher v. McHenry, 18 Iowa, 232; Price v. Thompson, 84 Ky. 219, 1 S. W. 408; Tracy v. Roberts, 88 Me. 310, 34 Atl. 68; Yeackel v. Litchfield, 13 Allen, 417, 90 Am. Dec. 207; Harrington v. Brown, 5 Pick. 519; Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. 23; Blood v. Hayman, 13 Met. 231; Clark v. Blackington, 110 Mass. 369; Ives v. Ashley, 97 Mass. 198; White v. Iselin, 26 Minn. 487, 5 N. W. 359; Pearson v. Moreland, 7 Smedes & M. 609, 45 Am. Dec. 319; Scott v. Freeland, 7 Smedes & M. 409, 45 Am. Dec. 310; Tutt v. Boyer, 51 Mo. 425; Grayson v. Weddle, 63 Mo. 523; Den ex dem. Runyon v. Newark India Rubber Co. 24 N. J. L. 467; Bassett v. Shoemaker, 46 N. J. Eq. 538, 20 Atl. 52; Voorhees v. Bailey, 59 N. J. Eq. 292, 44 Atl. 657; Mulford v. Bowen, 9 N. J. Eq. 797; Culver v. Culver, 11 N. J. Eq. 215; Smith v. Drake, 23 N. J. Eq. 302; Lovell v. Briggs, 2 N. H.

221; Remick v. Butterfield, 31 N. H. 70, 64 Am. Dec. 316; Roulston v. Roulston, 64 N. Y. 652; People v. Open Bd. of Stockholders Bldg. Co. 92 N. Y. 98; Schoole v. Schoole, 101 N. Y. 172, 4 N. E. 334; Harrington v. Erie County Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 257, 4 N. E. 346; Munson v. Syracuse, G. & C. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 58, 8 N. E. 355; Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 80; Riddle v. Roll, 24 Ohio St. 579; Musselman v. Eshleman, 10 Pa. 394, 51 Am. Dec. 493; Pennock's Appeal, 14 Pa. 446, 53 Am. Dec. 561; Bruch v. Lantz, 2 Rawle, 392, 21 Am. Dec. 458; M'Clure v. Miller, Bail. Eq. 107, 21 Am. Dec. 522; Tomlinson v. Detestatus, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 284; Stallings v. Foreman, 2 Hill. Eq. 405; Erskine v. De La Baum, 3 Tex. 406, 49 Am. Dec. 751; Dodd v. Templeman, 76 Tex. 57, 13 S. W. 187; Buckles v. Lafferty, 2 Rob. (Va.) 292, 40 Am. Dec. 752; Bailey v. Robinson, 1 Gratt. 4, 42 Am. Dec. 540; Melms v. Pabst Brewing Co. 93 Wis. 153, 66 N. W. 518; Gibson v. Gibson, 102 Wis. 501, 78 N. W. 917; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503-555, 11 L. ed. 1076-1099; Stephen v. Beall, 22 Wall. 340, 22 L. ed. 788; Hoyt v. Latham, 143 U. S. 553, 36 L. ed. 259, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 568; Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 224, 36 L. ed. 134, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Messrs. Redden & Kramer, for defendant in error:

It is absolutely necessary for the protection of minors that the guardians be required in all respects to comply with both the letter and spirit of the law before they can dispose of the property of the minors.

9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 127; Stilwell v. Svarthout, 81 N. Y. 109.

A sale made by a guardian of the property of a ward, by and under which the guardian becomes, directly or indirectly, the beneficiary, or is interested, is absolutely void.

Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503-555, 11 L. ed. 1076-1099; Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192; Davous v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; 2 Freeman, Executions, § 292; Hamblin v. Warnecke, 31 Tex. 92; Morgan v. Wattles, 69 Ind. 263; Howell v. Tyler, 91 N. C. 209; Scott v. Gorton, 14 La. Ann. 111, 33 Am. Dec. 576; Rome Land Co. v. Eastman, 80 Ga. 690, 6 S. E. 586; Riddle v. Roll, 24 Ohio St. 579; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Webb v. Branner, 59 Kan. 195, 52 Pac. 429.

If there had never been any decision upon the above subject, and even if the law had been otherwise prior to the adoption of our statute, the latter is so plain in its language that it needs neither interpretation nor construction, for it in unmistakable language prohibits guardians from purchasing, either directly or indirectly, the property of their wards.

2 Webb, Stat. 1897, § 132, p. 538; Hampton v. Hampton, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 29 S. W. 423; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Forbes v. Halsey, 26 N. Y. 63.

The wife is interested in the real estate of her husband.

Busenbark v. Busenbark, 33 Kan. 577, 7 57 L. R. A.

Pac. 245; Munger v. Baldridge, 41 Kan. 243, 21 Pac. 159; Overman v. Hathaway, 29 Kan. 437; Warner v. Broquet, 54 Kan. 650, 39 Pac. 228; Union P. R. Co. v. Barnard, & L. Mfg. Co. 1 Kan. App. 28, 41 Pac. 201; Green v. Hugo, 81 Tex. 452, 17 S. W. 79; Riddle v. Roll, 24 Ohio St. 572; Hampton v. Hampton, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 29 S. W. 423; Rome Land Co. v. Eastman, 80 Ga. 693, 6 S. E. 586; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Davous v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; Bassett v. Shoemaker, 46 N. J. Eq. 538, 20 Atl. 52; Scott v. Gorton, 14 La. 115, 33 Am. Dec. 578.

Mr. Frazier was bound to take notice of what his title papers showed, and if they showed that Permilley and Carl Scheel were husband and wife, or if they gave notice of facts which would put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry that would lead to such knowledge, then he was bound to take notice of the illegality of the sale, and the suit would lie against him the same as it would against the husband, who bought it at guardian's sale.

Taylor v. Mitchell, 58 Kan. 194, 48 Pac. 859; Knowles v. Williams, 58 Kan. 221, 48 Pac. 856; Green v. Ugo, 81 Tex. 452, 17 S. W. 79; Hamblin v. Warnecke, 31 Tex. 93; Caldwell v. Walters, 18 Pa. 85, 55 Am. Dec. 592; Hampton v. Hampton, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 29 S. W. 423; Hoffman v. Harrington, 28 Mich. 90; Higginbotham v. Thomas, 9 Kan. 328; Valle v. Fleming, 19 Mo. 454, 61 Am. Dec. 566; Carder v. Culbertson, 100 Mo. 271, 13 S. W. 88; Campbell v. Knights, 26 Me. 224, 45 Am. Dec. 107; Capital Bank v. Huntoon, 35 Kan. 592, 11 Pac. 369; De Jarnette v. Verner, 40 Kan. 230, 19 Pac. 666; Houbert v. Heyle, 47 Kan. 64, 27 Pac. 116; Watts v. Cook, 24 Kan. 278; Winter v. Truax, 87 Mich. 324, 49 N. W. 605; McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 35 N. W. 159.

A minor may recover lands unlawfully sold by his guardian without returning the purchase money or consideration.

Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 514, 93 Am. Dec. 117.

Every administrator or guardian, when he reports a sale of real estate, is required to make an affidavit that "he did not, directly or indirectly, purchase such real estate, or any part thereof, or any interest therein."

Webb v. Branner, 59 Kan. 190, 52 Pac. 429; McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 35 N. W. 159; Winter v. Truax, 87 Mich. 324, 49 N. W. 604; Den ex dem. Obert v. Hamel, 18 N. J. L. 83.

Ejectment is equitable as well as legal; all rights to the property can be adjudicated, and all relief that a person is entitled to in connection with the property can be adjusted.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Pracht, 30 Kan. 71, 1 Pac. 319.

If a disaffirmance on the part of the plaintiff in this case was necessary, the bringing of the suit by her amounted to such disaffirmance, and was all that any court would require at her hands.

Litchfield v. Cudworth, 15 Pick. 23.

Dexter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of ejectment to recover land which had descended to a minor on the death of her ancestor, but which had been wrongfully sold and conveyed by the minor's guardian. Serena J. Jeakins, the owner of the land, died intestate, leaving as her heirs a husband and children. One of the latter was Clara A. Jeakins, a minor. The others were adults. Mrs. Permilly Scheel was appointed guardian of the property of the minor, and thereafter maintained the ward at her expense. She purchased the interests of the adult heirs in the land, taking conveyances therefor in her own name. She procured from the probate court an order to sell the minor's interest in payment of the cost of her maintenance. She sold this interest at private sale to her husband, Carl Scheel. The sale was confirmed and guardian's deed approved. Some claims of fraud in making the sale and of lack of full consideration for the land are made by counsel, but we do not take a view of the case which requires us to advert to them. We shall treat the sale as made on fair consideration, and free from fraud in fact. About three years after the guardian's sale, Mrs. Scheel and her husband sold the entire tract to N. F. Frazier. The record of proceedings in the probate court did not disclose the relationship existing at the time of the guardian's sale between Permilly Scheel, the guardian, and Carl Scheel the purchaser, but Frazier knew they were then husband and wife. Besides, the deed he received from them recited their relationship, and the identity of names in that deed with those of the grantor and grantee in the guardian's deed imparted a notice the equivalent of knowledge. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. subject Identity. A purchaser of land is always chargeable with the knowledge of whatever facts are suggested by the recitals in his title papers. Knowles v. Williams, 58 Kan. 221, 48 Pac. 856. Clara A. Jeakins brought ejectment against Frazier to recover her undivided interest in the land. Although the cause of action stated was not joined with one for partition, the defendant made no objection in the court below on the ground of the irreclaimability of undivided interests by cotenants. On the argument of the case in this court counsel for Frazier disclaimed a desire to raise the question; therefore we are not concerned with any doubts which may exist as to the right to maintain the action. Certain it is that objections to its maintenance, if any can be properly made, do not go to the jurisdiction of this court. Judgment went for plaintiff in the court below, and the defendant has prosecuted error.

The sole question in the case relates to the validity of the guardian's sale and deed of the land of her ward made to her husband, made, as before stated, on fair consideration, and free from actual fraud. Are they valid? If not, are they of the class denominated "void," and therefore subject to collateral attack? Our judgment is they are void, and, their nullity being known to Frazier, the purchaser, no title passed to him, and therefore the collateral action will lie. Nothing in the law of fiduciary trusts is better settled than that the trustee shall not be allowed to advantage himself in dealings with the trust estate. He shall not be allowed to serve himself under the pretense of serving his cestui que trust. The most usual way in which evasions of this salutary rule are attempted is in purchases of the trust estate by or in the interest of the trustee. That such purchases shall not be allowed the realization of their purpose is the universal holding of the courts. A citation to the multitudinous decisions would encumber an opinion more than it would elucidate the rule. A large number of the cases are collected in the notes to Tyler v. Herring (Miss.) 19 Am. St. Rep. 263; Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21 N. E. 193; Wilson v. Brookshire, 126 Ind. 497, 9 L. R. A. 792, 25 N. E. 131, and this court, in Webb v. Branner, 59 Kan. 190, 52 Pac. 429, recently added another to the list. Nor, in such cases, does the fact that the sale and purchase were bona fide, and on full consideration, avail to constitute an exception to the rule. That was distinctly so declared in Webb v. Branner, 59 Kan. 190, 52 Pac. 429, in which it was said: "It was shown that a fair price was obtained for the lot, but, there being a manifest conflict between the duties of the trustee and his personal interests, the courts, for the purpose of removing all opportunity for fraud, generally hold such transfers to be void, whether they appear to be fair or not." The above-quoted remarks imply that there may be, perhaps, exceptions to the rule; but we know of none. In fact, the main rule that a trustee may not profit himself out of the trust estate is no better settled than the subsidiary one that lack of fraud in the trustee's dealings will not validate the transaction. The fiduciary relation of trustee and cestui que trust is one which does not call so much for rules to redress accomplished wrong as for rules to prevent its accomplishment. The one in question, therefore, is not intended to be merely remedial of wrong actually committed, but rather to be preventive or deterrent in effect. The opportunities which are open to an unfaithful trustee to advantage himself out of the trust estate are so many and so tempting and the condition of the beneficiary in the trust ordinarily so helpless and confiding, that the law gives warning in advance against all transactions out of which it is possible for the former to make gain at the expense of the latter. Hence, as was tersely and wisely said by Chief Justice Beasley in Staats v. Bergen, 17 N. J. Eq. 554, "so jealous is the law upon this point, that a trustee may not put himself in a position in which to be honest must be a strain upon him." Do the foregoing considerations apply to a sale by a guardian of the ward's land to the guardian's husband or wife, as the case may be? We have no hesitation in affirming that they do. It is true that the common-law fiction of the legal identity of the husband and wife, and the very nearly complete merger of the latter in the former, does not now have recognition. In this state, as allowed by statute, the wife may contract with her husband. They may own separate estates, free from any present claim of interest by one in the property of the other,—that is, as against the other; but it is not true that as to their respective possessions they are strangers in such a sense as to take a trustee's sale by one to the other from out the operation of the rule in question. Upon the death of either of them one half of his or her property descends under the statute to the survivor, and under the statute neither one, without the other's consent, can, by will, devise more than one half his or her property. It is true the interest of the one in the property of the other is contingent and uncertain, and dependent on survivorship. It is true that the interest of the one in the land of the other is not of the character of any of the estates known to the common law, but it nevertheless possesses the elements of property. This was distinctly so ruled in Busenbark v. Busenbark, 33 Kan. 572, 7 Pac. 245, and on the strength of the quality of property attaching to the inchoate interest of a wife in her husband's land she was allowed in that case to maintain an action to prevent its fraudulent alienation. However, over and beyond that property interest which husband and wife have in each other's estate, and which possesses the element of pecuniary value, there is a larger consideration. It was well expressed by counsel for defendant in error, who said: "The affection existing between husband and wife; the marital relation, which in a sense makes them one; the implicit confidence which each must have in the other; their natural desire for each other's material prosperity; the relation which enables one to derive and enjoy personal comfort and pleasure from the property of the other, independent of the question of direct or indirect ownership in such property,—are all so well recognized in law and understood by all civilized people that it would be arguing against the experience of centuries to contend that one would not be interested in the welfare of the other, and do all that could be done to enhance the pecuniary interests of the other. Therefore, by reason of the relation, no guardian could be impartial in the sale to husband or wife of the property of the ward." In Tyler v. Nandorn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21 N. E. 193, the supreme court of Illinois, after adverting to the fact that under the statutes of their state husband and wife may contract with each other, that the wife may own property separate from the husband, but that each has contingent interests in the other's property dependent on survivorship (being in such respects substantially like our statute), and after holding that such mutuality of interest forbade one to sell trust property to the other, further remarked: "There is, moreover, apart from this pecuniary interest, an intimacy of relation and affection between husband and wife, and of mutual influence of the one upon the other for their common welfare and happiness, that is absolutely inconsistent with the idea that the husband can occupy a disinterested position as between his wife and a stranger in a business transaction. He may, by reason of his great integrity, be just in such a transaction, but, unless his marital relations be perverted, he cannot feel disinterested; and it is precisely because of this feeling of interest that the law forbids that he shall act for himself in a transaction with his principal. It is believed to be within general observation and experience that he who will violate a trust for his own pecuniary profit will not hesitate to do it, under like circumstances, for the pecuniary profit of his wife. In our opinion, the policy of the law equally prohibits the wife of the agent, as it does the agent himself, from taking title to the property which is the subject of his agency, without the knowledge and express consent of the principal." One of the earliest cases on the particular question was Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252. In that case it appeared that an executor had sold the testator's property to a person to be held by him in trust for the executor's wife. Chancellor Kent held that the sale could not stand, because, as he said, "whether a trustee buys in for himself or his wife, the temptation to abuse is nearly the same." In Dundas's Appeal, 64 Pa. 325, it appeared that an executor had sold part of the testator's estate to his wife. The court said: "We cannot doubt that a sale by a trustee to his own wife would be set aside on the application of the cestui que trust, not on the ground of coverture, but of her relationship to the trustee. It would be evidence of unfairness quite as much as if the sale were made to the trustee himself, and falls within the spirit of the rule which forbids his own purchase." However, in that case the sale was allowed to stand, because the court, by previous order, had permitted the wife to become a bidder. The making of such precedent order was admitted to be within the authority of the court, but it was said: "The power is a delicate one, and should always be cautiously exercised, and the sale itself watched with jealousy." In Bassett v. Shoemaker, 46 N. J. Eq. 538, 20 Atl. 52, it appeared that an executor had sold to his wife a farm of the testator. It was held that the sale should be set aside as of course, on the application of a cestui que trust. Among other things it was said: "The exclusion of the wife as a purchaser, where the husband sells as a trustee, is not so much for the reason that he may subsequently become entitled to some interest in her lands as on account of the unity which exists between them in the marriage relation. The case falls clearly within the spirit of the principle which excludes the husband himself." There are other cases the decisions of which were more or less influenced by the considerations expressed in the foregoing quotations. See Riddle v. Roll, 24 Ohio St. 572; Rome Land Co. v. Eastman, 80 Ga. 683, 6 S. E. 586; Bachelor v. Korb, 58 Neb. 122, 78 N. W. 485. Admit the separate legal status of husband and wife to be as absolute and clearly differentiated as their physical lives, there is yet, as a matter of fact, an identity of interests and affections between them which utterly precludes the idea of a trustee's sale by one to the other being different in effect than a sale by the trustee to himself. To say that a husband acting in a fiduciary capacity in effecting a sale would be disposed, as against his wife, to diligence of effort in finding someone who would pay more for the trust estate than she would, is to fly in the face of nature itself, and deny the experience of the ages. Nor can we conceive of any reason why it might be different in the case of a wife were she the trustee negotiating the sale. To the rule declared by us there is but one opposing decision, so far as we are aware. It is Crawford v. Gray, 131 Ind. 53, 30 N. E. 895. The sale in question in that case was made at public auction to the wife as the highest bidder, differing in that respect from the sale under consideration by us. The opinion fails to cite any cases in its support, and, if it can be considered as applicable to private sales by trustees, we have no hesitation in declaring it unsound in principle, and opposed to all the authorities. There may be exceptional circumstances justifying sales by trustees to their wives or husbands, or even to the trustee himself. It is said that the sale under consideration was one of the exceptional character. The wife owned all the other interests in the land, and therefore could effect a better sale to her husband as a cotenant to be, than to a stranger. The claim is a reasonable one, but for such cases the law has a practice which must be followed. It is to apply to the court controlling the sale for leave to purchase. That was ruled in Dundas's Appeal, 64 Pa. 325, and Bassett v. Shoemaker, 46 N. J. Eq. 538, 20 Atl. 52. In Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 557, 11 L. ed. 1076, 1100,—one of the leading authorities on the subject of purchases by trustees at their own sales,—the Supreme Court of the United States, considering the proper practice in such cases, ruled that "it is that, when a trustee for one not sui juris sees that it is absolutely necessary that the estate must be sold, and he is ready to give more for it than anyone else, that a bill should be filed, and he should apply to the court by motion to let him be a purchaser. This is the only way he can protect himself. There are cases in which the court will permit it."

It is said, however, that the confirmation of the sale by the probate court was a judicial approval of it, which put it in the category of res judicata, and hence beyond collateral attack. The law in this state does not give such an effect to a mere order of sale confirmation. The act concerning guardians and wards (Gen. Stat. 1899, chap. 46, § 18) appropriates as the rules governing guardians' sales those prescribed by the statute relating to sales made by executors and administrators. This latter statute (Gen. Stat. 1899, chap. 37, § 132) reads as follows: "And the court, after having carefully examined such return [the return of sale], and being satisfied that the sale has in all respects been legally made, shall confirm the sale, and order the executor or administrator to make a deed to the purchaser." The above-quoted statute does not differ in any substantial particular from the statute in relation to the confirmation of sales by the district court as such statute existed prior to 1893. The Civil Code (§ 458) provided that, "if the court . . . shall, after having carefully examined the proceedings of the officer, be satisfied that the sale has, in all respects, been made in conformity to the provisions of this article, the court shall direct the clerk to make an entry on the journal that the court is satisfied with the legality of such sale, and an order that the officer make to the purchaser a deed for such lands and tenements." Whatever may be the law in other states, in this one it is settled that under the statute last quoted the order of the court confirming the sale becomes res judicata as to irregularities only, and cures nothing of substance; certainly not unless the matter of substance is exhibited on the face of the sale proceeding itself. This has been the uniform holding since Koehler v. Ball, 2 Kan. 161, 83 Am. Dec. 451. In De Jarnette v. Verner, 40 Kan. 224, 19 Pac. 666, it was ruled that, "where a sheriff's sale of real estate has been made, and the owner thereof moves to set aside the sale for the reason that the property was not sold for two thirds of its appraised value, and for other reasons, and the motion is overruled by the court, and the sale confirmed, he does not thereby waive his right to afterward treat the sale as void, or to sue the sheriff for an injury which he may have sustained by reason of such sale. By being a party to a motion to set aside or confirm a sheriff's sale, which motion is decided against such party, he does not thereby and for the future waive or cure anything of substance, but only irregularities."

We come now to the final question, Was the sale void in the sense that it was subject to collateral attack? Our judgment is that it was, and, inasmuch as its nullity was known to Frazier, the purchaser, no title passed to him, and therefore the collateral action will lie. We do not understand that courts, by their use of the term "void," always mean that utter negativeness which is the equivalent of nonexistence, but they more often mean that which, relatively to persons, circumstances, conditions, or forms of action, may be treated as though it were nonexistent. In this latter sense there is little distinction between it and the word "voidable." Really, as often used in the law, there is an interchangeability of meaning between the two words. This is well pointed out in Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 148, 27 L. ed. 684, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 9; Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 287; Brown v. Brown, 50 N. H. 542. Therefore, in order to characterize the guardian's sale and deed as "void" in the sense in which that word is most frequently used in the law, it is not necessary to regard them as inexistent. They have a form of existence, and under certain circumstances they may be allowed or may acquire the substance of existence. The plaintiff in this case might have ratified them by express act or deed. She might have estopped herself by some course of conduct to question their validity, or she might have allowed lapse of time to bar her right to recover on the score of their invalidity. But until by ratification, estoppel, or limitation she has given effect to them, she is privileged to treat them as void and of no effect. As to her they are void and of no effect, because they failed to pass the title to her land. In order to characterize an act or transaction as void, it is not necessary that it should be a nullity as to everybody, and for all time, and under all circumstances. If the act or transaction failed to deprive interested persons of their rights or titles, failed to confer them on someone else, the act of transaction is void as to such persons. If the act or transaction requires ratification, estoppel, or limitation to transfer the right or title, it is void until the ratification has been made, the estoppel has occurred, or the time has elapsed; and even then the right or title does not pass by virtue of the original act or transaction, but passes by virtue of the ratification, or is founded on the estoppel, or is set at rest by the lapse of time. The authorities seem to us strong and convincing that ejectment, although a collateral proceeding, will lie to recover a title claimed under a trustee's sale to himself, or in effect to himself, as in this case. In Den ex dem. Overt v. Hammel, 18 N. J. L. 73, it appeared that an administrator had masked a purchase by himself under the form of a sale and conveyance to another. The transaction was attacked through ejectment by an heir of the estate. The court ruled that the sale was fraudulent in law, and therefore void, and might be shown to be such in a law action without compelling the heir to go into equity. In McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547, 35 N. W. 159, it appeared that an attorney in fact had executed a deed to the land of his principal, and on the same day took back from the grantee a deed to himself, and a few weeks thereafter conveyed the land to another. It was held that the deed by the attorney and the deed back to him were prima facie fraudulent and void on their face, that they did not show that title had passed, that they imparted notice to the subsequent purchaser, and that title could be recovered in ejectment. Many of the cases are reviewed in the opinion. In Winter v. Truax, 87 Mich. 324, 49 N. W. 604, the same holding was made in a case identical in all its facts with McKay v. Wil- liams, except that the sale was made by a guardian, instead of an attorney in fact. Now, in this case, as hereinbefore shown, the deed under which Frazier claimed showed on its face the relationship existing between Scheel the guardian and Scheel the purchaser at her sale; that is, it contained a recital sufficient to charge him with notice. This was sufficient.

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Johnston, Smith, Greene, Ellis, and Pollock, JJ., concur.

Cunningham, J., dissenting:

I would be false to my convictions if I failed to announce my dissent to the conclusion reached by the majority of the court in this case. It is admitted that the sale by the guardian to her husband was free from actual fraud, so that the question presented is, Can a sale be made for a full consideration, in the best of faith, by a husband or wife acting in a fiduciary capacity, to the consort? My brethren say not, and that such sale is not only voidable, but absolutely void, and can be avoided by anyone in interest at any time without tendering or paying back the consideration received. I do not find ground for that conclusion in reason or authority. I find no fault with the proposition that an agent or trustee cannot sell to himself. Such a sale is void; is no sale; for one cannot sell to himself. The same person cannot be seller and purchaser at the same time. But that principle finds no application to the facts at bar, although the opinion of the court seems to be based largely upon it. Nothing is more strongly fixed in Kansas law, both by statutory provision and judicial decision, than that, so far as property rights and interests are concerned, husband and wife are as distinct as though they were strangers. The statute provides that a married woman may deal with her property, real or personal, and enter into any contract with relation to the same, in the same manner, and to the same extent, and with like effect, as a married man may in relation to such property. While in the marital relation, her property remains to her sole and separate use to the same extent as though she were not married. She may sue, and is liable to be sued, in the same manner as if she were unmarried; may carry on any trade or business, perform any labor or services, on her sole account. The earnings arising from such trade, business, labor, or services shall be her sole and separate property, and may be exclusively used and invested by her in her own name. She may deal with her husband, with respect to her property, exactly as though she were a stranger to him; and in all these respects our common everyday observation gives us to know that these privileges are frequently exercised by and between those occupying the marital relation. Although our ancestors feared that great calamities might come were these things to exist, thus far we see no indication of the heavens falling or the social fabric collap-ing because of them. This court in many cases has sustained to the fullest the rights of a married woman in these respects. What logic is there in the claim that the wife may legally sell and convey her own property to her husband while acting herself, and at the same time condemn as utterly void and of no force whatever a like conveyance made by her in the best of faith, and for a full consideration, when she is acting in a fiduciary capacity for another; and especially how out of harmony with logic is such conclusion when we couple with it the thought that such sale has passed the scrutiny and received the commendation and approval of a court vested with full jurisdiction to supervise and order such sale? I am free to say, in my opinion, such a sale is perfectly valid, and is not even voidable. The only case to which we are cited of a similar nature to the one at bar is Crawford v. Gray, 131 Ind. 53, 30 N. E. 885, which was a case where a wife purchased at an executor's sale conducted by her husband and another as executors. No fraud or collusion was there charged, and it was there urged, as here, that the wife could not become the purchaser because of considerations growing out of her relation to the executor. The court, on pages 54, 55, 131 Ind., and page 885, 30 N. E., in part said: "Under the law of this state as it is now and was at the time of this sale by the executors and purchase by the appellee, the wife had quite as distinct and individual an existence relating to her right to contract for and purchase real estate and take title in her own name, and hold, use, and enjoy the same, as did her husband. She has the same right to invest her own money in the purchase of real estate as her husband, and regardless of the will of her husband. When once the title is vested in her, true, she cannot convey or encumber the same except by deed in which her husband joins; but there are no restrictions on her right to purchase and take title in herself. This she can do without his aid or consent, and he has no legal power to restrain or prevent her from doing so. At the executor's sale the land was offered at public auction. In offering the land for sale the executors were acting under and in pursuance of an order of court. All who desired had the right to bid and become purchasers. The wife of one of the executors having the right to use her individual means as she willed, she had the same right to bid and to become a purchaser in good faith as did any other individual, and to authorize an agent to act for and bid the land off for her, and take title in her own name. Before the purchase the wife had no interest in the land. The husband was acting in a fiduciary capacity. It was not necessary that the wife join him in a deed to pass title. The title was not even in the husband. It was the title which the testator held at his death that the executors conveyed to the wife. There is no fraud charged upon the part of either the appellee or the executors, or any collusion between the appellee and her husband." In Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21

N. E. 193, cited in the majority opinion, the court held that a sale like the one herein described was voidable, not wholly void, to which conclusion the Chief Justice and Justice Bailey dissented, and from this dissenting opinion I quote (pages 146, 147, 128 Ill., and page 196, 21 N. E.): "It is assumed in the opinion of the majority of the court, and, I think, correctly, that no fraud in fact is shown, the decision being based wholly upon the assumption that there was such fraud in law as must necessarily invalidate the transaction. I make no question as to the soundness of the doctrine that an agent employed by another to sell his property cannot, either directly or indirectly, become the purchaser, and that, if he does so, his principal may interpose, and avoid the sale. But that is not this case. The purchaser here was not the agent, but another person, who was sui juris, and capable of acquiring, owning, and controlling her separate property wholly independent of any control or interference on the part of her husband. The opinion treats the purchase by the wife as being the same in legal effect as though made by the husband. This doubtless would be the case if the wife were still laboring under the disabilities imposed by the rules of the common law. But our statute has so far emancipated her from those disabilities as to place her in all essential respects in the same legal position, so far as property rights are concerned, as though she were a feme sole. Her separate estate is no longer subject to either the rights or the control which, at common law, resulted to the husband from the marital relation. She now has the same control over her estate that her husband has over his. She has the same legal power to acquire property, to buy and sell, or engage in business, she would have if she were unmarried. In respect to property rights and business transaction she is, in contemplation of law, a stranger to her husband, and may act independently of him, or assume a position adverse to his."

But perhaps I do violence to the argument contained in the majority opinion in assuming that the conclusion reached grows of necessity out of the marital relation. I am not sure but the argument is that it grows out of the close personal interests based upon this relation, as that seems to be the idea running through the quotation from the brief of counsel for the defendant in error, and also the quotation from Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21 N. E. 193. This consideration would be a very potent one if the question were one of actual fraud. The relation of husband and wife is, indeed, or should be, one of the closest and most intimate known to humanity; and it generally is so, but not always. It is not infrequent that the relation of parent and child, brother and brother, or even friend and friend, is more intimate and confidential, especially in relation to property, than that of husband and wife. How can we say, as a matter of law, that a sale in the one case would be good, and in the other absolutely void? My brethren, by this decision, say that, no matter how adverse the interests of husband and wife actually are, how antagonistic and at arm's length their dealings may be, all this cannot be considered when one acting as a trustee comes to sell the trust estate to the other; that the sole fact that the relation of husband and wife exists between them makes the transaction, as a matter of law, fraudulent and void, which, as a matter of fact, is not fraudulent, but for the highest interest of the cestui que trust. Could legal absurdity be carried farther? But, granting that a sale made by husband or wife in a fiduciary relation to the consort is voidable, I most strenuously insist that such sale, having received the approbation of a court which had full jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, is not so absolutely void as to be disregarded on a collateral attack. It is granted in the majority opinion that an attack by an action in ejectment is a collateral one. In this case we find that the guardian, duly appointed by the probate court, filed a petition in all respects regular in that court; received its proper legal order to sell the minor's interest in the real estate involved; such real estate was sold for a full consideration, without any fraud; such sale was reported to the court, and the court, after due consideration, presumably knowing all the facts relative thereto, confirmed such sale, and directed the issuance and delivery of a deed to the purchaser. In doing so it at no point exceeded its jurisdiction. It, following the supreme court of Indiana, held that the sale was good. Admit in this it was wrong; that it should have held, with the supreme court of Illinois, that it was voidable; or admit, following this court, now for the first time in this country announcing that such sale was void, the probate court adjudged that it was good,—surely this adjudication was not void, even though the sale was. If the court was wrong, it was but an error of law, and we revolutionize all of our ideas concerning the inviolability of the orders and judgments of courts of competent jurisdiction when we say such an order may be disregarded upon a collateral attack. The statute (§ 133 of the executor's and administrator's act, Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2938) says of a deed executed as was the one in this case, it shall "be received in all courts as presumptive evidence that the executor or administrator in all respects observed the directions and complied with the requisitions of the law, and shall vest the title in the purchaser in like manner as if conveyed by the deceased in his lifetime." Is it possible that this statute goes for naught, and in a collateral attack all errors committed by the court in ordering such deed may be brought to light? I confess myself unable to say where such a rule will lead us. The authorities opposing such rule are so abundant that I shall not cite them. Let us illustrate: A guardian, being ordered to dispose of a minor's property for his sustenance, education, or other proper purpose, makes a sale to the husband or wife for a full consideration. The consideration is paid and the sale is confirmed. Everyone has acted in the best of faith, and in the honest belief that the law has been in all respects fully complied with. The money received by the guardian is expended for the purposes desired. Some years thereafter the ward brings an action in ejectment. The purchaser, without being recompensed in any manner for the money paid by him, is wholly deprived of his title,—as it will be remembered that the court in this case holds that such a sale is absolutely void, and, if so, no necessity for a tender or repayment exists as a prerequisite for recovery. I have searched the books in vain to find warrant or authority for such injustice. None of the cases cited in the majority opinion go to that extent. It is only where a trustee sells to himself—that is, where there is no sale—that this rule obtains. Take, for instance, the case of Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 4 L. R. A. 218, 21 N. E. 193, where an executor sold to his wife. Such sale was held to be voidable only, the court directing that the conveyance should be canceled upon repayment of the amount received by the executor, with interest thereon. In the case of Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252, which is the leading case in this country, where the executor caused lands to be purchased for the benefit of his wife, such sale was ordered to be set aside upon condition that the consideration money be repaid. The same is true in the case of Riddle v. Roll, 24 Ohio St. 572. In the other cases cited where sales were held void the sale was made by the trustee to himself, or indirectly in his interest.

57 L. R. A.

It is urged in this case that the form of the action is such that the setting aside of the sale cannot be conditioned upon an equitable adjustment of the price paid. If this is so, so much the worse for the plaintiff. It was she who selected the form of the action. Surely, the defendant ought not to be wronged because she selected such an action as would not permit him to be dealt with honestly. I do not believe the plaintiff ought to be permitted to recover the land and retain the price honestly paid for it.

Rehearing denied.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

Sophia LAWRENCE
v.
Agnes NELSON, Appt.

(113 Iowa, 277.)

1. A court will not inquire into the validity of a divorce obtained by a man since deceased, for the mere purpose of satisfying a sentiment as to who is his widow.
2. For the purpose of determining the proper recipient of a pension due to the widow of a deceased person, the court will inquire into the validity of a divorce which he had obtained.
3. Adult heirs of a deceased person are not necessary parties to a proceeding by his former wife to contest the validity of a divorce which he had obtained from her, for the purpose of establishing her right to a pension as his widow.
4. Where the statute requires plain-tiff's residence in the county for one year, in good faith, and not for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, to give jurisdiction of a divorce proceeding, the decree may be set aside after plaintiff's death if the record shows that the residence was not in good faith, but merely to obtain the divorce.

(Decmer, J., dissents.)

(February 6, 1901.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Dallas County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to set aside a decree granting a divorce. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Shortley & Harpel, for appellant:

In cases to set aside divorces, courts pro-

NOTE.—Right to contest the validity of a divorce decree after the death of one or both of the parties.

I. Introduction, 583.

II. Attack by surviving party.

a. In direct proceeding to set aside or vacate decree.

1. Appeal, 583.

2. Motion or petition filed in the original cause, 584.

3. Writ of error, 587.

4. New suit, 588.

b. In collateral proceeding, 593.

III. Attack by stranger to the decree.

a. In direct proceeding, 599.

b. In collateral proceeding, 600.

IV. Death of one party pending appeal, 603.

V. Conclusion, 605.

I. Introduction.

The question of the right to contest the validity of a divorce decree after the death of one of the parties is one which has been little discussed in the text-books, but three or four cases being usually cited, and one of those cited most frequently—that of Bomsta v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 230, 36 N. W. 341—being scarcely more than a dictum. The authorities on the subject are not numerous, and a large number of the cases here treated do not pass directly upon the effect of the death upon the right to contest the validity of the decree, that point not being raised in the contentions of counsel and apparently not being considered as of importance; but, since the courts do pass upon the question of the validity of the divorce, and the facts show that one or both of the parties were dead, these cases are included as impliedly sustaining the right to reopen a divorce decree notwithstanding the death of one or both of the parties. Cases as to the conclusiveness of a decree pronouncing a marriage null and void from the beginning, though not strictly within the scope of the note, are also included, the principle governing the right to contest a decree in such a case being the same as if it were one of divorce.

In a few cases decrees in suits for facilitation of marriage have been questioned after the death of one of the parties, but these have not been included, as the doctrine in regard to the conclusiveness of a decree in such a suit is somewhat different from that in regard to the conclusiveness of a decree of divorce or annulment of marriage, since, in pronouncing against the marriage in a jactitation suit, the court does not hold positively that there is no marriage, but only that, "as far as yet appears," there is no marriage. In speaking of such decrees, Chief Justice DeGrey, in the famous case of the Duchess of Kingston, 20 How. St. Tr. 355, in which the validity of a decree in a jactitation suit was attacked, said that such a suit ranks as a cause of defamation only, and not as a matrimonial cause, except when the defendant pleads a marriage; and that, even when a marriage is pleaded, the sentence has only a negative and qualified effect, viz., that the party has failed in his proof, and that the libellant is free from all matrimonial contract "as far as yet appears," leaving it open to new proofs of the same marriage in the same cause, or to any proofs of that or any other marriage in another cause; and that, if such a sentence is no bar to a new suit in the same court, it cannot conclude a court in which the decree is offered in evidence from going into new proofs to make out that or any other marriage. He therefore stated that, admitting such a sentence in its fullest extent and import, it only proves that at the time of the jactitation suit it "did not yet appear" that the parties were married, and not that they were not married at all. None of these cases of attacks on decrees in jactitation suits, so far as found, passes directly upon the effect of the death of one of the parties on the right to contest the decree. The question has usually been as to the right to attack the decree in the temporal courts.

II. Attack by surviving party.

a. In direct proceeding to set aside or vacate decree.

1. Appeal.

A bill of divorce having been brought by a husband, and a decree rendered in his favor, shortly after which he died leaving a considerable estate, an appeal by the defendant, taken after his death but within the period allowed by statute for appeals in chancery, was held, in Shafer v. Shafer, 30 Mich. 163, to be authorized. There was a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that it was not authorized, though the grounds of objection are not stated, but the court held that the statute regulating chancery appeals was broad enough to ceed with great caution and with anxious care for the intervening rights of strangers.

1 Black, Judgm. § 320; Parish v. Parish, 9 Ohio St. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 483; Burgess v. Lovengood, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 457; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1184.

A controlling reason why the court should not now set aside the decree is the fact that the husband is dead and his legal representatives are not made parties.

There is no property right whatever involved, directly or indirectly. It is only claimed that a pension from the United States is involved; but clearly that is not derived from the husband; nor is it property within this state.

U. S. Rev. Stat. 2d ed. 1878, §§ 4702 et seq.

If the decree in controversy is void for cover an appeal in a cause thus circumstanced, although before the appeal could be brought to a hearing, or any further proceedings had in the cause, proper steps must be taken to bring in as parties the representatives of the deceased and his heirs at law.

But in Barney v. Barney, 14 Iowa, 189, it was held that where complainant in a divorce suit died after a decree in her favor, but before the expiration of the time allowed for an appeal, the action ended with her death, and could not be revived or continued against her representatives. The statute under which the right to an appeal was claimed provided that no action should abate by the death, marriage, or disability of either party, if from the nature of the case the cause of action could survive or continue, and the court held that from the nature of the case, in so far as the proceeding related to the divorce, the cause was ended by the death of the complainant, and was one which could not survive or continue; that it could not be revived because there was nothing to survive, death itself having settled the question of separation beyond all controversy. The decree also provided that the wife should have the custody of the children and the control and enjoyment of all rights of property which she had before marriage, or which had accrued from her separate estate, free from all interference or control of the defendant; but the court held that that portion of the decree in regard to the children ceased to have any effect upon the death of the mother, and that the husband stood in the same relation towards his children that he would have occupied had the decree never been made; and that, as it did not appear from the record that the complainant in the divorce suit was possessed of any property, either real or personal, to which any right could survive, the whole cause must, under the statute, abate by the death of the wife, as there was nothing to survive. The court does not indicate what would have been its decision if the wife had possessed property in which the husband, except for the divorce, would have had an interest at her death.

As to the effect of the death of one party pending appeal, see infra, IV.

2. Motion or petition filed in the original cause.

A decree of divorce in favor of a husband was set aside on motion, in Gambe v. Gambe, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 23, at the suit of the wife, because of lack of jurisdiction, although the petition to vacate the decree was filed more than thirty years after the divorce was granted and long after the husband's death. The court 57 L. R. A.

any reason, it can be disregarded by the pension department.

Neff v. Beauchamp, 74 Iowa, 92, 36 N. W. 905.

The right to apply for a pension is not a property right.

Where the husband is dead, and no property derived from or through him is affected, an application to set aside a decree of divorce will not be granted.

Moyer v. Koontz, 103 Wis. 22, 79 N. W. 50.

Messrs. White & Clark for appellee.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Each party to this record is a single woman. This is inevitable, whatever the character of the decree of divorce. If val-said: "This is certainly a novel proceeding at this time, the libellant having been dead for many years. The proof adduced in this rule clearly shows that this court had no jurisdiction, and therefore all its proceedings were void ab initio. . . . Where there is no jurisdiction there is no authority to pronounce judgment; consequently a judgment so entered is so but in form and semblance, and has no substance, force, or authority." The purpose of the petition in the present proceeding was to apply for a widow's pension from the United States government, the deceased having been a soldier in the Civil War, and the court held that, the decree of divorce having been procured through a fraud of the husband, it could see no good reason why the petitioner was not entitled to have it declared vacated.

So, in Fidelity Ins. Co.'s Appeal, 93 Pa. 242, it was held that a decree of divorce should be vacated for fraud in obtaining it, although the rule to vacate it was not filed until thirteen years after the decree was entered and until after the death of the party obtaining it, where the defendant in the divorce suit had no notice or knowledge of the divorce having been applied for or obtained, until after her husband's death. This case was said to be clear of certain elements which have embarrassed the consideration of others of a similar nature, since here there was no subsequent marriage, and the petitioner offered to release her interest in all property conveyed by her husband without her joining therein after the date of the divorce. It was therefore held that upon her filing in court an agreement to release all grantees of property conveyed by her husband during coverture and after the decree of divorce, without her joining, from all claims of dower, the decree would be vacated. Counsel for the defendant argued that there was no authority for setting aside a divorce decree after so great a lapse of time; that the application to set it aside resolved itself into a question of distribution of the deceased's estate after his death; and that it would be inequitable in such a litigation to take from his heirs and personal representatives an inheritance cast upon them by law solely to give it to a woman from whom he had been divorced, and who had, while her husband lived, acquiesced in the decree for over twelve years, and who did not present her petition to set the decree aside until nearly three months after his death. But the court found that the evidence proved that the wife had no notice of the divorce proceeding, and no knowledge thereof, until after her husband's death. See the same case in id, it merely fixes the plaintiff's status as such a few years earlier than otherwise was accomplished by the death of Henry Lawrence. If invalid, setting it aside will not affect her status as an unmarried woman. And the court will not, for the mere purpose of satisfying a sentiment, inquire which is the widow of the deceased. But, where some property right hinges on the question, the past status of these parties may become the subject of judicial investigation. Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 452, 99 Am. Dec. 193; Rawlins v. Rawlins, 18 Fla. 345; Bomsta v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 230, 36 N. W. 341. See Webster v. Webster, 54 Iowa, 155, 6 N. W. 170; Barney v. Barney, 14 Iowa, 189. The deceased left no property subject to administration, but was a pensioner under the laws of the United States, and had established his right to the bounty of the government under §§ 4692 and 4693 of the United States Revised Statutes, as we understand. Upon his death, as is conceded, his widow was entitled to a pension commencing from that time. See § 4702, and act of Congress approved June 7, 1888. This pension, though a mere bounty of the government, is as certain as the right to property while the particular statute authorizing it stands. The right to it depends upon the status of these parties immediately before the death of Henry Lawrence. Which was then his wife? Ordinarily this inquiry is solely for an appropriate department of the general government. But here is a decree, regular on its face, apparently foreclosing investigation,—an obstruction to the acquirement by plain-lower court, reported as Peterson v. Peterson, 6 W. N. C. 449.

A decree of divorce fraudulently obtained by a man on ex parte proceedings was also vacated after his death on a rule filed by the wife, in Smith v. Smith, 3 Phila. 489, and a delay of ten months in making the motion to vacate the decree was held not to constitute such laches as would deprive the wife of her right to relief. The fact of the husband's death is spoken of as making the case a somewhat novel one, and as presenting questions of embarrassment requiring of the court the exercise of no ordinary caution in disposing of the rule to vacate. The court also said that a sentence more effective than that of any earthly tribunal had separated the parties, so that, in determining whether the decree should stand or fall, they were to settle only the status of the surviving party to the matrimonial contract with relation to property of which the husband died seized, and which by his will was given to parties other than the petitioner. The decision of the motion was said to be of importance in two other ways: First, because of the right of the wife to be allowed to vindicate herself from the charge of wilful and malicious desertion; and, secondly, because of the duty which the court owed to itself to vindicate its own integrity and see that it was not made an instrument of injustice and wrong. After reviewing the facts in the case, the court held that the evidence "requires of us, in justice to the petitioner, who stands convicted by our judgment of a wilful violation of her marriage vow, that the judgment passed in her absence, without hearing, without knowledge of the proceedings until their consummation, should be opened, and that the effect of that sentence which declared her no longer the wife of the libellant should be removed." This petition was filed in the court of common pleas, which had granted the divorce. Upon appeal by the administrator of the deceased husband's estate from this decision of the court of common pleas to the supreme court the order striking off the decree of divorce was affirmed. Boyd's Appeal, 38 Pa. 241. On this appeal it was contended by counsel that the court had no power to strike off the decree after such a lapse of time (something like ten months), and especially as the libellant in the divorce suit had died in the meantime. But the court said that this objection had all its force,—if indeed it had any,—on the basis of supposed rights acquired through the deceased, and held that, even though the rights of the devisees under the will of the deceased would be affected by setting aside the decree, this was no reason in itself against the act; that, without deciding the rights of the claimants under the will, they appeared to stand in no better position, so far as the claim of the widow was concerned, than their testator, if living, would have stood after the reversal of the decree, adding: "It can hardly be maintained that his death concluded her. The act of God injures no one; but this might be doubted were it to be held that death sealed up and sanctified a fraud upon her rights, if it existed. If the devisees claim, as they do, under him, they must stand in his shoes. And if, by reason of imposition practised on the court, he could not maintain the decree, upon what ground can they? That it might have been reversed on appeal no one can doubt, for the time for taking it had not elapsed. His death could not have prevented that. The result would have been precisely the same, as far as his devisees are concerned, as it is in the present aspect of the case. And . . . an appeal was not the only mode of correcting the error."
57 L. R. A.

But in Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1084, a motion by the defendant in a divorce suit after the death of the plaintiff, in whose favor a judgment had been entered, upon notice to her administrator, to vacate the judgment and allow him to answer the complaint, upon the ground that the summons had not been personally served upon him and that the judgment was void and procured by false testimony, was held to be properly denied, the court saying: "The action was solely for the purpose of procuring a judgment of divorce between the parties,—a purely personal action which would not survive the death of either party, and which, upon the death of the plaintiff, could not be further prosecuted or defended, whether her death was before or after judgment. If she had died prior to the entry of judgment, there could have been no judgment in the case, and her death subsequent to the entry of judgment deprived the court of all power to review its action and determine her right to a divorce. The action having been brought to change the personal status of the plaintiff in her relations toward the defendant, it is evident that upon the termination of her life there was no personal status which a judgment could change." The motion to vacate the judgment was made under a provision of the Code authorizing the court to allow a defendant, in case he had not been personally served with the summons, to answer to the merits of the original action within a year after the rendition of judgment therein; but this section was held to have had no application to a case in which, by the death of the tiff of property rightly belonging to her. The source of the property can be given little weight in determining whether it furnishes a proper basis for the investigation of her past status. What difference can it make whether this be decided to enable a person to obtain property through the probate court or the commissioner of pensions? None save that in the one case title thereto is settled, and in the other the right to its immediate acquirement. The case differs from that of Moyer v. Koontz, 103 Wis. 22, 79 N. W. 50, in that both parties submit to the jurisdiction of the court. As the heirs were not interested in the result, all being adults, they were not necessary parties. We conclude that the property interest is sufficiently certain to warrant inquiry into the validity of the decree, and the determination of plaintiff's status as widow of the deceased.

plaintiff, the action had abated and all opportunity of controverting its merits had been removed. It was also held that the effect of the plaintiff's death upon the action was not changed by reason of the question of property, which was suggested by the husband, the court saying that the complaint and judgment were silent upon the subject of property, and that, although there was an allegation in reference thereto in the answer which the husband proposed to file, this did not prevent the abatement of the action; that the primary and substantive subject of litigation in a suit for divorce is the personal relation of the parties, and their rights as to the community property are but incidental thereto; that if, before a decision upon that question is made, one of the parties dies, the action cannot be continued for the purpose of determining property rights; and that, if there was originally no issue upon the subject, the action cannot be revived in case of death after judgment for the purpose of having this question adjudicated. The court does not intimate what would have been its decision upon the husband's right to have the judgment vacated and be permitted to defend, if there had been a question of property involved in the original suit.

A motion to set aside a judgment of divorce in favor of one since deceased, on notice simply to the administrator of his estate, because of fraud and irregularity in the divorce proceedings, was also denied in Watson v. Watson, 1 Hun, 267, 47 How. Pr. 240. It was, however, said that, if the facts stated in the moving papers as to the fraud and irregularity were true, there certainly should be some relief for the wife, but that the question was whether that relief could be obtained on motion and on notice simply to the administrator of the estate, and the conclusion was that it could not, since the administrator had no power to consent to setting aside the judgment, nor any control or authority over it, nor any legal interest in it whatever. The court said that it seemed that the only mode in which the relief sought could properly be obtained was by an action in the nature of a bill of revivor, bringing before the court all the heirs at law and other persons interested in the real estate left by the decedent, and such persons as might have taken conveyance thereof subsequent to the decree, as well as his representatives.

Upon the authority of this case, a motion to set aside a judgment of divorce, made more than a year after the death of the successful party in the divorce suit, was denied in Groh 57 L. R. A.

2. The decree attacked was entered in the district court of Dallas county July 25, 1893. The ground alleged was desertion in 1855, and service was had by publication. That the plaintiff therein, Henry Lawrence, had lived in that county during the year previous, cannot be questioned. But the statute exacts more. This must appear to have "been in good faith, and not for the purpose of obtaining a divorce." Code, § 3172. Unless this, preliminary to hearing on the merits, was fully established, the action should have been dismissed. Id., § 3173. The record has convinced us that residence was for the sole purpose of obtaining this decree, and not with a view of remaining in the state. He was started in this direction by a prosecution begun by the plaintiff in Jefferson county, Indiana, in January, 1892, from which he fled, but appears to have tarried in Chicago long

v. Groh, 35 Misc. 354, 71 N. Y. Supp. 985, without costs and without prejudice, on the ground that a motion was not the proper method of procedure; that a separate action should have been brought against all the heirs and other persons interested in the real estate left by the deceased, and such persons as might have taken conveyance thereof subsequent to the decree of divorce, as well as the representatives of the deceased.

And a defendant in a divorce suit, who, after the death of the other party, files a petition to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud, is held, in Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831, to obtain by such a proceeding no standing in court to attack the decree, her only course, if the decree is assailable at all by her, being to proceed by a new suit with the proper parties representing the property interests liable to be affected; the court saying that this application was not such a suit, but a petition in the divorce case. The court, however, went further, and stated that, waiving all objections based on the manner in which the relief sought was applied for, it was of opinion that the petition must be dismissed because of laches. The petitioner, though having knowledge of the divorce decree shortly after it was rendered, and the defects in the proceedings which were set up in this case being open to detection by the least attention to facts which must have been obvious to her, took no steps to have the decree set aside until more than eight years after it was rendered, during which time her husband had remarried, and until nearly a year after his death. The court said that the sole motive in assailing the decree was to get, through a kind of post mortem adjudication, a share of the property left by the deceased; that the petitioner did not attack the proceedings during his lifetime, when, if successful, the result would have been a revival of the marriage state, but designedly waited until, in consequence of his death, the property interests might be pursued without the risk of any restoration of conjugal connection.

This case being dismissed because of a mistake in the procedure, the subsequent remarks of the court are hardly more than dicta, but they are cited and approved in Roberts v. Roberts, 19 R. I. 349, 33 Atl. 872, in which, a divorce having been granted to a wife after due service of process upon her husband, who failed to appear, a petition filed in the cause after her death, seeking to set aside the decree and reinstate the case on the docket because of al-enough to file a petition for a divorce, in which he falsely asserted a residence of two years in Illinois. While in Dallas county he acquired no property, save that essential to following his trade as painter, and went under an assumed name until the decree was entered, precisely one year from the month he arrived. Shortly afterwards, in October, he married defendant, with whom he had lived since 1861, and finally left the state in March of the following year for the county of Jefferson, Indiana, from whence he came, and there resided until death. And the evidence shows, without dispute, that he deserted plaintiff, rather than she him, as alleged in the petition; that during the period of their cohabitation he was guilty of excessive cruelty, and wilfully and without fault on her part left her penniless, with six small children to care for and maintain. Not until thirty years had passed, and only when pursued by her whom he had so wronged, did he undertake to procure a decree by which to shield himself from punishment; and then in a state distant from his residence, on substituted service, and living in the concealment of an assumed name. As he was not a bona fide resident of Iowa at any time, the decree is of no validity. Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa, 36; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46 Iowa, 437; Dunham v. Dunham, 162 Ill. 589, 35 L. R. A. 70, 44 N. E. 841; Watkins v. Watkins, 125 Ind. 163, 25 N. E. 175.

3. It is quite immaterial whether defendant at the time of her marriage knew of the relation between plaintiff and deceased. Rush v. Rush, 46 Iowa, 648, 26 Am. Rep. 179; Allen v. Maclellan, 12 Pa. 328, 51 Am. Dec. 608.

Affirmed.

Deemer, J., dissents.

leged fraud practised on the court in that the charges in the divorce petition and the testimony in support of them were false, was dismissed on the ground that, if the charges were false, the petitioner must have known of their falsity before the decree was granted, and should either have employed counsel to appear for him and suggest their falsity, or have notified the court himself that they were false. The court said: "We should have regarded the petition with more favor if the respondent's solicitude for the court and the interests of the public had prompted him to move in the matter before the death of Mrs. Roberts. We cannot resist the feeling that the respondent is more solicitous to obtain the $7,000 left by the deceased than to protect the court from imposition and uphold the interests of justice." It was further held that, even if the petition had been filed in the lifetime of Mrs. Roberts, no sufficient ground was stated for granting a new trial.

Likewise, a petition to open and vacate a decree of divorce on the ground of fraud in obtaining it because the petitioner was never served with notice, filed in the original cause seventeen years after the divorce was granted and after the death of the successful party, was dismissed in Potts v. Potts, 10 W. N. C. 102, where it appeared that the petitioner had ceased to live with her husband a year before the divorce was obtained, and had later married another man; and where, although she averred that she had no notice of the decree until a short time before presenting the present petition, the evidence showed that she knew of it eleven years before the petition was filed. The entire opinion of the court was as follows: "Whether or not the petitioner was really ignorant of the decree when it was made, she certainly knew of it eleven years before she made this application, and during that time she had 'married' another man. She comes here now, not for redress against a fraud, but with an impudent claim for a share of the dead man's property."

3. Writ of error.

In Wren v. Moss, 7 Ill. 72, the plaintiff in a divorce suit having died after a decree in his favor, a writ of error was issued, on the petition of the divorced wife, at a subsequent term of court, making defendants the husband's administrator, the legatees under his will, and parties to whom in his lifetime he had transferred property in which the wife had not relinquished her dower. The wife asked a rule upon the defendants to join in error, which was resisted on the ground that no writ of error would lie in such a case because by the death of the husband the suit abated as to the subject-matter, and, if reversed, could not be retried; and also because error would not lie against persons who were interested only in the consequences of a suit, and who had no interest in the subject-matter. But the court said that the wife complained that she had been injured by an erroneous decree, and that, if so, she ought to find a remedy, and if she could not bring error she was remediless, since, under the practice, an appeal would not lie in such a case; and that, although by the husband's death the parties were divorced and no further proceedings could be had, yet the mode of effecting the same object by a decree, if erroneous, would unjustly deprive the wife of all right of dower or interest in the personality. It was also held that the defendants were properly made parties, since, although none of them could have an interest in the subject-matter of the divorce suit, they all had an interest in the effects, and consequently in the reversal, of the decree. It was therefore ordered that such a writ of error should be framed as would secure the interest of all who might be affected by it, and the motion for rule to join in error was allowed. One judge dissents from this opinion on the ground that the decree of divorce was complete in the court below before the death of the husband; that there was nothing decreed but the divorce of the parties from the bonds of matrimony, and that this was a matter purely personal to the parties, and no right survived to the representatives of the deceased in respect to the subject-matter of the decree, saying: "I have not been able to find an adjudged case where a writ of error has been allowed in a case like this. A writ of error is regarded as of the nature of the commencement of a new suit, and not, like an appeal, the continuance of the suit already commenced and prosecuted to judgment in the court below. The sole question to be litigated here relates exclusively to the correctness, or otherwise, of the decree granting the divorce, although the rights of others not parties to the original suit may be seriously affected, injuriously or beneficially, according to the decision of this court upon the writ of error. Ought the respondent, therefore, to be permitted to reverse this decree after the death of the complainant by prosecuting a writ of error to this court under the circumstances? I think not."

This case is cited by the court in Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236, in which it is said, in answer to the contention that the death of either party in a suit for divorce puts an end to all further proceedings, that while both parties live a writ of error lies to reverse an erroneous decree of divorce, the effect of which is to restore both parties to their former status of husband and wife in law, and that, after the death of one, it ought to lie in favor of the other party, not for the same purpose, but to restore the survivor to his or her rights of property divested erroneously by the decree. This, however, was not a case of writ of error, but an appeal from an order refusing to set aside on motion a decree of divorce rendered against a woman upon ex parte hearing, and to permit her to defend the suit, pending which appeal the husband died. For a fuller statement of the case see infra, IV.

And a motion to dismiss a writ of error, sued out by a woman after the death of her husband to reverse a decree of divorce obtained by him against her, was denied in Israel v. Arthur, 6 Colo. 85, against the contention that a writ of error would not lie in a case of this nature; that, inasmuch as the decree of the court below concerned only the marriage relations of the parties thereto, after the husband's death there was no one who could represent him in this relation; and that, if the decree were adjudged erroneous, the lower court would be without jurisdiction to retry the cause, for the reason that the bonds of matrimony had been dissolved by death, and the marriage relation no longer existed between the parties. The court said: "If a decree of divorce affected the marriage relation only, there would be great force in the argument; but when it is considered that the decree in this case, as in other cases, affects the property rights of the parties as well as their marital rights, it would seem that the same reasons exist for determining its validity as in civil cases generally, notwithstanding the death of one of the parties, and regardless of the fact that the primary relief sought by the bill and afforded by the decree has been confirmed by death." The court also said that the authorities agree that a decree of divorce may be reviewed, even after the death of one of the parties, differing only as to the mode of review, and, after discussing some of the authorities, held that a writ of error was a proper manner in which to review such a decree, the Colorado Constitution providing that writs of error shall lie from the supreme court to every final judgment of the county court. In this case only the administrator of the deceased had been summoned as defendant, and it was held that the heirs at law should also have been made parties; but this failure to bring in the heirs was held no ground for dismissing the writ of error, since the defect could be remedied in another way.

On final hearing of this case (Israel v. Arthur, 7 Colo. 12, 1 Pac. 442) the court reversed the decree of divorce in a brief opinion, referring to the decision on the motion to dismiss the writ of error as follows: "This court has held that the decease of the husband after a decree of divorce is granted, and before proceedings in error thereon are instituted, does not operate to prevent a review and reversal of the decree. That when property rights are involved, as in this case, the same reason exists for determining its validity as in civil cases generally," citing the former decision.

4. New suit.

One of the oldest cases on this question in 57 L. R. A.

the courts of the United States is that of Owens v. Sims, 3 Coldw. 544, decided in 1866, in which a decree of divorce against a wife was set aside on her petition denying the allegations of the divorce bill and alleging that she was not served with process and had no notice of the existence of the divorce proceedings, and the wife was given permission to make defense against the bill. Immediately after this order was entered the petitioner suggested the death of her husband, and thereupon the husband's heirs and devisees moved the court to revive the cause in their names, which was refused and an appeal prosecuted by them. The court, on appeal, sustained the action of the lower-court judge in refusing to revive the cause, on the ground that it had abated by the death of the husband, but held that he erred in opening the decree and permitting the wife to defend, saying: "The circuit judge admitted the defendant after final decree and the death of the complainant to appear and defend. Defend what? Surely not a suit for a divorce, for that had abated and passed beyond the limits of revivor. The circuit judge so decided, and we think correctly; and yet, on the ex parte statement of the defendant, he set aside the decree dissolving the bonds of matrimony solemnly pronounced upon the evidence, . . . and admitted the wife to appear and defend in a case not in existence, nor which could by revivor be brought to life again." It is not clear whether the circuit-court judge knew of the death of the husband when he set aside the decree and gave permission to defend. The language of the upper court would indicate that he did, but the facts as stated seem rather to show a shrewd attempt on the part of the wife to have the decree set aside and permission given to defend without informing the court of the death of her husband, and then, by suggesting his death, prevent any further proceedings in the cause. As the opinion in the upper court states that by the positive declaration of the statute the only method for reviewing a decree of divorce is by appeal, and as the time for taking an appeal had expired, it would seem that, even if the husband had been alive, the application to set aside the decree must have been dismissed. Nevertheless the court expressly states that by the death of the husband the suit had abated and passed beyond the limits of revivor. The application to set aside a decree of divorce after the death of one of the parties is spoken of as a peculiar one, and the court says: "From the total absence of authorities produced in argument to sustain it, we take it as prima facie, at least, that it is as unique as it is peculiar." The application, however, was not without precedent, since in the case of Wren v. Moss, 7 Ill. 72 (supra, III. a, 8), decided in 1845, it is held that a divorce may be set aside on writ of error after the death of the successful party.

A frequently cited case is that of Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 452, 99 Am. Dec. 193, in which a judgment of divorce in favor of a husband was annulled after his death at the suit of the wife, who claimed an interest as widow in his estate, where it was shown that gross fraud was practised upon the court in obtaining the decree. But it is stated that it is doubtful whether the court would take jurisdiction and annul the judgment of divorce, the husband being dead, unless it appeared that he left property in which the plaintiff might possibly have some interest. It was also held that equitable relief against the decree would not be denied simply because it might have been set aside on motion on the ground of a want of jurisdiction, the court saying that there is no substantial objection to the practice of in-attituting a suit in equity to have vacated a void decree of divorce, and that it seems quite as suitable a method to review the questions involved and to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties as would be afforded by motion. There was also an objection that the joinder of the administrator of the deceased husband with the heirs at law was improper, but this objection was held untenable, it being said that, if the judgment were permitted to stand, there might arise a question whether the wife would be entitled to dower in the husband's real estate, and to such a portion of the personal property as the law would otherwise allow her, and that, as the administrators had a right to the possession of all the real and personal estate of the deceased until the estate should be settled, they were directly interested in the question whether the wife had any rights therein, and so would seem to be proper parties to this suit, which necessarily involved that question; and that the interest of the heir in the same question was quite as obvious and direct, since, if the judgment should be declared void and of no effect, it would open the door for the widow to come in and claim her share of the estate, and the heir would thus be deprived of a portion of the inheritance; and that therefore he had a common interest with the administrators in defeating the wife's petition.

Likewise, Bomsta v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 230, 36 N. W. 341, is universally cited as sustaining the right to set aside a decree of divorce obtained by fraud notwithstanding the death of the one in whose favor the divorce was granted. But this is of doubtful authority, since the case was dismissed on other grounds, and the decision of this question was not necessarily involved. In this case the husband, after obtaining the divorce, had married again and at least one child had been born of the marriage, but the court said that the weight of authority upholds the right to vacate and set aside a decree of divorce obtained through fraud, even where there has been a subsequent marriage and the birth of issue, and that the death of one of the parties is no bar to the action; adding that the statute under which the action was brought imposed no restrictions, giving in plain words the right to bring such an action within three years after discovering the fraud, and that the right thus conferred did not terminate with the life of the wrongdoer, but might thereafter be pursued in the manner pointed out by the statute, and that courts of equity would also exercise jurisdiction in such cases where the remedy at law is not plain, adequate, and complete. A demurrer to the complaint in this case on the ground that it failed to state a cause of action was sustained in the lower court because of a defect in the pleadings, and this holding was approved by the court on appeal. But the lower court not only sustained the demurrer, but directed that defendants have judgment, and that plaintiff take nothing by this action; and it appears that counsel for defendants had argued at length that plaintiff's right of action ended upon the decease of her husband. Therefore, the court on appeal said that, since they were not advised of the reason which actuated the court below in thus, in effect, ordering judgment of dismissal; and as it might have been a conviction that an action of this kind could not, in any event, be successfully maintained,—they deemed it judicious, in view of the importance of the questions suggested by the case, and the fact that the trial court might yet have to determine the merits of the controversy, to discuss somewhat in detail the law relative to the effect and stability—in the absence of positive legislation upon the point—of a judgment dissolving the marriage contract, with the conclusion stated above. Though this ruling of the court was not necessary to the decision of the case, the complaint being subject to demurrer, nevertheless, since the question appears to have been argued by counsel, and the trial court indirectly passed upon the merits of the controversy by in effect ordering a judgment of dismissal, it can hardly be considered a mere dictum. It was also held that the second wife, the administrator, and all the heirs should be made parties.

In Rawlins v. Rawlins, 18 Fla. 345, in which a wife, after the death of her husband, filed an original bill in the nature of a bill of review, in her own right and on behalf of her minor children born during the pendency of and after divorce proceedings instituted by the husband in his lifetime, seeking to vacate, on the ground of fraud, the decree therein obtained by him, a demurrer was sustained because of defects in the bill, but the court said that, not only was the fraud admitted by the demurrer, but that the evidence clearly showed that the complainant in the divorce suit had been guilty of gross fraud both upon his wife and upon the court, and clearly implied, without expressly deciding it, that the plaintiffs were entitled to relief. In fact, the right to have a decree of divorce obtained by fraud set aside, even after the death of one of the parties, does not seem to have been questioned. The defense seems rather to have been based on the mode of procedure adopted, and upon defects in the pleadings, than upon any claim that the divorce decree was conclusive, or that the remedy was barred by the husband's death. On the question of procedure, it was contended that this remedy by original bill in the nature of a bill of review was not such as equity would sustain, but the court held that this proceeding had been sanctioned by many courts of equity, and that there was no objection to it, adding that, while in cases where the husband was living and the wife sought to set aside a decree of divorce for fraud the usual method was a proceeding in the same cause, after notice to him, here the husband was dead, and that it was at a loss to see how the purposes of this suit could be affected by proceedings in the suit for divorce. Objections to the bill on the ground of multifariousness and misjoinder of parties in joining the infant plaintiffs and the wife were also overruled, the court saying: "Their rights, while not identical in degree or in interest, are mutually dependent upon setting aside the decree, and as a consequence of a decree of this character they have each an interest in the subject-matter of the suit which can be here readily adjudicated. The primary relief sought is the setting aside the decree of divorce, and all the plaintiffs are interested upon the same side of this question. We can see no necessity for requiring this administrator to be subjected to four distinct suits, all concerning the distribution of the property of the estate, the principal question in each of which . . . would be the same." The demurrer to the bill was sustained on other grounds, and the case remanded with directions to enter an order sustaining the demurrer, with leave to amend the bill in such particulars as the opinion of the court indicated to be necessary.

A rather peculiar case which, while not deciding the exact question, impliedly admits the right to review a divorce decree notwithstanding the death of the successful party, is McCraney v. McCraney, 5 Iowa, 232, 68 Am. Dec. 702, in which a bill in equity was filed by a woman after the death of her former husband, asking to have a decree of divorce obtained by him in his lifetime so far vacated and set aside as to give complainant her dower and a distributive share of one third in the personal estate of the deceased husband, on the ground of fraud and lack of jurisdiction, though the wife had personal notice of the pendency of the action. This bill was filed fourteen years after the divorce was granted, and the husband had married again, three children having been born of the second marriage. The relief prayed for was granted by the lower court, and the decision affirmed upon appeal to the supreme court, the decree expressly reciting that the sentence of divorce should not be considered as vacated in any other respect except to the extent of allowing the wife to recover her dower and distributive share; but upon a rehearing the supreme court held that the decree setting aside the sentence of divorce and declaring it void so far as to allow the wife dower in her husband's estate, and at the same time leaving so much of the decree as dissolved the marriage contract in force, was inconsistent, and not to be supported either upon principle or authority; that, if the sentence of divorce was void for fraud or duress, then it was void, not in part, but in all its parts, and should have been so declared. The opinion states that in concluding, as a majority of the court did before, that such a decree might be rendered, they, though with some hesitation, regarded the testimony as sufficient to sustain the charge of fraud made in the bill, but that, if the decree of divorce must be entirely vacated to let the wife into the relief prayed for, the judges concurred in saying that the testimony was not sufficient to justify such a decree of vacation, adding that, if the decree could legitimately act alone upon the property, and not upon the state and condition of third persons, they might more readily accept the conclusion contended for by the complainant from the proof made; but, since it must bring wretchedness and misery to the innocent wife and children of the second marriage, it was but right that the judicial mind should want more testimony than if its effect was merely to take property from one and give it to the other. The decree was therefore reversed and the bill dismissed. There is nothing in the opinion to indicate whether or not the court regarded the fact of the husband's death as of any importance on the question of the right to set aside the decree of divorce, but from the fact that it considered the evidence in regard to the fraud alleged, and held it was not sufficient to justify setting aside the decree in its entirety, it would seem that it impliedly admitted the right to set aside a decree of divorce, even after the death of one of the parties, where fraud is proved. But counsel for the second wife contended that this was contrary to the rule of the common law. He admitted that, according to the canonical rule, a sentence of divorce might be dissolved at any time, even after the death of the parties, following the ecclesiastical maxim, Sententia contra matrimonium numquam transit in rem judicatam, but contended that this rule had been discarded by the common law, and that, at least when there had been a second marriage, and the effect of a decree dissolving the sentence of divorce would render this marriage void and bastardize the issue, a sentence of divorce could not be questioned after the death of one of the parties, adding that a court of chancery should not put forth its peculiar power to disturb decrees upon the continued validity of which depend so many interests and relations, both in regard to property and status, since such decrees could hardly be disturbed in any case without causing more harm and suffering to the innocent than good to the aggrieved.

57 L. R. A.

Fraud on the jurisdiction of the court is held to be a sufficient reason for vacating a divorce decree after the death of one of the parties, in Rine v. Hodgson, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 275, notwithstanding a statute providing that no appeal shall be allowed in divorce cases from any judgment of the court of common pleas, except from an order dismissing the petition without final hearing, or from a final order or judgment granting or refusing alimony. In this case a petition was filed in the Ohio court of common pleas by a husband after the death of his wife, to set aside a decree of divorce in her favor, because it was obtained by fraud, without his knowledge or the knowledge of his wife, who was insane, by her relatives and heirs. The petition was demurred to on the ground that under the Ohio statutes a decree of divorce is not subject to review, either by appeal or by petition in error, and that a decree once entered dissolving the marriage relation vinculo is final and conclusive between the parties. This demurrer was sustained in the lower court (Rine v. Hodgson, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 104), the court holding itself bound by the decision in Parish v. Parish, 9 Ohio St. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 482, that a decree of divorce, although obtained by fraud and false testimony, cannot be set aside on an original bill filed at a subsequent term. In that case both parties were living at the time the petition to set aside the decree was filed, and the fraud charged was of the most flagrant character, but the court held that the statute-law of the state prohibiting appeals from the judgment of the court of common pleas in divorce cases was "a recognition of the principle of public policy . . . that a judgment or decree which affects directly the status of married persons by sundering the matrimonial tie and thereby enabling them to contract new matrimonial relations with other and innocent persons should never be reopened;" and that, notwithstanding the fraudulent conduct and the manner in which the jurisdiction was invoked, the court pronouncing the decree had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, of the husband by his appearance and of the wife by publication, which, under the Ohio statutes, were as effective in conferring jurisdiction as actual service. In the case of Rine v. Hodgson it was shown that the court granting the divorce had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and that the husband was properly served by publication, and a case relied on by him was distinguished by the lower court on the ground that in that case no jurisdiction was obtained by the court over either party, while in the Parish case and the case of Rine v. Hodgson the court pronouncing the decree had legal jurisdiction of both parties, though by publication only as to the defendant therein. This case is spoken of in the opinion of the court of common pleas as being complicated by the death of the wife and the fact that setting aside the decree would be in law to restore the marital relation,—at least as of the date of her death; and, as the action was confessedly to enable the husband to take the wife's property, the court said he was asking a court of equity to go a long way to aid him in a matter of property merely, and not in the interest of marital happiness, the wife not being there to defend, and not only the reputation of the living, but the reputation and memory of the dead, being involved, and that, while its first impression was against the demurrer, the reading of the case of Parish v. Parish, and other authorities on the subject had convinced it of the dangers to which any innovation upon the principle of public policy therein recognised might lead. But on appeal to the district court the judgment of the court of common pleas was reversed (9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 275), on the ground that, while fraud would be insufficient to permit the setting aside of a divorce decree, the question of the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing the decree could be inquired into, and that in this case there was no jurisdiction over the wife, as she did not file the petition, and was not brought before the court in any way, and the trial was had without her knowledge or consent, the court saying that a judgment is binding only upon parties and privies, and that inquiry into who were parties cannot be precluded by the names used, since this would be to give the conclusive effect of a judgment to a fiction, and that this action was not in fact an action to set aside a decree in a divorce suit, but to declare the record of the suit a nullity. It was also held that the only parties necessary to be made defendants were the heirs of the wife, who would have inherited her property if she had died unmarried. The effect of the death of the wife is not discussed in the opinion of the district court.

So, the right to maintain an action for the vacation of a divorce decree procured by fraud on the jurisdiction of the court is upheld in Frits v. Frits, 6 Ohio, N. P. 258, and an unexplained delay of nearly two years in bringing the action after the discovery of the fraud is held not to be such laches as will create an estoppel. The divorce had been obtained by the fraud of the defendant therein, who procured the filing of a petition in the name of his wife without her knowledge or authority, and in a state in which neither she nor her husband resided, although one of the essential requisites to the jurisdiction of the court in divorce cases was that the plaintiff should have been a bona fide resident of the state for a year preceding the filing of the petition. The wife did not know of the pendency of the suit, was not present at the hearing, and never heard of it until after her husband's death, twenty-eight years later. The effect of the husband's death on the right to set aside the decree was not discussed. In this case, also, the rule established in Parish v. Parish, that a decree of divorce, though obtained by fraud and false testimony, cannot be set aside on an original bill filed at a subsequent term, is referred to, and the Parish case distinguished on the ground that in that case jurisdiction of the parties had been obtained, the court in the present case saying: "What position the court would have taken if it had appeared that the court of common pleas [granting the divorce] had not obtained jurisdiction, we do not know; but it is difficult to believe that, if that fact had been apparent, the court would have used the sweeping language . . . quoted. . . . The decision of that case, while it may be, not having been reversed, authority for the proposition that when a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties the decree taken in a divorce case will not be set aside by reason of the fraud of either, yet it is not authority for the proposition, however broad its language, that a court has no power to set aside a decree for divorce obtained by fraud upon the jurisdiction of the court."

In harmony with this decision is Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, in which it is held that a husband who procures a petition for divorce to be filed in the name of his wife against himself, without her knowledge, and answers the complaint filed by his own procurement, whereupon a divorce is granted, perpetrates a fraud upon her and upon the court, 57 L. R. A.

entitling the wife, upon discovering the fraud long after her husband's death, and twenty years after the date of the decree, to have the judgment of divorce annulled. It is said that to uphold a decree obtained by such fraud would be a mockery, and that courts have inherent power to annul decrees obtained by such means. There was an objection to the competency of the wife as a witness on the ground that, as plaintiff's claim affected the estate and the heirs were parties, she was incompetent, under the statutes of the state, to testify as to matters prior to her husband's death. But the court held that the plaintiff had a right to testify as to what she did or did not do concerning the petition in the divorce; that what she did or did not do was a matter neither within the spirit nor the letter of the law prohibiting parties from testifying where heirs are interested. This is the only direct reference in the case as to the effect of the husband's death upon the right to review the decree, and the court disposes of the objection in very few words. At the end of the opinion is a statement that the issue tried and determined was whether the wife had a right to have the decree of divorce annulled, and that the question whether property rights acquired upon the faith of the validity of the decree were affected was not considered.

And an action seeking to have what purported to be a judgment divorcing plaintiff from her husband, since deceased, set aside and declared void, and to have plaintiff recognized as the widow of the deceased and entitled to share in his estate, was sustained in Willman v. Willman, 57 Ind. 500, without passing on the effect of the husband's death, the court holding that, it being made affirmatively to appear that no summons was issued or served upon the defendant in the divorce proceeding, and there being no voluntary appearance by her, all proceedings in the divorce suit were without jurisdiction, and hence inoperative and void. It was stated to be a well-settled rule of law that there can be no proceedings to review a judgment of divorce; but it was held that this rule does not prohibit proper proceedings by a party interested to annul and set aside a so-called judgment of divorce which is void for want of jurisdiction either of the subject-matter or the parties.

But one who, knowing of the institution of divorce proceedings against her, made no effort to defend the suit, and who, after receiving notice of the decree, accepted the alimony awarded her and remained quiet, without seeking to have the decree set aside, for ten months thereafter, was held, in Maier v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. 95 Ill. App. 365, to be barred by laches from contesting the validity of the decree, where the husband had married a second time. The facts that the husband cohabited with plaintiff as his wife for nine months after the decree, and that she failed to defend the action and allowed judgment to be entered against her by default because she was under his influence and threats, and that she refrained from seeking to have the decree set aside after receiving notice thereof because of his assurances that it was a fraud and did not affect their relation to each other,—were held not to excuse her laches. In this case the husband died shortly after the filing of a bill in the nature of a bill of review to vacate the decree, and his administrator was substituted as defendant in his place. But the husband's death does not seem to have been considered as affecting the question, except in so far as it prevented the wife from testifying in her own behalf, the decision being based entirely on the fact that the rights of an innocent third person had intervened, that the wife, by prompt action, might have prevented the second marriage, and that, having by her delay made the second marriage possible, she could not now, notwithstanding the gross and flagrant fraud practised on her and on the court by the husband in procuring the decree, be granted relief at the expense of the second wife, who had relied upon the validity of the decree. There is a strong dissenting opinion contending that, as the wife had been deceived and deluded by the assurances of her husband that there was no divorce, and as in all she did she acted under his influence and coercion, she was not barred by her delay in moving to have the decree set aside.

So, also, a petition filed after the death of the successful party in a divorce suit, to set aside the decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and collusion, the defendant therein having been induced by the threats and undue influence of her husband not to defend the suit and to permit a judgment by default, was held, in Brigham, Petitioner, 176 Mass. 223, 57 N. E. 328, to be subject to demurrer because of laches, the court saying that, assuming that in any case such a proceeding as this to set aside a decree of divorce is possible, the utmost diligence and good faith are the conditions without which it cannot be entertained, and that the petitioner in this proceeding, relying on getting the advantages of a widow without any of the troubles which she found incident to being a wife, and thinking that she would be better able to prove her case if the opposition of her husband was removed, waited until his death before she took a step; and that, whether it be called laches, or be given a harsher name, such a course put an end to any claim she ever may have had to be heard. The court also said that divorce proceedings generally are ended by the death of one of the parties, and that on the question whether there is an exception where it is sought to set aside a decree of divorce on the ground that it was obtained by the fraud of the deceased party they express no opinion.

And a woman was held to be guilty of such laches as would prevent a court of equity from inquiring into the validity of a divorce decree on the ground that it had been entered without notice or her knowledge or consent, where, for thirty years and until after her husband's death, she made no effort to have the decree set aside, but took advantage of the benefits of it by accepting the custody of the children and a sum of money awarded her thereby. During this period the decree had been spread upon the proper record, the husband had married a second time and died, and by his will had provided for the children of both marriages. The court said that the general rule without doubt is that no lapse of time or delay in bringing a suit to impeach a decree for fraud will bar the remedy in equity if the injured party during the interval was ignorant of the fraud, but that such ignorance must not have been negligent, and, if by reasonable diligence he could have discovered the fraud or ought to have known it, he will be deemed guilty of laches and equity will refuse to interfere, the effect of the husband's death not being directly considered. Sedlak v. Sedlak, 14 Or. 540, 13 Pac. 452.

And on the ground of a want of jurisdiction a suit brought by the guardian of an incompetent against the administrators and heirs of her deceased husband, praying that a decree of divorce obtained by the husband be declared void and of no effect because of gross fraud in procuring it, was dismissed in Moyer v. Koontz, 103 Wis. 24, 79 N. W. 50. The defendants in this case being nonresidents, an order of publication was obtained, and the summons and complaint served personally on them without the state. They appeared specially, and moved that the order of publication be vacated, that the summons be quashed, and the action dismissed for want of jurisdiction, which motion was granted, and an order entered accordingly. The court stated that, while a cause of action arising in the state existed against the defendants, which under the statutes of the state would authorize service by publication, still courts of a state could not so acquire jurisdiction over nonresidents for the mere purpose of personal adjudication against them, nor, indeed, for any purpose except to adjudicate either with reference to property within the state or the status of one of its own citizens. It was admitted that under the rule in Johnson v. Coleman, 23 Wis. 453, 99 Am. Dec. 193, supra, there seemed to be no doubt that a wife might bring suit to annul a decree of divorce against her, and confer jurisdiction by substituted service; but this was said to be for the reason that the purpose of the suit was to adjudicate and act upon her status in relation to her absent husband, the same as if she were suing for a divorce. The court said that the object of such a suit by a woman, when the husband is alive, is to adjudicate that whereas, by the existing fraudulent decree, the plaintiff is made single, she shall, by the demanded judgment, be adjudicated to be still married; but that in a case like the present, where by the irrevocable act of death her status as to her deceased husband has become fixed as that of a celibate, no such question can exist to be acted upon; that no decree can change her status, and a decree then becomes a mere adjudication as to a record, for the purpose of satisfying a sentiment or affecting property rights. It was therefore held that, there being no property within the state to be affected by the decree, and there being no question of status to be decided, since by the death of the husband the status of the plaintiff had become fixed, the court would not be justified in reaching its hands beyond the limits of the state and seeking, upon substituted service, to subject nonresidents to a decree, ostensibly to cure a record, the only purpose of which was to affect property rights without the state. This was held to be in excess of the powers of the court because infringing the principle of international law that the jurisdiction of a state does not extend beyond its boundaries, and because, if the decree were carried into effect, it would violate U. S. Const. 14th Amend., as a deprivation of property without due process of law. This case was distinguished from Johnson v. Coleman on the ground that the defendants in the latter case were residents of the state.

The principal case of LAWRENCE v. NELSON, holding that a fraudulent decree of divorce may be set aside after the death of the successful party where property rights are involved, is in harmony with the majority of the foregoing authorities. The existence of some property right depending on the validity of the decree is held to be a necessary prerequisite to the right to review it, the court saying that it would not inquire as to who was the widow of the deceased for the mere purpose of satisfying a sentiment. But the question which of the two women claiming to be the wife of the deceased was entitled to a pension from the United States government as his widow is held to be a property right of sufficient certainty to justify an inquiry into the validity of the decree.

b. In collateral proceeding.

The question of the validity of a divorce decree frequently arises after the death of one of the parties in a contest as to the rights of the surviving wife or husband in the property of the deceased; and in such cases the effect of the death is usually not directly discussed, the validity of the divorce decree being decided on its merits, or the attempt to impeach it being defeated by laches or estoppel.

Re Ellis, 55 Minn. 401, 23 L. R. A. 287, 56 N. W. 1056, was an appeal by one claiming to be the widow of a deceased person from an order appointing a second wife as administratrix. The question to be decided was, Who was the lawful widow of the deceased? and this depended on the validity of a judgment of divorce between the deceased and his first wife. The appellant offered, in order to impeach the judgment of divorce, to prove that she brought the action under duress because of her husband's conduct toward her in urging her to bring the action, in abandoning her at various times, and leaving her unprovided with the necessities of life, and in threatening to continue such treatment unless she consented to bring the action. The court held that this evidence was properly excluded, saying: "Whether at any time, and especially whether after she has received and enjoyed the fruits of the action, and has acquiesced for years, until the defendant has married again and has died, and there is left solely the matter of distributing his property, a woman plaintiff could, because of such facts, obtain any relief in the same action, we will not undertake to say. Certainly it would be no ground for assailing the judgment in a collateral proceeding at any time." But the principal objection urged to the validity of the divorce was that the court granting it had no jurisdiction because at the time neither party was a resident of the state in which the action was brought. As to this, it was held that the decree was valid as between the parties, though it would not be valid as against the state: that they could not set up their own fraud and collusion in bringing the suit in a state other than that of their residence to escape the consequences of the judgment which they procured the court to render. It was said that, "while the state cannot be bound by its resident citizens appearing in and consenting to the jurisdiction of a court in another state in an action for divorce, the parties may so bind themselves in respect to their individual interests;" and again: "It may seem anomalous that a judgment of divorce can be so far effectual between the parties as to extinguish all rights of property dependent on the marriage relation, without being effectual to protect them from accountability to the state for their subsequent acts. One reason why they ought not to be permitted, by going into another state and procuring a divorce, to escape accountability to the laws of their state, is that their act is a fraud upon the state and an attempt to evade its laws, to which it in no wise consents, and it may therefore complain. But the parties do consent, and why should they be heard to complain of the consequences to them of what they have done?" This case is criticised in Nelson on Divorce & Separation, § 1055, where it is said that, so far as the opinion asserts the validity of this collusive decree, it is clearly wrong, because the fundamental principle of jurisdiction is overlooked; that jurisdiction over the subject-matter cannot be conferred by consent of the parties; and that the same result could have been reached by holding that the decree was void for lack of jurisdiction, and that the wife was estopped from attacking the decree by her fraud and collusion, by accepting the alimony awarded by it, and by permitting the decree to remain in force until the husband had married again.

The validity of a divorce obtained by a man in a foreign state was attacked after his death in Re James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, in a contest as to dower between the divorced wife and a woman whom the husband had married subsequent to the divorce decree. Letters of administration had been granted to the second wife, and on the refusal of the superior court to revoke them and grant letters to the divorced wife she appealed to the supreme court. The grounds on which the decree was attacked were want of jurisdiction in the court rendering it because the plaintiff therein had not been a resident of the state for a sufficient length of time, and defective service of process. There was some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the husband was a bona fide resident of the foreign state at the time of obtaining the divorce decree, and the supreme court held that, this being so, it would not disturb the implied finding of the lower court to the effect that he was such a resident. The defect in the service of process was held to be a defect in a mere matter of form, which was cured by the entry of judgment and not to be assailable in a collateral proceeding. It was also held that the fact that in an action brought by the wife against the husband in the state of New York for a divorce from bed and board, in which the decree of divorce in his favor was not brought to the attention of the court, the defendant failed to plead the decree obtained by him in bar of his wife's right to a divorce, and that a judgment was rendered in her favor did not have the effect to change the status of the deceased from that of a single man, which was given him by the decree of divorce obtained by him.

Notwithstanding that a husband consented to his wife obtaining a decree of divorce against him in order that she might marry another man, and furnished her with evidence for the purpose, and accepted a sum of money from her as a consideration therefor, it was held, in Hardy v. Smith, 136 Mass. 328, that he was entitled, nevertheless, to a distributive share in the estate of his wife after her death. The divorce had been obtained in another state, and in this action the executrix, to show that the petitioner was not entitled to a husband's share in the personal estate of the testatrix, offered the decree in evidence, but the court held that it was incompetent to prove a divorce, saying that it was not only a decree procured in another state "by an inhabitant of this commonwealth for an alleged cause which occurred here while the parties resided here, and therefore by statute of no force or effect here, . . . but it was a decree of a court which had no jurisdiction of the parties, both of them being inhabitants of this commonwealth and neither of them having ever been in Utah, and was wholly void." It was contended that petitioner's consent to the divorce, and his receiving money therefor, estopped him from denying the validity of the decree; that, while the proceedings relating to the divorce might be incompetent to affect the status of the petitioner as husband of the testatrix, they were competent to affect an incident of that relation, and to estop him from claiming any of the rights of a husband. But the court said that no estoppel could arise between the parties to such a transaction as the collusive agreement by which this divorce was obtained; that a party must be in condition to assail a right before he can maintain it by estoppel; and that the evidence was as clearly incompetent to sustain a right of one of the conspirators to require another to carry out his part of the scheme of fraud upon the law as it was to establish the legal status of a party to the infamous transaction.

A similar case is Rundle v. Inwegan, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 328, in which the validity of a divorce procured by one since deceased was attacked on the ground of lack of jurisdiction in the court granting it, in an action to recover dower in the estate of the deceased by the divorced wife claiming as widow. It appeared that the divorce had been obtained in the state of Indiana without service of process upon the defendant, who resided in New Jersey and who did not appear in the action, and the divorce was held to be absolutely void because the court had no jurisdiction over the defendant, notwithstanding her knowledge of the divorce proceedings and acquiescence therein and her subsequent marriage and the birth of issue. The judge writing the opinion said that he would be glad to reach a different conclusion if he were able, but that he had no discretion in deciding the case; that plaintiff asserted a legal right, and, if the judgment of the Indiana court was not effectual to dissolve the marriage between her and her first husband, she was his widow and entitled to dower in the real estate of which he died seised.

So, also, a woman who obtained a divorce in Massachusetts upon personal service upon her husband in the state of New York, who did not appear in the action or in any way submit himself to the jurisdiction of the Massachusetts court, is held, in Starbuck v. Starbuck, 62 App. Div. 437, 71 N. Y. Supp. 104, to be entitled, nevertheless, after her husband's death, to dower in his real estate, although he had after the decree married again in the state of Pennsylvania, on the ground that the Massachusetts court had no jurisdiction over the defendant in the divorce suit, and that it was therefore of no avail in the state of New York.

And a legislative divorce procured by a wife in New Jersey while her husband was a resident of New York was held, after the death of the husband, to be void in Todd v. Kerr, 42 Barb. 317, on the ground that the husband was not within the jurisdiction of the state, and to have no effect on property rights in the state of the husband's residence. This was an action by the wife for dower in property of her deceased husband acquired after the passage of the divorce act. It was contended on the part of the defendants that the plaintiff was estopped to deny the force and effect of the legislative divorce, but the court held that the elements of estoppel were lacking, that there was no evidence that the husband did anything in consequence of the divorce which he would not have done if such act had not been passed, and that, since an estoppel must be reciprocal and binding on both parties, and the husband was not bound or affected by the divorce act, neither he nor his heirs could claim the advantages of it.

But in another New York case (Re Swales, 60 App. Div. 599, 70 N. Y. Supp. 220), it is held that a woman who, after separating from her husband, leaves the state where they both reside, and goes to another state and commences, on service of process by publication, an action for absolute divorce upon grounds not recognized in the former state, and, after obtaining a decree in her favor upon failure of her husband to appear, marries another man and lives with him until the death of her first husband, cannot impeach the validity of the divorce decree, and claim the right to administer upon her former husband's estate as his widow. The court said that the wife, in order to obtain an absolute divorce from her husband, elected to go into another state where the laws were less rigid, and that, she having made this election and secured to herself all the benefits that were attainable therefrom and married another man, it would seem like a travesty of justice to permit her to repudiate the same and by impeaching the validity of the decree under which she had lived for eighteen years, to administer and appropriate the personal estate of a man from whom for that period of time she had proclaimed to the world that she was absolutely divorced. It was also said that, while it would not, probably, be technically correct to say that any or all of the plaintiff's acts constituted an estoppel within the ordinary acceptance of that term, for the reason that they were not designed to, and did not, influence the decedent to do anything which he would not otherwise have done, yet the case justified the application of a somewhat similar principle, which is, that where a party has invoked the jurisdiction of any court and submitted himself thereto he cannot thereafter be heard to question such jurisdiction.

In Thoms v. King, 95 Tenn. 60, 31 S. W. 983, the validity of a decree of divorce obtained by a husband in another state was attacked after his death by the wife in an action to recover dower in his estate, on the ground of fraud in the suppression of facts, and that the husband was not a bona fide resident of the foreign state at the time of procuring the divorce. But the court held that the charges of fraud and nonresidence were not sustained, and that the decree was valid.

And in an action to obtain dower, as widow, in lands of one deceased, the validity of a divorce decree obtained by the deceased against the defendant in his lifetime in Illinois was sustained against her contention that it was void because of fraud and lack of jurisdiction in the court granting it, where it appeared that, on a libel brought by the defendant in the supreme court of Massachusetts against her husband, praying for a divorce on the ground of adultery, the husband filed an answer denying the adultery and setting up the divorce obtained by him in Illinois, and that upon the cause being argued to the full court the libel was dismissed. The court held that the decree of the Massachusetts court dismissing the wife's libel for divorce and upholding the validity of the Illinois decree was conclusive upon her, and estopped her, as between herself and her husband, from contesting the decree; and that, while the general rule in regard to estoppels is that they are good only between the parties of record and their privies, and cannot be set up in collateral proceedings between one of the parties and third persons, the effect of the judgment in the Illinois case was to determine the status of the defendant, and that, so far as it did that, it was conclusive to all the world. Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 463.

In the case of Carr v. Carr, 92 Ky. 532, 18 S. W. 453, the plaintiff brought an action to recover dower against the administrators and heirs of her deceased husband, who prior to his death had obtained a decree of divorce against her, claiming that the judgment of divorce was void, and that she was, therefore, entitled to share in his estate as his widow. The husband had sued the wife for divorce on the ground of abandonment, and, she being a nonresident, a warning order was made against her to appear at the next term of court, more than sixty days thereafter, and an attorney was appointed to defend her. The attorney filed a report, and, the evidence having been taken, a judgment for absolute divorce was rendered in favor of the husband. He soon after died, and, although the plaintiff in the present action knew of the pendency of the divorce suit, she remained silent until a month after her husband's death, when she brought this action. She claimed that the court granting the divorce had no jurisdiction over her because the affidavit upon which the warning order was made was substantially defective, and therefore the order of warning was void. The defect in the affidavit was a failure to state the postoffice address of the wife, or the affiant's ignorance thereof, as required by statute. The court said that, if the court granting the divorce had no jurisdiction, then, of course, its action was void, but held that this defect in the affidavit did not render the decree void, but merely erroneous, and that, it appearing that the defendant in the divorce suit had no defense thereto, the judgment should not, under these circumstances, be reopened and vacated as erroneous, even if this were allowable in an action of such a character.

And in an action to obtain dower in property conveyed by a man since deceased, brought by one claiming to be his widow, in which the validity of a decree of divorce procured by the wife against her husband in his lifetime, which was set up as a defense, was attacked on the ground that the subpoena was issued in vacation and but twelve days before the ensuing term, whereas the statute required the interval to be at least thirty days, it was held that, the court having jurisdiction of the cause of action and of the parties, this was a mere irregularity, which did not render the decree void, but voidable only upon objection in due time by a party having a right to object. The court said: "This is a novel objection to come from the complainant in that proceeding after a decree in her favor acquiesced in and acted upon by her for more than seven years and until after her husband's death." There was an exception to the refusal to admit evidence that the decree was procured by fraud and collusion, the wife having been coerced into signing the petition and carrying on the suit by the oppression and cruelty of her husband, who furnished the evidence to procure the divorce and paid the costs, for the alleged purpose of defrauding the wife of her dower. But the court held that the evidence was inadmissible, and that one who had aided in procuring a collusive divorce could not be heard to thus attack its validity in a collateral proceeding. Miltimore v. Miltimore, 40 Pa. 151.

So, in Richardson's Estate, 132 Pa. 292, 19 Atl. 82, it is held that one against whom a divorce is obtained, who accepts the benefits of the decree and acts in a way which would be illegal but for the divorce so granted, cannot, after a long lapse of time and after the death of the other party, deny its validity, or assert that it was obtained without due notice. This case was an appeal from a decision of the orphans' court denying to plaintiff any interest as widow in the estate of a decedent. It was proved that plaintiff and the decedent had been married forty years before his death, but there was a question as to the validity of the marriage, there being some evidence that plaintiff had a lawful husband living at the time, and the evidence showed that she lived with decedent only eighteen months, and made no claim on him from the time of their separation until his death, that he had twice married after their separation without any objection on her part, and that she herself had married another man, who was living at the time of the death of the first husband. It was therefore held that she was estopped to claim any interest in the estate of decedent as widow, and the question of the validity of the divorce and its effect upon her rights seems to have been only a secondary one. It is mentioned simply at the end of the opinion of the court as having been referred to in the adjudication, and no facts are set out in regard to the manner in which it was obtained, or as to the grounds on which it was attacked.

And one who accepts the benefits of a void decree of divorce against her by contracting a second marriage thereafter, and who makes no effort to have the decree set aside during the life of her first husband, is held, in Mohler v. Shank, 93 Iowa, 273, 34 L. R. A. 161, 61 N. W. 981, to be estopped, after the death of the first husband, from contesting the validity of the decree and from claiming any part of his estate as widow. In this case the action for divorce was instituted by the guardian of the husband, who was insane, the wife was properly served with notice, appeared in the action, and made a contract as to the amount of alimony she was to receive in case of a decree against her, and after the decree was entered accepted the alimony and married another man. The court therefore held that, although the decree was void because a guardian has no authority to institute an action for divorce on behalf of his ward, still, the wife having accepted the decree as valid and acted upon it by marrying again, she could not now be permitted to come into a court of justice and masquerade as the widow of her first husband, and at the same time claim that she was the wife of the man whom she married and with whom she lived for about eight years before the first husband died; that both good law and good morals forbid it.

On the ground of estoppel, also, a wife was held, in Arthur v. Israel, 15 Colo. 147, 10 L. R. A. 693, 25 Pac. 81, to have no right to attack, after her husband's death, the validity of a divorce decree obtained by him during his lifetime, for the purpose of securing his estate. Upon a former hearing of this case (7 Colo. 5, 1 Pac. 438) the supreme court of Colorado had reversed a judgment of the county court in an action brought by the wife to establish her right to the estate of her former husband against his administrator, on the ground of error in admitting in evidence the record of two divorce proceedings against her, which showed plainly on their face a lack of jurisdiction in the court over the defendant therein because of defective service of process. Thereupon, by leave of the county court to which the case was remanded, the wife filed an amendment to her original petition, in which the facts of such review and reversal by the supreme court and the conclusions reached by the reviewing tribunal were set forth, and the administrator filed a supplemental answer thereto, in which it was averred that after the divorce decrees were entered the petitioner, with full knowledge thereof, had voluntarily, during the lifetime of her husband, entered into a contract of marriage with another man, and had lived with him as his wife until after the death of her first husband. A demurrer to this answer was sustained, and final judgment entered for the petitioner, but the supreme court, on proceedings instituted to reverse this judgment, held that, upon the state of facts set forth in the supplemental answer, the petitioner would not be allowed to set up the invalidity of the divorce decree for the purpose of sharing in the decedent's estate, since, by acquiescing in and accepting the benefits of the decree, she had estopped herself to question its validity. The court put the question thus: "When the wife without cause deserts her husband and home, and for years lives in adultery with another man, and afterwards, upon learning that a divorce has been obtained by her deserted husband, causes a marriage ceremony with her paramour to be solemnized, and continuously lives and cohabits with him as his wife, may she, upon the subsequent decease of her abandoned husband, take advantage of the fact that the divorce decree is void for want of proper service of process, and successfully assert against other heirs her right under the statute of descents and distributions to the deceased's estate as his widow?" An affirmative answer to this question, the court says, would be shocking to good morals, to sound public policy, and to the simplest principles of justice, and adds that the petitioner, having voluntarily elected to postpone action until such time as she might secure all the benefits of the marriage contract without discharging any of its burdens, would not now be allowed to set up the invalidity of the divorce decree for the purpose of securing the estate of her former husband. But this is on the express ground that the petitioner had estopped herself by her conduct, and the court adheres to its former decision as to the invalidity of the decree and its inadmissibility in evidence. For a discussion of the effect of the husband's death on the right to attack the decree, see Israel v. Arthur, 6 Colo. 85, 7 Colo. 12, 1 Pac. 442 (supra II. a, 8).

And a suit for maintenance, charging desertion, having been brought by a wife against her husband, a consent decree made after the court had announced that it would grant a divorce, in which there was a stipulation as to alimony, "to be in full of all claims of said complainant against said defendant or his property," was held, in Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256, 42 N. W. 817, to be valid and to estop the wife from claiming dower in the property of her deceased husband. In this case the plaintiff, as grantee of lands formerly owned by the deceased husband, filed a bill to quiet title thereto as against the claim of dower of the defendant, who, he claimed, had relinquished her dower by the consent decree of divorce obtained during her husband's lifetime. From a decree granting the relief prayed the wife appealed, but the supreme court affirmed the decree. It appeared that the alimony stipulated for in the consent decree had been paid to and received by the wife, and that she had likewise acted upon the decree by contracting a second marriage. Nothing is said as to the ground upon which she claimed the right to dower.

And in an action to partition certain lands of a decedent, brought by one claiming a dower interest therein as widow, in which the defendants set up a decree of divorce procured by plaintiff from her husband many years before and the payment of a certain sum as alimony to her, which the wife attacked as void for lack of jurisdiction in the court decreeing it because the petition failed to show that she had been a resident of the state for six months, as required by statute, it was held that, having authorized the prosecution of the suit, and having received the alimony allowed her, she was estopped to deny the jurisdiction; that after she had enjoyed the benefits she sought and gained from the decree she could not be heard to claim that it was void for want of jurisdiction. The wife also denied that she ever gave the attorney who prosecuted the suit in her name authority to appear for her, and alleged that she had no knowledge of the proceedings, that no notice was served upon her, and that she never received the money collected as alimony, also that she was insane at the time; but the court held that the evidence failed to sustain these claims. Ellis v. White, 61 Iowa, 644, 17 N. W. 28.

Likewise, a woman who, through her attorney, instituted a suit for divorce from bed and board in a court of general jurisdiction, but which had no jurisdiction of the action because neither she nor her husband resided in the county where suit was brought; and whose attorney thereafter filed an amended petition seeking an absolute divorce, which was granted, —was held in Asbury v. Powers, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1822, 65 S. W. 605, to be estopped, after the lapse of twenty-seven years and the remarriage and death of her husband, to attack the decree because of such lack of jurisdiction, although she alleged that the suit was instituted in such court, and the amended petition filed, by her attorney without her knowledge or consent, and that the decree for absolute divorce was granted without her knowledge and against her desire, on default of answer and in the absence of proof, and that it was procured by the fraud of her husband in collusion with her counsel. It was held that, as the petition in the divorce suit was not a part of the record, it must be presumed that the averment as to citizenship necessary to confer jurisdiction must have appeared therein; and that, as she had stood by for twenty-seven years without making any claim or assertion of her rights, knowing, as she must have known, that her husband had married another, with whom he lived as husband for fifteen years before his death, and without making any investigation as to the kind of judgment rendered in the action brought by her, or by what claim her husband had married another, —it would be inequitable and unjust to permit her to attack the judgment she had obtained as void. Whether any person could, by impeaching the averment of a jurisdictional fact, destroy the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction after the lapse of twenty-five years, was considered a debatable question; but the court said it was clear that a party to the record, and especially the plaintiff invoking the jurisdiction, could not, after so great a lapse of time, impeach, in a collateral proceeding, a decree of divorce or other decree fixing the status of the parties. The question of the validity of the divorce in this case arose in a contest between the divorced wife and one whom the husband had subsequently married as to the settlement of his estate.

So, also, a man who leaves his wife and home, and goes to another state, and never lives with her again or supports her, during whose absence his wife obtains a decree of divorce against him on the ground of desertion, which is void because of defective service of summons, is held, in Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 154, 63 N. W. 484, to be estopped to take advantage of the invalidity of such decree after the death of his wife, about fourteen years later, and to assert a right to her estate as her surviving husband, where he had actual notice of the pendency of the divorce proceedings, and took no steps to investigate the validity of the decree, but, upon learning that the divorce had been granted, married another woman, to whom, for the purpose of inducing her to marry him, he showed a newspaper notice of the divorce decree and represented himself as a single man, and with whom he lived as his wife, and who had a child by him. The court said that, having voluntarily accepted the privileges, benefits, and fruits of the void judgment of divorce, the husband was thereby estopped from claiming any portion of the estate of his deceased wife, adding also: "The innocent second wife should not be made the victim of his turpitude, and the helpless child should not have the stain of illegitimacy resting upon it by Foster [the husband] now asserting that he is the husband of a former wife. He may publish his own shame to the world for a money consideration; but this court will not aid him to stigmatize his second wife as living an adulterous life, nor hold that her child is a bastard." It is further stated, however, that a void judgment of divorce cannot be legalized by the acts of the divorced parties, and that the doctrine of estoppel is applied to this case on the ground that it is one relating solely to property rights, unaffected by any considerations which give to the marriage relation its precise status, and that the court does not wish to be understood as lending any countenance to the idea that parties may become divorced upon the ground of estoppel by conduct. This attack on the divorce decree was made in an action to partition the wife's estate, by one to whom the husband had assigned his alleged interest therein, and therefore was really an attack by a third party, but the court treats it as if made by the husband himself. As the husband's assignee took with knowledge of all the facts in the case, he stood in no better position than the husband. (See also infra, III., b.)

In Bourne v. Simpson, 9 B. Mon. 454, an action was brought against the owner and occupant of land sold under execution against one since deceased by one claiming to be the widow of the deceased, praying to have dower allotted to her in such land. It appeared that in a suit for divorce brought by her against the deceased a consent judgment was entered for alimony, and that later, in an action brought by the husband for divorce, a decree was made divorcing both parties and restoring them to all the rights and privileges of unmarried persons. The wife had accepted the provisions as to alimony, and both parties had married again. The court stated that under the Kentucky act of 1816 no writ of error could be sued out to reverse any decree of any court granting a divorce, and that, therefore, whether the decree was right or wrong, or authorized or not by the facts of the case, it could not be disturbed by this court so far as the divorce alone was concerned; but that, if the court in rendering the decree did not make a suitable provision for the wife, the court could, at the instance of the party who complained of it, examine the decree, and, if a wrong had been done, reverse it, if the party complaining was not precluded from prosecuting the writ of error or appeal. But in this case the wife was held to be precluded from complaining of the provision made for her by the decree, since it was rendered by her consent; and it was also held that the fact that she was an infant at the time did not render the decree void; that it was voidable merely, and, if injustice was done her, might have been reversed by seeking a reversal in apt time; but that, having failed to prosecute a writ of error, she could not now, in a new and different suit, effect her object, particularly after she had received and enjoyed the property decreed her, and not only had done this, but had again entered into the marriage relation. The court said: "Having used all the privileges conferred upon her by the decree, she is too late in complaining of its burdens, if any such exist."

In an action brought by a wife to set aside the will of her deceased husband, and to have the estate disposed of thereby declared to belong to her, in which a decree of divorce obtained by the husband in his lifetime was set up in defense, but attacked by the wife as fraudulent in a reply filed by her, it was held that the falsity of affidavits made by the husband in the divorce suit, to the effect that the defendant was a nonresident, and that he did not know her address and could not ascertain the same by any means within his control, by means of which he secured service by publication and was relieved from sending a copy of the petition and publication notice to the defendant, as required by statute in case of service by publication, did not render the decree an absolute nullity and void in a collateral proceeding, on the ground that, the affidavits being sufficient on their face, the service by publication thus secured was valid, and that the affidavits could only be impeached in a direct action brought for that purpose. After deciding this, the court goes on to say that, treating the decree as not void, but merely voidable, the wife was not entitled to relief, since she failed to state in her pleadings that she did not have knowledge of the divorce proceedings in time to appear in court and defend, as it was her duty to do if she had such knowledge, and that she did not discover the fraud perpetrated upon her until within less than two years before filing her reply, the statute requiring that, where fraud is perpetrated upon a person, he must bring his action to defeat the same within two years next after he has knowledge thereof, and this action having been brought more than two years after the divorce decree was obtained. The court in thus discussing the effect of the wife's delay seems, for the purpose of determining her right to relief, to treat the present action as a direct attack upon the validity of the decree, or to impliedly hold that, even if this were a direct attack, the wife's pleadings were not sufficient to entitle her to defeat the divorce judgment. Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487.

The right to contest the validity of the decree is usually sustained, however, where the party attacking it has not been guilty of laches, and has not estopped himself or herself by taking advantage of the benefits conferred thereby.

Thus, a divorce decree was held subject to collateral attack on the ground of fraud after the death of the successful party, in a suit for partition of his estate, brought by the divorced wife, in which it was contended that the plaintiff had no interest in the estate because at the time of his death she was not his wife, he having obtained an absolute divorce from her during his lifetime. The plaintiff in her bill set forth her marriage to the decedent, and that he, having wrongfully driven her from his home, induced her while ill and mentally irresponsible, through fraud and misrepresentations, to consent, in consideration of a sum of money, to the institution by him of a suit for divorce on the ground of abandonment, but on no other ground, and to make no defense thereto, and to come into the jurisdiction of the court and accept service of a writ of summons in the suit, believing the ground for divorce therein alleged to be abandonment and desertion, but which really charged adultery, after which she left the state and did not learn until a year later that the decree of divorce had been procured on a charge of adultery, which she alleged to be absolutely and wholly false, whereupon she immediately instituted a suit in the court in which the divorce had been obtained to have such decree set aside and canceled, which suit was still pending when her husband died. It was held that the complaint set up facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and to authorize the relief prayed, and that, as the divorce had been procured by fraud extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried by the court rendering the decree, it was subject to collateral attack in the suit for partition. Daniels v. Benedict, 50 Fed. 347.

In an action brought by one claiming as widow to have dower allotted her in land devised to others by her deceased husband the defendants set up a decree of divorce obtained by the husband in another state, which was held void because the husband had not been a resident of the state where the divorce was obtained a sufficient length of time before filing his petition, and because there was no personal service of process on the wife. Chaney v. Bryan, 15 Lea, 589. The court said: "There can be no doubt that when a decree of divorce granted by the courts of another state is relied upon in this state in bar of the rights of the wife or widow she may contest the validity of the same by showing the want of some jurisdictional fact, although the record show or recite the existence of the fact."

So in Newcomb v. Newcomb, 13 Bush, 544, 26 Am. Rep. 222, which was an action in equity instituted by an incompetent by her next friend, claiming as widow of a deceased person a right to dower in his realty and her distributable share of his personality, a decree of divorce obtained by the husband prior to his death, which was set up in bar of the present action, was attacked as void upon the ground, among others, that it was obtained upon constructive service of process, and that, the husband having placed his wife in an asylum in another state, and she being under his control and subject to his will, she was neither a non-resident nor absent from the state in the sense of the statute authorizing constructive service of process. The court held that a decree of divorce thus obtained was void, and subject to collateral attack when pleaded as a defense in an action to recover dower and distribution in the husband's estate, and this notwithstanding the husband had married a second time.

And a decree of divorce obtained by a husband in another state upon service of process by publication was held, in Re House, 2 Connoly, 524, 14 N. Y. Supp. 275, after the death of the husband, to be absolutely void in New York as against the wife, who was not personally served and did not appear in the action, though she had notice thereof. In this case the husband had married again and returned to the state of New York, and upon his death both the first and second wife made application, as widow, to be appointed administratrix, and the court held that the first wife was entitled to be appointed.

Clayton v. Clayton, 4 Colo. 410, was an action in ejectment brought as heir at law by one claiming to be the wife of a person deceased, against his administrators, to recover the possession of certain property. The defendants offered in evidence a decree of divorce between the plaintiff and the deceased, to which plaintiff objected on the ground that the court granting the divorce had no jurisdiction over her and that the decree for that reason was absolutely void. The defendants contended that the plaintiff could not attack the decree of divorce because she had failed to take any steps to have it reviewed or reversed within the three years prescribed by statute, and also on the ground that the decree could not be attacked collaterally. But the court held that the three years' statute of limitations applied only to a review of the decree on its merits, and had no bearing on the question of the admissibility in evidence of the record in the divorce suit; that the jurisdiction of a court is always a proper subject of inquiry when its record is sought to be interposed by a party claiming a benefit therefrom; and that, the record in the divorce suit showing affirmatively a want of jurisdiction in the court, because of lack of notice to the defendant therein on account of defective service of process, it was properly rejected as evidence.

In an action between these same parties (Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 298, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828), the court held that a decree of divorce granted to a man on merely constructive service of process which was defective for lack of sufficient notice to the defendant is wholly void, and is therefore no bar to an action by the wife to recover, as the husband's widow, a share in his real estate. In this, as in the other case, the defendants attempted to set up the decree of divorce in bar of the plaintiff's right to recover. The court said: "The true question in this case is which of the two Sarah A. Claytons was the lawful wife of James W. Clayton at the time of his death, and as such entitled by the statutes of Colorado to inherit one half of his real estate," and then proceeded to discuss the validity of the divorce without saying anything in regard to the effect of the death of the husband on the right to contest the validity thereof.

And a divorce obtained by a husband in a foreign state upon service of notice upon his wife by publication only was held, in Reel v. Elder, 62 Pa. 308, 1 Am. Rep. 414, in an action brought after the death of the husband, by the wife, to obtain dower in land which he had aliened during his lifetime, to be void because of lack of jurisdiction in the court granting it, and not to bar the wife's right of dower.

On appeal from a decree granting letters of administration on the estate of a decedent to one claiming to be his widow the appellants alleged that the decedent left no widow, having some years before his death obtained a divorce from the petitioner in the present proceeding. It was proved that a divorce in his favor had been granted in Ohio, but the petitioner attacked the decree as void for lack of jurisdiction in that the deceased had not complied with the requirements of the Ohio statutes that, in case the defendant in a divorce proceeding is not a resident of the county, and notice is served by publication, a summons and copy of the petition shall be mailed to defendant, unless her residence is unknown to the applicant and cannot be ascertained with reasonable diligence, in which case publication in a newspaper shall be sufficient. It appeared that the divorce had been granted on constructive service by publication in the newspapers only, no copy of the petition having been mailed to defendant, and the record alleged that defendant's residence was unknown to the applicant and that he had used due diligence to ascertain the same, and that defendant had no notice of the proceedings until after the decree was made. It being proved by the evidence that at the time of the pendency of the divorce proceedings the residence of the defendant therein was well known to the applicant, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction over defendant, and that the decree had been obtained by falsehood and fraud practiced upon the court, and should be treated as a nullity, the court saying that while, as a general rule, it is true that fraud in obtaining a judgment cannot be set up in a collateral proceeding by a party or one in privity with him, this rule relates only to fraud which involves the merits of the judgment, and does not govern the case of jurisdiction fraudulently attempted to be obtained. It was urged that the petitioner, by omitting after notice of the decree of divorce to take steps to set it aside and otherwise acquiescing in it, waived her right to object to its validity, but it was held that, as she had taken no benefit under the decree, and had done nothing to induce the deceased or his representatives to any line of action prejudicial to their interests, there could be no estoppel. Stanton v. Crosby, 9 Hun, 370.

A legislative divorce procured by a husband was held, in Gaines v. Gaines, 9 B. Mon. 306, 48 Am. Dec. 425, in a contest between the wife and the husband's representatives as to dower rights, after the husband's death, to be inoperative, so far at least as it affected her dower rights. It appears that, the wife having filed a bill against her husband, alleging ill treatment and that she had been forced to leave him with an inadequate provision for her support, and praying alimony, the husband answered, denying the allegations of the bill and praying for a divorce on the ground of abandonment, and at the next term of court filed a supplemental answer, in which he stated that since the filing of his original answer the legislature had granted him a decree of divorce from his wife, filing a copy of the act, which he pleaded and relied upon as a bar to the claim for alimony. The husband died within less than a year, and the wife thereupon filed a bill of revivor against his representatives, claiming dower in his lands, to which bill the defendants set up the legislative divorce as a bar to all claims to dower or distribution. The court said that the main question presented was as to the effect of the legislative divorce upon the respective rights of the parties, and that this involved the question of the constitutional power of the legislature to pass special acts of divorce, but that the question was not simply whether the legislature might under any circumstances constitutionally enact that one person be divorced from another, but "whether, when it is manifest that a party after having sought a divorce in a judicial tribunal, and while his suit is there pending, abandons that forum and resorts to the legislative power for the sole purpose of affecting and defeating the legal and equitable rights of his wife in his property, the divorce granted by the legislature on such application can, without disregarding the division of powers and distinction of departments as established by the Constitution and the security of private rights of contract and of property therein granted, be considered as asserting to any extent the rights of property involved in the question of divorce," and expressed the opinion that it could not. It was therefore held that, without deciding upon the effect of legislative divorces so far as they might operate upon the personal relations and abilities or disabilities of the parties, the divorce in this case was inoperative so far as it respected the rights of property involved, and could not deprive the wife of her interest in the estate of her husband as it would have existed had there been no divorce.

And a divorce decreed in favor of a husband, by a court of a state in which the cause of action did not accrue, and where the parties never lived as husband and wife, and where the wife was never served with process and never appeared or participated in any way in the proceedings, was held, in Platt's Appeal, 80 Pa. 501, after the death of the successful party, to be void in Pennsylvania, where the husband resided at his death, and the wife was held entitled to dower in his estate as widow. In this case a bill had been filed by the wife in the court granting the divorce to have the decree set aside during her husband's lifetime, but he died pending the action.

Jordan v. Van Epps, 58 How. Pr. 338, was an action of ejectment to recover an alleged dower interest as widow against the defendant, a purchaser under partition sale. Among other defenses, the defendant set up a decree of divorces between plaintiff and her deceased husband, which plaintiff attacked as fraudulent. Counsel for defendant argued that plaintiff, being a party to the divorce suit, could not collaterally impeach the decree for fraud or irregularity as against a third person, but this question was not decided, the case being disposed of on other grounds, and the court saying that in the disposition which they proposed to make of the case it was not necessary to consider the various objections to the validity of the divorce.

In Wright v. Wright, 8 N. J. Eq. 143, a bill filed by a woman as widow, asking for dower in her deceased husband's property, and which, anticipating that a decree of divorce obtained by the husband in his lifetime would be set up in defense, alleged that such divorce was void because obtained by fraud and without notice to the defendant therein, was held good on demurrer, the court saying the defense should have been by bill and answer, and not by demurrer. Nothing is said in the opinion as to the merits of the case, or the effect of the death of the husband on the right to review the decree of divorce, but one of the grounds of the demurrer was that the bill was exhibited for the purpose of setting aside and making void or inoperative the divorce decree, and that the plaintiff in the divorce suit had departed this life long prior to the commencement of the present suit.

A judgment of separation from bed and board, entered at the instance of a wife, on the mere acknowledgment by the husband of the truth of the allegations of the wife's petition, and which she set up in bar of the husband's right to a divorce in a later proceeding instituted by him, was attacked by the wife after the husband's death, in a contest as to property rights, in Welgel's Succession, 18 La. Ann. 49. The court cited another case holding that the acknowledgment by the defendant of the truth of the facts alleged was insufficient to support a demand for a divorce, and said that, while they wholly approved of the rule, yet when a judgment had been solemnly rendered upon such evidence, subsequently recognized and invoked by both parties in a judicial proceeding, and acquiesced in for more than thirty years, it should not be treated as a nullity.

III. Attack by stranger to the decree.

a. In direct proceeding.

There seems to be only one case in which a direct action has been brought by third parties to set aside a decree of divorce alleged to be fraudulent,—that of Richardson v. Stowe, 102 Mo. 33, 14 S. W. 810, in which, on appeal from a judgment dismissing a bill brought by the heirs of a deceased person to have annulled a decree of divorce in favor of one claiming to have been the wife of the decedent, and a money judgment for maintenance and costs of suit, which was made a lien on the real estate of the defendant, on the ground of fraud in procuring the decree in that the plaintiff in the divorce suit was never legally married to the defendant because at the time of the alleged marriage he had a lawful wife living and was of unsound mind and incapable of contracting, and to vacate a sale of the real estate under execution issued on such judgment, it was held that, as it appeared that the court in which the divorce proceedings were instituted had jurisdiction to hear and determine finally all the issues attempted to be raised in the present suit, and as it had found them for the plaintiff in that case, they were adjudicated and could not be again raised in this case, no fraudulent act being alleged or shown to have been perpetrated by the wife in obtaining the decree of divorce. It further stated that the fraud for which a judgment may be vacated or enjoined in equity must be in the procurement of the judgment; that, if the cause of action be vitiated by fraud, this is a defense which must be interposed, and, unless its interposition be prevented by fraud, it cannot be asserted against the judgment. Nothing was said in the opinion as to the effect of the death of the husband, though there was a contention in the brief of counsel that whatever right, if any, may have existed to set aside the decree, was in the defendant, and, being personal to him, died with him and did not descend.

b. In collateral proceeding.

In several cases the validity of a divorce decree has been attacked in collateral proceedings after the death of one or both of the parties by strangers to the decree, but in only one of them—that of Thomas v. Thomas, 88 Wis. 88, 59 N. W. 504—is the question of the effect of the death squarely passed upon.

In an action of debt brought by an administrator for the purchase price of land sold by his decedent without the joinder of his wife, the sale being conditioned upon the procuring of a discharge of the wife's interest in the land, there was a question as to whether the wife's interest was extinguished by a decree of divorce obtained by the husband in his lifetime. The divorce was obtained in a foreign state of which the husband was a bona fide resident at the time, upon service of process by publication, the wife having no actual notice thereof, and the court held that it could have no extraterritorial force, and was not binding on the wife in Pennsylvania, where the marriage took place and the offense upon which the divorce was based was committed, and that it did not bar her right to dower in the property of her husband situated in that state. Colvin v. Reed, 55 Pa. 375.

Burge v. Burge (Mo. App.) 67 S. W. 703, was an action by one claiming to be the wife of a deceased person to revoke letters of administration granted to a son of the deceased, and to secure the grant thereof to herself. The point on which the case turned was whether or not plaintiff was the lawful wife of the decedent at the time of his death. The deceased had been thrice married. The first wife died, and it was claimed by the plaintiff that he was divorced from the second, and that she, being the third and having survived him, was his lawful widow. To maintain the issue, she put in evidence a certificate of her marriage with decedent. The defendant thereupon put in evidence a certificate of the solemnization of the marriage of decedent with his second wife, coupled with parol evidence that she was living at the time of this trial, whereupon plaintiff introduced the record of the divorce proceedings between decedent and this second wife, from which it appeared that judgment was given therein on constructive notice or notice by publication. The defendant contended that the record on its face showed that the court was without jurisdiction because the order of publication upon which the divorce was granted did not describe the defendant therein by her proper name. The court found that the notice by publication was defective in failing properly to describe the defendant, and that the judgment of divorce was therefore without notice and void. But the plaintiff contended that, even if the divorce judgment was void, defendant in this case was estopped to deny its validity. It was held, however, that, as the defendant was claiming no property rights under the decree, the only purpose of invoking the application of the doctrine of estoppel was to validate a void marriage, and that this could not be allowed; that, even if the decree had been valid as against the defendant therein, there was not that privity between the decedent and the defendant in this action which is an essential element of an estoppel in cases of this kind, since, to make one a privy to an action, he must have acquired an interest in the subject-matter thereof, either by inheritance, succession, or purchase, or he must hold the property subordinatedly. As it was not pretended, that the defendant had acquired any interest in the subject-matter of the divorce proceeding, and as he could not do so, since the only matter determined therein related solely to the marriage status, it was held that there was no ground upon which to claim that the defendant was privy to the divorce proceedings or in any way bound thereby, and that therefore he was not estopped to impeach the divorce decree on the ground of a want of jurisdiction in the court giving it.

In Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 723, which was an action to recover lands, by persons claiming as heirs of a woman who had been divorced by legislative act, the divorce was attacked as void on the ground that the wife had no knowledge or notice thereof, that there was no cause for divorce, and that the legislature had no authority to pass the act. Both parties to the divorce were dead at the time this action was brought. The court held that the divorce was valid, that the granting of divorces was a rightful subject of legislation, and that the fact that no cause existed for the divorce, and that it was obtained without the knowledge of the wife, could not affect the validity of the act, though saying that, if the true state of facts had been brought to the attention of Congress, that body might, and probably would, have annulled the act.

And a decree of divorce on the ground of adultery, obtained in Ohio by one domiciled there, against his wife domiciled in New York, on service by publication, was held valid in Re Morrison, 52 Hun, 102, 5 N. Y. Supp. 90. Affirmed without opinion in 117 N. Y. 638, 22 N. E. 1130, after the death of both parties, on appeal by the next of kin of the wife from a decree of the surrogate court awarding distribution of the wife's estate to the representatives of the deceased husband. It was contended by the husband's representatives that the divorce proceedings in Ohio were absolutely void in New York, but the court held that, since the parties were married in Ohio, the husband was domiciled there, and the adultery was committed there; and since, under precisely the same circumstances, a divorce would be granted in New York,—by thus upholding the foreign divorce it did not run counter to the public policy of the state or abstract justice or pure morals, but simply recognized the principle of comity of states, and gave due effect to the judgment of a sister state. It was held, moreover, that, the husband, having invoked the jurisdiction of the Ohio court and submitted himself thereto, could not be heard to question such jurisdiction, and that his representatives could occupy no better position than he would have occupied if living.

And a divorce obtained by a woman against her husband in a state to which she had gone after he had deserted her, after service on the husband and continuance twice granted to permit him to appear and defend, which he failed to do, was held good in another state when attacked as void by third parties after the husband's death on the ground that the court granting it had no jurisdiction over either party because the husband was not a resident of the state and the wife had no legal domicile there, since she could not acquire a domicile different from that which she had when her husband deserted her, except by following him. Harding v. Allen, 9 Me. 140, 23 Am. Dec. 549. There seems to have been no question but that the divorce was valid in the state where granted, and the question in this case seems rather to have been, What credit should be given to the decree when rights were claimed under it in another state? The court held that the protection of innocent persons and the purity of public morals required that divorces lawfully pronounced in one jurisdiction, and the new relations thereupon formed, should be recognized as operative and binding everywhere, though to this might be excepted cases of fraud and collusion, which when pleaded and verified vacated all judgments. But in giving effect to the divorce decree it was explicitly stated that the grounds upon which the decision was placed were limited to the dissolution of the marriage, and that, had the action been one to enforce an allowance of alimony granted by the decree, a different question would be presented.

In a proceeding against executors to vacate and set aside the settlement by their decedent, as administratrix, of the estate of her deceased husband, and the final order of distribution, assigning the whole estate to her, brought by the heirs of the husband, on the ground that she was never his lawful wife because having a lawful husband living at the time of her second marriage, and that she fraudulently procured such order of distribution by concealing this fact from the court, the defendants set up a divorce procured by the decedent from her first husband, which the plaintiffs attacked as invalid. The court refused to consider the validity of the divorce decree for the reason that it considered the final order of distribution of the husband's estate as conclusive. It was contended that this order was not conclusive because the wife had been guilty of fraud in procuring it by concealing the fact of her prior marriage, and that the plaintiffs knew nothing of such marriage and divorce until after her death. But the court held that the evidence failed to show any fraud on her part as to such marriage or attempt to conceal it, and that the former marriage and divorce were matters of common repute in the neighborhood where she lived; also that the plaintiffs had been guilty of laches in failing for six years after the order of distribution was made, and until after the death of the wife, to investigate the validity of the divorce proceedings, since the facts within their knowledge were sufficient to put them on inquiry; that, "not having made any inquiry . . . when they ought to have made it, they will not be allowed to make it six years later, when the opposing party is dead and the main source of evidence thereby cut off." Thomas v. Thomas, 88 Wis. 88, 59 N. W. 504.

In Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, 35 N. E. 761, an action of debt was brought against a man on a judgment for alimony rendered against him in a divorce proceeding in another state. Shortly after the commencement of the action the defendant died and his administrator was substituted as defendant in his place. Three days before trial and seventeen months after issue joined defendant asked leave to file additional pleas, which was refused. One of the alleged facts which it was thus proposed to plead was that the recovery of alimony was based upon a fraudulent divorce obtained by collusion and agreement between the plaintiff and deceased. But the court held that the husband, if alive, could not set up as a defense to the present action that the decree of divorce from his wife had been obtained by collusion with her, on the well-settled principle that in a court of justice a man cannot complain of a wrong done by himself or by another's wrong in which he was a partaker, and that such defense was as much forbidden to the administrator of the deceased as to the deceased himself, saying: "If the defendant in a divorce decree cannot attack it because it was obtained by his own fraud, it would seem to be true that his administrator could not attack it because of such fraud. If he cannot take advantage of his own wrongs in his lifetime, for the purpose of saving his estate from liability, his representative after his death ought not to be allowed to save his estate from liability by taking advantage of that same wrong."

In an action brought against the administrator and widow of a deceased person to require them to account for certain personal property of the decedent which had come into their hands, and to pay to the plaintiffs their just proportion thereof, there was involved a question as to the legality of the marriage between decedent and his wife, which depended on the validity of a divorce decreed between her and a former husband, who was dead at the time of the bringing of this action. The wife was a resident of North Carolina and the divorce was procured in Tennessee, and it was held that the decree was altogether inoperative and null because the wife did not appear in the suit, was not served with process, and was not a subject of Tennessee, but was a citizen and inhabitant of North Carolina and not subject to the jurisdiction of the Tennessee court. It was therefore held that the second marriage was void. Irby v. Wilson, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 568.

In Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 154, 63 N. W. 484, an attack was made on the validity of a divorce decree in favor of a wife after her death, in a suit to partition her estate, by one to whom the husband had transferred all his alleged rights in the wife's estate. The decree was void because of defective service of process on the husband, but, as he had estopped himself to question its validity by taking advantage of the benefits thereof and marrying a second time, judgment was rendered against his assignee. The assignee had taken the conveyance from the husband with knowledge of all the facts in the case, and therefore stood in no better position than the husband. The court, however, treated this attack on the divorce decree as if made by the husband himself. (See supra, II. b.)

In an action to recover, as widow, dower in certain lands conveyed by one since deceased it was alleged in defense that the plaintiff was not the wife of the deceased at the time of his death, he having previously obtained a divorce from her in another state. After the action commenced the plaintiff died and her administrator was substituted as plaintiff. It was proved that the divorce was obtained by the deceased without the knowledge of his wife, and that she knew nothing thereof until after his death, and there was nothing in the record to show on what ground it had been granted. It was held that the decree acted only on the marital relation between the parties, and did not affect, or purport to affect, the property rights of the wife in the state of Ohio. The court also said that, as the wife had no opportunity to defend, all that could be claimed for the decree was that it dissolved the marital relation between the parties and restored the husband to the status of an unmarried man, saying: "This the court could do; but, as it had no jurisdiction of the person of the wife, it was not competent to the Indiana court to affect such rights as she had acquired in the property of the husband under the laws of this state." There is nothing in the opinion of this case, or in the facts stated, to show whether the validity of the foreign decree of divorce was attacked, or whether it was contended simply that it did not affect the dower right of the plaintiff in her husband's property. Doerr v. Forsythe, 50 Ohio St. 726, 35 N. E. 1055.

A divorce decreed by the ecclesiastical court on the ground that at the time of contracting the marriage the parties, or one of them, had not reached the age of consent, which in effect amounted to an annulment of the marriage, was attacked in the court of wards after the death of the husband, by a daughter born of such marriage, in a bill filed to traverse an office found whereby a child by a later wife was adjudged to be the lawful heir, in which it was alleged that both the parties were above the age of consent at the time of their marriage. It was contended that, if in truth the husband and wife were of the age of consent at the time of the marriage, no divorce, after pretending that they were within the age of consent, should conclude the parties or their heirs, but that they might prove the contrary at common law,—and especially in the present case, because it concerned inheritance and the true descent thereof. But it was held that, as the ecclesiastical court had sentenced the marriage to be void and of no effect, and had decreed a divorce, that decision was binding on the court of wards, the court saying that, as the ecclesiastical judge is judge of the original matter, vis., the lawfulness of the marriage, "we will never examine the cause, whether it be true or not; for of things (the cognizance whereof belongs to the ecclesiastical court) we ought to give credit to their sentences, as they give to the judgments in our courts." It was therefore held that the divorce, as long as it remained in force, was binding and concluded the heirs of the divorced parties. Kenn's Case, 7 Coke, 42b. This case does not seem to decide anything as to the right to review a decree of divorce after the death of one of the parties by a proceeding in the proper court, but only to decide that, owing to the peculiar jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court over matrimonial causes, a final decree of that court cannot be attacked collaterally in the temporal courts. But the statement that the divorce was binding "as long as it remained in force" seems to indicate that on a suit brought in the ecclesiastical court the judgment might be reversed, and Hargrave in his "Treatise on the Effect of Sentences of Courts Ecclesiastical in Cases of Marriage when Pleaded or Offered in Evidence in the Courts Temporal," published in his "Tracts Relative to the Law of England," says, on page 455, in discussing Kenn's Case: "It seems to have been agreed by the judges that the sentence, being contra matrimonium, was not conclusive on the issue of . . . [the divorced parties] in the spiritual court."

Upon this case being referred by the King's especial commandment to a committee of the justices and chief justices, it was resolved, in Robertson v. Stallage, Cro. Jac. 186, that "a divorce being by sentence in the spiritual court between . . . [a man] and his wife causa præcontractus or other cause, the parties being dead between whom it was, the court of wards cannot now examine it to prove another heir against that sentence." The headnote says that a sentence of divorce cannot be re-examined after the death of the parties, and in 57 L. R. A.

Comyn's Digest, Baron and Feme, C, the case is also cited to the proposition that a divorce by sentence in the life of the parties cannot be re-examined after their death. But in view of the decision in Kenn's Case, and of the opinion which seems to have very widely prevailed, though there is some conflict on the point, that a sentence in the spiritual courts in a matrimonial cause was conclusive in the temporal courts, it seems probable that all the judges intended to decide was that the sentence of the ecclesiastical court must be given full credit in the court of wards until set aside in the proper court, or, at most, that it could not be reviewed in the temporal courts after the death of the parties. It hardly seems to go so far as to decide that a party interested could not impeach the sentence for fraud in the ecclesiastical courts, even after the death of the parties.

In Corbet's Case, 22 Edw. IV. Fitzh. Abr. title, Consultat. 5, as elaborated in Kenn's Case, 7 Coke, 42b, an infant was married while under the age of consent but after reaching full age cohabited with his wife and afterwards put her away, having no issue, and married another, by whom he had a son. After his death a younger brother sued in the spiritual court to reverse the second marriage. It was stated in this case that, if the elder brother and his first wife had had issue and been unjustly divorced and the husband had thereafter married another and died, the issue of the first marriage might sue in the ecclesiastical court to avoid the divorce; and a distinction is made between the annulment after the death of the parties of a sentence of divorce given in their lifetime and a divorce granted after the death of the parties, it being said that a divorce may be annulled after the death of the parties, but that, if either of the parties be dead before any divorce is granted, the surviving party cannot sue to declare the marriage void. However, as in the Case of Corbet there was no divorce, these statements must be considered mere dicta.

And in Shaw v. Gould, L. R. 3 H. L. 55, 37 L. J. Ch. N. S. 433, 18 L. T. N. S. 833, there was a query raised, which was not decided, as to whether collusion would be a sufficient reason for setting aside a decree of divorce after the death of all the parties to the proceeding. In this case a divorce decreed in Scotland between parties who were married in England, and who had gone to Scotland for the purpose of obtaining the divorce, but who had resided there a sufficient length of time to give the court jurisdiction under the law of Scotland, was held to be invalid in England, and therefore the children of a second marriage celebrated in Scotland were held not to be "lawfully begotten" within the meaning of a will executed in England, devising a fund in trust for their mother for life and after her death to her children lawfully begotten. The decision was rested on the lack of jurisdiction in the Scotch court to decree a divorce between parties married and domiciled in England, but one of the judges said that, even if the Scotch court had jurisdiction, he would still be of opinion that the decree was not binding as having been obtained collusively, the husband having entered into an agreement not to do anything to prevent the decree being entered, although he abstained from resting his decision on that ground because he entertained a doubt as to whether collusion could be a sufficient reason for setting aside the decree after the death of the parties. Another judge, who concurred in the decision that the divorce was invalid because the parties were not legally domiciled in Scotland, seems also to entertain some doubt as to whether or not the motives of the parties in resorting to Scotland could be questioned after such a lapse of time for the purpose of rendering their children illegitimate, saying: "There was a valid divorce and a capacity to marry in the territory, and when that marriage has resulted in the birth of children, who have the status of legitimate children according to the law of their own country, are we in reference to them and their rights to revert to an inquiry, at whatever distance of time, as to whether Buxton's [the husband's] resort to Scotland was or was not for the purpose of facilitating the divorce? That has not been directly decided in any of the cases, . . . but I think the cases tend in that direction so strongly that I cannot . . . take upon myself to suggest a doubt as to their being the law of England, although I do not see my way to reconciling it with general principles of jurisprudence or the generally recognized rules of international law."

Conway v. Beazley, 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 639, was an action to declare the nullity of a marriage on the ground that the husband had a wife living at the time the marriage was contracted, a divorce which he had obtained from his first wife, who had since died, being alleged to be unlawful. The husband and his first wife were married in England, and the divorce was procured in Scotland, both parties being at the time domiciled in England. It was held that a Scotch divorce between parties married and domiciled in England at the time of the granting of the divorce was invalid.

It was also held in Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H. L. Cas. 390, 29 L. J. Prob. N. S. 11, 5 Jur. N. S. 1271, 7 Week. Rep. 674, that a Scotch divorce between parties married and domiciled in England, and who had gone to Scotland for the purpose of obtaining the divorce, was void for lack of jurisdiction in the court granting it. In this case the divorced wife had married a second time in Scotland, and the question of the validity of the divorce arose after her death in a contest as to which of two wills made by her, one while domiciled in England and another revoking the former, made after her second marriage while domiciled in France, should be probated, the validity of the second will depending on the Scotch divorce.

So, in McCarthy v. Decaix, 2 Russ. & M. 614, as reported in 2 Clark & F. 567, a divorce granted in Denmark between a Dane and an Englishwoman, who were married in England, was held in a suit instituted after the death of both parties between their personal representatives respecting some property the right to which had accrued to the wife subsequent to the divorce, to be invalid, as no foreign divorce could affect an English marriage, the effect of the death of the parties not being considered.

The validity of a decree of annulment of marriage in the consistorial court was attacked in Meddowcroft v. Huguenin, 3 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 403, in a collateral proceeding after the death of one of the parties, by a son of the deceased, on the ground of fraud and collusion in obtaining it, but the suit failed because the court held there was no sufficient evidence of fraud in obtaining the decree to justify them in setting it aside. There was a query, which was not decided, as to whether the issue of a marriage pronounced to be null and void by the sentence of a consistorial court could impeach such sentence in the prerogative court, and the court said that they were of opinion that they could not question this sentence on any ground, unless it might be on the ground that it was obtained by fraud and imposition in the consistorial court, and on appeal (4 Moore, P. C. C. 386) it was said that a collusive suit is not a real judgment, but something obtained by fraud from the court, which is not binding, and that it had been laid down in law and in equity, in reference to ecclesiastical cases, that collusion would make a nullity of a judgment if it were between the parties. But the judgment of the lower court that fraud was not sufficiently shown was affirmed. In a later action brought by the same plaintiff, reported as Perry v. Meddowcroft, 10 Beav. 122, it was said, in answer to the contention that, if a sentence, decree, or judgment of any court could be shown to have been obtained by fraud or collusion, it was not to be used in any court as evidence against the right of the party who might be precluded by a sentence properly obtained, that that proposition did not seem to have been disputed, that a sentence might be refused the respect which would otherwise be due it if it could be shown that it was obtained by fraud and collusion. However, in this case also it was held that the evidence failed to show fraud.

A decree of annulment of marriage by the ecclesiastical court was reversed in Harrison v. Southampton, 21 Eng. L. & Eq. 343, after the death of one of the parties, in a suit to establish a claim to the property of the deceased, on proof that the decree had been procured by the fraud and collusion of the parties. This decision reversed Harrison v. Southampton, 17 Eng. L. & Eq. 364, in which the court said that there was no doubt that fraud would vitiate the decree if there were clear evidence of the fraud, but held that there was no sufficient proof of collusion, and that the sentence of annulment was conclusive.

In Ryan v. Ryan, 2 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 332, a divorce had been decreed by royal ordinance in Denmark between parties domiciled there, and the husband had married again. After his death the second wife applied to the prerogative court of Canterbury for letters of administration upon his estate, and the daughters of the first marriage opposed her interest, apparently upon the ground that the divorce was invalid, though this is not expressly stated. The case having been delayed for various causes for many years, and the daughters having withdrawn their opposition, the court finally decided in favor of the wife's right to the administration, saying the wife's interest was denied but she had propounded it and established it according to the law of Denmark, since, according to the evidence of Danish lawyers, a divorce by the King of Denmark is a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, and such a dissolution of an existing marriage is good. The judge therefore said that under the circumstances of the case he considered the proof sufficient, the parties being both domiciled in Denmark, and that whether they would have been sufficient in a matrimonial cause it was not necessary to decide, but on the mere question whether the widow should take out the administration semper præsuntur pro matrimonio, and that, the parties who opposed the widow having withdrawn their opposition, he pronounced for her interest, guarding himself against its operating in the same way in a matrimonial cause, where both the burden and the nature of the proof would be different.

IV. Death of one party pending appeal.

Where property rights are involved it is usually held that the action does not abate on the death of one of the parties pending an appeal from a judgment granting a divorce, though the rule is otherwise where a divorce has been refused.

In Nickerson v. Nickerson, 34 Or. 1, 48 Pac.

423, 54 Pac. 277, it is held that the death of the defendant pending an appeal by him from a decree of divorce does not abate the action or the appeal where property rights are involved, but that both survive to the heirs of the deceased, under statutes providing that no action shall abate by the death of a party if the cause of action survive or continue, and that an action for a wrong shall not abate by the death of any party after the verdict has been given therein, but the action shall proceed thereafter in the same manner as in cases where the cause of action survives. The court says that, while from the nature of things the cause of suit does not survive the death of a party where the only relief sought is the dissolution of the marriage relation, since death effectuates more surely the very end which it is the especial purpose of the suit to accomplish, still, "where the consequences of the divorce are such as affect the property rights of the parties to the suit, the heirs or personal representatives may have such an interest in the litigation as that the cause will survive, not for the purpose of continuing the controversy touching the rights of divorce within itself, but for the ascertainment of whether the property has been rightfully diverted from its appropriate channel of devolution."

And a decree of absolute divorce having been rendered in favor of a husband, and an appeal taken therefrom by the wife, it was held in Thomas v. Thomas, 57 Md. 504, that the death of the husband pending the appeal did not abate the suit, except so far as the question dissolving the marital relation was concerned, where it appeared that the husband left real and personal property, the court saying: "So far as the question of the marital relation was concerned, that question was forever concluded by the death of the appellee, and no one had any longer any interest in reviving it. But the decree which granted the divorce at the same time determined the property rights of the appellant, and, if unreversed, deprived her of all rights in her late husband's property. With respect to that question, her interest survived, and, if the decree was erroneous, she was aggrieved thereby and had a standing in court to prosecute an appeal therefrom for the purpose of having the decree reversed." In this case, however, the appeal was dismissed because the persons upon whom by the death of the husband the right to his property devolved had not been made parties.

So, in Danforth v. Danforth, 111 Ill. 236, it was held that where, pending an appeal from an order refusing to set aside on motion a decree of divorce rendered against a woman upon ex parte hearing, and to permit her to defend the suit, the husband died, and the appellate court, after his death, entered a judgment reversing the order of the lower court refusing to set aside the decree, such judgment was not void, but binding upon those succeeding to the husband's estate; and that the appellate court had the right, on motion of the wife, to amend the record so as to show entry of judgment before the death of the husband. The court having been clothed, by the act of the parties and the law, with full jurisdiction and rightful authority to render the judgment it did, the death of the appellee—not brought to its notice—was held not to deprive it of such jurisdiction lawfully acquired. It was urged that, conceding that where after jurisdiction has been acquired over a party he dies, judgment rendered against him subsequently to his death is not void, this rule has no application to a suit for a divorce,—that in such an action the death of either party puts an end to all further legal proceedings. This was conceded to be true where the death takes place before any final decree of divorce, but the court said that where a decree has been improperly obtained, and the proceedings are erroneous, the party whose property rights have been injuriously affected by such decree ought not to be concluded by reason of the subsequent death of the other party; that while both parties live a writ of error lies to reverse an erroneous decree of divorce, the effect of which is to restore both parties to their former status of husband and wife in law; and that after the death of one it ought to lie in favor of the other party, not for the same purpose, but to restore the survivor to his or her rights of property devastated erroneously by the decree. Wren v. Moss, 7 Ill. 72 (supra, II. a, 3), is cited in the opinion as an authority for the contention that a divorced wife, after the death of her husband, may prosecute a writ of error to reverse the decree of divorce, and thereby be restored to all her rights as widow in the estate of her deceased husband, the court saying: "If, then, the appellant could have prosecuted her appeal or writ of error to reverse the decree of divorce even after her husband's death, and thus remove the bar of that decree to the assertion of her property rights as widow of the deceased, no reason is seen why she may not do the same thing where her husband dies after the appeal is taken or writ of error brought, and after the cause is submitted."

There is a dictum to the effect that an appeal from a divorce decree abates on the death of one of the parties, in McCollum v. McCollum, 1 Helsk. 566, note, in which it was held that a bill to vacate or modify a decree of alimony may be revived after the death of the complainant in the bill to review, the court saying that the death of the complainant did not have the effect of abating either the appeal or the suit, and that in this respect an appeal from a decree of divorce differs from an appeal from a decree for alimony.

So, also, the court says, in Downer v. Howard, 44 Wis. 82, that in case of the death of either party after appeal brought from a judgment granting a divorce it is probable that, if rights of property depended upon the reversal or affirmance of such judgment, the court would permit the appeal to be revived in favor of those whose rights were so affected, since, in case of a judgment of divorce against either party, the descent of all the property is changed, and the death of either party after an appeal from such judgment ought not to bar those interested in the estate from reviewing the judgment of the court below. However, the court expressly states that it does not decide that question; and in this case the appeal was taken from a judgment denying a divorce.

And in Boyd's Appeal, 38 Pa. 241 (supra, II. a, 2), in which a decree of divorce in favor of a husband was vacated on motion after his death for fraud in procuring it, it was said in the opinion that no one could doubt that the decree might have been reversed on appeal if the time for taking an appeal had not elapsed; that the husband's death could not have prevented that.

And where on appeal from a decree of divorce in favor of a wife the husband dies before entry of judgment of affirmance, but after the case is argued and submitted, judgment will be entered as of the day on which the case was taken under advisement. Mead v. Mead, 1 Mo. App. 247.

In Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345, where, pending an appeal from a decree of divorce in favor of a wife, the husband died, his administrator was substituted in his place without any question of the right to do so.

Nothing is said in the opinion or in the contentions of counsel as to the effect of the death of one of the parties pending an appeal from a divorce decree, and upon the decree in favor of the wife being affirmed in the main, but modified in some particulars and sent back to the lower court, where judgment was again entered for the wife, the administrator appealed a second time (84 Cal. 424, 23 Pac. 1100).

V. Conclusion.

The authorities are practically unanimous that, in the absence of statutory qualifications, a decree of divorce may be vacated after the term at which it was rendered, where it is shown that it was obtained by fraud; and in most of the cases the death of one of the parties seems not to be considered of importance,—at least where property rights are involved. Where the courts have refused to set aside, after the death of one of the parties, a decree of divorce obtained by fraud, it has usually been because of laches in bringing the action to vacate the decree, or because of estoppel by having accepted the benefits thereof. In Nelson on Divorce & Separation, § 1054, it is said that "the same rule of public policy that requires the decree to be vacated although a second marriage has taken place will require the same relief although one of the parties is dead," but that "the fact that the party is dead who is alleged to have procured the decree by fraud should justify the court in requiring clear and satisfactory evidence of the fraud, for the dead can make no denials or explanations."

Tennessee and California seem to be exceptions to the general rule that a decree of divorce may be set aside after the death of one of the parties, for fraud in procuring it. (See Owens v. Sims, 3 Coldw. 544, supra, II. a, 4, and Kirschner v. Dietrich, 110 Cal. 502, 42 Pac. 1064, supra, II. a, 2, holding that by the death of one of the parties a suit for divorce abates and passes beyond the limits of a revivor.) But, as in Tennessee there is a statute providing that the only method for reviewing a decree of divorce shall be by appeal, and as in the case of Owens v. Sims the time for appeal had expired, and it would seem that the suit must have been dismissed even if both parties had been living, it is possible that in the absence of that statute the court might have decided otherwise as to the effect of the death. And in Kirschner v. Dietrich the judgment of divorce was silent on the question of property, and there is at least some indication in the opinion that, if there had been an issue as to property rights involved, the decision might have been different, since, in refusing the husband's petition to open the decree, and in deciding that the effect of the wife's death upon the action was not changed by the question of property suggested by the husband in the answer which he asked leave to file, the court said that, "if there was originally no issue on the subject," an action for divorce could not be revived in case of death after judgment for the purpose of having a question of property rights adjudicated.

These two decisions are the only ones which squarely decide against the right to vacate a decree of divorce after the death of one of the parties where fraud is alleged and rights of property are involved. In Barney v. Barney, 14 Iowa, 189 (supra, II. a, 1), it is held that where complainant in a divorce suit died after a decree in her favor but before the expiration of the time allowed for an appeal, the action ended with her death, and could not be revived. But in this case no fraud was alleged, and no property rights were involved; and the same court, in the principal case of LAWRENCE v. NELSON, allows a decree of divorce to be set aside after the death of the successful party, because of lack of jurisdiction in the court granting it.

In states where there are statutory provisions forbidding the review of a judgment of divorce after the term at which granted, it has usually been held that such statutes do not preclude the vacation of a divorce decree where the court granting it had no jurisdiction, although some cases hold that fraud in any other matter than in obtaining jurisdiction is not sufficient to justify a review in defiance of statute. (See Richardson v. Stowe, 102 Mo. 33, 14 S. W. 810, supra, III. a, and Rine v. Hodgson, 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 275, supra, II. a, 4.)

Where a direct attack is made on the validity of the decree, it is usually done either by motion or petition filed in the original divorce suit itself to have the decree set aside, or by an original bill in the nature of a bill of review, bringing in all the parties who may be affected by the annulment of the decree, though in some cases the decree has been set aside on writ of error or appeal. In only a few of the cases, however, has the question of the procedure necessary to be followed been raised and discussed.

There is no English case deciding the exact point involved in this note, unless it may be Robertson v. Stallage, Cro. Jac. 186, which seems doubtful, for the reasons stated in III. b, supra. This may be due to the theory that under the policy of the ecclesiastical law a decision contra matrimonium was regarded as never final, but always open to revision and reversal upon a proper proceeding in the proper court, though there has been some dissent from this doctrine by several English judges, and it is of rather doubtful authority. But it was undoubtedly the rule under the old canon law. The only English cases in which the validity of a divorce has been attacked after the death of one or both of the parties have been those in which the validity of a foreign divorce has been called in question in some collateral proceeding, or those in which in an action in the temporal courts an attempt has been made to impeach the validity of a decree of divorce or annulment of marriage pronounced by the ecclesiastical courts. As to the conclusiveness of a sentence in the spiritual courts when introduced in evidence in the temporal courts there has been some controversy, some judges contending that because of the peculiar jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts over matrimonial causes their decrees, so long as they remain in force, must be considered absolutely conclusive in the temporal courts. (See Kenn's Case, III. b, supra.) But the weight of authority seems to hold that, while ordinarily such decrees are conclusive in the temporal courts, they may always be attacked for fraud. And it has been claimed that a distinction should be made between the right to set aside a divorce decree after the death of the parties in cases where there has been no subsequent marriage and in cases where the deceased had before his death contracted a second marriage, which would, of course, be dissolved by the vacation of the divorce sentence, and the issue thereof bastardized.

F. H. L.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF THE PARISH OF ST. PHILIPS

v.

William H. PRIOLEAU, County Auditor.

(.....S. C.....)

The renting of a church parsonage, and using the rent to procure another residence for the parson, do not deprive it of its exemption from taxation, under a provision that exemption of parsonages shall not extend beyond the buildings and premises actually occupied as such.

(March 7, 1902.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel the correction of a tax duplicate by striking therefrom an assessment against petitioner. Granted.

Statement by Jones, J.:

The following petition was filed in this cause:

"The petition of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Parish of St. Philips, in Charleston, in the state of South Carolina, respectfully sheweth: (1) That your petitioner, the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Parish of St. Philips, in Charleston, in the state of South Carolina, is a body politic and corporate, by virtue of and under an act of the general assembly of the said state of South Carolina, ratified 20th December, 1791, and has been and is the owner of (inter alia) a lot of land and the building thereon, situate on the east side of Glebe street, between George and Wentworth streets, in the city of Charleston, in the county of Charleston and in the state of South Carolina, measuring about 100 feet by about 150 feet, being lot numbered 9 on the plan of the glebe lands of St. Philips, made by R. Q. Pinckney, surveyor, and of record at page 126 of Plat Book A No. 1, in the office of the register of mesne conveyances for the said county of Charleston, and known as Nos. 6 and 8 Glebe street. That the above-named William H. Prioleau is the duly appointed, commissioned, and qualified county auditor of the said county of Charleston. (2) That the said lot of land was very many years ago set apart and the building thereon was originally erected as a parsonage, and that they have been ever known as 'St. Philips' Parsonage,' and ever exempted from taxation until the year 1898, when they were assessed and valued for taxation by the board of assessors on your petitioner's, 'return' for that year (although stated by your petitioner in said 'return' to be exempt from taxation), and were thereupon placed by the county auditor on the tax duplicates of the said county of Charleston, and have since appeared on said duplicate, and taxes have been charged and levied thereon by the county auditor from year to year. (3) That your petitioner is advised that the said lot of land and the building thereon is exempt from taxation under § 4, art. 10, of the Constitution of the state of South Carolina, which said § 4 reads as follows: 'Sec. 4. There shall be exempt from taxation all county, township, and municipal property used exclusively for public purposes, and not for revenue, and the property of all schools, colleges and institutions of learning, all charitable institutions in the nature of asylums for the infirm, deaf and dumb, blind, idiotic and indigent persons, except where the profits of such institutions are applied to private uses; all public libraries, churches, parsonages, and burying grounds; but property of associations and societies, although connected with charitable objects, shall not be exempt from state, county, or municipal taxation; provided, that as to real estate, this exemption shall not extend beyond the buildings and premises actually occupied by such schools, colleges, institutions of learning, asylums, libraries, churches, parsonages, and burial grounds, although connected with charitable objects.' (4) That on or about the 9th day of March, 1899, your petitioner presented to the comptroller general of the state of South Carolina a petition setting forth the facts of the case and asking relief, as will fully appear by reference to the said petition, hereunto annexed as part and parcel hereof, and to which reference is craved as often as may be necessary; but that the said comptroller general, by and under the advice of the attorney general of the state, refused to grant the prayer of the said petition, which said advice of the attorney general is embodied in the letter dated May 9, 1899, hereto annexed as part and parcel hereof, and reference thereto is craved as often as may be necessary. (5) That your petitioner has resorted to all the lawful means known to your petitioner to procure an exemption from taxation of the said lot of land and the building thereon, and is advised that there is no adequate remedy other than a writ of mandamus to procure such exemption. Wherefore your petitioner, asking the aid of this honorable court, prays that a writ of mandamus be issued, directed to the said county auditor, commanding him to correct your petitioner's said 'return,' and also the said tax duplicates, either by striking therefrom and omitting altogether

NOTE.—As to effect of using property of a religious, charitable, or educational institution in secular business, or for revenue, upon its right to exemption from taxation, see Book Agents of M. E. Church, South v. Hinton (Tenn.) 19 L. R. A. 289, and note; Montana Catholic Mission v. Lewis & C. County (Mont.) 57 L. R. A.

22 L. R. A. 684; American Sunday School Union v. Taylor (Pa.) 23 L. R. A. 695; Portland Hibernian Benev. Soc. v. Kelly (Or.) 30 L. R. A. 167; Fitterer v. Crawford (Mo.) 50 L. R. A. 191; and Young Men's Christian Asso. v. Douglas County (Neb.) 52 L. R. A. 123.

the said lot of land and the building thereon, or else by striking out the assessment and valuation of the same placed on the said 'return' and tax duplicates, and marking and declaring the same to be exempt from taxation. And that your petitioner may have such further or other relief, or both, as may be just and meet. And your petitioner will ever pray, and so forth."

Mr. T. W. Bacot for petitioner.

Mr. U. X. Gunter for respondent.

Jones, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application in the original jurisdiction of this court for a writ of mandamus to compel the county auditor of Charleston county to correct the tax duplicate by striking therefrom the assessment of the lot in the city of Charleston known as "St. Philips Parsonage," which it is claimed by petitioner is exempt from taxation under article 10, § 4, of the Constitution. The only question in the case arising on demurrer to the petition, which is reported herewith, is whether said property is exempt from taxation. It appears from the petition and exhibits that the lot and buildings claimed to be exempt from taxation is the property of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Parish of St. Philips, in Charleston, in the state of South Carolina, which was incorporated under an act approved December 20, 1791; that said lot and buildings thereon have constituted and have been known as the parsonage of said church for over one hundred years, and have never been taxed until the year 1898, when said property was placed on the tax books, and taxes levied thereon then and ever since; that said lot and buildings at the time of their assessment for taxation in 1898 were not actually occupied by the rector or parson of said church, but were rented out, the rector or parson hiring another residence in a different locality for his personal convenience, and the rent derived from said parsonage was appropriated to the salary of the rector, and so to the hiring of such other residence. We are of the opinion, upon the facts stated, that said property is exempt from taxation. Article 10, § 4, of the Constitution, provides: "There shall be exempt from taxation . . . all . . . parsonages: . . . provided, that as to real estate this exemption shall not extend beyond the buildings and premises actually occupied by such . . . parsonages, . . . although connected with charitable objects." The premises in question constituting and known as "St. Philips Church Parsonage," and being set apart for the actual use and occupancy of its parson, does not lose its character as a "parsonage" merely because the parson, for his personal convenience, should permit another to occupy said premises, and use the rent thereof in procuring another more convenient residence. It does not appear that said premises, used as a parsonage for over one hundred years, has ceased to be such.

It is therefore the judgment of this court that the writ of mandamus issue as prayed for in this petition.
57 L. R. A.

Maud SIMMONS et al., Respts.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

1. Allegations that plaintiff "was made sick, forced to take her bed, and call in the services of a physician, and expended large sums of money in medicines, care, and nursing," are not irrelevant in an action to recover damages for neglect to promptly transmit and deliver a telegram.
2. A statute rendering telegraph companies liable for mental anguish caused by failure to promptly transmit and deliver messages does not deprive them of property without due process of law, or deny them the equal protection of the laws.

(April 11, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Greenville County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for alleged negligent failure to deliver a telegram. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George H. Fearons, with Messrs. Smythe, Lee, & Frost, for appellant:

Damages which are unattended by any physical injury, and which consist wholly in mental suffering, are not of the character of which our law takes cognizance, and therefore are not recoverable.

Martin v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 32 S. C. 592, 10 S. E. 960; Lewis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556.

The act of 1901 affects none excepting telegraph companies.

The act of 1901 has denied to telegraph

NOTE.—For conflicting authorities as to right to damages for mental suffering on account of default of telegraph company, see note to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rogers (Miss.) 13 L. R. A. 859.

For subsequent cases in this series denying the right, see Wilcox v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (C. C. App. 4th C.) 17 L. R. A. 804; Connell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Mo.) 20 L. R. A. 172; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood (C. C. App. 5th C.) 21 L. R. A. 706; International Ocean Teleg. Co. v. Saunders (Fla.) 21 L. R. A. 810; Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Minn.) 25 L. R. A. 408; Morton v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Ohio) 32 L. R. A. 735; Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Ark.) 39 L. R. A. 463; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robinson (Tenn.) 34 L. R. A. 431; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson (Ind.) 54 L. R. A. 846; Connolly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Va.) 56 L. R. A. 663; and the case of Robinson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Ky.) post, 611.

For cases sustaining the right, see Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Iowa) 28 L. R. A. 72; Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 45 L. R. A. 160; and Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Tenn.) 56 L. R. A. 301.

companies "the equal protection of the laws" of this state.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 484; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wilson (Tex. App.) 19 S. W. 910.

Powers which can be justified as police regulations, and which would otherwise be clearly prohibited by the Constitution, can be such only as are so clearly necessary to the safety, comfort, and well-being of society, or so imperatively required by the public necessity, as to lead to the rational and satisfactory conclusion that the framers of the Constitution could not, as men of ordinary prudence and foresight, have intended to prohibit their exercise in the particular case, notwithstanding the language of the prohibition would otherwise include it.

Tiedeman, Pol. Power, pp. 12, 196, 197; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 62, 21 L. ed. 404; McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 109, 18 L. R. A. 440, 16 S. E. 429; Stehmeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 259, 31 S. E. 322.

Statutes somewhat similar to that of 1901 have been held unconstitutional, because they created distinctions not justified as an exercise of police power.

Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Williamson v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 31.

The classification created by the act of 1901 is not "based upon some reasonable ground, some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification," but is a mere arbitrary selection.

San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wilson (Tex. App.) 19 S. W. 912; Cooley, Const. Lim. 484; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 154, 41 L. ed. 667, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. 127 Cal. 4, 47 L. R. A. 338, 59 Pac. 304; Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511; Railroad Tax Cases, 8 Sawy. 238, 13 Fed. 733; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 19 Fed. 694; Williamson v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 105 Fed. 34; People ex rel. Valentine v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 664, 83 N. W. 594; Park v. Detroit Free Press Co. 72 Mich. 560, 1 L. R. A. 599, 40 N. W. 731; Middleton v. Middleton, 54 N. J. Eq. 692, 36 L. R. A. 221, 35 Atl. 1065, 37 Atl. 1106; Stehmeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 259, 31 S. E. 322.

The sickness of the plaintiff, and her expenditure on doctors and for medicines, were not natural results of the failure to deliver the telegram.

Hadley v. Bowendale, 9 Exch. 341; Mood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 40 S. C. 524, 19 S. E. 67; Livingston v. Exum, 19 S. C. 223; Lapscomb v. Tanner, 31 S. C. 49, 9 S. E. 723; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith, 76 Tex. 253, 13 S. W. 169; Western U. Teleg. 67 L. R. A.

Co. v. Ragland (Tex. Civ. App.) 61 S. W. 421; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Foster (Miss.) 23 So. 581; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Bryant, 17 Ind. App. 70, 46 N. E. 358; Leonard v. New York, A. & B. Electro-Magnetic Teleg. Co. 41 N. Y. 544, 1 Am. Rep. 446; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Henley, 23 Ind. App. 14, 54 N. E. 775; Stafford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 73 Fed. 273.

When the only damage complained of consists in the continuation of an anxiety, or in a mental suspense, which would have been set at rest if there had been no default on the part of the defendant, then the damage is too remote, vague, shadowy, and uncertain to be cognizable at law.

Rowell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 75 Tex. 26, 12 S. W. 534; Ricketts v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 30 S. W. 1105; De Voegler v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 30 S. W. 1107; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Edmondson, 91 Tex. 206, 42 S. W. 549; Akard v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. 538; McCarthy v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. 568; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Giffin, 93 Tex. 530, 56 S. W. 744.

Mr. B. A. Morgan, for respondents:

Damages are proximate when they are the natural and necessary consequences.

If plaintiff's anxiety was engendered or multiplied by defendant's conduct until it reached the point of overcoming her physical strength, that giving in of strength and creation of sickness was the direct and proximate result.

Mood v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 40 S. C. 524, 19 S. E. 63; Wood's Mayne, Damages, § 39.

The complaint charges, not only "negligence," but that the message never was delivered because of defendant's wanton, or wilful, or reckless conduct. This is sufficient.

Proctor v. Southern R. Co. 61 S. C. 189, 39 S. E. 351; Glover v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 57 S. C. 228, 35 S. E. 510; Appleby v. South Carolina & G. R. Co. 60 S. C. 48, 38 S. E. 237.

Legislation is not open to the charge of depriving one of his property or rights without due process of law, if it be general in its operation upon the subjects to which it relates.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231.

This law is not void if all persons subject to it are treated alike.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 35 L. ed. 1035, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 810, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 250; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Indiana, 165 U. S. 304, 41 L. ed. 725, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345.

Jones, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action for damages for neg-ligerly failing to deliver a telegraphic message. The appeal comes from a judgment for $500 against the defendant.

The first question presented is whether the court erred in refusing defendant's motion to strike out certain allegations of the complaint. We therefore incorporate herein such allegations of the complaint as will make clear the question presented. It is alleged: "That on the 22d day of March, 1901, F. M. Simmons, the husband of the plaintiff Maud Simmons, was in Greensboro, North Carolina. The said Maud Simmons had in some way heard her husband was sick, but could not ascertain whether he was slightly or seriously so. To be able to ascertain his condition, and to relieve herself of the terrible suspense and stress of mind, she did on said day deliver to the defendant, at Greenville, South Carolina, for transmission and delivery, the following prepaid message, to wit:

"Greenville, S. C. March 22d, 1901.

"F. M. Simmons, Care Keely Institute, Greensboro, N. C.:—

"Are you sick? Answer at once.

"Mrs. F. M. Simmons.

"(6) This message was promptly delivered by the defendant to the said F. M. Simmons, at Greensboro, North Carolina, whereupon he at once caused to be delivered to the defendant, at Greensboro, North Carolina, for transmission and delivery to the plaintiff, Maud Simmons, and the defendant for such purpose received the following message to wit:

"Greensboro, N. C. March 22, 1901.

"Mrs. F. M. Simmons, Greenville, S. C.:—

"Have been sick. Am better now. Don't be uneasy.

"F. M. Simmons.

"(7) That the defendant had notice of the importance of said message, and of the annoyance, anxiety, pain, and suffering that would result to the plaintiff Maud Simmons if the message was not transmitted and delivered. (8) That the defendant so negligently performed its duty that said message was not transmitted and delivered within a reasonable time, and its conduct in that behalf was so wanton or wilful or reckless that said message has never been delivered. (9) The plaintiff Maud Simmons received no response to her said message. That the reason therefor was the negligence, or wantonness, or wilfulness, or recklessness of the defendant in transmitting or delivering the said message addressed to her. That she relied upon the prompt delivery of her message of inquiry, before described, and, believing it had been delivered, and receiving no response, was because of the aforesaid reasons subjected to all the annoyances, anxiety, pain, and trouble of mind incident to the conditions thereby created. In consequence of the negligence, or wantonness, or wilfulness, or recklessness of the defendant as aforesaid

57 L. R. A.

she was made to suffer great and grievous mental anguish, pain, and suffering, and was made sick, forced to take her bed, and call in the services of a physician, and expended large sums of money in medicine, care, and nursing, all to her damage $2,000."

The motion was to strike out the words in the last sentence above, "and was made sick, forced to take her bed, and call in the services of a physician, and expended large sums of money in medicines, care, and nursing," as irrelevant and surplusage, and not legally connected with or resulting from the cause of action set out in the complaint. We think the motion was properly refused. The allegations were relevant to the cause of action, the action being for damages resulting from mental anguish and physical suffering alleged to have been caused by the defendant's negligence. The court could not say, as matter of law, that bodily illness is not a natural and proximate result of negligence in delivering certain messages. It was the province of the jury to determine whether such was the fact upon the testimony given.

The next and main question presented is whether the "mental anguish" act, approved February 20, 1901, violates the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution in depriving telegraph companies of property without due process of law, and in denying them the equal protection of the laws, and also § 5, art. 1, of the state Constitution, containing similar provisions. This question was presented to the court below on demurrer to the complaint and requests to charge, and is renewed here by proper exceptions. The act is as follows:

"An Act to Allow Damages against Telegraph Companies Doing Business in This State, for Mental Anguish or Suffering, even in the Absence of Bodily Injury Caused by Negligence in Receiving, Transmitting, or Delivering Messages.

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of South Carolina: That from and after the passage of this act, all telegraph companies doing business in this state shall be liable in damages for mental anguish or suffering even in the absence of bodily injury for negligence in receiving, transmitting, or delivering messages.

"Sec. 2. That nothing contained in this act shall abridge the rights or remedies now provided by law against telegraph companies, and the right and remedies provided for by this act shall be in addition to those now existing.

"Sec. 3. That in all actions under this act the jury may award such damages as they conclude resulted from negligence of said telegraph companies."

23 Stat. at L. p. 748.

We hold with the circuit court that the act is not unconstitutional in the particulars named. "Due process of law" means the same as "the law of the land," and, as a general rule, involves an opportunity before a proper tribunal under established procedure to make contest in defending or enforcing a legal right. Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 18 How. 282, 15 L. ed. 376; Pennoy v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 572. The legislature cannot, without violating this provision, arbitrarily deprive one of his fundamental rights appertaining to life, liberty, and property. But this legislation deprives telegraph companies of no right. Its design is to compel the performance of a duty imposed by law and their own contract. They have no right to be negligent in the conduct of their duties and business, which so largely affects the public welfare. It is neither arbitrary nor oppressive that they shall be liable for such damages, including mental suffering, as a competent legal tribunal shall determine to be the result of their negligence. Legislation is not unequal nor discriminatory in the sense of the equality clause of the Constitution, merely because it is special or limited to a particular class. The decisions of the United States Supreme Court establish that the legislature has power to make a classification of persons or property for public purposes, provided such classification is not arbitrary, and bears reasonable relation to the purpose to be effectuated, and that the equality clause is not violated, when all within the designated class are treated alike. In the case of Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, the court said: "Class legislation discriminating against some and favoring others is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the [14th] Amendment." "Neither the Amendment,—broad and comprehensive as it is,—nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity." In Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, the court said: "The specific regulations for one kind of business which may be necessary for the protection of the public can never be the just ground of complaint because like restrictions are not imposed upon other business of a different kind. The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same business are subjected to different restrictions, or are held entitled to different privileges under the same conditions." In Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, the court said: "There is no evasion of the rule of equality where all companies are subjected to the same duties and liabilities under similar circumstances." In the case of Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161, the court affirmed the constitutionality of a Kansas statute imposing upon railroad corporations future liability for damages to employees by negligence of their fellow servants, notwithstanding no such liability existed against any other person or corporation, because the court considered that the legislation met a particular necessity, and all railroad corporations without distinction were made subject to this same liability. The case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, recognized the rule stated, emphasizing that such classification must not be arbitrary,—that is to say, "must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is proposed;" or, in other language used by the court, such classification must be "based upon some reasonable ground,—some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification, and is not a mere arbitrary selection." In this last-mentioned case the court, applying the principle stated, held unconstitutional a Texas statute providing that a railroad company failing to pay certain claims under $50 within thirty days after presentation shall be liable for an attorney's fee not exceeding $10, on the ground that such statute deprived such company of the equal protection of the law, no other delinquent debtor being subject to such penalty. The court considered such classification arbitrary, because the business of railroads carried with it no special necessity for prompt payment of debts,—a duty resting upon all debtors,—and therefore the classification was not based upon any difference among delinquent debtors which would make a distinction among them natural and reasonable. In a case recently filed (Porter v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 41 S. E. 108), this court held that the "act to require all common carriers to pay all loss of, or damages for loss, damage, and breakage of, any article shipped over their lines, or to refuse to do so within a certain time," approved February 25, 1897 (22 Stat. at L. p. 443), did not violate the constitutional provisions cited, the classification with reference to the purpose sought being within the competency of the legislature. Further illustrating the rule stated, the United States Supreme Court, in the case of St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243, held (in accord with the case of McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 116, 18 L. R. A. 440; 16 S. E. 429), that a statute making railroad companies liable for property destroyed by fire communicated by their locomotive engines did not violate the 14th Amendment, even though the liability did not depend upon any negligence of the railroad company. In that case the special legislation as to railroad liability had relation to the prevention of a peculiar danger arising from the operation of the locomotives, and hence has a reasonable basis for classification. It will be observed that in this case, as in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8

Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161, the property of the classification for the imposition of special liability was not affected by the fact that there were other common carriers operating with steam,—as, for example, steamboat companies,—which might communicate fires, or whose employees might sustain injuries through the negligence of fellow servants. This shows that a classification need not include all engaged in a general business,—as the business of carrying freight and passengers,—but may simply embrace a more limited class, who carry freight and passengers in a particular way, or by particular instrumentalities. Testing the question before us by the principles stated, we think the act is constitutional. Telegraph companies, as carriers of intelligence through the agency of electricity, are peculiarly the subject of distinct classification. Their business consists in the speedy transmission of intelligence without regard to distance. They subserve a useful public purpose when and because they communicate news with greater despatch than any other agency. Such business, when conducted in accordance with the duty imposed by the franchises or privileges granted to them, promotes public safety, education, convenience, prosperity, and adds to the peace, comfort, and happiness of the thousands who rely on this means of communication in time of need or distress. It is surely within legislative power to constitute them a class by themselves, and insure the performance of duties so closely interwoven with the public welfare by imposing liability for all damages resulting from their negligence. The classification is based upon a particular necessity arising out of the peculiar duties assumed by such companies. It is argued that the legislation is discriminatory, because the statute does not also include telephone companies or other agencies for the transmission of news. This view is answered by the principle stated in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161, as telegraph companies are as distinct from telephone companies as a railroad company is distinct from a steamboat company. In the case of a telegram the telegraph company delivers the sender's message; in the case of a message by telephone company the sender delivers his own message to the person, and in the language of his own choice. In one case the telegraph company actively controls the receiving, transmission, and delivery of the message; in the other there is no control by the telephone company except in the mere furnishing of the mechanical instruments of communication for the patron's use. It is therefore manifest that legislation designed to promote care in the receiving, transmission, and delivery of messages may have a just and reasonable relation to telegraph companies, and be wholly inapplicable to telephone companies.

The foregoing disposes practically of all the material questions presented. The exceptions have all been considered by the court, and are overruled.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS

C. B. ROBINSON, Appt.,

v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Damages cannot be recovered for mental anguish caused by breach by a telegraph company of its contract to transmit money promptly.
2. Tender of a check is not a compliance with a contract by a telegraph company to promptly transmit and deliver money.

(June 5, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in his favor for a less amount than was demanded in an action brought to recover damages for failure to deliver money which it had contracted to transfer for him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to right to recover for mental anguish caused by failure to deliver telegram, see the preceding case of Simmons v. Western U. Telegr. Co. (S. C.) and footnote thereto. 57 L. R. A.

Messrs. Bingham & Davis, for appellant:

Appellant had the right to make and sustain his claim for damages by reason of mental suffering, humiliation, and mortification.

Chapman v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 90 Ky. 265, 13 S. W. 880; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Cleaver, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 301; Beasley v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 39 Fed. 181; Stuart v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 66 Tex. 580, 59 Am. Rep. 623, 18 S. W. 351; Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Randall, 50 Tex. 261; Field, Damages, 76; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; Smith v. Overby, 30 Ga. 241; Smith v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 23 Ohio St. 17; Cooley, Torts, 646; 1 Sutherland, Damages, 17, 18; So Relle v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Robinson, 97 Tenn. 638, 34 L. R. A. 431, 37 S. W. 545; Mentzer v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72, 62 N. W. 1; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 6 L. R. A. 844, 12 S. W. 857; Reese v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 123 Ind. 294, 7 L. R. A. 583, 24 N. E. 163; Young v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 669, 11 S. E. 1044; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co.

v. Wilson, 69 Tex. 739, 7 S. W. 653; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Broesche, 72 Tex. 654, 10 S. W. 734; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Simpson, 73 Tex. 423, 11 S. W. 385; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Carter, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 624, 21 S. W. 688; Womack v. Western U. Telegr. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 417; Wadsworth v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 86 Tenn. 695, 3 S. W. 574; Newport News & M. Valley R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Tenn. 694, 22 S. W. 737; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Newhouse, 6 Ind. App. 422, 33 N. E. 800; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Stratemeier, 6 Ind. App. 125, 32 N. E. 871; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 So. 419; Logan v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 84 Ill. 468; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Burgess (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 1033; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Fisher, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1293, 54 S. W. 830; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Van Cleave, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 53, 54 S. W. 827; Graddy v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1455, 43 S. W. 408; Roach v. Jones, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 231, 44 S. W. 677; Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 9 L. R. A. 514, 25 N. E. 822; Sherrill v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 109 N. C. 527, 14 S. E. 94; Marr v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 85 Tenn. 529, 3 S. W. 496; Loper v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 70 Tex. 689, 8 S. W. 600; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 1 L. R. A. 728, 9 S. W. 598; Rowell v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 75 Tex. 26, 12 S. W. 534; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Feegles, 75 Tex. 537, 12 S. W. 860; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Moore, 76 Tex. 66, 12 S. W. 949; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Kirkpatrick, 76 Tex. 217, 13 S. W. 70; Gulf. C. & S. F. Telegr. Co. v. Richardson, 79 Tex. 649, 15 S. W. 689; Erie Telegr. Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 89, 17 S. W. 831; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Beringer, 84 Tex. 38, 19 S. W. 336; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Nations, 82 Tex. 539, 18 S. W. 709; Potts v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 82 Tex. 545, 18 S. W. 604; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Ward (Tex. App.) 19 S. W. 898; Logan v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 84 Ill. 468; Cutts v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 71 Wis. 46, 36 N. W. 627; Thompson, Electricity, § 378; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 605-756; Sedg. Damages, §§ 43-50.

Messrs. Richards & Ronald, for appellee:

A telegraph company is not responsible for mortification, humiliation, or any other kind of mental suffering, nor disappointments in traveling, occasioned by its failure to either transmit or pay over a money order.

De Voegler v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 30 S. W. 1107; Ricketts v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 30 S. W. 1105.

Courts, where the mental anguish doctrine has gained a foothold, have shown a tendency to throw around it wise limitations to discourage a multiplicity of harassing suits.

Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Steenbergen, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1289, 54 S. W. 829; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Ayers (Ala.) 31 So. 78; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Ferguson, 157 Ind. 64, 54 L. R. A. 846, 60 N. E. 674, 1080; Reese 57 L. R. A.

v. Western U. Telegr. Co. 123 Ind. 294, 7 L. R. A. 583, 24 N. E. 163; Western U. Telegr. Co. v. Burgess (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 1033.

Mr. George R. Fearons also for appellee.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, a citizen of Louisville, was in Duluth, Minnesota, on August 21, 1900. He says he was an entire stranger there. Some friends were with him, and they had engaged to leave the city that day. It was on Saturday. Appellant had some money with him, and was preparing to furnish it to his companions, providing he could first be assured that he could receive returns on a draft by telegraph that day. He approached appellee's agent at Duluth, and gave him the foregoing information, and was assured by the agent that, if the draft was honored in Louisville, the point on which it was being drawn, he could get the money that day, and, if the draft was made then, that he could return for the money about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Appellant claims that he then delivered to his friends the money he had with him, and they left the city. He telegraphed as follows, paying appellant for the message and the charge for transmitting the money:

August 21, 1900.

To Robinson-Hughes Co.,
Louisville, Ky.:—

Wire me one hundred. Waive identification. Be home last of week.

C. B. Robinson.

This message was delivered to Robinson-Hughes Company at Louisville about 1:30 P. M. on the day on which it was sent. They immediately complied with the telegraphic draft, and deposited with appellee at Louisville, Kentucky, the sum of $100 cash for payment by an equivalent sum in cash immediately to appellant in the city of Duluth. Appellant returned to the Duluth office a few minutes before the hour designated, and was informed that the draft had been honored, and was tendered a check of the Western Union Telegraph Company for $100, drawn upon one of the banks of Duluth. The banks had closed for the day at 2 o'clock P. M. Appellant informed the agent that he was unknown in the city, and that a check was useless to him, because he could not be identified, and that he wanted the money; that he had engaged passage on a steamer for Canada, and was due to depart about 6 o'clock in the evening. The agent said that he had not that much money, and declined to make any other payment than the check. Appellant importuned the agent to go upon the street, and have the check cashed by some acquaintance. The agent refused. Appellant told the agent of his condition and needs; that he was on a trip for his health and for pleasure; that he was moneyless, far away from home, and in a strange city, and had neither friends nor acquaintances there. Appellee's agent still declined to make other tender than the check. Appellant refused it. He brought this suit to recover the $100, the costs of sending the message, and $1,000 damages to compensate him for the mental anguish and suffering he endured by reason of defendant's wrongful conduct; also as punitive damages. He also alleged that he had been required to expend $3 as extraordinary expenses incurred in Duluth while detained on account of appellee's conduct. The circuit court refused to entertain the action for any part of appellant's demand except for the $100, $2.86, and $3, and gave judgment accordingly. As to the remainder of the claim the petition was dismissed. Appellant prosecutes this appeal, seeking a reversal upon the ground that annoyances, worry, and mental anguish suffered by him, and caused by appellee's breach of its contract under such circumstances as detailed, were elements of damage for which he was entitled to be compensated.

There was nothing upon which to base a recovery of exemplary damages; no charge of malice or oppression. This court is committed to the doctrine that a telegraph company is answerable in damages for mental suffering caused by its failure to deliver a social message by reason of which the sender or person addressed is prevented from attending at the bedside at the death, or at the funeral, of a near relative. Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 90 Ky. 265, 13 S. W. 880, and subsequent cases. We have not applied the doctrine, however, further than to the class of cases referred to, and then the liability has been restricted to those of the first degree of relationship. It may be difficult to distinguish that class of cases from the one at bar in point of reason. But it should be borne in mind that the general rule is, in actions for breach of contract, damages for mental suffering occasioned by the breach are not recoverable. The telegraph cases, to the extent allowed at all, appear to constitute an exception to this general rule. We say "to the extent that they are allowed at all," for all telegrams are not subject to the rule. Telegraphic messages of a business nature should be and are subject to the law applicable to other business transactions. The measure of recovery is then regulated by the nature of the transactions involved, but in every case subject to these cardinal rules applicable to the defining of the measure of damages, viz., that the damages must be proximate, certain, and the necessary result of the breach. They must not be conjectural nor speculative. In the case at bar the message was solely concerning a business transaction; in fact was the hiring of appellee to collect a sum of money at a distant city for, and immediately transmit it to, the hirer. The telegraph company undertook to render the service for him. It failed to discharge its undertaking; in other words, it broke its contract. Although it collected the draft, it did not transmit the money promptly to the person to whom it had engaged to deliver it. The contract sued on is not different in any material degree from one where a bank accepts for collection for its customer a draft on a remote locality, and, after collecting it, fails to turn over the money to the person entitled. This person may, and under similar circumstances doubtless would, suffer the same degree of anxiety, worry, mental pain, and mortification that appellant did. Yet the only difference between the contracts—the one sued on and the one imagined—is in the time required to perform them. It is probably true that every breach of contract occasions some mental disturbance, varying, perhaps, more in proportion to difference of temperament of the persons than to the circumstances of the case. Although it is said, "wherever the common law gives a right or prohibits an injury, it also gives a remedy by action" (3 Bl. Com. 123), yet this ancient boast of our race must be considered with other well-known, tried, and practical rules, among which is the one recognizing damnum absque injuria. In defining what damages are recoverable, and why, Sedgwick, in his work on Damages (vol. 1, p. 291), says: "In all cases of civil injury and of breach of contract the declared object of awarding damages is to give compensation for pecuniary loss; that is, to put the plaintiff in the same position, so far as money can do it, as he would have been if the contract had been performed, or the tort not committed." The author is not speaking of those cases where exemplary damages are allowed, nor does he include breaches of contract of marriage, which seem to be also an exception to the rule. Suppose this action was permitted, what would be the inquiry? Manifestly, it must turn upon these two propositions: Did the plaintiff in fact suffer mental anguish? What was its extent? To do justice between litigants before the courts must be the law's effort. This necessarily involves the inquiry into the truthfulness of the matter of fact put in issue. Both sides must have a chance. If the plaintiff says because of the defendant's failure to deliver a message directing his broker to sell his stocks on the then market he lost money because of the subsequent falling of the market, the defendant has an opportunity to show (1) that plaintiff in fact then owned no such stocks; (2) that the market did not fall; (3) or, if it did, it immediately, and before plaintiff sold, recovered, and continued better; and (4) the exact difference—that is, damage—caused in plaintiff's condition in any event. So, if the plaintiff sustains a physical injury, his accompanying and consequent mental suffering is less easily simulated or exaggerated. In any event, the nature, features, extent, etc., of injury, and plaintiff's conduct then, are all capable of being proved or disproved by eyewitnesses. But in the instance of mental suffering alone no such means of testing the truth is available. We are invited to depart from the conservative paths beaten clear, whether or not straight, by long experience, to enter the speculative field of psychology, in allowing elements of damage heretofore unknown to the common law in such cases. As the common law has never allowed it, and as no statute has been enacted permitting it, we must decline the step. In De Voegler v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 229, 30 S. W. 1107, the plaintiff alleged that he was an inexperienced youth in Poughkeepsie, New York, among strangers, and, desiring to go to his home in Sherman, Texas, had requested his mother to send him money immediately; that his mother had wired him the amount, paying the charges therefor, but that the defendant failed to keep its contract, etc., by which plaintiff was occasioned great mental suffering, apprehension, anxiety, etc. The court denied the recovery. In Ricketts v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 30 S. W. 1105, the sender of the money order alleged that she had paid defendant company $2.30 for sending $30 to her son in New York. The company failed to deliver the money as it had agreed to do. The sender sued for damages on account of her mental suffering. Said the chief justice in denying the recovery: "The fact that a loving mother, in the dark hours of midnight, may conjure up a thousand forebodings of evil to her distant boy when he is in no real danger, even, of losing a single hour's repose, may furnish trouble enough to her; yet it gives no solid basis for damages in a practical business transaction." We are of opinion, upon precedent and principle, that appellant was not entitled to recover anything for his mental anguish or annoyance suffered because of appellee's breach of the contract.

We agree with the court below that there was a breach of the contract. Appellee was bound to deliver to appellant the money; not its check. We are further of the opinion that appellant was entitled to recover the $100 and 6 per cent per annum interest on it from August 21, 1900, till it was tendered in court; also he was entitled to recover the costs of sending the message, $2.86, and any additional actual expenses incurred by him necessarily because of appellee's breach of the contract, alleged in this case to be $3.

The judgment failed to give appellant all that he was entitled to, and is consequently reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky, Appt.,
v.
WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COM-PANY.

(.....Ky.....)

A telegraph company is not guilty of NOTE.—As to the obligation of a telegraph or telephone company to serve the public, see, in general, note to Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321; Kirby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. D.) 80 L. R. A. 612; and State ex rel. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 55 L. R. A. 139.

57 L. R. A.

maintaining a common nuisance because it delivers at a place not under its control, which is used and resorted to for selling pools and betting on horse races, by idle and evil-disposed persons, to the common nuisance and annoyance of all good citizens of the neighborhood, messages containing the information necessary to such transactions.

(December 18, 1901.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County sustaining demurrers to an indictment against defendant for maintaining a common nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. J. Breckinridge for appellant.
Messrs. Kohn, Baird, & Spindle and Richards & Ronald, for appellee:

It is sought to make the telegraph company liable by reason of the use which third parties make of the messages after they have passed out of its hands,—a doctrine so monstrous that we trust the Kentucky courts will not be the first to announce it.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 57 Ind. 495.

Operating a place where idle and evil-disposed persons are permitted to congregate and engage in betting is not a public nuisance by virtue of any statute, but all prosecutions for such offenses are necessarily based upon the common law.

All common gaming houses are nuisances in the eye of the law.

1 Russell, Crimes, p. 741.

It seems that in the indictment it is necessary to make a particular statement of the offense, which is the keeping of the house.

1 Russell, Crimes, p. 745; 2 Clark, Crim. Law, 1126; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 278; Burton v. State, 16 Tex. App. 156; King v. State, 17 Fla. 191; State v. Bell, 5 Port. (Ala.) 375; People v. Townsend, 3 Hill, 480; Gay v. State, 90 Tenn. 645, 18 S. W. 260.

The distinction between acts which amount to maintaining the nuisance and those which do not is one of degree. The misdemeanor of unlawfully selling, committed by a servant, cannot be said, as a matter of law, to amount to maintaining a nuisance, unless he has assumed a temporary control of the premises, or in some other way emerged from his subordinate position to aid directly in maintaining it.

Com. v. Churchill, 136 Mass. 150. See also, to the same effect, Nelson v. Territory, 5 Okla. 512, 49 Pac. 920; Com. v. Galligan, 144 Mass. 171, 10 N. E. 788.

In each of the cases, whether for keeping a disorderly house or maintaining a common nuisance, our court of appeals has been careful to point out, if not emphasize, the fact that the premises were under the control of the defendant.

Cheek v. Com. 79 Ky. 360; Bollinger v. Com. 98 Ky. 575, 35 S. W. 553; Com. v. Enright, 98 Ky. 636, 33 S. W. 1111; Cheek v. Com. 100 Ky. 2, 37 S. W. 152; Com. v. Respass, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 140, 50 S. W. 549; Respass v. Com. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 789, 53 S. W. 24; Carwein v. Com. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1734, 61 S. W. 275.

Paynter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictments charge the appellee with the offense of unlawfully keeping and maintaining a common nuisance. It is averred in them that Ed. Alvey and others had a house in the city of Louisville, commonly called "The Kingston," in their occupation and under their control, and habitually sold pools upon horse races run at various cities and places in the United States, and did habitually suffer, permit, and procure divers idle and evil-disposed persons to habitually assemble in that house, who engaged in betting, winning, and losing money on horse races, to the common nuisance and common annoyance of all good citizens of the neighborhood, and those passing and repassing, etc. As to the appellee it is averred that it is a corporation organized for the purpose of conducting the business of common carrier of intelligence by telegraph in the United States; that it, unlawfully designing to assist and aid and abet Alvey and others in the pool selling in the house mentioned, habitually received from divers race courses in the United States messages and intelligence concerning horse races, to wit, the names of horses entered in races, names of owners, trainers, riders, drivers, and distances of the races, terms, conditions, and state of betting at the races, condition of the weather and tracks of race courses, with the design to enable the persons assembled at the house of Alvey and others to bet upon races. It is further averred that the appellee transmitted and delivered to Alvey and others, at the Kingston, the information as to the result of races, with the view of enabling him and others to pay the bets made on races; that the information and intelligence transmitted and services rendered by the appellee was a necessary and essential service and means of carrying on and maintaining the existence of pool selling by Alvey and others, of which fact the appellee was aware.

It will be observed that the Kingston is averred to be under the control and management of Alvey and others. It is not averred that the appellee had any control of or management of the building. Neither is it averred that it was engaged in keeping or maintaining a common nuisance except as stated. The essence of the charge against it is that it transmitted over its line information which enabled Alvey and the evil-disposed persons who assembled at the house to engage in betting on races at distant points and to pay bets upon their result. At common law a common gaming house is a nuisance. It is detrimental to the public, because it promotes cheating and other corrupt practices; it encourages idleness and excites the desire to obtain money in an improper way. Persons who are in the occupation and control of such houses are guilty of maintaining a common nuisance. 1 Russell, Crimes, 741; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 278. As it is not averred that the appellee is in the occupation and control of the house, the question arises whether it is guilty of keeping the house by the transmission of information. It is a common carrier of intelligence and information, and was created and organized for that purpose. Ky. Stat. § 1346, denounces a penalty of not less than $10 nor more than $500 against an agent, officer, or manager of a telegraph or telephone line who, from corrupt or improper motives, or wilful negligence, shall withhold the transmission or delivery of messages of intelligence for which the customary charges have been paid or tendered. If a person desires to transmit a message over a telegraph line, if it is couched in decent language, it is the duty of the company to receive and transmit it upon the tender or payment of the customary charges for such services. The very purpose of its creation is to serve the public, and it cannot refuse to do so without making itself liable for its refusal. It has no more right to refuse to send a message when the charges are paid or tendered, when the message is couched in decent language, than a railroad company has to refuse to carry a passenger who tenders or pays his fare. A railroad company has a right to refuse to carry a passenger who is disorderly, or whose conduct imperils the lives of his fellow passengers or the officers or the property of the company. It would have no right to refuse to carry a person who tendered or paid his fare simply because those in charge of the train believed that his purpose in going to a certain point was to commit an offense. A railroad company would have no right to refuse to carry persons because its officers were aware of the fact that they were going to visit the house of Alvey, and thus make it possible for him and his associates to conduct a gambling house. Common carriers are not the censors of public or private morals. They cannot regulate the public and private conduct of those who ask service at their hands. It was certainly no wrong per se for the appellee to transmit over its line the information which it is charged to have transmitted. The simple fact that persons who received the information, and as a result of it, were guilty of unlawful acts, does not make the appellee a violator of the penal or criminal law. If in doing so it violated the penal or criminal law, it would be likewise guilty in transmitting information to the newspapers of the country as to prospective prize fights and horse races, because the information thus published induced persons to engage in betting on their results. The case of Com. v. Churchill, 136 Mass. 148, is not exactly analogous to the case under consideration, but it serves to illustrate the difference between the principal in control of premises upon which a nuisance is maintained and an agent whose act in some degree contributed to it. In that case the nuisance consisted in selling intoxicating liquors, etc. The defendant made some of the illegal sales. In passing upon the effect of his acts, the court said: "The Massachusetts decisions have never pressed the liability of a servant for keeping or maintaining a nuisance, consisting of a tenement in the possession of his master, under circumstances like the present, beyond cases where the servant had had charge and control of the place, for a short time at least. . . . It is true that sales in the presence of the master do in some degree aid the master in keeping the tenement. But so do purchases, which, nevertheless, are not misdemeanors of any description. . . . The distinction between acts which amount to maintaining the nuisance and those which do not is one of degree. We do not think that the misdemeanor of unlawfully selling, committed by a servant, can be said, as a matter of law, to amount to maintaining a nuisance, unless he has assumed a temporary control of the premises, or in some other way emerged from his subordinate position to aid directly in maintaining it. . . . And none of our cases have gone further than to leave the general question to the jury, whether the defendant aided in keeping the tenement, when it appeared that he did so by exercising some form of control." In that case the agent might have been prosecuted for selling liquor, but the court held that he was not guilty of maintaining the nuisance, because he was not in the occupation and control of the premises. He was guilty of an illegal act which contributed to the nuisance, yet the court would not hold that he maintained it. In the case at bar it was legal for the appellee to furnish the information, but it is claimed that it is liable because, after that information was obtained, parties used it in such a way as to make their acts unlawful. The court properly sustained a demurrer to the indictments.

The judgment is affirmed.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

F. L. RICHMOND, Respt.,
v.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

An agreement by a passenger when procuring a mileage ticket at a reduced rate, not to hold the carrier liable for injuries received while riding on freight trains, is unenforceable with respect to such freight trains as are designated by the carrier to carry passengers generally.

(March 8, 1902.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Moore, J.:

This is an action to recover damages for a personal injury. The facts are that plaintiff having secured from the defendant a 3,000-mile passenger ticket over certain parts of its lines of railway, at 2½ cents a mile, subscribed his name to the following stipulation, among others, indorsed thereon, to wit: "When used upon any freight train designated to carry passengers, the Southern Pacific Company is absolved from all liability as a common carrier for loss of life, personal injury, or loss or damage of baggage or property of the party so using this ticket." The plaintiff, while riding as a passenger, in pursuance of said ticket, in the caboose of a freight train from Oakland to Eugene, was injured by the sudden checking of the speed of the train. At the time he was injured said train had been designated by the defendant to carry passengers, and its agents sold tickets to all persons applying therefor at the lawful rate of 4 cents per mile, and such passengers were permitted, without any restriction, to ride upon said train to or from any station on the defendant's railway in Oregon between Junction City and Roseburg, though two passenger trains passed daily over said railway line. The cause being at issue, a trial was had resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $925, and defendant appeals, assigning as error the action of the court in refusing to grant a judgment of nonsuit, and in giving certain instructions to the jury over its objection and exception.

Messrs. Fenton & Muir, for appellant:

A passenger upon a freight train, as a condition to be carried thereon, where the carrier is performing its public duties as to those who desire to become passengers by supplying passenger trains for the accommodation of the public, may lawfully contract, in consideration of the carriage upon such freight train, for his own convenience or purposes, to exempt such carrier from all liability for personal injury, whether caused by negligence or otherwise; and it does not affect the validity of such contract that the carrier may waive its right to insist upon such contract, as to all passengers who may be carried thereon, or who may pay a single fare at the full lawful rate.

Robertson v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 525, 31 N. E. 650; Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652; Bates v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E.

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to validity of agreement releasing carrier from liability for injuries to passenger received while riding on freight train, see Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Lippman (Ga.) 50 L. R. A. 673.

As to what risk is assumed by passenger on freight train generally, see note to Ohio Valley R. Co. v. Watson (Ky.) 19 L. R. A. 310; Bogess v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 23 L. R. A. 777; and Illinois C. R. Co. v. Beebe (Ill.) 43 L. R. A. 210.
57 L. R. A.

633; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93, 44 N. E. 796; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L. R. A. 101, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464; Doyle v. Fitchburg R. Co. 166 Mass. 492, 44 N. E. 611; Blank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 182 Ill. 332, 55 N. E. 332; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 44 L. ed. 560, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; Arnold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 383; Bissell v. New York C. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 442, 82 Am. Dec. 369, Reversing 20 Barb. 602; Wells v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 181, Affirming 26 Barb. 641; Perkins v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 196, 82 Am. Dec. 281; Poucher v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 263, 10 Am. Rep. 364; Magnin v. Dismore, 56 N. Y. 168; Seybolt v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75; Ulrich v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 108 N. Y. 80, 15 N. E. 60; Kenney v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 422, 26 N. E. 626; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 485, 87 Am. Dec. 260; Annas v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 67 Wis. 46, 58 Am. Rep. 848, 30 N. W. 282; Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374, 22 N. W. 215; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 30 L. R. A. 161, 14 C. C. A. 257, 24 U. S. App. 589, 66 Fed. 506; Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. 7 Wash. 528, 22 E. R. A. 794, 35 Pac. 422; Rogers v. Kennebec S. B. Co. 86 Me. 261, 25 L. R. A. 491, 29 Atl. 1069; Meuer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 5 S. D. 568, 25 L. R. A. 81, 59 N. W. 945; Quimby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 150 Mass. 365, 5 L. R. A. 846, 23 N. E. 205; Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Guarantors' Liability Indemnity Co. 60 N. J. L. 246, 44 L. R. A. 213, 37 Atl. 609; Kinney v. Central R. Co. 32 N. J. L. 407, 90 Am. Dec. 675; Griswold v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 53 Conn. 371, 55 Am. Rep. 115, 4 Atl. 261; Hutchinson, Carr. 2d ed. § 586; Higgins v. New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. 28 La. Ann. 133; Honeyman v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 13 Or. 352, 57 Am. Rep. 20, 10 Pac. 628; Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 128 Pa. 217, 5 L. R. A. 508, 18 Atl. 503; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 193, 17 C. C. A. 62, 36 U. S. App. 152, 70 Fed. 201; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 175 U. S. 92, 44 L. ed. 86, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 90 Iowa, 285, 24 L. R. A. 647, 57 N. W. 843.

Messrs. Chamberlain, Thomas, & Kraemer for respondent.

Moore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question involved in this appeal is whether a passenger's agreement to absolve a transportation company from all liability as a common carrier, while riding as a passenger upon its freight train, entered into in consideration of his securing a railway ticket at a reduced rate, is void as against public policy. It is contended by defendant's counsel that the railway company in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it, having furnished adequate passenger trains to accommodate the traveling public, may lawfully enter into a contract with a passenger whereby, in consideration of being carried on a freight train, he exempts the company from all liability for personal injury caused by its negligence or otherwise, and that the validity of such agreement is not impaired by waiving its right to insist upon such contract as to all passengers who may be carried on such train or who may ride thereon by paying a single fare at the full lawful rate. They concede that the rule is general in the state and Federal courts, except in Illinois and New York, that a common carrier cannot escape liability from the consequences of its negligence in carrying passengers on trains provided for that purpose; that they maintain that a railway company, not being obliged to carry passengers on a freight train, may contract in relation thereto as a private carrier, and that an agreement of that character is not violative of public policy. Plaintiff's counsel maintain, however, that the defendant having designated the train upon which their client was riding at the time he was injured to carry passengers, and permitted its agents to sell tickets therefor and allowed passengers generally to ride thereon, thereby made it a passenger train to all intents and purposes, thus rendering the exception inapplicable, and hence no error was committed in refusing to grant the judgment of nonsuit or in instructing the jury as complained of.

Public policy forbids a railway company from relying upon the terms of a contract entered into with a passenger, whereby he releases it from liability resulting from its negligence while performing a duty it owes the public as a common carrier; but it may become a private carrier, and escape such liability to contract, when as a matter of convenience to, or by special agreement with, a passenger, it undertakes to carry him by means not designated to accommodate the traveling public. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L. R. A. 93, 44 N. E. 796. Thus, an agreement of an express agent to assume all risks of accident, in consideration of being carried in a baggage car, to facilitate his own business, releases a railroad company from liability of injury resulting from a casualty, because the agent is not a passenger, and the carrier is under no obligation to transport him in such car. Blank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 182 Ill. 332, 55 N. E. 332; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L. R. A. 101, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464; Bates v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E. 633; Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 150 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 44 L. ed. 560, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385. The reason assigned for the conclusions reached in the cases cited is based upon the theory that the railroad companies permitted the express messengers to ride in places where the companies were under no obligation to carry them, and without such license the agents would have been trespassers and could have been ejected from such cars. In Bates v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E. 633, Mr. Justice Allen, in speaking of the plaintiff's agreement to assume the risk incident to riding in the place agreed upon, says: "The contract did not diminish the liability of the defendant. It left the risk assumed by the plaintiff in riding in the baggage car what it would have been without the contract; it only secured him against being ejected from the car." In Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652, Mr. Justice Lathrop, in speaking of the plaintiff's assumption of the risk of all injuries received while riding in the baggage car, says: "The place where he was riding was one in which the defendant was under no obligation to carry him. The contract gave the plaintiff a privilege which he sought for his own convenience." In Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L. R. A. 101, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464, the court, in speaking of the agreement entered into between the express company in whose service the decedent was an employee, and the right of the latter thereunder, says: "His rights were those of the express company, and could not be greater. He was there by the license given the express company, and he could not accept the license, and reject the conditions upon which it was granted." Where railroad companies, furnishing trackage and motive power, haul the cars of circus and menagerie companies over their lines of railway, in consideration of the latter assuming the risk of injuries incident to the journey, it has been held that such companies and their employees, sustaining damage or injury, could not recover therefrom from the railroad companies. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 30 L. R. A. 161, 14 C. C. A. 257, 24 U. S. App. 589, 66 Fed. 506; Robertson v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 525, 31 N. E. 650; Coup v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374, 22 N. W. 215; Forepaugh v. Delucare, L. & W. R. Co. 128 Pa. 217, 5 L. R. A. 508, 18 Atl. 503. The reason assigned in these cases for enforcing the contracts of exemption from liability is that, as the railroad companies were under no legal obligation to haul such cars, they might lawfully enter into any contract to do so, and as a condition precedent therefor were authorized to limit their liability in case of accident, thus becoming private carriers in respect to such cars. In Wells v. Steam Nav. Co. 2 N. Y. 204, Mr. Justice Bronson, in speaking of the right of such a carrier to restrict its liability, says: "They are not, like common carriers and innkeepers, bound to accept employment when offered, nor, like them, are they tied down to a reasonable reward for their services. They are at liberty to demand an unreasonable price before they will undertake any work or trust, or to reject employment altogether, and they may make just such stipulations as they please concerning the risk to be incurred. They may become insurers against all possible hazards, or they may say, 'We will answer for nothing but a loss happening through our own fraud or want of good faith.' In short, the parties stand on equal terms, and can in this matter, as they may in others, make just such a bargain as they think will answer their purpose."

In the case at bar the question of the defendant's liability, or its exemption therefrom, under the contract, must be solved by determining whether it was a common or a private carrier in respect to the plaintiff at the time he suffered the injury of which he complains; for if it sustained the relation of a private carrier to him his agreement exonerates it from liability, but if it was a common carrier in respect to him at that time the contract is contrary to public policy, and therefore void. "A common carrier," says Mr. Justice Bradley in New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627, "may undoubtedly become a private carrier, or a bailee for hire, when, as a matter of accommodation or special engagement, he undertakes to carry something which it is not his business to carry. For example, if a carrier of produce, running a truck boat between New York and Norfolk, should be requested to carry a keg of specie, or a load of expensive furniture, which he could justly refuse to take, such agreement might be made in reference to his taking and carrying the same as the parties chose to make, not involving any stipulation contrary to law or public policy. But when a carrier has a regularly established business for carrying all or certain articles, and especially if that carrier be a corporation created for the purpose of the carrying trade, and the carriage of the articles is embraced within the scope of its chartered powers, it is a common carrier, and a special contract about its responsibility does not divest it of the character." The principle thus so ably illustrated was adopted by this court in Honeyman v. Oregon & C. R. Co. 13 Or. 352, 57 Am. Rep. 20, 10 Pac. 628, in which it was held that where the carrier does not hold itself out as a common carrier of dogs, but, as a matter of accommodation to a passenger who was notified of its rules, permits its servant to receive them, such arrangement can only charge the carrier as a bailee or private carrier. In the case at bar a special engagement was entered into between the parties, but such agreement was not wholly a matter of accommodation to the plaintiff. It was rather for their mutual advantage, for it may safely be assumed that, when passenger tickets can be secured at low rates, many persons who would not otherwise travel purchase them for their own advantage. Such purchases necessarily increase passenger traffic, and, if the rate established leaves a margin of profit above the cost of transportation, the increase in the number of passengers ordinarily results in advantage to the railroad company, so that the purchase and sale of the ticket in question may be considered as a source of profit to each party. The question whether the defendant sustained the relation of a common carrier to the plaintiff at the time he was injured, and therefore is liable to him for the damages sustained, notwithstanding his agreement to assume the risk of injury, and to absolve the defendant from all liability therefor, must hinge upon a proper solution of the inquiry whether it was the defendant's business and duty to carry him on its freight train between the stations indicated. The law imposes upon the railroad company, as a common carrier, the duty of transporting over its lines all ordinary freight delivered to it for that purpose, and of carrying all passengers against whom no legal objection can be successfully interposed, who have complied with the rules of the company in respect to securing tickets before entering the cars, if there be sufficient room for their accommodation, leaving to the carrier the privilege of dividing the traffic, and of furnishing separate trains for the accommodation of each; and having exercised the discretion with which it is vested, thereby regulating the manner in which its business is to be transacted, it is under no legal obligation to carry passengers on freight trains or freight on passenger trains. Hobbs v. Texas & P. R. Co. 49 Ark. 357, 5 S. W. 586; Arnold v. Illinois C. R. Co. 83 Ill. 273, 25 Am. Rep. 386; Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 72 Mich. 355, 40 N. W. 463; Elkins v. Boston & M. R. Co. 23 N. H. 275; Murch v. Concord R. Corp. 29 N. H. 9, 61 Am. Dec. 631. "A common carrier of passengers," says Judge Thompson in his work on Carriers of Passengers (p. 26), "is one who undertakes for hire to carry all persons, indifferently, who may apply for passage." The defendant, having voluntarily designated its freight train to carry passengers between Junction City and Roseburg, thereby became, under the definition adverted to, a common carrier of passengers by the means so adopted, and its special contract in respect to the attempted limitation did not divest it of that character; for if it is the habit of a railroad company to carry passengers on a freight train, it becomes a common carrier of passengers by that means, and thereby assumes the liabilities of such carriers. Flinn v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 1 Houst. (Del.) 469. The defendant was under no legal obligation to carry passengers on its freight trains, but, having notified the public that it would do so between the stations indicated, the train, as long as it was used for that purpose, was a mixed freight and passenger train, thereby imposing upon the defendant all the duties of a common carrier in respect to any passenger riding thereon. The train in question was designed by the defendant to accommodate the traveling public generally, and was not provided for plaintiff's advantage alone, nor did he enjoy any special privileges thereon that were not extended to others. The defendant's undertaking to carry him by the means adopted for that purpose was a part of the performance of its business, and within the line of its public duty, as long as such train was used to carry passengers. The ticket purchased by plaintiff was secured for five eighths of the regular local fare, and, while he was a commercial traveler whose business compelled him to make extensive journeys, we understand from the transcript that any person could secure such tickets upon application by paying the same price therefor.

Plaintiff having paid value for his ticket, the contract of carriage could not be canceled at pleasure by the defendant, and we do not think a rebate in the price of a local ticket affords a sufficient consideration for the assumption of the risk undertaken, where no special privileges are conferred; for, if this were so, it would follow that the smallest remission from the regular price of a ticket might suffice for exemption from liability.

No error having been committed as alleged, the judgment is affirmed.

R. B. BOYD, Respt.,

v.

PORTLAND GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. A presumption of negligence on the part of an electric company arises when injury results to a traveler in a public street from one of its live wires, which has broken and is hanging so near the ground as to be within reach therefrom.
2. An allegation in an action to recover for injuries to a passerby from a broken live electric wire, that it was weak and defective, and insufficiently stretched and fastened, does not require proof of these facts, since the happening of the accident is presumptive evidence of negligence in that regard.
3. The presumption of negligence arising from an injury to a passerby in a public street from a broken electric wire is not overcome, so as to require the case to be taken from the jury, by testimony of de-

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to presumption of negligence in case of injury from broken or fallen electric wires, see Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson (Colo.) 31 L. R. A. 566, and note; and Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 499.

As to liability for injuries by electric wires in highways generally, see City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery (Ark.) 31 L. R. A. 570; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State use of Nelson (Md.) 31 L. R. A. 572; Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. (S. C.) 31 L. R. A. 577; McKay v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (Ala.) 31 L. R. A. 589; Huber v. La Crosse City R. Co. (Wis.) 31 L. R. A. 583; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent (N. J. L.) 32 L. R. A. 700; Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Owings (Ga.) 33 L. R. A. 798; Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Garden (C. C. App. 3d C.) 37 L. R. A. 725; Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. (Conn.) 39 L. R. A. 192; Gannon v. Laclede Gaslight Co. (Mo.) 43 L. R. A. 505; Mooney v. Luzerne (Pa.) 40 L. R. A. 811; Brush Electric Light & P. Co. v. Lefevre (Tex.) 49 L. R. A. 771; Boyd v. Portland General Electric Co. (Or.) 52 L. R. A. 509; Thomas v. Maysville Gas Co. (Ky.) 53 L. R. A. 147; and the case next following, of Newark Electric Light & P. Co. v. Buddy (N. J. L.) post, 624.

defendant's employees that the wire was properly constructed and put up.

4. There is no error in submitting to the jury a phase of the case which defendant's pleadings and the conduct of the court and parties throughout the trial show was understood to be presented by the complaint.
5. An electric-light company is not relieved from liability for injuries by wires broken by a storm, unless it was one which could not reasonably have been anticipated.
6. Remarks by the court in the presence of the jury, in a colloquy with counsel as to the propriety of submitting a special finding, will not require reversal because they indicate the court's opinion upon the defense of contributory negligence, if the jury have been fully instructed on that question, and the remarks are not intended for their guidance, and do not prejudice defendant's case.

(November 12, 1901.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Beam, Ch. J.:

This is an action by R. B. Boyd against the Portland General Electric Company to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by him on account of an injury to his minor son from coming in contact with a live electric-light wire. The defendant is a corporation engaged in supplying the city of Portland and its inhabitants with electric light, for which purpose it has put up poles along the streets, having cross arms near the top, upon which its wires are stretched. The day before the accident, and while a storm was prevailing, two of the wires on Magnolia street became crossed at a point some 125 feet west of Dakota street, and about 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening the smaller one burned in two and hung down in two loops east of the break; one of them nearly reaching the ground 2 or 3 feet west of the pole at the intersection of the streets, where it swung directly over a path used by residents of the neighborhood. The other end remained suspended from the next pole, some 150 feet west, and did not reach the ground. About the time, or soon after, the wire parted, the boy who was subsequently injured, a lad about eleven years of age, and an elder brother, passed the pole west of Dakota street, noticed the broken wire at that place, and knew it was dangerous, but did not know anything about the other wire hanging down east of that point at the intersection of the streets. About 8 o'clock the next morning, the plaintiff, who resides on Dakota street, some 200 feet south of its junction with Magnolia, sent his son on an errand which required him to travel along the path near the light pole at the corner of the street, over which the wire was suspended. A few minutes later the boy was discovered lying on the ground, immediately under the broken wire, in an insensible condition, his right hand badly burned, while he was otherwise seriously, and perhaps permanently, injured. No one witnessed the accident, and the lad was unable to give any account of how it occurred, but says he passed out of the front gate, and ran north along Dakota street without looking up, after which he had no recollection of what occurred. It is admitted, however, that his injury was caused by contact with the broken wire. The negligence charged in the complaint is that the wire which parted and caused the injury was weak and defective, and not sufficiently attached or fastened to the pole, or properly stretched, or safely insulated, owing to which defects and weakness it broke and parted; that defendant could have known by proper diligence, and did know, at the time, or very soon after, the wire parted, and long before the injury occurred, that the wire was broken and swinging over and across the street, to the imminent danger of persons traveling thereon; that, disregarding its duty, it failed and neglected to remove or repair the broken wire, or to give any warning of danger, but wrongfully and negligently permitted it to remain in such condition until after the injuries complained of were received. The answer denies the negligence charged, and, for an affirmative defense, after alleging the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's son, avers that the wire which parted was of the best-known standard manufacture, and was placed upon the poles in a proper way; that a heavy storm prevailed during the afternoon of the 6th of December, the wind at one time reaching a velocity of 60 miles an hour, which the defendant believes forced the wire across a larger one on the cross arm to the north of it, so that the friction of the wires caused the insulation to wear away, permitting them to come in contact; that between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening the smaller one burned through and parted, and fell in loops across the other as stated in the complaint; that, although defendant had the best-known appliances in use at the time for detecting or discovering the grounding of its wires, it had no knowledge of such parting until notified of the accident to plaintiff's son, when, upon examination, it ascertained that neither end of the broken wire had come in contact with the ground, so as to form a short circuit, and therefore the fact of the wire having parted could not be indicated by its appliances. The reply put in issue the new matter alleged in the answer; and, the trial resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Messrs. Dolph, Mallory, Simon, & Gearin, for appellant:

Proof of the happening of an accident is not sufficient to make out a prima facie case of negligence, except where some form of contractual relation exists between the plaintiff and defendant, as in the case of passenger and carrier, or some relation in its nature contractual.

2 Thomp. Neg. § 3, p. 1, 227, nota.

The negligence charged must be proved as a fact, and will not be presumed from the single fact that plaintiff's son was injured.

Walsh v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 10 Or. 250; Coughtry v. Willamette Street R. Co. 21 Or. 245, 27 Pac. 1031; Nitroglycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, sub nom. Parrott v. Wells, 21 L. ed. 206; Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 51 Mich. 236, 38 Am. Rep. 566, 16 N. W. 388; Schultz v. Pacific R. Co. 36 Mo. 14; Buchelder v. Heagan, 18 Me. 32; Gramlich v. Wurst, 86 Pa. 74, 27 Am. Rep. 684; Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 70.

In an action to recover damages for an injury caused by the negligence of another, the plaintiff must state in his complaint what the negligent act or omission was; and he is entitled to a verdict only upon evidence which proves the particular fact charged.

Woodward v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 18 Or. 289, 22 Pac. 1076; Knahtla v. Oregon Short-Line & U. N. R. Co. 21 Or. 136, 27 Pac. 91; Scott v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 14 Or. 228, 13 Pac. 98; Neudecker v. Kohlberg, 81 N. Y. 296; Boardman v. Griffin, 52 Ind. 101; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. & Tel. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 635, 33 Pac. 403, 35 Pac. 549.

If the defendant's evidence overcomes the presumption of negligence, then the plaintiff can take nothing by the presumption, but must prove negligence, as if no presumption existed.

Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 19 S. E. 344; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566, 41 Pac. 499; Thomp. Carr. of Pass. § 9, p. 200; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State use of Nelson, 82 Md. 293, 31 L. R. A. 572, 33 Atl. 763.

The care required is not that everything which human ingenuity can invent to prevent possible injury must be done, but, if that is done which such persons would ordinarily regard as proper and safe to do, the demands of the law are satisfied; and if, notwithstanding this, injury is sustained, it cannot be said to be the result of legal negligence.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Stumps, 55 Ill. 367; Chicago v. Starr, 42 Ill. 174, 89 Am. Dec. 422; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 47 Ill. 265; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404, 14 N. E. 391; Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 54 Mich. 55, 52 Am. Rep. 790, 19 N. W. 744; Bennett v. Ford, 47 Ind. 264; Beatty v. Central Iowa R. Co. 58 Iowa, 242, 12 N. W. 332; Sjogren v. Hall, 53 Mich. 274, 18 N. W. 812; Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212, 18 N. W. 785; Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649; Fairbanks v. Kerr, 70 Pa. 86, 10 Am. Rep. 664; Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 72; Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 653; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 455, 38 Am. Rep. 533; Dougan v. Champlain Transp. Co. 56 N. Y. 1; Crocheron v. North Shore Staten Island Ferry Co. 56 N. Y. 656; Cleveland v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 68 N. Y. 306; Burke v. Witherbee, 98 N. 57 L. R. A.

Y. 562; Marsh v. Chickering, 101 N. Y. 396, 5 N. E. 56; Morris v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 106 N. Y. 678, 13 N. E. 455; Code, § 2035.

Messrs. Dufur & Menefee, for respondent:

When plaintiff had established the fact of ownership and control of the wire, and its dangerous condition in a public street, coupled with the accident, he had made out a complete prima facie case of negligence, and cast the burden upon defendant to show that the wire broke and remained in such condition until the accident, without its fault.

Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 19 S. E. 344; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State use of Nelson, 82 Md. 293, 31 L. R. A. 572, 33 Atl. 763; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566, 41 Pac. 499; Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. 45 S. C. 146, 31 L. R. A. 577, 22 S. E. 767; Giraudi v. Electric Improv. Co. 107 Cal. 120, 28 L. R. A. 596, 40 Pac. 108; Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L. R. A. 637, 37 Atl. 730; Willey v. Boston Electric Light Co. 168 Mass. 40, 37 L. R. A. 723, 46 N. E. 395; Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733; Ahern v. Oregon Teleph. & Tel. Co. 24 Or. 276, 22 L. R. A. 635, 33 Pac. 403, 35 Pac. 549.

Persons possessing or using dangerous things or agencies are bound to exercise more than ordinary care in their control of them.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 217; City Electric Street R. Co. v. Conery, 61 Ark. 381, 31 L. R. A. 570, 33 S. W. 426; Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. 45 S. C. 146, 31 L. R. A. 577, 22 S. E. 767.

Bean, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff gave evidence tending to show when the wire which caused the injury to his son fell and the circumstances surrounding the accident, but gave no direct evidence of the specific acts of negligence charged in the complaint. The court, however, instructed the jury, among other things, that "in cases of this kind the law raises a presumption of negligence from the mere fact that the wire broke and the accident happened, because of the high degree of care which is required on the part of the person or corporation conducting such business, and for reasons which I need not discuss here. What I mean by that is that if any evidence had been brought here that this wire was broken, and through the breaking of the wire this boy had been injured, and then nothing further had been introduced in the case,—no further evidence,—and the case was left there, it would be your duty to find for the plaintiff, provided you found, also, that he was not guilty of negligence on his part. That is what is called a prima facie case. Now, this may be rebutted by evidence on the part of the defendant, notwithstanding this presumption. If the defendant comes in and satisfies you that it did use ordinary care in building and maintaining and repairing this line, and that the accident occurred without fault on its part, then it would be your duty to find on that point for the defendant." The giving of this instruction is assigned as error. The general rule of law is unquestioned that, excepting in cases where the defendant is an insurer, a party who charges another with negligence must prove it. But there are instances in which proof of an accident and the manner of its occurrence is sufficient to make a prima facie case, and to cast the burden on the defendant to show that it occurred without fault on his part. As a general rule, where the thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of events would not happen if he had used proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, that the accident arose from a want of care. Esberg Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L. R. A. 435, 55 Pac. 961. This doctrine is held applicable in actions for injuries received from contact with a live electric wire in a public street. Electricity is a dangerous element, and those who make merchandise of it are legally bound to exercise that degree of care that will render its use reasonably safe; and, as the wires which convey it cannot safely be permitted within reach of travelers, a presumption arises, when they are found out of their proper place, that those having them in charge have been negligent. The courts quite universally hold that proof that a live wire was down in a street and injury resulted therefrom is prima facie evidence of negligence. 2 Jaggard, Torts, 864; Joyce, Electric Law, § 606; Keasbey, Electric Wires, 2d ed. § 271; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State use of Nelson, 82 Md. 293, 31 L. R. A. 572, 33 Atl. 763; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 19 S. E. 344; Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566, 41 Pac. 499; Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L. R. A. 637, 37 Atl. 730; Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733.

The defendant contends, however, that as the complaint in hand avers that the wire which caused the injury was weak and defective, and insufficiently stretched and fastened, the plaintiff was obliged to point out by his testimony some defects in the particulars alleged. But we are unable to concur in this view. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, alluded to, is a mere rule of evidence. 2 Thomp. Neg. 1227 et seq. It proceeds on the theory, as the term implies, that the happening of an accident under certain circumstances is of itself prima facie evidence of negligence, and, when it is evidence of the particular negligence charged in the complaint, the plaintiff is entitled to invoke the rule. Thus, in Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Cooper, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L. R. A. 637, 37 Atl. 730, the negligence averred was the insufficient bonding or fastening of the rails of a street railway, and it was insisted that the plaintiffs were obliged to point out and establish some particular defect or insufficiency as alleged. The court held, however, that the escaping of electricity from the rails was presumptive proof of the negligence alleged, thus bringing the case within the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. In Snyder v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 43 W. Va. 661, 39 L. R. A. 499, 28 S. E. 733, the negligence charged was insufficient fastening, and, although the court held that no evidence of other acts of negligence was competent, it ruled that the mere fact that the wire fell created a prima facie presumption of negligence, sufficient to support the action unless rebutted by something appearing in the case. In Denver Consol. Electric Co. v. Simpson, 21 Colo. 371, 31 L. R. A. 566, 41 Pac. 499, the negligence charged was defendant's failure to properly construct its line and its omission to take the necessary precautions to prevent the wires from falling. It was held that the fact that the wire had become detached from its fastenings and hung down in a public alley, so as to endanger public travel, was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and an instruction to that effect was properly given. In the case at bar, it probably would have been sufficient, if the plaintiff had specified in the complaint generally the act or omission which he alleges to have been the proximate cause of the injury, and averred that it was negligently done or omitted. But, since the wire which caused the injury would not, presumably, have parted and fallen down, in the ordinary course of events, unless it was either defective or improperly stretched or fastened, it is reasonable to presume that its position in the street was owing to one or all of these causes. It must be assumed that a suitable wire, properly put up, would not be a menace to travelers on the highway; otherwise, the operation of a light plant by wires supported by poles in the streets of a city would be ipso facto a nuisance, and an unauthorized interference with the rights of the public. If, therefore, the wires break and fall down, that fact in itself affords reasonable evidence of negligence, either in the use of defective wires or in the manner of putting them up, and calls upon the defendant to show that it was without fault. It is, of course, true that in an action of this character the plaintiff cannot allege negligence in one particular, and upon the trial prove and recover upon another. Lieuallen v. Mosgrove, 33 Or. 282, 286, 54 Pac. 200, 664; Jones v. Portland, 35 Or. 512, 58 Pac. 657. But we do not understand that the instruction complained of conflicts with this rule. It was confined to the inference or presumption to be drawn from the breaking of the wire and the happening of the accident, the proof of which was prima facie evidence that the wire was either weak and defective or improperly put up. The instruction, therefore, did not advise the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover on a ground of negligence not charged. The cases already cited illustrate the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur where specific acts of negligence are charged in the complaint.

It is argued, however, that, if proof of the accident was sufficient under the pleadings to make out a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff, it was overcome by the testimony of the defendant. But the weight, value, and credibility of such testimony were for the jury, and the court could not properly have taken the case from them on the ground that the defendant had shown by its employees that the accident occurred without fault on its part. In a recent case in New York, where a trolley wire fell, injuring a traveler, it was held that the presumption of negligence on the part of the company, arising from the fall of the wire and the happening of the accident, was not overcome by the evidence of interested persons that the supports were the best obtainable, that the line was frequently inspected, and an automatic device called the "breaker system" was in use, which, if properly adjusted, would automatically cut off the current if the wire touched the ground; the credibility of the witnesses and the sufficiency of the device being questions for the jury. O'Flaherty v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 34 App. Div. 74, 54 N. Y. Supp. 96. In Uggla v. West End Street R. Co. 160 Mass. 351, 35 N. E. 1126, the plaintiff was struck by part of an iron ear used to clasp a trolley wire and keep it in place around the curve over the defendant's track. There was no evidence of the defendant's negligence, except that the iron ear broke with the strain and one part of it fell, striking the plaintiff on the head. The verdict in his favor, however, was sustained, notwithstanding the defendant had introduced evidence tending to show that the break was a clean one, bright in color and appearance; that the iron was sound all through, with no flaw or defect in it; that the whole apparatus was manufactured and put up by a manufacturer of the highest reputation; that the ear and guy constituted the best and strongest device known at the time for keeping trolley wires in place; that the defendant employed a competent corps of assistants, including foreman and superintendent, who inspected the whole line weekly, including the cars and every attachment; and that this particular part of the line had been inspected within a week prior to the accident.

It is next insisted that the court erred in instructing the jury that, "if the defendant had known of the breaking of the wire, it would have been its duty, under the high degree of care required of it under the circumstances, to have repaired it at the earliest possible moment, or at least as early as it could practically be done; but, if it did not know of the break,—and the evidence here, I believe, is undisputed that it did not,—the question for you to determine is whether, under the circumstances, it reasonably should have known, or should have provided means by which it would have known, of the breaking within that time, and within such a time that it could reasonably have repaired the break before this accident occurred. It is for you to determine whether or not it was guilty of a want of that high degree of care required of it in not providing means to find out whether this line had broken within this time. If you should find that the company was negligent in this respect, then it would be responsible for the negligence, although it might not have been guilty of negligence in any other respect." The specific objection to this instruction is that there are no allegations in the complaint charging the defendant with negligence in failing to adopt necessary or proper means to ascertain whether the wire was broken; but, on the contrary, it is argued, the complaint alleges that defendant did know of the break very soon after it occurred, and did not exercise due care and diligence in replacing and taking care of it. The language of the complaint is that defendant, its officers, agents, and employees, by proper diligence could have known, and did know, very soon after the wire was broken, and long before the injuries complained of, that it was broken and hanging over the street, etc., and carelessly failed and neglected to remove or repair it, or to give any warning of danger, and wrongfully and negligently permitted the broken wire to remain in such dangerous condition until after the accident. It is not clear whether the pleader intended to charge negligence in not ascertaining that the wire had broken, or negligence in not taking care of a broken wire; but the construction which seems to have been put upon the pleadings by the defendant in its answer, and by the court and parties throughout the trial, is that it charged negligence in not exercising reasonable care and diligence in ascertaining that the wire was broken, and we are of the opinion that the court did not err in submitting that phase of the question to the jury. Again, it is objected that this instruction assumes there was no evidence that the defendant had provided means, or used reasonable care and caution in providing means, for acquiring speedy information of a break in the wires. We do not consider this a reasonable interpretation of the language used by the court. It manifestly intended to, and did, submit to the jury, as a question of fact, whether the means which defendant had of ascertaining when a wire parted were such as proper care and diligence would require.

It is next asserted that the court erred in instructing the jury that "the defendant would not be liable for an act beyond its control and which could not reasonably be foreseen. It would not be liable for an accident caused by some unusual act of nature, or what is called an 'act of God,' if this could not have been reasonably foreseen and expected. As, for instance, suppose a stroke of lightning had occurred there, and broken one of these wires and thrown it down, and through that, and before the defendant had reasonable time in which to repair the break, the accident had occurred; that would have been something that could not reasonably have been foreseen, and for which the defendant could not be held liable. So, too, if this breaking, you should find, was caused by such an unusual storm, unprecedented storm, or any act of God that could not be expected, such unusual storm as could not reasonably have been foreseen, something that had not been known to happen before in that way, then the defendant could not be held liable. But an ordinary storm, such as we have every winter, or nearly every winter, and which on that account ought to be expected to occur in any winter, would not excuse the defendant; that is, the mere fact that the injury was occasioned by the storm. The breaking of the wire, however, might occur during the storm, or at any other time, and not be the fault of the defendant. I simply, in giving you that instruction, refer to the storm alone." It is argued that this instruction is erroneous because it tells the jury, in effect, that if a storm caused the wire to part, and it was such a storm as happens in this country every winter, or nearly every winter, it would not be a defense, although it may have been in fact an extraordinary or unusual storm. The rule is that if the poles and wires of an electric company are properly erected and maintained, and a storm of unusual and extraordinary severity, such as could not reasonably have been expected, causes a wire to fall, and it is not negligently permitted to remain an unreasonable time in such condition, the company will not be liable for an injury caused thereby; in other words, where the proximate cause of the injury is an external force, for which the company is not responsible, the question of liability will depend on whether the force was one that might reasonably have been anticipated. And this, it seems to us, is the rule laid down in the instruction complained of. It is true, certain statements made by the court in attempting to explain and elucidate the matter to the jury would, if taken from their context, seem to support the contention of counsel; but, when construed in its entirety, the instruction amounts to a statement that defendant would not be liable for the breaking of a wire caused by a storm of unusual and extraordinary severity, which could not reasonably have been anticipated, and this is the law upon the subject: Joyce, Electric Law, § 450; Keasbey, Electric Wires, 2d ed. § 236; Mitchell v. Charleston Light & P. Co. 45 S. C. 146, 31 L. R. A. 577, 22 S. E. 767.

After the case had been argued, counsel for the defendant requested the court to submit to the jury two special findings, the nature and character of which are not shown by the record. The request was denied, but during its consideration a colloquy between the court and counsel for the defendant ensued, a part of which is contained in the record, in the course of which the court stated, in effect, that the plaintiff's son was only required to exercise ordinary care, and was not obliged to keep his eyes on the full width of the street, and look at every point for an electric-light wire, but had a right to assume that the street was free from such an obstruction, and to have his head down while traveling therein, unless he had reason to believe the wire was there. It is urged that this was error, because it indicated the opinion of the court upon the defense of contributory negligence pleaded in the answer. The question of contributory negligence was, of course, for the jury, and it was submitted to them under proper instruction. The statements of the court in reference to the propriety of submitting the special findings, although made in the presence of the jury, were not intended for their guidance, or as an announcement of the rule of law by which the question of contributory negligence should be determined, but were the reasons given for the court's denial of counsel's request, and, in view of the subsequent instructions, did not, in our opinion, prejudice the defendant's case with the jury.

Objection is also made to the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by the defendant on the subject of contributory negligence; but that phase of the question was fully covered by the general charge, and there was no error in such refusal.

Having thus disposed of the questions presented on this appeal, and finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

NEWARK ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Thomas J. RUDDY.

(62 N. J. L. 505, 63 N. J. L. 357.)

*Proof that an electric-light wire, controlled by a private corporation, and

*Headnote by COLLINS, J.

NOTE.—As to presumption of negligence from injury caused by broken or fallen electric wire, see preceding case of Boyd v. Portland Electric Co. (Or.), and footnote thereto.

57 L. R. A.

normally suspended upon poles along a public street, was trailing broken on the sidewalk, affords a presumption of negligence in a suit against such corporation by a person injured through electric shock by contact with such wire. Res ipsa loquitur.

(June 19, 1899.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Essex County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the supreme court, which was delivered by COLLINS, J., and was as follows:

The plaintiff, a child of eight years, picked up from the sidewalk of a public street the end of a broken wire that trailed from one of the poles on which it should have hung suspended, and sustained severe injury through electric shock. The wire was an electric-light wire, under the control of the defendant. This writ of error removes a judgment, on verdict, in favor of the plaintiff in a suit brought to recover damages because of alleged negligence in the premises, of the defendant. No explanatory or exculpatory evidence was offered in defense.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error very properly limited his argument to the question of whether or not the facts proved warranted the submission of the case to the jury on the point of defendant's negligence. That question, now presented by exceptions to the refusal of the court to nonsuit the plaintiff or to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant, was, I think, correctly decided by the trial judge. The defendant was, by law, permitted to suspend along a public street a wire so charged with electricity as to be dangerous to the public if it should break and fall upon the street. This privilege entailed upon it a very high degree of care to maintain the wire intact. It was permissible to presume a lack of exercise of such care when the proof showed the wire broken and trailing on the sidewalk under conditions that rendered possible serious injury to persons lawfully there. Unexplained, the presence on the highway of the charged and broken wire, and the fact of injury received therefrom, justified an inference of negligence in the defendant, in whose control and management it was. Such an inference has been judicially permitted even when the wire that broke received the electricity from a wire on which it fell. Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 19 S. E. 344. It appeared, indeed, that the wire was covered with an insulating substance, of which but a small portion at the broken end was gone, and, if the plaintiff had not chanced to touch this small exposed portion of the wire, he would have received no shock. Still, as it is plainly possible that any break of such a wire may remove the insulation sufficiently to lead to such a result, the defendant, if chargeable at all, must accept that consequence. It happened that the plaintiff was able to produce no witness who had noticed that the wire was down except within five or ten minutes before the plaintiff took it up, and it was argued that so short a space of time forbade any presumption of negligence in not removing it. This argument is beside the point. The plaintiff was not bound to prove when the wire came down. Its presence at the time and place of injury sufficed. Had it appeared affirmatively that the wire had but just fallen, the presumption of negligence would have been simply narrowed to the breaking of the wire. Only in case it had appeared that the breaking was without negligence would the question of reasonably prompt removal have arisen.

We may assume that such a wire, of proper size and quality, skilfully set up and inspected with sufficient care and frequency, will not spontaneously break, and, on the other hand, that undue strain or improper use may weaken such a wire, and cause its fracture. There remains the possibility of disruption caused by the elements or outside interference. Here lay the stress of the defendant's argument. It was contended that the plaintiff was bound to eliminate every such cause by disproving its existence; but to this argument I cannot yield assent. It is impracticable to frame a rule of general application on a subject so concrete as that involved in a jury's right to say that a particular occurrence speaks in itself of negligence. It was well said by Mr. Justice Garrison in Bahr v. Lombard, 53 N. J. L. 233, 21 Atl. 190, and 23 Atl. 167, that "the quantum of proof which a plaintiff must give in order to draw from the defendant explanatory evidence must, with certain limits, be dependent upon the circumstances of each case." One text writer sentimentiously sums up the matter thus: "If the accident is connected with the defendant, the question whether the phrase, res ipsa loquitur, applies, or not, becomes a simple question of common sense." Smith, Neg. p. 248. The following statement is fairly satisfactory: "Where it is shown that the accident is such that its real cause may be the negligence of the defendant, and that, whether it is so or not, it is within the knowledge of the defendant, and not within the knowledge of the plaintiff in such cases the plaintiff may give the required evidence of negligence, without himself explaining the real cause of the accident, by proving the circumstances, and thus raising a presumption that, if the defendant does not choose to give the explanation, the real cause was negligence on the part of the defendant." Channell, B., in Bridges v. North London R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 377, 391. The weakness of this statement is inherent in all attempts to formulate the rule. The circumstances to be proved are, as they must be, left indefinite. A plaintiff must, of course, present all evidence reasonably within his power. The case of Bahr v. Lombard, 53 N. J. L. 233, 21 Atl. 190, 23 Atl. 167, is authority that, "when the plaintiff's case shows that he has not produced material evidence clearly within his reach, the mere proof by him of the occurrence of an accident by which he was injured does not raise a presumption of negligence which the defendant can be called upon to rebut." This is both reasonable and just; but to exact from a plaintiff such negative proof as will exclude all possible theories of accident consistent with defendant's care would be unreasonable, and would not accord with common sense.

In the brief of counsel, it is complained as follows: "No attempt was made to show that there had been no storm or other violence to account for the falling of the wire. From anything that appeared, a tree, a wall, a pole, a trolley wire, or some other object may have fallen upon it and broken it. The local circumstances were as much, at least, within the knowledge of the plaintiff as of the defendant. The accident happened at the door of the plaintiff, and he must have known and have been able to show whether or not there was any external cause for the breaking of the wire. He could at least have shown that it parted without any apparent reason other than its own weakness." This complaint assumes a duty in the plaintiff to prove what were not the circumstances of the case, instead of what they were, and puts on him a burden properly belonging to the defense. In Sheridan v. Foley, 58 N. J. L. 230, 33 Atl. 484, this court adjudged that a nonsuit was wrong, although the only proof for plaintiff was that a brick fell from among defendant's workmen—brick-layers, and hod-carriers—engaged in constructing a wall at a considerable height. By the argument now pressed upon us, the nonsuit should have been upheld, because the plaintiff failed to disprove a hurricane or seismic disturbance. In Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Bennett, 60 N. J. L. 219, 38 L. R. A. 637, 37 Atl. 730, the only proof of negligence was the fact that a horse was shocked by electricity when he stepped upon the track of defendant's electric street railway. The court of errors and appeals sustained the submission of the case to the jury. In an almost exactly similar case an appellate division of the New York supreme court reached like result. Clarke v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 9 App. Div. 51, 41 N. Y. Supp. 78. In that case, as here, the defendant argued that, to sustain an inference of negligence, all other hypotheses must be excluded by the plaintiff's proof. It was suggested that the defendant's road might have been in perfect order, and that the accident might have been occasioned by the carelessness of third persons engaged in stringing telegraph or telephone or electric-light wires. Bartlett, J., thus met the argument: "The rule is one which relates merely to negligence prima facie, and it is available without excluding all other possibilities. . . . The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur simply calls upon the defendant, after proof of the accident, to give such evidence as will exonerate him, if any there be, and relieves the plaintiff from the burden of proving the nonexistence of an adequate explanation or excuse."

In the case before us, how could the plaintiff have shown that the wire "parted without any apparent reason other than its own weakness?" He had no control over, or power or opportunity to examine and test it. Proof that the fracture must have come from external violence was peculiarly within the province of defendant. It could have proved when and how the wire was put up; to what usage it had been subjected; how often, how carefully, and how recently it had been inspected, and what its appearance after disruption indicated. In short, the defendant could have exonerated itself from the prima facie case made against it if exoneration had been possible. The plaintiff was not called on to conjecture and disprove possibilities of exoneration.

The judgment will be affirmed.

Mr. R. V. Lindabury, for plaintiff in error:

The mere presence, in a public street, of the broken end of an electric-light wire charged with a high current of electricity, nothing else appearing, does not speak the negligence of the company of whose plant it is a part.

Bahr v. Lombard, 53 N. J. L. 239, 21 Atl. 190, 23 Atl. 107; 1 Beven, Neg. p. 132; Czech v. General Steam Nav. Co. L. R. 3 C. P. 14; Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 587, 15 Am. Rep. 530; Oosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 122 N. Y. 129, 25 N. E. 259.

Plaintiff was not entitled, upon the mere proving of the accident, to call upon the defendant for an explanation, upon the ground that the defendant may have been negligent, and that whether it was so or not was exclusively within its own knowledge.

Mr. Samuel Kalisch, for defendant in error:

With the admitted fact that the plaintiff below was injured by a wire of the defendant company which it managed and controlled, and with the undisputed fact that the wire was lying on the sidewalk of a public street, in a broken condition, charged with electricity and dangerous to life and limb, a strong prima facie case of negligence and liability was established against the defendant company, which it was called upon to explain.

Bahr v. Lombard, 53 N. J. L. 237, 21 Atl. 190, 23 Atl. 107; Excelsior Electric Co. v. Sweet, 57 N. J. L. 228, 30 Atl. 553; Suburban Electric Co. v. Nugent, 58 N. J. L. 658, 32 L. R. A. 700, 34 Atl. 1069.

The leaving of an electric-light wire charged with electricity, by which the plaintiff below was injured, on a public sidewalk, which wire the defendant admitted was under its control and management, was wholly indefensible.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. State use of Nelson, 82 Md. 293, 31 L. R. A. 572, 33 Atl. 703; White v. Boston & A. R. Co. 144 Mass. 404, 11 N. E. 552; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. 114 N. C. 203, 26 L. R. A. 810, 19 S. E. 344; Carpus v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Q. B. 747; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 59; Volkmar v. Manhattan R. Co. 134 N. Y. 419, 31 N. E. 870; Clarke v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 9 App. Div. 51, 41 N. Y. Supp. 78.

Plaintiff made out a prima facie case against the defendant, and was entitled to a verdict unless the defendant succeeded in rebutting the prima facie case.

Per Curiam:

The judgment of the Supreme Court is unanimously affirmed, for the reasons given by that court.

Irving D. BELLES, Plff. in Err.,
v.

William H. KELLNER et al.

(.....N. J.....)

*From the fact that a quiet, gentle horse was left standing untied in the public street, free from the presence of anything which might frighten or disturb him; the driver being within from 5 to 8 feet of the wagon to which the horse was hitched; it appearing that the driver had been accustomed to use the horse in that way for many years without an accident,—no inference can arise that the act is negligent.

(Magie, Ch., and Hendrickson, Pitney, Adams, and Vroom, JJ., dissent.)

(March 4, 1902.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Essex County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel Kaliseh for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Sherrerd DePue and Richard W. Lindabury, for defendants in error:

No negligence on the part of the defendants was shown.

Hayman v. Hewitt, Peake, N. P. Cas. pt. 2, p. 170; Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608; Reed v. Southern Esp. Co. 95 Ga. 108, 22 S. E. 133; Griggs v. Fleckenstein, 14 Minn. 81, Gil. 62, 100 Am. Dec. 199; 1 Beven, Neg. p. 656.

The case is analogous to those in which damages are sought for injuries caused by the vicious act of a domestic animal, where scienter must be proved.

Coa v. Burbridge, 13 C. B. N. S. 430; Meaney v. Sampson, 20 N. J. L. J. 183.

Van Syckel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was tried in the Essex circuit court, where a judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The supreme court reversed that judgment, and the judgment of the supreme court is in this court for review.

The facts of the case are very concisely stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Fort in the supreme court, as follows: "This was an action for damages, tried at the Essex circuit, brought by the plaintiff to recover for an injury alleged to have been occasioned by a horse of the defendants left standing in the public streets of the city of Newark without being in charge of any person, and without being tied or otherwise secured. The plaintiff is a letter carrier, and was in the habit of passing upon his wheel three or four times daily the place where the accident happened. The defendants are retail merchants in the city of Newark, and their delivery wagons are accustomed to be backed to the curb line adjoining their property on Halsey street. The wagons are cut-under wagons, and the horses are turned so as to stand parallel with the sidewalk, and left untied while the wagons are being loaded. With these facts the plaintiff was perfectly familiar. It is claimed by the plaintiff that upon the day of his injury three of these delivery wagons were thus standing, with the horses hitched thereto, facing to the north, parallel with the east side of Halsey street. The plaintiff states that he was riding at a speed of about 6 miles an hour; that he had passed two of the wagons of the defendants, and was about to pass the third, when the horse attached to it, to quote his language, 'suddenly, without any warning at all, swerved around, knocking me on the right side, and lifted me from my wheel, and threw me so I landed on the asphalt pavement, on my left shoulder and head, with my heels in the air.'" The suit in the circuit court was brought to recover damages for this alleged injury.

It appeared by the evidence on the part of the defendants, which was uncontradicted, that the horse was quiet and gentle, and accustomed to being left untied while the driver was a short distance from him, engaged in his work; that the defendants had purchased this horse fourteen or fifteen years before, and had constantly used him in their business. During all that time it was the habit of the drivers not to tie or secure the horse in any way while leaving him to load the wagon or to deliver parcels, and during all that time he had never been known to run away, or to move from the place where he was left standing. The testimony on the part of the defendants also was that the driver of the horse was upon the sidewalk, about midway between the wagon and the elevator in defendant's store. That elevator was 10 or 15 feet from the wagon, and therefore the driver was distant from 5 to 7½ feet from the wagon. The place where the horse was standing was free from the presence of a locomotive or music passing at the time, or any unusual thing which could be supposed to frighten a gentle horse accustomed to be left in that condition in the street. All the horse did was to move around towards the center of the street, without moving the wagon from its position against the curbstone. To entitle the plaintiff to recover, he was required to show by a preponderance of evidence that the defendants were guilty of some negligent act which was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff. In reviewing this case upon the alleged error in the trial court, we must assume that the testimony on the part of the defense is true; and therefore the only question is whether the mere fact of leaving the horse untied, under the conditions stated, constituted actionable negligence.

*Headnote by VAN SYCKEL, J.

NOTE.—As to collision between bicycle and other vehicle in street, see also Peltier v. Bradley, D. & C. Co. (Conn.) 32 L. R. A. 651; Cook v. Fogarty (Iowa) 39 L. R. A. 488; Taylor v. Union Traction Co. (Pa.) 47 L. R. A. 289, and note; and Foote v. American Product Co. (Pa.) 49 L. R. A. 764.

57 L. R. A.

The defendants' counsel requested the court to charge: "It is not negligence for the driver of a quiet, gentle horse to leave him untied and otherwise unattended on the side of a public highway while the driver is upon the sidewalk, loading goods in the wagon." The trial court refused so to charge, and to such refusal exception was taken, and error is assigned thereon. In dealing with this request to charge, it was the duty of the trial court to consider and apply it, and to instruct the jury upon it as applicable to the facts and circumstances of the case before them; assuming that the horse was kind and gentle, accustomed to such use, as before stated, and that the driver was near him, upon the sidewalk, nothing of an unusual character being present to alarm a quiet, gentle horse. The question is whether, under these circumstances, there is anything from which an inference can be drawn that a man of ordinary prudence could have reasonably believed that injury might result from his act. With what additional care he might have been charged if the horse had been left near a steam railroad track, where locomotives were passing, or in a place where fire engines or bands of music were approaching, is not a question in this case. It has been frequently held that leaving a horse untied and unattended in the street (that is, with no one near enough to control him by voice or otherwise), or to leave him in that condition in proximity to a steam railroad, or where the horse is not gentle, are circumstances from which negligence may be inferred. Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 422; Rumsey v. Nelson, 58 Vt. 590, 3 Atl. 484; Drake v. Mount, 33 N. J. L. 442; Hoboken Land & Improvement Co. v. Lally, 48 N. J. L. 601, 7 Atl. 426. The facts regarded as controlling in those cases are absent in the case before us. Here, in my judgment, there was nothing to lead a reasonably prudent man to believe that any greater care was necessary. The fact that the horse was left so that he could move a short distance before the driver could stop him did not constitute negligence. It would be difficult to tie a horse so that he could have no freedom of movement whatever. As the court of appeals said in Wasmer v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608, there is no absolute rule of law that requires one who has a horse in a street to tie him or to hold him by the reins. It would doubtless be careless to leave a horse in a street, wholly unattended, without tying him to something; but it is common for persons doing business in streets with horses to leave them standing in their immediate presence, while they attend to business, and it is not unlawful for them to do so. In Hayman v. Hewitt, Peake, N. P. Cas. pt. 2, p. 170, Lord Kenyon said: "He was performing his duty while removing the goods into the house, and, if every person who suffered a cart to remain in the street while he took goods out of it was obliged to employ another to look after his horse, it would be impossible for the business of the metropolis to go on." A like view was taken in Griega v. Fleckenstein, 14 Minn. 81, Gil. 62, 100 Am. Dec. 199, where the court said: "The degree of care required of the plaintiff, or those in charge of his horse at the time of the injury, is that which would be exercised by a person of ordinary care and prudence under like circumstances. It cannot be said that the fact of leaving the horse unhitched is in itself negligence. Whether it is negligence to leave a horse unhitched must depend upon the disposition of the horse, whether he was under the observation and control of some person all the time, and many other circumstances, and is a question to be determined by the jury from the facts in each case." In the case under judgment there is nothing but the mere fact of leaving a gentle horse as he had been left for years under the observation and control of the driver. From that fact, under the conditions which must be conceded to exist in this case, no inference of negligence can arise. There are no circumstances to be submitted to a jury, under the situation to which the request to charge applies, from which a contrary inference can be drawn. The trial court should have charged: "It is not negligence for the driver of a quiet, gentle horse to leave him untied and otherwise unattended on the side of a public highway while the driver is upon the sidewalk, loading goods on the wagon." There was evidence which could have fully justified the jury in finding that the horse was quiet and gentle, and that the driver was upon the sidewalk, loading goods on the wagon, at the time of the alleged injury, and that the horse had been used for years in that way without an accident. The refusal of the trial court to charge as requested left the jury free to find a verdict against the defendants, although the jury was convinced that these facts were proven.

57 L. R. A.

The judgment of the Supreme Court, reversing the judgment of the Trial Court, should be affirmed.

Magie, Ch., and Hendrickson, Pitney, Adams, and Vroom, JJ., dissent.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

WORCESTER & SUBURBAN STREET RAILWAY COMPANY

v.

TRAVELERS' INSURANCE COMPANY.

(180 Mass. 263.)

A policy insuring a railroad company against loss from liability to persons who should accidentally "sustain personal injuries" on its road under circumstances which impose upon the insured a common-law or statutory liability for the injuries does not cover cases of instantaneous death without conscious suffering through injuries for which insured is responsible, where the statutes give a new right of action to the personal representatives in case of death, and not a right of action to deceased which survives.

(Morton and Barker, JJ., dissent.)

(January 3, 1902.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Worcester County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court after overruling a demurrer to the declaration in an action brought to recover from defendant under its insurance policy the amount which plaintiff had been compelled to pay for the negligent killing of a passenger on its cars. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. B. W. Potter and R. A. Stewart, for plaintiff:

The travelers mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration all died instantly and without conscious suffering, so it is clear that the railway company is not liable at common law for their deaths.

Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616; Moran v. Hollings, 125 Mass. 93; Barrett v. Dolan, 130 Mass. 366, 39 Am. Rep. 456.

It is equally clear that it is liable under the statutory provisions of Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212.

At the time the policies of insurance in question were executed and delivered the statutes creating liability in cases of instant death were in full force and effect.

The liability insured against in the policy in question is not only that which accrues to the party injured, but also that which accrues to his personal representative under the statute.

An action for conscious suffering is made to survive by statutory enactments, and likewise an action for instantaneous death is made to survive by statutory law; so that under the terms of this policy the defendant is as liable for instantaneous death as for conscious suffering.

M'Carthy v. Guild, 12 Met. 291; Brewer v. Crosby, 11 Gray, 29; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Met. 55; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Osgood v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 130 Mass. 492; Madden v. Springfield, 131 Mass. 441; Ricker v. American Loan & T. Co. 140 Mass. 349, 5 N. E. 284; Ames v. Union R. Co. 117 Mass. 541, 19 Am. Rep. 426; Binney v. Globe Nat. Bank, 150 Mass. 574, 6 L. R. A. 379, 23 N. E. 380; Billings v. State, 107 Ind. 54, 57 Am. Rep. 75, 6 N. E. 914.

If there be any doubt or ambiguity about any provision of this policy, then it should receive a liberal construction in favor of the insured.

Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378; Mandell v. Fidelity & C. Co. 170 Mass. 173, 49 N. E. 110.

Messrs. Herbert Parker and Charles C. Milton for defendant.

Lathrop, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By the terms of the policy the defendant insured the plaintiff "against loss from liability to every person, who may, during a period of twelve months" from a time named, "accidentally sustain bodily injuries while traveling on any railway of the insured, or while in the car or upon the railway bed or other property of the insured, under circumstances which shall impose upon the insured a common-law or statutory liability for such injuries." The question presented is whether the terms of the policy are broad enough to cover the case where a person who is a traveler on the plaintiff road dies instantly, and without conscious suffering, in consequence of an accident for which the plaintiff is responsible. The plaintiff contends that the terms are sufficiently broad. The defendant contends that the policy is satisfied by limiting the words used to cases of bodily injuries sustained, for which the plaintiff is liable, either at common law or by statute, to the person sustaining the injury, or to his executor or administrator, if the injured person survives the injury and subsequently dies. The diligence of counsel has furnished us with no case in which a policy in the terms of the one before us has been construed, and we are obliged to consider the case mainly upon general principles. It may be conceded that the policy is to receive a reasonable construction in view of the plaintiff's business (Mandell v. Fidelity & C. Co. 170 Mass. 173, 49 N. E. 110), but when we have said this we have not advanced very far, for it is obvious that the parties may not have intended that all the risks incurred by the plaintiff as a common carrier of passengers should be covered. Whatever was their actual intention, we are obliged to determine the intent from the natural meaning of the language used, viewed in the light of the attendant circumstances. It is plain that an accident insurance policy may insure a person against an injury caused by an accident, or against death resulting from an accident, or it may combine the two. All these forms are or have been in use. It cannot be said, therefore, that in the policy before us death is necessarily included. In this commonwealth there is no common-law liability for death. Carey v. Berkshire R. Co. 1 Cush. 475, 48 Am. Dec. 616; Moran v. Hollings, 125 Mass. 93. Nor is there any statute which gives a right of action for the death of a person to his executor or administrator as an asset of the estate. In all the statutes which have allowed an executor or administrator to bring an action on account of the killing of a person by the negligence of a corporation or its servants the action is for the benefit of the widow, children, or next of kin. Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212; Stat. 1886, chap. 140; Stat. 1887, chap. 270; Stat. 1898, chap. 565. An action for a personal injury which has accrued to a person in his lifetime survives since Stat. 1842, chap. 89; Pub. Stat. chap. 165, § 1. But there is nothing in the statutes above cited which recognizes any right of survivorship in case of death. The power to recover in such a case was first given by an indictment, and a fine was imposed for the benefit of the widow, etc., of the deceased. While an action of tort was afterwards allowed, the relief obtained was devoted to the same use, and not to the estate of the person killed. The difference between the right to recover for an injury and for a loss by death has been recognized in our decisions. Thus, under Stat. 1879, chap. 297, which gave, among other things, a right of action to a wife injured in her means of support by reason of the intoxication of her husband against a person causing the intoxication, it was held that no action lay for death caused by intoxication. Barrett v. Dolan, 130 Mass. 366, 39 Am. Rep. 456. Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 17, gives a right of action not exceeding $1,000 to the executor or administrator of a person killed by reason of a defect or want of repair in a highway, etc., for the use of the widow and children. Section 18 gives a right of action to a person who "receives or suffers bodily injury" under similar circumstances. These two actions are independent, and both may be maintained, if warranted by the evidence. Thus, in Boyes v. Boston, 155 Mass. 344, 349, 15 L. R. A. 365, 29 N. E. 633, it was said by Mr. Justice Knowlton: "The right to recover damages suffered in his lifetime by one who dies from an injury received on a highway survives to his administrator for the benefit of his estate, and the damages are estimated on the theory of making compensation. . . . The action by an administrator, under § 17, on account of his intestate's loss of life, is to recover a sum not exceeding $1,000 for the benefit of the widow and children or of the next of kin of the deceased, to be estimated according to the degree of culpability of the defendant. Both actions, under the statute, may proceed at the same time, on independent grounds, and for different purposes." We are not aware of any legislation in this commonwealth giving a right of recovery for personal injuries which has been construed to give a right of action for death. Nor are we aware of any legislation giving the right of recovery for death in which the fact of bodily injury to the deceased is made an element in the computation of damages. The statutes generally give damages for death between certain fixed limits, according to the degree of culpability of the defendant. They give a new right of action to the executor or administrator, and not a right of action to the deceased, which goes to the executor or administrator by survival only. Com. v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 134 Mass. 211, 213; Littlejohn v. Fitchburg R. Co. 148 Mass. 478, 483, 2 L. R. A. 502, 20 N. E. 103; Mulhall v. Fallon, 176 Mass. 266, 268, 54 L. R. A. 934, 57 N. E. 386. By the terms of the policy the plaintiff is insured against loss from liability to every person who may accidentally sustain bodily injuries under circumstances which impose upon the insured a common-law or statutory liability for such injuries. The liability is to a person who sustains bodily injuries, and such person must have a right of action therefor, either at common law or by statute. The policy cannot include the case of death, for which the person never had a right of action.

NOTE.—On the question of the distinction between causes of action for personal injuries and those for death resulting from such injuries, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McElwain (Ky.) 84 L. R. A. 788, on the question, How many distinct causes of action arise from 57 L. R. A.

injuries resulting in death. See also Hill v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 35 L. R. A. 196; Sweetland v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (Mich.) 43 L. R. A. 568; Brown v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 44 L. R. A. 579; and Re Mayo (S. C.) 54 L. R. A. 660.

57 L. R. A.

According to the terms of the report, the order must be, in the opinion of a majority of the court:

Judgment for the defendant.

Morton, J., dissenting:

I regret that I am unable to agree with the majority of the court. The question is one of construction, and is whether, in the language of Lord Cairns in Sackville-West v. Holmesdale, L. R. 4 H. L. 543, 574, we shall servilely follow the literal sense of the words used, which I agree can be done, or whether we shall construe them liberally, and in a manner more in accord with the nature of the contract and the situation of the parties. It seems to me that the latter course should be followed. The contract is one of indemnity against loss from liability for personal injuries caused by accidents for which the plaintiff was responsible, and the precise question is whether the liability of the plaintiff, which is a street railway company, for damages for death caused by its negligence, comes fairly within the terms of the policy. At common law damages for death caused by the negligence of another person were not recoverable. But such damages are now recoverable by statute in this state and in other states in many cases, and in England generally; and it seems to me that that fact should be borne in mind in construing the policy before us. Pub. Stat. chap. 52, § 17; Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 212; Stat. 1866, chap. 140; Stat. 1887, chap. 270, § 2; Stat. 1898, chap. 565: § 9 & 10 Vict. chap. 93; 2 Sedgw. Damages, § 571. It is undoubtedly true that such damages do not constitute, generally speaking, assets of the estate of the deceased, and that the right of action is a new one. But it does not follow that the liability to loss on account of personal injuries which is insured against may not be fairly construed to include such damages. Parties well may be supposed to contract with reference to new conditions, though they use the old terms; and the old terms will be given a new content if they fairly admit of such a construction and such appears to have been the intention of the parties. The ground on which damages for death are allowed is that a person causing the death of another by his negligence should not be suffered to escape liability therefor. And whether the damages assessed are awarded according to the culpability of the defendant (as in the employer's liability act in this state), or according to the pecuniary loss sustained by the family of the deceased (as in the English act), they go in fact, though not in terms, to those to whom the estate of the deceased passes at his death. The fact, therefore, that such damages do not, strictly speaking, constitute assets of the estate of the deceased person, would not seem to be of vital consequence, if we look at substance, rather than form. There can be no doubt that it is and was well understood by street railway companies and by liability insurance companies that damages for death caused by the negligence of the railway companies are recoverable in actions against them therefor. It is obvious that there can be no good reason why a railway company should wish to protect itself against liability for damages when the injury did not result in death, and not against liability for damages for death. Of course, a contract is not to be construed according to the understanding of one party to it. But it is equally obvious, I think, that the matter would present itself in the same light to an insurance company. It seems to me, therefore, that the words in the policy, "against loss from liability to every person who may," etc., should be construed as meaning "liability in respect to every person who may," etc., and as having regard, not to the extent of recovery, or the nature of the remedy, but to the subject of the injury. The application, which is made a part of the policy, begins by saying that the railway company applies for a railway policy. The policy that was issued is entitled "Street Railway Liability Policy." Evidently a railway liability policy was and is a well-known form of insurance. Assuming, as we are bound to do, good faith on the part of the insurer and insured, it is difficult, it seems to me, to believe that, as business men, those in charge of railway and insurance companies could have intended or understood the insurance to have the partial character given to it by the majority of the court. The application goes on to provide that, "if the applicant shall fail to comply with the requirements of any law, by-law, or ordinance respecting the safety of persons, the policy shall not cover injuries resulting from such failure." There is nothing here to show that death resulting from the failure spoken of was not one of the injuries contemplated. It would be an extraordinary construction to say that the safeguards provided for related to lesser injuries, but not to death. In the statements contained later in the application in regard to persons injured and suits against the road for damages, and apparently required of the plaintiff by the defendant, there is nothing which tends in the least to show that cases of death were in fact excluded or were intended to be excluded in considering the nature of the risk or the liability insured against. The application contains nothing, I think, which, fairly construed, excludes from or does not include in the insurance applied for the liability for damages for death. Neither is there anything in the policy, it seems to me, which requires a construction of the words describing the risk that will exclude liability for damages for death. Such a liability, as already observed, is a statutory one. But the policy expressly provides that the liability insured against shall include statutory as well as common-law liabilities. Amongst the conditions contained in the policy, and to which the insurance was subject, were the following: That the defendant's liability shall not exceed $20,000 "for all injuries . . . consequent upon any one accident;" that "this policy shall not take effect unless the premium is paid previous to any accident under which claim is made;" that "this insurance does not cover claims upon which suit shall be commenced after six years from the date of the accident;" that in case of loss covered by other like insurance the company shall be liable only for its pro rata share, and shall be subrogated to the plaintiff's rights against any third person; and that immediate written notice shall be given of any accident, and of all claims made by injured persons, with all the information in plaintiff's possession relating to the accident, or any claim made on account thereof. These provisions, which contain the more important conditions, are, to say the least, as consistent with the view that damages for death are included in the risk as with the view that they are not. "Accidents," "injuries," "claims," and "losses" are spoken of without distinguishing between cases in which the accident or injury resulted in death and cases where it did not, or between claims which included damages for death and those which did not. Of course, it may be said that when the risk has once been defined all other provisions in the policy are to be construed as relating to the risk so defined. But the question in this case is, What was the risk that was insured against? and in answering that question the nature of the contract, the provisions contained in the application and policy, and the effect of the construction contended for on the one side and the other, are all, I think, to be taken into account.

The effect of the construction adopted by the majority of the court will be to limit the plaintiff's right of recovery in respect to statutory liabilities to cases where a right of action has been given by statute to persons injured, and passes by statute on their death to their executors or administrators. It will exclude a class of cases, equally important, to say the least, in which a right of action has been given to the executor or administrator or to the widow or next of kin to recover damages for the death of a person injured by the negligence of a railway company. Such a construction does not seem to me to be a reasonable one. It is said that bodily injuries do not include death. But, as already observed, the matter is one of construction. There is nothing in the words themselves to prevent them from being so construed, & it is apparent that the parties so used them. Moreover, it is provided by the employer's liability act that, if the death is preceded by conscious suffering, or is not instantaneous, damages for the death may be recovered by the executor or administrator in the action for personal injuries. Stat. 1892, chap. 260, § 1. The use and construction of the words in the policy as including death, and the liability to loss for damages for death, is therefore warranted by the statute.

For these reasons it seems to me that the ruling was right, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Mr. Justice Barker concurs in this opinion.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Plum B. SCHELLENBERG, Appt.,

v.

DETROIT HEATING & LIGHTING COMPANY.

(.....Mich.....)

Heating apparatus bought by a man under contract reserving title in the seller, and permanently placed in a building owned by himself and his wife by entirety, does not become a fixture so as to prevent its removal for nonpayment of the purchase money, if removal will not materially injure it or the building, since there is no unity of title in it and the real estate.

(April 25, 1902.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in favor of defendant in a suit to enjoin the execution of a writ of replevin. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Franklin L. Lord, for appellant:

A wife is not entitled to the possession of property held by entireties with her husband.

Grosser v. Rochester, 60 Hun. 379, 15 N. Y. Supp. 62; Hiles v. Fisher, 30 L. R. A. 310, note, 144 N. Y. 306, 37 N. E. 337.

This is not a suit to settle the title to property. All the complainant asks is to be protected in the enjoyment of property, about the title to which there is no dispute.

The court will not, in cases of this kind, be governed by dollars and cents alone.

White v. Forbes, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 112; Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 Mich. 395; Backus v. Jeffrey, 47 Mich. 127, 10 N. W. 138; Huyck v. Bailey, 100 Mich. 223, 58 N. W. 1002; Mastenbrook v. Alger, 110 Mich. 414, 68 N. W. 213.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to effect of agreement between vendor and vendee or chattels attached to building to prevent them from becoming fixtures, see McFadden v. Allen (N. Y.) 19 L. R. A. 446; German Sav. & L. 57 L. R. A.

Allegation of a unity of title in the freehold and in the things attached, at the time of their attachment, is not necessary.

Mr. George W. Bates, for appellee:

The heaters were purchased on a title contract by the complainant's husband and placed on property owned by the husband and wife as tenants by the entirety. Neither has an absolute inheritable interest, nor such a separate interest that he or she can sell, encumber, or devise, or which her heir could inherit. Both must concur, as implied in the legal condition of the unity of person upon which it rests.

Fisher v. Provin, 25 Mich. 347; Manwaring v. Powell, 40 Mich. 371; Vinton v. Beamer, 55 Mich. 559, 22 N. W. 40; Speier v. Opfer, 73 Mich. 35, 2 L. R. A. 345, 40 N. W. 909; Re Lewis, 85 Mich. 340, 48 N. W. 580; Naylor v. Minock, 96 Mich. 182, 55 N. W. 604; Dickey v. Converse, 117 Mich. 449, 76 N. W. 80; Doane v. Feather, 119 Mich. 691, 78 N. W. 884.

There was no unity of title in this property and the real estate, which must exist to make a chattel a fixture.

Adams v. Lee, 31 Mich. 440; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777; Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122, 19 N. W. 775; Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150, 33 Am. Rep. 362; Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Walker, 91 Mich. 409, 51 N. W. 1061; Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Wilbur, 111 Mich. 413, 69 N. W. 667.

The existence of the title contract negatives any intention to annex these boilers, and shows that it was expressly understood that they should remain personalty.

Crippen v. Morrison, 13 Mich. 23; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777.

No presumption would arise from the annexation, and the chattel must be assumed to be personality unless made realty by other circumstances.

Soc. v. Weber (Wash.) 38 L. R. A. 267; Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter (Wis.) 53 L. R. A. 603; Anderson v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. (Idaho) 56 L. R. A. 554; and cases in note to Muir v. Jones (Or.) 19 L. R. A. 441.

Wheeler v. Bedell, 40 Mich. 693; Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 117, 27 N. W. 899; Gill v. DeArmant, 90 Mich. 425, 51 N. W. 527; Harris v. Hackley, 127 Mich. 46, 86 N. W. 389.

Complainant cannot maintain this bill, for she has a full, complete, and adequate remedy at law for any injury which may be done to this property.

Barrows v. Doty, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 1; Bennett v. Nichols, 12 Mich. 22; Torrent v. Muskegon Boom. Co. 22 Mich. 354; Hagenbuch v. Howard, 34 Mich. 1; Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456, 22 N. W. 267, 24 N. W. 830, 26 N. W. 783.

There are some things which the court will take judicial notice of, and determine for itself as to whether such things can be fixtures under any circumstances.

Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122, 19 N. W. 775.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed to enjoin the execution of a writ of replevin by which it was sought by the defendant to take and remove two steam boilers sold to Harry L. Schellenberg, the husband of complainant, on a title contract, and placed in the basements of two dwelling houses. These dwelling houses are owned by Harry L. Schellenberg and his wife as by an estate in entirety as husband and wife. It appears that the husband bought these boilers to put in the buildings for heating purposes, the defendant reserving the title to itself by the contract until the boilers were paid for. Payment being refused, replevin suit was brought for the two boilers against Schellenberg and his wife and the tenants in the buildings. On the trial of the replevin suits, the defendant in the present case had judgment against Schellenberg for the return of the property, the judgment not passing against the wife or the tenants. It is stated in the present bill that when these boilers were sold to Harry L. Schellenberg the defendant knew they were to be attached to the dwellings in a permanent way, and saw the plan of the construction of said buildings and of the heating apparatus to be placed therein; that the complainant believes the defendant will attempt to remove the boilers, and asks that it be enjoined from removing or attempting to remove the same. The defendant demurred to the bill on the grounds: (1) That it does not show jurisdiction in a court of chancery; (2) that complainant has not by said bill stated a case which entitles her to the relief prayed; (3) that the bill does not show on its face that the complainant has any such interest in the subject-matter of the suit as entitles her to file it; (4) that the question as to whether the boilers can be treated as fixtures is a matter not within the jurisdiction of a court of chancery, and whether they can be taken on execution in 57 L. R. A.

replevin is a matter which can only be determined in a court at law; (5) that it appears by the bill that the constable is a necessary party, as it appears he was proceeding to take the boilers under process in his hands and remove them from the buildings; (6) that it does not appear by the bill that the amount in controversy exceeds $100. This demurrer was sustained in the court below, and the bill dismissed. Complainant appeals.

We think the court was not in error in sustaining this demurrer. The title of the real estate is in the husband and wife jointly, who hold it by the entirety. The boilers were purchased by the husband and placed in the buildings under contract, reserving title to the defendant company. The wife was not a party to this contract, and the boilers never became fixtures in the buildings. There was no unity of title in this property and the real estate. It does not matter that the bill alleges that the boilers became attached and became a part of the real estate. The statements in the bill are sufficient to show that they never attached to the real estate, and never became fixtures. In Adams v. Lee, 31 Mich. 440, the title to the real estate was in one Kaufman. Machinery was put into the building on the real estate. There was no unity of title and ownership of the land and the machinery. Referring to the want of unity of title as affecting the question of fixtures, it was said: "To constitute a fixture, there must not only be physical annexation in some form to the realty, but there must be unity of title, so that a conveyance of the realty would, of necessity, convey the fixture also. When the ownership of the land is in one person and of the thing affixed to it is in another, and in its nature is capable of severance without injury to the former, the latter cannot, in contemplation of law; become a part of the former, but must necessarily remain distinct property, to be used and dealt with as personal estate only. And the fact that the owner of the thing affixed to the freehold has also an undivided estate in the latter cannot render the former a fixture when the interests are different in extent. A thing cannot, as to an undivided interest therein, be real estate, and, as to another undivided interest, be personality. It must be the one thing or the other." See also, upon this question: Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777; Scudder v. Anderson, 54 Mich. 122, 19 N. W. 775; Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 Mich. 150, 33 Am. Rep. 362; Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Walker, 91 Mich. 409, 51 N. W. 1061; Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Wilbur, 111 Mich. 413, 69 N. W. 667.

It is also quite apparent by the statement in the bill that these boilers put in the basements for heating purposes could be detached from the buildings without material injury to the boilers or the buildings; but, in addition to this, they were sold to the husband, the defendant reserving title to itself. These circumstances show that it was the intention of the parties that the boilers were to remain personalty, and not to become, by annexation, a part of the realty. Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777. It was said in Manwaring v. Jenison, 61 Mich. 119, 27 N. W. 903: "The permanency of the attachment, and its character in law, do not depend so much upon the degree of physical force with which the thing is attached, or the manner and means of its attachment, as upon the motives and intention of the party in attaching it. If the intention is that the articles attached shall not by annexation become a part of the freehold, as a general rule they will not. The exception is where the subject or mode of annexation is such as that the attributes of personal property cannot be predicated of the thing in controversy; . . . as when the property cannot be removed without practically destroying it, or when it or a part of it is essential to the support of that to which it is attached." The bill does not exhibit such a state of affairs.

We think no other question in this case need be discussed. A judgment for the return of the property has been awarded to the defendant. Simply because the complainant is an owner by the entirety of the real estate would give her no interest in the retention of the property placed thereon which would entitle her to defeat the defendant's possession.

The order sustaining the demurrer must be affirmed, with costs.

The other Justices concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

John OWENS et al., Respts.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. Where a statute, either in direct terms or from its general tenor, imposes the duty upon a public officer to pay over moneys received and held by him in his official capacity, the obligation thus imposed is an absolute one; unless it is limited by the statute imposing the duty, or by the conditions of his official bond. In respect to such liability there is no distinction between public and private funds.
2. The defendant herein received in his official capacity, as clerk of the district court, money paid into court in condemnation proceedings, which he deposited, in his name as clerk, in a solvent bank which afterwards failed, whereby the money was lost without his fault. Held, that he and the sureties on his official bond are liable for such loss.

(Lewis, J., dissents.)

(May 9, 1902.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County denying a new trial after verdict in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover money deposited with defendant Owens as clerk of court. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. L. Washburn and W. D. Bailey, for appellant:

The clerk's bond was given for the pur-

*Headnotes by START, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to liability on official bond for loss by theft or bank failure, see also, in this series, Wilson v. People use of Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. (Colo.) 22 L. R. A. 449, and note; State use of Overton County v. Copeland (Tenn.) 21 L. R. A. 844; Fairchild v. Hedges (Wash.) 57 L. R. A.

pose of securing such deposits as are made in condemnation proceedings.

It was the duty of the clerk by statute to "receive and pay," and it was therefore a breach of his bond if he failed to pay, since payment was one of his official duties to secure the performance of which the bond was given.

Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, 46 N. W. 914.

In every instance this court has held to the absolute liability rule, and the reasons upon which the decisions rest are applicable with full force to the present case.

Hennepin County v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199, Gil. 182; McLeod County v. Gilbert, 19 Minn. 214, Gil. 176; Redwood County v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45, 8 N. W. 907; State v. Bobleter, 83 Minn. 479, 86 N. W. 461.

In Morgan v. Long, 29 Iowa, 434, the court makes no distinction between public and private funds.

Wright v. Harris, 31 Iowa, 272; Walters-Cates v. Wilkinson, 92 Iowa, 129, 60 N. W. 514; State use of Judge v. Gatzweiler, 49 Mo. 17, 8 Am. Rep. 119; State ex rel. The Township v. Powell, 67 Mo. 395, 29 Am. Rep. 512; Haven's v. Lathene, 75 N. C. 505; State ex rel. Cox v. Blair, 76 N. C. 78; Wilmington v. Nutt, 78 N. C. 179; Rountree v. Barnett, 69 N. C. 76.

Mr. L. C. Harris, for respondent John Owens:

At common law, public officers were not insurers of the funds coming into their hands, but were only liable for the loss of such funds caused by their dishonesty or negligence.

York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 675; Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89.

31 L. R. A. 851; Bush v. Johnson County (Neb.) 32 L. R. A. 223; Healdsburg v. Mulligan (Cal.) 33 L. R. A. 461; State v. Gramm (Wyo.) 40 L. R. A. 690; and Thomssen v. Hall County (Neb.) ante, 303.

If our statutes impose no greater liability upon clerks of the district court than was imposed by the common law, then it cannot be held that the defendant in this case is liable to the plaintiff.

The courts are practically unanimous in holding that public officers are not liable for more than ordinary care, unless there is some language in the statute and the bond.

York County v. Watson, 15 S. C. 9, 40 Am. Rep. 675; People ex rel. Nash v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477, 14 N. E. 415; Wilson v. People use of Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449, 34 Pac. 944.

Messrs. Davis, Hollister, & Hicks, for respondent Robert Owens:

United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734, has been overruled, and the doctrine therein announced, so far as it could have any possible application to the case at bar, overruled, by United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, 21 L. ed. 89.

State v. Gramm, 7 Wyo. 329, 40 L. R. A. 690, 52 Pac. 533; Cumberland County v. Pennell, 69 Me. 357, 31 Am. Rep. 284; State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 576, 56 Am. Rep. 59; Peck v. James, 3 Head, 75; State use of Overton County v. Copeland, 96 Tenn. 296, 31 L. R. A. 844, 34 S. W. 427; Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 113 Cal. 205, 33 L. R. A. 461, 45 Pac. 337; Livingston v. Woods, 20 Mont. 91, 49 Pac. 437.

An officer is not an insurer, but he may make himself so when he enters into a solemn obligation by contract.

Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527.

The responsibility of absolute safe keeping, free from loss, is never applied or enforced, except when found to be specifically contracted for.

State use of Overton County v. Copeland, 96 Tenn. 296, 31 L. R. A. 844, 34 S. W. 427; State v. Gramm, 7 Wyo. 329, 40 L. R. A. 690, 52 Pac. 533; Van Trees v. Territory, 7 Okla. 353, 54 Pac. 495.

An officer is not liable for private funds lost without his fault.

People ex rel. Nash v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477, 14 N. E. 415; Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851, 44 Pac. 125; Wilson v. People use of Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449, 34 Pac. 944; Dirks v. Juel, 59 Neb. 353, 80 N. W. 1045.

Mr. John G. Williams for respondent Adams.

Start, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts of this case necessary to be here stated are these: John Owens, hereafter designated as the "defendant," was clerk of the district court of the county of St. Louis for four years; his term ending January 2, 1899. Upon assuming the duties of the office, he gave a bond as principal, with his codefendants as sureties, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his official duties. There was paid to him by his predecessor $2,789.75, which had been paid to the 57 L. R. A.

clerk of the court in certain pending condemnation proceedings, pursuant to the provisions of Gen. Stat. 1894, § 2649. He accepted the money in his official capacity, and deposited it in the Marine National Bank of Duluth, in his name as clerk of such court. He never obtained any order of the court designating the bank as a depository of such money, nor was any such order ever made. Subsequent to the making of this deposit, and before the court ordered its payment to the party entitled to it, the bank became insolvent, and went into the hands of a receiver in November, 1896. The receiver paid to the defendant 65½ per cent of the sum so deposited. The amount so paid he turned over to his successor in office, and no more. Such proceedings were thereafter had in the condemnation proceedings that on February 27, 1900, the court ordered $2,000 of the sum originally paid to the defendant to be paid to the plaintiff; but the then clerk, having received only $1,310 from the defendant, paid over only that amount, leaving $690 unpaid. This balance the plaintiff duly demanded of the defendant, who refused to pay it. Thereupon this action, by leave of the court, was brought upon the defendant's official bond, to recover the balance of the fund which was lost by the failure of the bank. At the time the deposit was made the bank was solvent, and in making it, and permitting it to remain therein, the defendant acted in good faith, and with reasonable care and diligence. The trial court, as a conclusion of law from these facts, directed judgment for the defendants upon the merits. The plaintiff appealed from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The sole question presented by the record for our decision is whether a clerk of the district court of this state, and the sureties upon his official bond, are liable for money, whether belonging to the public or to individuals, deposited with him in his official capacity, when it is lost without fault or negligence on his part. Or, in other words, is a clerk of the court absolutely liable for funds deposited with him in his official capacity? The liability of public officers at common law for funds deposited with them was substantially that of a bailee for hire, and they were not liable for the loss of such funds if it occurred without their fault. This, however, is not the measure of the liability of such officers and the sureties on their official bonds in this state. The question of the liability of public officers for funds deposited with them in their official capacity is one of first importance. The decisions of the courts of the country are not uniform upon the question. A majority of the courts which have passed upon the question hold, upon grounds of public policy, and upon a consideration of the provisions of the statute and the conditions of the official bond in each particular case, to the doctrine of the absolute liability of such officers for the loss of public money received by them in their official capacity. Other able courts, however, have followed the common-law rule. We find it unnecessary to enter upon any general discussion of the question, for this court thirty years ago adopted the rule of absolute liability, and has ever since enforced it. The only doubtful questions in this case are whether, in view of the provisions of the statutes relating to the duties of the clerk of the district court, the rule applies to such officer, and, further, if so, whether it extends to private funds deposited with him in legal proceedings.

1. The first question is to be answered by a review of the decisions of this court upon the subject and the reasons therefor. The first case on this subject was Hennepin County v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199, Gil. 182. It was an action upon a county treasurer's official bond, conditioned that "he shall . . . safely keep and faithfully pay over according to law all moneys which come into his hands," which were the conditions provided for by statute. The defense was that the funds which the treasurer failed to pay over were stolen from the county safe without any fault on his part; but the court held this to be no defense, for the reason that the treasurer, by reason of the conditions of his bond and the provisions of the statute, was absolutely liable for all public money deposited with him. The court, however, discussed generally the question of the liability of public officers for money deposited with them in their official capacity, as affected by considerations of public policy, and by implication, at least, approved the doctrine of the absolute liability of public officers for public funds, based upon considerations of public policy, as laid down in the case of United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734. The next case was McLeod County v. Gilbert, 19 Minn. 214, Gil. 176, which was an action, not upon an official bond, but one to recover from the county treasurer certain taxes which he had collected, and failed to pay over or to account for. The defendant admitted the receipt of the money, and alleged as a defense that it was stolen from the county safe without any neglect or fault on his part. This plea the court, following the Jones Case, held to be no defense, for the reason that the same degree of responsibility enforced in that case rested upon a county treasurer, independent and outside of his liability upon his official bond. The statute then in force was to the effect that the treasurer shall pay over all moneys received by him, and account therefor according to law. The court stated that it had not referred to considerations of public policy, as affecting the responsibility which should be exacted from public officers for money held by them as such, for the reason that it was unnecessary to add anything to what was said on the point in the first case. The third case was Redwood County v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45, 8 N. W. 907, which was an action upon the defendant's official bond as county treasurer, conditioned, as provided by the statutes for the faithful execution of the duties of his office, and the safe-keeping and paying over according to law of all moneys which come into his hands. The alleged breach was that the defendant had failed to pay over certain money belonging to the county. The answer alleged that the money was received on a day named too late to be deposited in the county depository, and was placed in the county safe, from which it was stolen without any fault of the defendant. The court held that the alleged facts had no tendency to relieve the treasurer from liability; citing the Jones and Gilbert cases, without comment. Next in order was Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, 46 N. W. 914, which was an action upon the official bond of the defendant, as treasurer of an independent school district, for money received by him, but never paid out by him, nor delivered to his successor in office. The defense was that the money was locked in an iron safe in his place of business, from which it was stolen by burglars without his fault. The statute then in force (Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 36, § 107) relating to the bond and duties of such treasurer required him to execute a bond "conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties as treasurer." It also declared that the treasurer should receive and pay out upon the order of the board all moneys belonging to the district, and pay to his successor in office, upon demand, all money in his hands belonging to the district. His bond, in addition to the condition required by the statute, also provided that he "shall, at the expiration of his term of office, pay over to his successor in office all moneys remaining in his hands as treasurer." The court held that the fact that the money was stolen from the defendant without his fault was not a defense to the action. The opinion, by Mr. Justice Dickinson, is an able one, and fully discusses the question upon principle and authority, and cites, not only the decisions of this court, but the leading cases in other jurisdictions. The conclusion reached was that "where the statute in direct terms, or from its general tenor, imposes the duty to pay over public moneys received and held as such, and no condition limiting that obligation is discoverable in the statute, the obligation thus imposed upon and assumed by the officer will be deemed to be absolute, and the plea that the money has been stolen or lost without his fault does not constitute a defense to an action for its recovery." This conclusion was rested, not only upon the terms of the statute and the conditions of the bond, but upon familiar considerations of public policy. The last case was State v. Bobleter, 83 Minn. 479, 86 N. W. 461, which was an action on the defendant's bond as state treasurer for money received in his official capacity, and not paid to his successor, because it had been lost by the failure of certain state depositories in which it was deposited. His bond was conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, and the statute imposed upon him the duty of safely keeping the public money, and paying it out as directed by law. This court, approving United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578, 11 L. ed. 734, expressly recognized and enforced the rule of the absolute liability of public officers for money in their hands as such, for the reason that the statute (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 344, subd. 2) providing for state depositaries expressed the purpose not to impair such liability. The conclusion which we draw from this review of our own decisions is this: It is the settled law of this state that, where a statute, either in direct terms, or from its general tenor, imposes the duty upon a public officer to pay over moneys received and held by him in his official capacity, the obligation thus imposed is an absolute one, unless it is limited by the statute imposing the duty, or the conditions of his official bond.

This brings us to the question whether the rule applies to a clerk of the district court. Counsel for the defendant concedes that it was his official duty as clerk to receive the money in question, and turn it over to his successor, if it had not been lost without his fault. But it is insisted that, to make him an insurer of the fund, he must have contracted to be one, in effect, in his bond, or the statute under which the bond was given must have so provided, and that neither his bond nor the statute imposes upon him the liability of an insurer of the fund. The statutory condition of the bond of a clerk of the district court is precisely the same as in the bond of the state treasurer and that of the treasurer of an independent school district. The statutory condition in each case is that the officer "shall faithfully discharge his official duties." This does not imply any limitation of the liability imposed by law upon such treasurer or clerk for a failure to discharge any of his official duties. The question, then, is narrowed to the inquiry whether the statute relating to the duties of clerks of the district court, either in direct terms or from its general tenor, imposes upon them the duty to pay over money received by them in their official capacity. The statutory provisions as to the duties of such clerks touching the care and payment of money deposited with them are meager. We have no statute which specifically requires him to pay over such money on the order of the court, or, if no such order is made during his term, then to his successor in office. The clerk of the district court, however, unless a court depositary has been appointed, is, by the settled practice of the court, recognized by the statute as the official custodian of all moneys, whether public or private, paid into court, and bound to safely keep them, and pay them out on the order of the court, or deliver them to his successor. It is provided by Gen. Stat. 1894, § 856, that "every clerk of the district court, before entering on the duties of his office, shall execute a bond to the board of county commissioners, with two or more sureties, approved by said board, in the penal sum of $1,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his official duties, and take and subscribe the oath required by law; which oath and bond shall be filed and recorded in the office of the register of deeds: provided, that the judge of the district court in any county may order all moneys, paid into court to abide the result of any legal proceedings, to be deposited, until the further order of said court, in some duly incorporated bank or banks, to be designated by the court as such depositary; or said judge, on application of any person or corporation paying such money into court, may require said clerk to give an additional bond, with like effect as the bond provided for in this section, in such amount as said judge shall deem sufficient. That the clerk of said district court shall be entitled to receive a commission of 1 per cent on every dollar for receiving and paying over money which may be deposited with him, to wit: one half of such commission for receiving, and the other half for paying, the same. Said per cent to be paid by the party depositing the money." Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 2649, 2650, provide that in condemnation proceedings the railroad company, if in doubt as to the party entitled to the damages, or any portion thereof, awarded for land taken for its railway, may, upon filing an affidavit to that effect with the clerk of the court in which the proceedings are pending, pay the amount thereof into court, and be released from further liability in the premises. And when the court finally determines to whom the fund belongs, it must be paid upon its order to them. Again, in actions for partition of real estate, if a sale is ordered of the premises, and there is any question as to whom any portion of the proceeds thereof belongs, the clerk of the court must receive, hold, and invest, subject to the order of the court, such portion for the use and benefit of the parties entitled thereto. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 5809. So, also, in an action where there are adverse claimants to money which the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant, he may pay the amount thereof to the clerk of the court. Laws 1895, chap. 329. A surety on a forfeited recognizance may pay the amount thereof to the clerk of the court, and be discharged from further liability. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 7158. And money accepted by a magistrate in lieu of a recognizance, where the defendant is held to bail to await the action of the grand jury, must, it would seem, be delivered to the clerk of the district court, as a substitute for a recognizance. Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 7149, 7156. It is clear from the general tenor of these statutes that they impose upon the clerk of the district court the duty of receiving, keeping, and paying over on the order of the court, or to his successor in office, all money paid into court or to him. We therefore hold that the rule of absolute liability of public officers and the sureties on their official bonds for moneys received by them in their official capacity, as declared and enforced in this court in actions against state, county, and school-district treasurers, respectively, applies to clerks of the district court and the sureties on their official bonds.

2. Does this rule extend to private funds; that is, funds received by a public officer by virtue of his office, which are ultimately to be paid by him to private parties? It is urged by counsel for one of the sureties in this case that the rule is limited to strictly public funds, and that, in any event, the liability of the officer in this case is only that of a bailee for hire. The cases of People ex rel. Nash v. Faulkner, 107 N. Y. 477, 14 N. E. 415; Wilson v. People use of Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. 19 Colo. 199, 22 L. R. A. 449, 34 Pac. 944, and Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 31 L. R. A. 851, 44 Pac. 125, tend to support this contention. But, on the other hand, the cases of Morgan v. Long, 29 Iowa, 434; Wright v. Harris, 31 Iowa, 272, Haven v. Lathene, 75 N. C. 505, and State use of Judge v. Gatzweiler, 49 Mo. 17, 8 Am. Rep. 119, do not recognize the distinction claimed. The cases in this court which we have cited do not suggest any distinction between public and private funds. This is not specially significant, for the subject-matter of each of those cases was public money. Upon principle, we are unable to make any distinction between public and private funds in the hands of a public officer, as to his liability therefor. In both cases the funds are paid to the officer in obedience to the mandate of the statute, which makes no distinction between them, and imposes the same duty as to each. The same bond secures both in the same terms. Can it be true that a county can recover on such a bond the amount of a forfeited recognizance lost by the clerk without his fault, but that money received by him in his official capacity for a private party, and so lost, cannot be recovered by an action on the same bond? It is not the character of the fund, but the statute and considerations of public policy, which impose the liability upon the officer. The same considerations of public policy which require that public officers who receive public money be held to a strict measure of responsibility therefor apply just as forcibly to private funds officially received by them, for private property is just as sacred as public property. This is especially true of money paid to the clerk of the district court, as in this case, in condemnation proceedings. The money in such a case is not deposited by its owner. He is not consulted in the premises. On the contrary, his land is taken for a public purpose without his consent, and the money, which is a substitute therefor, is placed in the official custody of the clerk, to be paid to the owner whenever (it may be after years of litigation) the court decides that he is entitled to it. Surely a wise public policy demands in such a case, if it does in any case, that the official custodian of the money should be held to a strict measure of responsibility therefor. We hold, therefore, that a public officer is liable for the loss of private funds received and held by him in his official capacity whenever he would be liable for the loss of public funds under the same circumstances, for in respect to his liability for the loss of money in his official custody there is no distinction between public and private funds.

It follows that the order herein appealed from must be reversed, and the case remanded, with directions to the District Court to amend its conclusions of law to the effect that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants the amount claimed in its complaint, and cause judgment to be entered accordingly. So ordered.
57 L. R. A.

Lewis, J., dissenting:

The decision of the majority is based upon the following principle: Where a statute either in direct terms or from its general tenor, imposes the duty upon a public officer to pay over moneys received and held by him in his official capacity, the obligation thus imposed is an absolute one, unless it is limited in the statute imposing the duty, or the conditions of his official bond. This proposition is taken from the opinion in Pine Island Bd. of Edu. v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, 46 N. W. 914, with the addition of the words "or the conditions of his official bond." As I understand the decision in the Jewell Case, the court had no intention of extending the liability of the officer and his sureties, unless the statutory provisions expressed obligations greater than those imposed by the common-law rule. This is evident from the authorities upon which the decision was based. The leading case was United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 678, 11 L. ed. 734, where the officer was the receiver of public moneys, and the condition of his bond was to well, truly, and faithfully keep safely the moneys placed in his hands. The court held that by the use of this language the officer had entered into an absolute contract to safely keep the moneys, and that considerations of public policy required the language used to be strictly construed against him, because he had voluntarily assumed the responsibility. This construction was followed in United States v. Dashiell, 4 Wall. 182, 18 L. ed. 319, and Boyd v. United States, 13 Wall. 17, 20 L. ed. 527. In Hancock v. Hazard, 12 Cush. 112, 59 Am. Dec. 171, the conditions of the bond were to faithfully collect, account for, and pay over, to which the reasoning of the Prescott Case was applied. Of the other cases cited, it may be said that in each instance either the statute or the bond specifically provided that the officer was bound to account for and pay over the moneys, upon proper warrants, or to his successor in office; and the courts, in applying the doctrine of the Prescott Case, expressly put it upon the ground that the common-law rule was abrogated by the terms of the statute, and that the officer had voluntarily accepted the conditions thus defined. The Minnesota cases cited in support of the decision in the Jewell Case were to the same effect. In Hennepin County v. Jones, 18 Minn. 199, Gil. 182, the statute and the bond both required the treasurer, during his term of office, to "safely keep" and faithfully "pay over," according to law, all moneys which came into his hands. In the language of Justice Berry, the rule is thus stated: "The very words used in bonds of this kind, viz., that the obligor shall 'safely keep' the moneys, seem to carry the idea that the money is not his property, but the property of the body politic, for which it is required to be safely kept. But the fact that the moneys received in this case belong to the county in no way lessens the degree of responsibility of defendant, Jones; nor has such fact any tendency to show that his obligation is not absolute, to safely keep the moneys coming into his hands." This case is followed and approved in McLeod County v. Gilbert, 19 Minn. 214, Gil. 176, and Redwood County v. Tower, 28 Minn. 45, 8 N. W. 907, where the statutory provisions were to the same effect. The statute under consideration in the Jewell Case required the treasurer to execute a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duty as treasurer, and declared that he should receive, and, upon order of the board, pay out, all moneys belonging to the district, and to pay over to his successor in office, upon demand, all moneys in his possession belonging to the district; and the bond followed the statute. It therefore becomes evident that in the Jewell Case the court did not intend to abrogate the common law where the statute did no more than to re-enact it. In the present case the duties imposed upon the clerk of court with reference to funds coming into his hands are no other or greater than those imposed by the common law, and the mere fact that an inference arises by the general tenor of the statute that he is to pay over such moneys to the proper parties does not change that rule. I have found no case, nor has one been presented, where the strict rule of absolute liability has been applied under a statute similar to the one now involved. In every instance the language corresponded to that already referred to in the cases above reviewed. The courts have given different reasons for coming to the same conclusions, and, as in New York, have distinguished between private and public funds; but nowhere, by any court, has the common-law rule been abrogated, in the absence of express provisions either in the statute or bond. In order to hold the officer under consideration absolutely liable, such obligation must rest upon one of two grounds: Either because the statutory provisions referred to abrogated the common-law rule, or that the common-law rule should be abrogated, regardless of the statute, upon considerations of public policy. I do not believe the language of our statute either directly or impliedly extends the common-law test of liability. And I am not prepared to fasten upon this class of officers the strict rule applied by the decision. That degree of responsibility is manifestly unreasonable and unjust when applied to officers whose possession of funds is merely incidental to their official duties, and, whether it shall be so applied, the legislature, not the court, should determine. I therefore dissent.

57 L. R. A.

Minnie BENEDICT, Admrx. of George Benedict, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY, Respt.

(.....Minn.....)

1. While it is the absolute duty of a railway carrier of passengers to provide a safe and secure place for its patrons to ride within its cars, when such duty is performed the passenger has no right to voluntarily extend his person beyond the line of a moving car, or ride upon its platform; and if he does so, and injury follows, no recovery can be had therefor.
2. Where a carrier of passengers by steam permits its cars to be overcrowded, and requires its passengers to ride on the platforms, it cannot excuse itself for injuries from such cause; but if a passenger, while riding on the platform, negligently extends his person beyond the car line from curiosity, his act in that respect must be regarded as negligent.
3. A youth sixteen years of age, traveling alone, cannot be held, merely on account of his immature years, to have been incapable in law of exercising sufficient discretion and judgment to avoid incurring the risk of a voluntary exposure of his person beyond the sides of a moving train.
4. In the review of a complaint upon general demurrer,—Held, that certain facts and conditions set forth therein do not excuse the conduct of an injured party, or absolve him from contributory negligence, in protruding his head beyond the sides of a moving train on which he was a passenger.

(May 16, 1902.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County sustaining a demurrer to a complaint filed to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas Cauty for appellant.

Mr. Albert E. Clarke, for respondent:

It is negligence per se for a passenger upon a railroad train to unnecessarily expose his person, or any part thereof, beyond the exterior line of a moving car; and the question whether he was negligent in so doing is not for the determination of the jury, but is a question of law for the court.

*Headnotes by LOVELL, J.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to negligence of passenger in standing on platform of railroad car, see Mitchell v. Southern P. R. Co. (Cal.) 11 L. R. A. 130, and note; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun (Ind.) 34 L. R. A. 141; Watkins v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. (Ala.) 43 L. R. A. 207; and Graham v. McNeill (Wash.) 43 L. R. A. 300.

As to passenger's negligent exposure of person at car window, see Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Scott (Va.) 16 L. R. A. 91, and note; also Clark v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 36 L. R. A. 123.

As to duty of carrier permitting cars to become overcrowded, see Lynn v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 24 L. R. A. 710, and note.

Moore v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. 43 La. Ann. 792, 9 So. 433; Todd v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 3 Allen, 18, 80 Am. Dec. 49, Affirmed in 7 Allen, 207, 83 Am. Dec. 679; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. McClurg, 56 Pa. 294; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 29 Ind. 83, 92 Am. Dec. 336; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 342, 17 Am. Rep. 568; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Scott, 88 Va. 958, 16 L. R. A. 91, 14 S. E. 763; Dun v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 78 Va. 645, 49 Am. Rep. 388; Favre v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 91 Ky. 541, 16 S. W. 370; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sickings, 5 Bush, 1, 96 Am. Dec. 320; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Underwood, 90 Ala. 49, 8 So. 116; Carrico v. West Virginia C. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 389, 14 S. E. 12; Clarke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 101 Ky. 34, 36 L. R. A. 123, 39 S. W. 840; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 155; Shelton v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 19 Ky. L. Rep. 215, 39 S. W. 842.

It has repeatedly been held negligent to ride upon the platform without necessity.

Worthington v. Central Vermont R. Co. 64 Vt. 107, 15 L. R. A. 326, 23 Atl. 590; Camden & A. R. Co. v. Hoosier, 12 W. N. C. 1; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 25 C. C. A. 486, 49 U. S. App. 279, 80 Fed. 361.

If an infant is more than fourteen years old, incapacity must be affirmatively shown. The presumption is, an infant of that age is fully capable of exercising due care for his personal safety, and the question, in such case, is one of law, for the court.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, p. 70. § 73; Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 39, 32 Am. Rep. 413; Troist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 164, 39 N. W. 402; Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602, 27 N. W. 776; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308, 26 N. E. 916; Solomon v. Central Park, N. & E. River R. Co. 1 Sweeny, 298; Ludwig v. Pillsbury, 35 Minn. 256, 28 N. W. 505.

Admitting that plaintiff had the right to be there, that would not excuse his act in leaning out.

Scheiber v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 61 Minn. 499, 63 N. W. 1034.

Lovely, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, as administratrix, seeks to recover for the death of her son, occurring through the alleged negligence of defendant, who demurs to the complaint upon the ground that it does not state a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, from which order plaintiff appeals.

The essential facts in the complaint are as follows: During the summer season of 1901 defendant operated trains between Minneapolis and points on Lake Minnetonka. Defendant's passenger station is near the center of the city, and its tracks extend 4 miles westerly therefrom within the corporate limits. Two fifths of a mile west of the depot its railroad passes under a bridge on Lyndale avenue. It is claimed that the defendant negligently maintains its tracks so close to the 57 L. R. A.

iron posts which support this bridge that the sides of its cars pass within 10 inches of the same. At this time defendant was running suburban trains, and transporting passengers thereon between the city and Lake Minnetonka in each direction, not only for ordinary purposes, but upon the occasion of picnics and excursions, when the cars would be greatly "overcrowded, so that their doors and windows had to be open, and passengers were required to ride upon the platforms and steps at the end of the cars." That the yards of defendant for a mile west of the depot had switches and side tracks adjacent to its main tracks, and at various points within this distance such tracks were crossed by street bridges overhead, supported by iron posts erected in the yard at the sides of the tracks. That these bridges resemble each other, and look alike to passengers. That the depot is east of and very close to one of the bridges, so that when the trains arrive they must stop partly under it for passengers to alight. That the conductors and brakemen of the train announce the stations as the trains slow up and stop at various points under the bridges, "when the passengers frequently and usually lean out from the platforms of the cars, and look ahead to see if their train has arrived at its destination, which is their usual and customary habit" and known to defendant. On the 30th of June, 1901, plaintiff's intestate, a minor, of the age of sixteen years, was a passenger on one of these trains coming to the city from Lake Minnetonka. That this train was overcrowded with passengers returning from a picnic. That it was excessively hot. That the car was greatly overcrowded, and many drunken and disorderly persons were riding thereon, whereby intestate was compelled to stand upon the platform of his car. The train suddenly slowed up near the Lyndale avenue bridge, when he "with the consent of the defendant, and without any warning of the danger" (or knowledge of the bridge), "leaned out slightly, and looked ahead, to see if it was arriving or had arrived at its destination, when his head immediately came into collision with one of the iron posts referred to, and he received the injuries from which he died." The position of the defendant in support of the order of the trial court is that intestate, by extending his head beyond the line of the car while in motion, committed an act of negligence, which was the proximate cause of his injury, and therefore precludes recovery in this action.

The law undoubtedly enjoins upon the railway carrier of passengers extraordinary diligence. This rule is intended, for reasons of public policy, to secure their safe carriage, so far as human skill and foresight can accomplish that result. Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. 32 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550, 18 N. W. 827. However, railways must construct and arrange their tracks and yards to attain practical purposes in the operation of their roads. They have been permitted, without restraint from police regulation, to build tracks with switches, when necessary, in close proximity to each other. This course is unavoidable in city yards, where the right of eminent domain, in view of public as well as private interests, has restricted the appropriation of land for railroad uses. A common incident of city yards are overhead bridges, with posts to sustain them, as well as adjacent tracks upon which trains are continually passing so near to each other that a slight extension of the human body beyond the sides of a car is fraught with danger to life and limb. These conditions have always existed. They are customary, and to a large extent indispensable; hence the high degree of duty to patrons exacted of carriers of passengers has been generally regarded as fulfilled with reference to outside arrangements at such places where a safe and secure place has been provided within its cars for their occupation. Having done this, the carrier is not required, in maintaining adjoining structures, to guard against the anticipated carelessness of those who are in no danger so long as they remain in the place of safety which the carrier has furnished. The customary methods of constructing tracks, building bridges, and running trains in railroad yards renders any exposure of a person beyond the car line imminently hazardous; hence there must arise a presumption in behalf of the carrier, when injury arises from such exposure, that the conduct of its business in this respect is not negligent, and imposes upon the injured party the burden of showing that it was otherwise in any particular case. While, as a general rule, it may be said that railroads can arrange structures adjoining their tracks to accomplish practical ends, even though the maintenance of the same are dangerous to those who are themselves reckless, yet it cannot be said either that an unnecessary or useless act by the railroad in this regard would not be negligent as to an employee required to work in the yards, or even a passenger, whose person, through no fault of his own, as by extraneous force, impending danger, sudden emergency, or other unavoidable cause, would be exposed to danger.

Subject to the qualifications above stated, the courts have not been able to impose upon railway carriers burdens so unreasonable that they could not be fulfilled, nor have passengers been relieved from the exercise of restraint from the curiosity which prompts them to expose their persons to the imminent risk of collision with objects outside the cars. Car windows and doors are for the admission of light and air, not to enable passengers to pursue a course which general experience declares to be extremely hazardous. The proper use of platforms is to afford travelers a safe and convenient means of entrance and exit to and from the cars when not in motion. But it follows, in view of the conditions above stated, that the voluntary exposure of the body beyond the sides of a moving train, or the improper use of the platform when safety is assured within the car, must be regarded as reckless, and the almost inevitable disaster that follows remediless. These conclusions are supported by the great weight of authority in this country. Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 155; Todd v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 3 Allen, 18, 80 Am. Dec. 49, 7 Allen, 207, 83 Am. Dec. 679; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. McClurg, 56 Pa. 294; Indianapolis & O. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 29 Ind. 83, 92 Am. Dec. 336; Favre v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 91 Ky. 541, 16 S. W. 370; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Underwood, 90 Ala. 49, 8 So. 116; Moakler v. Willamette Valley R. Co. 18 Or. 189, 6 L. R. A. 656, 22 Pac. 948; Carrico v. West Virginia O. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 389, 14 S. E. 12; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Scott, 88 Va. 958, 16 L. R. A. 91, 14 S. E. 763; Scheiber v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 61 Minn. 499, 63 N. W. 1034. In a large measure the learned counsel for appellant concedes the rule as laid down in the cases cited. We quote from his thorough and exhaustive brief as follows: "I concede that, as a general rule, a passenger who stands on the platform, or protrudes his head out of the window or outside of the outer line of the car, on a rapidly moving train or an ordinary steam railroad, under ordinary conditions and circumstances, and is thereby injured, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law." But it is urged that this complaint discloses exceptional circumstances, which takes this case out of the general rule. These exceptions are: The moderate speed of the train; its frequent stops; the misleading appearance of the overhead bridges, calculated to provoke inquiry; the knowledge by defendant of the habit of passengers to put their heads out of the windows of the cars at such places; the omission to give warnings forbidding this custom; the overcrowded condition of the cars, with the incidental necessity of passengers riding on platforms, invited and permitted by the defendant; as well as the immature age of the deceased,—which it is claimed relieve intestate from the imputation of recklessness. We are unable to give force to the view that the speed of the train is of significance, for it was moving with sufficient rapidity to make the exposure of any part of the body dangerous, as the unfortunate accident in this case demonstrates. The misleading appearance of the overhead bridges may have excited curiosity, but cannot justify a dangerous exposure, which was not necessary, particularly as defendant was required to announce the stations when reached, and this legal duty was admittedly performed; hence we cannot hold that curiosity alone can furnish an excuse for negligent self-exposure in such cases. The allegation of the custom of passengers to extend their heads beyond the sides of the car with the knowledge and consent of defendant, it is claimed, required warnings of the danger incurred thereby. These facts undoubtedly charged a reckless habit of the passengers thus exposing themselves. The general rule, as conceded by plaintiff's counsel, rests upon the ground that such conduct is so hazardous within the range of common experience that all travelers must and should have knowledge thereof, and that dangers from such causes are so well known and anticipated that specific warning ought not to be required, and would be useless if given. These considerations have all been carefully weighed and answered in the evolution of the rule forbidding unnecessary exposure of their persons by travelers on railways in the cases cited above, and have not been considered sufficient to modify its force, so as to be the subject of innovation in this respect. The fact that the train on which intestate was a passenger was one among other suburban trains, and that such trains were habitually overcrowded by passengers who were permitted and required to ride on the platforms with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, may well have excused intestate in choosing the place he occupied when injured. If railway companies subject their trains to the same uses adopted on urban electric or trolley cars, and receive compensation for carrying passengers upon the platforms of the same, they cannot avoid responsibility for an injury arising merely from the occupation of such place by their patrons to which the injured party does not contribute. Reem v. St. Paul City R. Co. 77 Minn. 503, 80 N. W. 638, 778. Had intestate fallen from the train by reason of its being overcrowded, or had he been pushed therefrom by causes attributable to the dangerous course of conduct pursued by defendant in allowing passengers to ride on its platforms, we could not hold that intestate's conduct was negligent; but the complaint rests plaintiff's right to recover upon the expressed ground that the accident resulted from the action of intestate himself. It is alleged therein that at the inopportune moment he "then leaned out slightly and looked ahead as said train moved along, to see if it was arriving or had arrived at its destination." This averment repels the inference that the efficient cause of the accident was the overcrowding of the train; and, while his position on the platform may be excused by the course of defendant, it was the voluntary act of the unfortunate youth himself, wherein he exercised his own judgment, and took chances, which resulted in his death. Under the admissions of the plaintiff, her son's conduct can no more excuse him from negligence than in the case of a passenger within the car, who protrudes his head from a window and is struck by a passing car.

It remains to consider whether the immature age of intestate would, as a matter of law, demand a submission to a jury of the question of intestate's capacity to appreciate the risks incurred. The allegation in the complaint in this respect is that he "was sixteen years of age." There are no facts alleged to show lack of intelligence, discretion, or ability ordinarily exercised by persons of that age. The rule of care imposed upon persons of immature years has been stated in a former decision of this court in the following language: "The law very properly holds that a child of such tender years as to be incapable of exercising judgment and discretion cannot be charged with contributory negligence; but this principle cannot be applied as a rule of law to all children, without regard to their age or mental capacity. Children may be liable for their torts or punished for their crimes, and they may be guilty of negligence as well as adults. The law very humanely does not require the same degree of care on the part of a child as of a person of mature years, but he is responsible for the exercise of such care and vigilance as may reasonably be expected of one of his age and capacity, and the want of that degree of care is negligence." Tuist v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 164-168, 39 N. W. 402. See also Ludwig v. Pillsbury, 35 Minn. 256, 28 N. W. 505; Powers v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 57 Minn. 332, 59 N. W. 307; Tucker v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 308, 26 N. E. 916; Masser v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 602, 27 N. W. 776. The general rule that it is for the jury to determine the capacity of a minor to exercise discretion and judgment, and whether the failure to do so is contributory negligence, cannot reasonably be applied in cases where such persons are infants only in legal theory. An infant at fourteen years, under the policy of our law, has sufficient discretion to select a guardian (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 4535), and is capable of malice which would subject him to penal consequences for crime when above the age of twelve (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 301). It would seem to follow that the mere fact alone that the infant is above that age, though under twenty-one, would not presumptively absolve him from the consequence of contributory negligence. While an infant over twelve years might not have sufficient capacity to appreciate the risk of a dangerous situation, owing to peculiar individual characteristics affecting his capacity, yet we are unable to hold that a youth sixteen years of age, traveling alone on a railway train, is not, as a matter of law, endowed with sufficient intelligence and discretion to avoid the consequences of acts which the law considers culpably negligent. Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 7; Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 88 Pa. 35, 32 Am. Rep. 413; Dietrich v. Baltimore & H. S. R. Co. 58 Md. 347.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Herbert BOWEN, Admr., etc., of Angus D. Keith, Appt.,
v.

James B. W. LANSING et al.

(.....Mich.....)

The vendor's interest in a partially performed contract to purchase land of which the vendee has been put in possession passes to his personal representative upon his death, and is not subject to execution for the debts of his heir.

(December 21, 1901.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Wayne County in favor of defendants in a suit to remove Norm.—Nature of interest of vendor or vendee in a land contract as real or personal property.

- I. Application of the doctrine of equitable conversion.
 - a. In general, 643.
 - b. Where judgment has been entered against one of the parties to the contract.
 1. Against the vendee, 644.
 2. Against the vendor, 645.
 - c. Where one of the parties to the contract subsequently dies, 646.
 - d. For purpose of determining who must bear losses and receive accretions, 647.
- II. Effect of provisions of contract, 647.
- III. The contract must be one which equity will specifically enforce, 648.
- IV. Time at which conversion takes place.
 - a. In general, 649.
 - b. Effect of vendee's failure to take possession, 650.
 - c. Optional contracts, 651.
- V. Reconversion, 652.
- VI. Application of doctrine in actions at law, 653.
- VII. Conclusion, 654.

I. Application of the doctrine of equitable conversion.

a. In general.

Acting under the rule that equity considers as done that which is agreed to be done, the cases harmoniously hold, subject to the limitations hereinafter noted, that the vendee under a contract for the sale of lands takes an equitable title, while the vendor holds the legal title in trust for the purchaser and as security for the purchase money due him. Hadley v. London Bank, 3 De G. J. & S. 63; Davie v. Beardsham, 1 Ch. Cas. 39; Greenhill v. Greenhill, 2 Vern. 679, Prec. in Ch. 320, Glib. Eq. Rep. 77; Purser v. Darby, 4 Kay & J. 41; Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272; Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177, 9 L. ed. 388; Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. 125, 23 L. ed. 113; Wimbley v. Montgomery Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. 69 Ala. 575; Harris v. King, 16 Ark. 126; Gouldin v. Buckelew, 4 Cal. 107; Sparks v. Hess, 15 Cal. 186; Aaron v. Bayne, 28 Ga. 107; Home Mfg. Co. v. Gough, 2 Ill. App. 477; Vail v. Drexel, 9 Ill. App. 439; Sutherland v. Goodnow, 108 Ill. 528, 48 Am. Rep. 560; Jones v. Hollister, 51 57 L. R. A.

a cloud from the title of plaintiff's intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by the levying of an execution on an interest of which he died seised, as that of his heir at law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bowen, Douglas, & Whiting, for appellant:

In equity, where a part of the purchase money has been paid, and the vendee has gone into possession, an equitable conversion takes place, by which the vendor becomes trustee of the land for the benefit of the vendee, and the vendee trustee of the money for the benefit of the vendor, and equitably the vendee is the owner of the land, the claim of the vendor being but an ordinary money debt secured by the contract.

Kan. 310, 32 Pac. 1115; Woodbury v. Gardner, 77 Me. 68; Cross v. Bean, 83 Me. 62, 21 Atl. 752; Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 34 Mich. 138; Bell v. Flaherty, 45 Miss. 694; Jewett v. Black, 60 Neb. 173, 82 N. W. 375; Force v. Dutcher, 17 N. J. Eq. 165; Huffman v. Hummer, 17 N. J. Eq. 203; Haughwout v. Murphy, 22 N. J. Eq. 531; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 510, 61 Am. Dec. 706; Young v. Guy, 87 N. Y. 462; Burank v. Babcock, 3 N. Y. S. R. 458; White v. Patterson, 139 Pa. 429, 21 Atl. 360; Poe v. Paxton, 26 W. Va. 607.

In Dortch v. Benton, 98 N. C. 190, 3 S. E. 638, it was held that the purchaser's interest was not personalty so as to entitle him to have it set apart as a personal-property exemption, but that it was realty, and he was entitled to a homestead therein.

And in Wiseman v. Beckwith, 90 Ind. 185, where the vendor's wife did not join in the contract, it was held that the purchaser had an equitable title subject to the wife's inchoate right of dower as fixed by the law then in force, which constituted a vested right, and could not be diminished by a subsequent statute increasing the right of dower to an estate in fee.

In Russell's Appeal, 15 Pa. 319, it was held that the purchaser's interest is not a mere chose in action, but an interest in land; and where he assigns the contract the assignment in effect constitutes a mortgage of his interest, and, unless recorded, will be postponed to the lien of judgments subsequently entered against him.

The purchaser's interest constitutes an interest in land within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Dougherty v. Catlett, 129 Ill. 438, 21 N. E. 932.

And he takes an equitable title within the meaning of a statute making equitable estates subject to dower. Thompson v. Thompson, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 430.

Where one agrees to convey land for a valuable consideration, which land he does not then own, but afterwards acquires, he holds it, when acquired, as a trustee for his vendee. White v. Patterson, 139 Pa. 429, 21 Atl. 360.

The purchaser in possession is the equitable owner, and is entitled to the rents, issues, and profits, and the vendor is not entitled to an injunction restraining him or his licensee from digging a raceway, unless the purchaser is in default, and the vendor's security is impaired thereby. Baldwin v. Pool, 74 Ill. 97.

A person in lawful possession of land under a contract to purchase may maintain trespass

Walker v. Casgrain, 101 Mich. 608, 60 N. W. 291.

Real estate descends to heirs, and personal estate to the personal representatives.

Wing v. McDowell, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 181; Compo v. Jackson Iron Co. 49 Mich. 44, 12 N. W. 901; House v. Deater, 9 Mich. 246; Baater v. Robinson, 11 Mich. 522; Gustin v. Union School Dist. 94 Mich. 502, 54 N. W. 156; Welsh v. Richards, 41 Mich. 593, 2 N. W. 920.

The mere fact that the vendee was in possession under the land contract would have been sufficient notice.

Corey v. Smalley, 106 Mich. 260, 64 N. W. 13; O'Brien v. Evans, 107 Mich. 623, 65 N. W. 571.

An equitable estate is not subject to levy. Gorham v. Arnold, 22 Mich. 247; Gorham v. Wing, 10 Mich. 492.

for injuries thereto, even against the owner of the legal title, as the vendor's interest is merely a lien for the unpaid purchase money. Smith v. Price, 42 Ill. 399.

He has an equitable title which will enable him to maintain partition. Longwell v. Bentley, 23 Pa. 102.

In the following cases it was held that the vendor retains the legal title as security for the payment of the purchase money, and has the rights and equities of a mortgagee: Moses Bros. v. Johnson, 88 Ala. 517, 7 So. 146; Lowery v. Peterson, 75 Ala. 109; Hutton v. Moore, 26 Ark. 382; Wakefield v. Johnson, 26 Ark. 506; Moore v. Anders, 14 Ark. 628, 60 Am. Dec. 551; McConnell v. Beattie, 34 Ark. 113; White v. Blakemore, 8 Lea, 49; Hendrix v. Barker, 49 Neb. 369, 68 N. W. 531; Haley v. Bennett, 5 Port. (Ala.) 469.

And where the vendor assigns the note given for the purchase price he has no further interest in the property, as his assignment carries with it an equitable assignment of his lien on the land. Jackson v. Snell, 34 Ind. 241; First Nat. Bank v. Edgar (Neb.) 91 N. W. 404.

The vendor retains the legal title as security for the purchase money, his retention of the title operating as an equitable mortgage; and he cannot execute a valid mortgage on the land, though he can assign the debt due him. Strickland v. Kirk, 51 Miss. 795.

And in Rose v. Watson, 10 H. L. Cas. 672, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 385, it was held that the vendee is the owner, as against a mortgagee of the vendor, to the extent of the purchase money paid by him.

The vendor holds the legal title only as security for the payment of the purchase money, and he cannot convey a good title to one having notice of the existence of the contract. Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 415.

The vendee in possession under a land contract has the equitable title, and his possession is notice of his equity to one subsequently purchasing from the vendor. Daniels v. Davison, 17 Ves. Jr. 433, 16 Ves. Jr. 249.

The purchaser's title is sufficient to enable him to operate mines located on the property, and to dispose of the ore. Woolsey v. Seely, Wright (Ohio) 360.

And he may cut bark from trees, and, if the vendor attempts to sell it, he may recover it from the vendor's transferee. Cochran v. Utter, 15 N. Y. Week. Dig. 570.

The purchaser acquires an equitable title, and may execute a valid mortgage. Smith v. Robinson, 13 Ark. 533; Baker v. Bishop Hill Colony, 45 Ill. 264; Ricker v. Moore, 77 Me. 295; Wing v. McDowell, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 57 L. R. A.

The personal representative of the vendor is generally the proper party to enforce specific performance.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1065, note 1; Scott v. Davis, 141 Mo. 213, 42 S. W. 714; Warvelle, Vendors, pp. 188, 189, 700; Sugden, Vendors, *177; Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contracts, § 494; Evans v. Enloe, 70 Wis. 348, 34 N. W. 918, 36 N. W. 22; Lavender v. Abbott, 30 Ark. 172.

Where there is a contract for the purchase of land, it descends in equity to the heirs of the vendee.

Champion v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. 400, 10 Am. Dec. 343; Palmer v. Morrison, 104 N. Y. 132, 10 N. E. 144; Bender v. Luckenbach, 162 Pa. 22, 29 Atl. 295, 296; Sutter v. Ling, 25 Pa. 466; Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354; Skinner v. Newberry, 51 Ill. 203; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am.

175; Gordon v. Collett, 102 N. C. 532, 9 S. E. 486; Roddy v. Elam, 12 Rich. Eq. 343; Skaggs v. Kelly (Tenn. Ch. App.) 42 S. W. 275.

And in the following cases it was held that the purchaser's equitable title would enable him to execute a valid deed of the premises: Neal v. Murphey, 60 Ga. 388; Higley v. Millard, 45 Iowa, 586; Jackson ex dem. New Loan Officers v. Bull, 1 Johns. Cas. 81; Weed v. Hall, 101 Pa. 596; Irvine v. Muse, 10 Helsk. 477.

The vendee, under a land contract, takes the equitable title, and upon the payment of the purchase money may compel the vendor to convey, although he is at the time indebted to the vendor on another land contract. Seaman v. Van Rensselaer, 10 Barb. 81.

In Crawford v. Bertholf, 1 N. J. Eq. 458, it was held that where the vendee has been guilty of fraud, equity will not aid him by applying the doctrine of equitable relief, but will leave him to his remedy at law.

b. Where judgment has been entered against one of the parties to the contract.

1. Against the vendee.

In the jurisdictions where the common-law rule limiting the lien of judgments to legal estates has been abrogated by statute it has been uniformly held that the purchaser takes an equitable title which is subject to the lien of a judgment entered against him. Ralston v. Field, 32 Ga. 453; Coombs v. Jordan, 3 Bland, Ch. 284, 22 Am. Dec. 236; Rand v. Garner, 75 Iowa, 311, 39 N. W. 515; Adams v. Harris, 47 Miss. 144.

And his interest is real estate under a statute making the real estate of a judgment debtor subject to the lien of a judgment entered against him. Van Camp v. Peerenboom, 14 Wis. 66.

In Pennsylvania, where there is no court of chancery, the common-law courts have applied equitable principles in dealing with the question, and have held that a judgment against the purchaser is a lien on his equitable interest. Richter v. Sellin, 8 Serg. & R. 425; Pugh v. Good, 3 Watts & S. 56, 37 Am. Dec. 534; Foster's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 79; Catlin v. Robinson, 2 Watts, 373.

In Auwerter v. Mathiot, 9 Serg. & R. 397, it was held that only the equitable interest of the purchaser is sold under an execution issued against him, and hence his judgment creditors are entitled to the surplus realized on the sale, even as against the vendor, who has not received all the purchase money.

The above case was followed in Wilkinson v.

Dec. 706; Smith v. Gage, 41 Barb. 60; Potter v. Ellice, 48 N. Y. 321; Denham v. Cornell, 67 N. Y. 556.

Messrs. Clark, Durfee, & Allor, with Mr. John H. Patterson, for appellees:

The vendor in a land contract has such a legal title to the land contracted to be conveyed as is subject to levy and sale on execution.

Comp. Laws, § 9225; Doak v. Runyan, 33 Mich. 75; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 368, 1261, 1262; 33 Cent. L. J. 107; Patterson's Estate, 25 Pa. 71; Hardee v. McMichael, 68 Ga. 678.

While it may be true that the vendee has such a title in the land as will descend to his heirs, it does not necessarily follow that the vendor has no such interest.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 368.

The vendor holds the legal title subject

Burr, 10 Ga. 117, and it was held that the judgment creditors of the purchaser were entitled to the surplus arising on a sale of his interest under a judgment entered against him by the vendor for a part of the purchase price. In this case no part of the purchase price had been paid except that realized on the sale under the judgment, but the court said that the principle was the same as that in the Auwerter Case, 9 Serg. & R. 397, and as the sale was only the vendee's interest, his creditors were entitled to the proceeds.

The following decisions, which hold that the vendee's interest is not subject to the lien of a judgment entered against him, do not militate against the doctrine that the vendee takes an equitable title, as these cases recognize the soundness of the doctrine, but are based on the ground that an equitable interest in land is not subject to the lien of a judgment: Doe ex dem. Cooper v. Cutshall, Smith (Ind.) 128; Gentry v. Allison, 20 Ind. 481; Evans v. Feeny, 81 Ind. 532.

And in Ellsworth v. Cuyler, 9 Paige, 418, it was held, for the same reason, that the purchaser's interest can only be reached by a creditor's bill.

In Bogert v. Perry, 17 Johns. 351, it was held that the statute making trust lands liable to execution against the cestui que trust applies only when he has the whole beneficial interest, and hence will not apply to the interest of a purchaser under a land contract who has not paid all the purchase money, as until that time a portion of the beneficial interest is in the vendor.

A similar question was involved in Modisett v. Johnson, 2 Blackf. 431, where it was held that the statute making judgments a lien on certain equitable estates did not apply to the equitable estate passing to the vendee under a contract for the sale of land; and hence the common-law rule applied, and his equitable title was not subject to a judgment entered against him.

In Sweezy v. Jones, 65 Iowa, 272, 21 N. W. 603, the judgment creditor had but an option of purchase, and it was held that until he exercised the option he had no estate which could be subjected to the lien of a judgment.

2. Against the vendor.

In the following cases it was held that, the equitable title having passed to the vendee, a judgment against the vendor was not a lien on the property: Taylor v. Lowenstein, 50 Miss. 278; Chisholm v. Andrews, 57 Miss. 636; Bell v. Flaherty, 45 Miss. 694; Moyer v. Hin- to the right of the vendee to have conveyance upon complete performance.
57 L. R. A.

Re Pulling, 97 Mich. 375, 56 N. W. 765.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Angus Keith, an incompetent person, being possessed of certain land upon Gross Isle, contracted by an ordinary land contract, through his legally appointed guardian, the Union Trust Company, to convey it to Lulu D. Wormer. The purchase price was $2,500, $500 of which was paid at the time the contract was made. Before full payment, but after a part of the purchase money had been paid, and after the vendee had been put in possession under the contract (according to complainant's claim), Mr. Keith died, leaving as his sole heir his son, A. Douglas Keith. The complainant, man, 13 N. Y. 180; Moore v. Byers, 65 N. C. 240; Manley v. Hunt, 1 Ohio, 257; Minns v. Morse, 15 Ohio, 568, 45 Am. Dec. 590; Money v. Dorsey, 7 Smedes & M. 15; Merriman v. Polk, 5 Helsk. 717.

And a judgment against the vendor is not a lien though a portion of the purchase money is paid after the entry of the judgment. Hampson v. Edelen, 2 Harr. & J. 64, 3 Am. Dec. 530.

In Butler v. Brown, 5 Ohio St. 211, the purchase money had not been paid, but the court held that the rule that the vendor becomes a trustee for the vendee and the land ceases to be subject to the lien of judgment subsequently entered against the vendor, should not be disturbed; saying that it had for more than thirty years been acted upon as a rule of title.

The vendor's interest in the unpaid purchase money can only be reached by garnishment or equitable proceedings. Baldwin v. Thompson, 15 Iowa, 504; Woodward v. Dean, 46 Iowa, 499.

In Lane v. Ludlow, 2 Paine, 591, Fed. Cas. No. 8,052, it was held that, while at law a judgment entered against the vendor is a lien on the land, equity will protect the purchaser's equitable interest; and that upon his paying the purchase money into court the judgment creditor will be restrained from selling the property under the judgment.

But in the following cases it was held that, although the equitable title had passed to the vendee, the vendor held the legal title as security for the payment of the purchase money, and his interest was subject to the lien of a judgment entered against him, and could be sold under execution; but that the purchaser at such sale would take the vendor's interest subject to the equities of the vendee: Ware v. Jackson, 19 Ga. 452; Hardee v. McMichael, 68 Ga. 678; Bell v. McDuffie, 71 Ga. 264; Simpson v. Niles, 1 Ind. 196; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 25 Minn. 382; Wellis v. Baldwin, 28 Minn. 408, 10 N. W. 427; Coolbaugh v. Roemer, 30 Minn. 424, 15 N. W. 869; Berryhill v. Potter, 42 Minn. 279, 44 N. W. 251; Fillee v. Duncan, 1 Neb. 134, 93 Am. Dec. 337; Olander v. Tighe, 43 Neb. 344, 61 N. W. 633; Courtney v. Parker, 16 Neb. 311, 20 N. W. 120; Fasholt v. Reed, 16 Serg. & R. 266; M'Mullen v. Wenner, 16 Serg. & R. 19, 16 Am. Dec. 543; Stewart v. Coder, 11 Pa. 90.

In Lefferson v. Dallas, 20 Ohio St. 68, where it was held that the judgment was a lien on the land to the extent of the purchase money remaining unpaid, the court distinguished the case from that of Minns v. Morse, 15 Ohio, 568, 45 Am. Dec. 590, supra, as in that case

Bowen, was appointed administrator of Keith's estate, which consisted of $50 worth of household property and his interest in the lands contracted to Wormer. Claims aggregating $400 or $500 have been presented, and the administrator has no means with which to pay them, aside from the money due or to become due upon Wormer's contract, amounting to upwards of $2,000. Angus Keith died on January 24, 1899, and on the 7th day of February, 1899, defendant Lansing, a judgment creditor of A. Douglas Keith, caused his codefendant, Stewart, a sheriff, to levy a writ of fieri facias in favor of Lansing upon the interest of said A. Douglas Keith in said premises, and to advertise the same for sale. This was about a month previous to complainant's appointment as administrator. After said levy the administrator filed this bill to remove the cloud from the title caused by defendant's levy, alleging the foregoing facts, and that Wormer was ready to pay the purchase money when he could obtain a clear title to the premises, but refused payment until this cloud should be removed. Subsequently defendant Lansing purchased the premises at the sheriff's sale. Counsel seem to agree that the only question raised is whether the interest of Angus Keith in this land descended to A. Douglas Keith, so as to be subject to a levy. Complainant contends that it is personal property, and therefore belongs to the administrator, and that it was not subject to such levy. Defendant maintains that it is an interest in lands, which descended to the heir, by operation of law, upon the death of the ancestor, subject to the rights of creditors, and that it was susceptible to a levy for the no part of the purchase money remained unpaid at the date of the judgment.

In Adcock v. Patton, 2 Baxt. 436, it was held that a judgment entered against a vendor giving a bond for title was a lien, unless the bond had been previously registered.

And in Holman v. Creagmiles, 14 Ind. 177, it was held that, since a judgment against the vendor is a lien to the extent of his interest, the vendee may pay it and deduct it from the purchase money.

From the above, it will be seen that the decisions involving the lien of a judgment against the vendor are not in harmony; but it will also be noticed that the conflict is not caused by any differences of judicial opinion as to the soundness of the doctrine that the vendee takes an equitable title to the property. They are all in accord as to the nature of the title and interests of the respective parties. The only point of difference between them is as to whether the substantial interest which remains in the vendor, and for the payment of which he holds the legal title as security, is subject to the lien of a judgment.

c. Where one of the parties to the contract subsequently dies.

The question frequently arises on the death of one of the parties to the contract, and in the following cases it was held that the vendor's interest constitutes personality, and is distributable among his next of kin: Baden v. Pembroke, 2 Vern. 215; Mayer v. Gowland, 2 Dick. 563; Smith v. Hibbard, 2 Dick. 730; McKay v. Carrington, 1 McLean, 50, Fed. Cas. No. 8,841; Masterson v. Pullen, 62 Ala. 145; Muldrow v. Muldrow, 2 Dana, 387; Skinner v. Newberry, 51 Ill. 203; Gilmore v. Gilmore, 60 Kan. 606, 57 Pac. 505; Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354; Re Everit, 2 Edw. Ch. 597; Swartwout v. Burr, 1 Barb. 495; Moore v. Burrows, 34 Barb. 173; Adams v. Green, 34 Barb. 176; Smith v. Gage, 41 Barb. 60; Thomson v. Smith, 63 N. Y. 301; Williams v. Haddock, 145 N. Y. 144, 39 N. E. 825; Simmons's Estate, 140 Pa. 567, 21 Atl. 402; Bender v. Luckenbach, 162 Pa. 18, 29 Atl. 295, 296; West Hickory Min. Asso. v. Reed, 80 Pa. 38; Sutter v. Ling, 25 Pa. 406; Foster v. Harris, 10 Pa. 457; Reynolds v. Brandon, 3 Helak. 593; Donohoo v. Lea, 1 Swan, 119, 55 Am. Dec. 725.

In Henson v. Ott, 7 Ind. 512, it was held that the vendor's interest constitutes personality, and that upon his death it is distributable as such, and the statutes relating to the descent of real property do not apply.

The vendor's interest constitutes personality within the meaning of a statute giving a widow one third of her deceased husband's personal property. Re Drenkle, 3 Pa. St. 377.
57 L. R. A.

After the owner of the land enters into a contract for its sale, she has no further title to the realty except to hold it as security for the payment of the purchase money, and her interest in it passes to her personal representatives, and not to the devisees named in a prior will. Farrar v. Winterton, 5 Beav. 1, 6 Jur. 204.

And the contract converts the vendor's interest into personality, operates as a revocation of a prior will, and the purchase money goes to the personal representatives. Donohoo v. Lea, 1 Swan, 119, 55 Am. Dec. 725.

That the vendor holds the legal title in trust is shown by the decision in Lysaght v. Edwards, L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 499, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 554, 24 Week. Rep. 778, 34 L. T. N. S. 787, where it was held that the vendor's interest passed under his will devising all the real estate vested in him as trustee.

In Wall v. Bright, 1 Jac. & W. 494, where it was held that the vendor's interest passed under a will disposing of his real and personal estate, the court said that the equitable title had passed to the purchaser, and that the vendor retained the legal title as trustee.

And in Thirlie v. Vaughan, 2 Week. Rep. 632, it was held that the vendor held the legal title as trustee for the purchaser, and that the language of his will was not sufficient to vest his beneficial estate in his devisee, but that the legal title descended to his heirs charged with the same trust.

So, in Swartwout v. Burr, 1 Barb. 495, it was held that the purchaser acquired an equitable title, and the heir of the vendor held the legal title in trust.

Conversely, it was held in the following cases that the vendee's interest constitutes realty, and descends to his heirs: Alleyne v. Alleyne, Mosely, 262; Milner v. Mills, Mosely, 123; Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. Wms. 632; Potter v. Potter, 1 Ves. Sr. 437; Garnett v. Acton, 28 Beav. 333; Love v. Butler, 129 Ala. 531, 30 So. 735; Wise v. Walker (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 437, 10 Atl. 23; Harney v. Donohoe, 97 Mo. 141, 10 S. W. 191; Griffith v. Beecher, 10 Barb. 432; Livingston v. Newkirk, 3 Johns. Ch. 312; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Williams v. Kinney, 43 Hun, 1, Affirmed in 118 N. Y. 679, 23 N. E. 1147; Johnson v. Corbett, 11 Paige, 265.

And the purchaser's heirs are not affected by the acts and contracts of his personal representatives in relation to it. Stephenson v.

debts of the heir, subject to such rights as creditors may have. When we shall have determined the character of the interest remaining in a vendor of land held by the vendee upon contract of purchase merely, we shall have gone far in ascertaining whether it is such as will descend to the heir as real estate, or go to the administrator as personalty. In the early case of Wing v. McDowell, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 181, it was said: "At law a contract for the purchase of land gives the vendee no interest in the land; but the rule is otherwise in equity, which considers the vendor, as to the land, a trustee for the purchaser, and the vendee, as to the money, a trustee for the seller. In equity the land belongs to the vendee, and may be sold, devised, or encumbered by him, and on his death will descend to his heirs. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. Jr. 265, 274;

Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. Jr. 353; Champion v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. 398, 10 Am. Dec. 343. It must be taken, however, subject to the rights of the vendor under the contract. And, McDowell having an equitable interest in the land under the contract, the mortgage from him to Simmons was an equitable mortgage of that equitable interest." This was emphasized by Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 34 Mich. 138, where it was again said that the legal title remained in the vendor as a trust, and that his only equitable claim upon it was by way of security for his debt in the nature of a vendor's lien, which could only be made effective to divest the vendee's equitable title by a sale through proceedings to foreclose the vendor's lien. In Walker v. Casgrain, 101 Mich. 608, 60 N. W. 292, it was said: "While complainant holds the legal title, defendant Casgrain is d. For purpose of determining who must bear losses and receive accessions.

Yandle, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 109; Myrick v. Boyd, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 179.

The question has also arisen where an unexpected change has taken place in the value of the property during the time elapsing between the execution of the contract and the delivery of the conveyance; in some cases the value of the property has been enhanced, in others, depreciated. And for the purpose of determining who is to bear the loss or receive the gain it has been necessary to determine the ownership of the property.

And in the following cases it was held that the equitable title is in the vendee, and he must stand the loss resulting from the destruction or injury of the property by fire: Poole v. Adams, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 639, 10 L. T. N. S. 287, 12 Week. Rep. 683; Johnston v. Jones, 12 B. Mon. 328; Marks v. Tichenor, 85 Ky. 536, 4 S. W. 225; Snyder v. Murdock, 51 Mo. 175; Morgan v. Scott, 26 Pa. 51; Dunn v. Yakish, 10 Okla. 388, 61 Pac. 926.

And hence he is not entitled to deduct from the purchase price the value of a building destroyed by fire after the making of the contract. McKechnie v. Sterling, 48 Barb. 330.

And in Reed v. Lukens, 44 Pa. 200, 84 Am. Dec. 425, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy collected by the vendor.

In Stent v. Ballis, 2 P. Wms. 217, dicta to the contrary can be found where the Master of the Rolls said: "If I should buy an house, and before such time as by the articles I am to pay for the same the house be burnt down by casualty of fire, I shall not in equity be bound to pay for the house."

There are cases where the question of loss resulting from fire arose in actions at law, and where the court held that it could not apply the equitable doctrine, and hence the loss must fall on the vendor. See Thompson v. Gould, 20 Pick. 134; Powell v. Dayton, S. & G. R. R. Co. 12 Or. 488, 8 Pac. 544, infra, VI.

In other cases, where it appeared from the contract of sale that the parties intended that the vendor should bear the loss, the vendee was relieved from liability. See Combs v. Fisher, 3 Bibb, 51; Goddard v. Bebout, 40 Ind. 115; Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65, infra, II.

As to time when equitable title vests so as to cast the loss on the vendee, see Dunn v. Yakish, 10 Okla. 388, 61 Pac. 926; Marks v. Tichenor, 85 Ky. 536, 4 S. W. 225; Gould v. Murch, 70 57 L. R. A.

Me. 288, 35 Am. Rep. 325; Lombard v. Chicago Sinal Congregation, 64 Ill. 477, infra, IV. a; Johnston v. Jones, 12 B. Mon. 328, infra, IV. b.

As to rights of parties under option of purchase where the option had not been exercised at time of fire, see infra, IV. c.

By reason of the vendee's equitable title he must stand the loss of rents and profits resulting from the tenant's quitting the premises, and he will not be relieved from the operation of this general rule by the fact that the tenant quitted the premises under a false construction of an agreement made between them. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532.

In White v. Nutts, 1 P. Wms. 62, it was held that where one having an estate for two lives, in certain premises, articles to convey them, a purchaser takes an equitable title from the time of the sealing of the articles, and if between that time and the making of the conveyance, one of the lives ends, the loss must fall on the purchaser.

In Hellreigel v. Manning, 97 N. Y. 56, it was held that a party agreeing to sell and convey premises at a future day does not owe the vendee any duty to keep them in repair, or to guard against decay which is due to time and ordinary use.

In Siter's Appeal, 26 Pa. 180, the property had been sold under a judgment entered against the vendor prior to the execution of the contract, and after paying the amount of the judgment from the proceeds a surplus existed in excess of the amount due the vendor on the purchase price, and it was held that the purchaser was entitled to the excess.

II. Effect of provisions of contract.

The doctrine of equitable conversion will not be applied where it is apparent from the contract that such was not the intention of the parties. Re Graves, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 357; Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 723.

And where the contract made no provision for the vendee's taking possession, and provided that, unless carried out at the time named, it should become null and void, and the vendee's possession was not under the contract, but under a prior lease existing between him and the vendor,—the court held that it was apparent that the parties did not intend that the contract should work an equitable conversion, but that the vendee's possession should be under the lease, which estate would continue until the performance of the contract of sale. Bostwick v. Frankfield, 74 N. Y. 207.

The loss resulting from the burning of a building must fall on the vendor where he cov-the owner in equity. The claim of the vendor is but an ordinary money debt, secured by the contract." See also Corey v. Smalley, 106 Mich. 260, 64 N. W. 13; O'Brien v. Evans, 107 Mich. 623, 65 N. W. 571. Many authorities are cited by counsel for the complainant in support of their contention that a vendor's interest is not real estate, and does not pass to the heir, but is personalty, and goes to the administrator. The rule is so stated in 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 843, where the authorities are collected representing the states of Arkansas, Indiana, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Wisconsin. See also Warvelle, Vendors, 189, and authorities cited; Sugden, Vendors, *177. In Scott v. Davis, 141 Mo. 213, 42 S. W. 717, the court quotes with approval from 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1065, the following language, viz.: "The personal representative of the vendor is generally the proper party to enforce specific performance where the purchase money is unpaid, after the death of the vendor, although, if a conveyance has to be made, the vendor's heirs or devisees may also be necessary parties,"—citing Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contracts, § 49; Fry, Spec. Perf. of Contracts, § 515; Perry v. Roberts, 23 Mo. 221; Leeper v. Lyon, 68 Mo. 216; Butler v. Rockwell, 14 Colo. 125, 23 Pac. 462; Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59; Angell v. Steere, 16 R. I. 200, 14 Atl. 81; Potter v. Ellice, 48 N. Y. 323. As the foregoing authorities indicate that the vendor's title is only a trust coupled with an interest by way of security for a debt, which is personalty, so the following (cited by counsel) are in harmony in holding that the vendee is the cestui que trust as to the legal title, and that his interest is real property, and descends to his heirs (in equity), who are the proper ones to file a bill for specific performance. Champion v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. 400, 10 Am. Dec. 343; Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contracts, § 494; Lavender v. Abbott, 30

enanted in the contract to deliver the premises in the same condition in which they were at the time of the execution of the contract. Combs v. Fisher, 3 Bibb, 51; Goddard v. Bebout, 40 Ind. 115.

And such loss must fall on the vendor where it was apparent from the contract that the parties contemplated the transfer of the buildings as constituting an important and essential part of the transaction. Wells v. Calnan, 107 Mass. 514, 9 Am. Rep. 65.

Where the contract provides that the purchase money shall be paid to the heirs of the vendor after his death his interest constitutes realty, and descends to his heirs. Stevens v. Flannagan, 131 Ind. 122, 30 N. E. 898.

As to provisions of contract showing intention to postpone the equitable conversion until the performance of conditions of sale, see infra, IV.

III. The contract must be one which equity will specifically enforce.

The contract will not operate as an equitable conversion unless it is one the specific performance of which can be enforced. Atty. Gen. v. Day, 1 Ves. Sr. 218; Edwards v. West, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 858, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 463, 38 L. T. N. S. 481, 26 Week. Rep. 507; Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Drew & S. 426, 7 Jur. N. S. 595, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 578, 9 Week. Rep. 497, 4 L. T. N. S. 199; Mills v. Harris, 104 N. C. 626, 10 S. E. 704.

The same rule was laid down in the following cases, where the contract was so defective that it could not be enforced: Rose v. Cunynghame, 10 Ves. Jr. 554; Blair v. Snodgrass, Sneed (Ky.) 1.

And also in the following cases, where the vendor's title was defective: Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 572; Re Thomas, L. R. 34 Ch. Div. 166, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 9, 55 L. T. N. S. 629.

A contract for the sale of lands does not work an equitable conversion so as to cast on the vendee the loss resulting from the burning of a building located on the premises, if the vendor's title is so defective that he cannot enforce a specific performance. Mackey v. Bowles, 98 Ga. 730, 25 S. E. 834; Calhoun v. Belden, 3 Bush, 675; Christian v. Cabell, 22 Gratt. 82.

Though the rule does not apply where the vendee has accepted the title. Palne v. Melier, 6 Ves. Jr. 349.

Where a contract could not have been specifically enforced against the vendee at the 57 L. R. A.

time of his death, his interest was not realty, and did not descend to his heirs. Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. Jr. 597.

In Frayne v. Taylor, 10 Jur. N. S. 119, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 228, 12 Week. Rep. 287, where the owner of land, after entering into a verbal contract for its sale, died intestate, and his heir executed a conveyance to the purchaser, and rendered his account as administrator in which he included the proceeds of the sale as part of the personalty, the court held that while the contract, being one which could not have been specifically enforced, did not work a conversion; yet the conduct of the heir in performing the contract and treating the proceeds as personalty amounted to an adoption of the contract by him, and the proceeds must be regarded as personalty.

Where a contract to convey land is without consideration it does not work an equitable conversion of the land; as a contract to work such a conversion, must be one which equity would have enforced. Wittingham v. Lightbipe, 46 N. J. Eq. 429, 19 Atl. 611.

In Shaw v. Wilkins, 8 Humph. 647, 49 Am. Dec. 692, where the vendor was without title, and the purchaser had commenced an action against him to recover damages, it was held, on the death of the purchaser, that the action could be reviewed by his personal representatives, as the equitable title had not passed to the purchaser.

And in Lunsford v. Jarrett, 11 Lea, 192, it was held that the equitable title did not pass to the purchaser so as to deprive the vendor's widow of dower in the premises, where, subsequent to the vendor's death, the contract was rescinded on account of a defect in his title.

In Kinney v. Hiccox, 24 Neb. 167, 38 N. W. 816, where the contract was conditional that the vendor should remove certain encumbrances then existing against the property, the court held that until that was done he was not in a position to convey nor to enforce the contract; and if a portion of the property was destroyed by fire before such conditions had been complied with, the loss must fall on him.

To bring the rule into operation, the cause which renders the contract unenforceable must apply to the contract itself, and if it is enforceable at the time of the death of the vendor his interest descends to his next of kin, and not to his heirs at law, even though the purchaser may have subsequently, by his laches, lost his

Ark. 172; Palmer v. Morrison, 104 N. Y. 132, 10 N. E. 144; Bender v. Luckenbach, 162 Pa. 22, 29 Atl. 295, 296; Sutter v. Ling, 25 Pa. 466; Miller v. Miller, 25 N. J. Eq. 354; Skinner v. Newberry, 51 Ill. 203; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706; Smith v. Gage, 41 Barb. 60; Potter v. Ellice, 48 N. Y. 323; Denham v. Cornell, 67 N. Y. 556; Compo v. Jackson Iron Co. 49 Mich. 44, 12 N. W. 901; House v. Dexter, 9 Mich. 246; Baxter v. Robinson, 11 Mich. 522; Gustin v. Union School Dist. 94 Mich. 502, 54 N. W. 156. It is clear that upon the death of the vendor the chose in action, with the security represented by the contract, became a part of the personal assets of the estate, and the interest of A. Douglas Keith therein was prospective merely, and contingent upon the course of administration. If the legal title descended to him, he held it merely by a tenure analogous to that of a "dry trustee," for such person as should become entitled to it by payment of the contract price, or by purchase upon foreclosure of the lien; and he had no interest that could be acquired by sale on execution. Battle v. Petway, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 576, 44 Am. Dec. 59; Boardman v. Willard, 73 Iowa, 20, 34 N. W. 487; Robinson v. Chapline, 9 Iowa, 91; Hollingsworth v. Trueblood, 59 Ind. 542; Cox v. Arnsmann, 76 Ind. 210; Bostick v. Keiser, 4 J. J. Marsh. 597, 20 Am. Dec. 237; Williams v. Fullerton, 20 Vt. 346; Townsend v. Barber, 27 Vt. 417; Rankin v. Barcroft, 114 Ill. 441, 3 N. E. 97; Campfield v. Johnson, 5 N. J. Eq. 245. We are of the opinion that the execution debtor, A. Douglas Keith, had no interest in the land subject to sale on execution, and that the purchaser took no title by his purchase at such sale.

The decree of the Circuit Court will be reversed, and complainant may take a decree in accordance with the prayer of his bill, with costs of both courts.

The other Justices concur.

right to compel a specific performance. Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Beav. 8, note.

So, in Keep v. Miller, 42 N. J. Eq. 100, 6 Atl. 405, the court had refused to enforce a specific performance of the contract on the ground that the heirs of the vendor, by their laches, had delayed performance for such a time as to render it inequitable to compel the vendee to take the property, its value having fallen in the meantime. The widow then brought an action to have the property resold and the proceeds distributed as personality. The court held that, the contract having been valid and originally enforceable in equity against the vendee, it worked a conversion into personality, and as between the next of kin and the heirs at law the effect of such a conversion could not be defeated to the injury of the next of kin by the laches of the heir which rendered the contract unenforceable.

IV. Time at which conversion takes place.

a. In general.

The purchaser takes an equitable title at the time of the execution of the contract, and may make a valid deed at any time thereafter. Jackson ex dem. New Loan Officers v. Bull, 1 Johns. Cas. 81.

And in Snyder v. Murdock, 51 Mo. 175, supra, the vendee's title was held to date from the time of the execution of the bond for title.

Where a tenant by curtesy executed a contract to convey land, the fee of which was in his infant children, and the contract was subsequently confirmed by the children on their arriving at age, it was held that the vendee took an equitable title which related back to the time of the execution of the contract. Hall v. Jones, 21 Md. 439.

In Richter v. Sellin, 8 Serg. & R. 425, it was held that the purchaser takes an equitable title from the date of the execution of the contract, and a judgment entered against him subsequent to the making of the contract and prior to the delivery of the deed is a lien on the premises, his title not constituting after-acquired property within the Pennsylvania rule that a judgment is not a lien on after-acquired property.

In Williams v. Haddock, 145 N. Y. 144, 39 N. E. 825, where it was held that a contract for the sale of land worked an equitable conversion from the date of its execution, and the vendor's interest passed to his personal representative.

representatives on his death, although it contained conditions precedent to the execution of a deed of conveyance, and also contained a provision giving the vendor liberty to refuse to consummate the sale if the provisions precedent were not performed, the court distinguished the case from that of Bostwick v. Frankfield, 74 N. Y. 207, supra, by saying that that case showed beyond any doubt that the intention of the parties was that the contract should not work a conversion; and that it might be said in most contracts for the sale of real estate that the performance of some act on the part of the vendee is to precede the conveyance by the vendor, and hence such performance might be a condition precedent to such conveyance; that these contracts generally provided for the payment of purchase money or some portion thereof, and upon the payment of the money the vendor is then to make the conveyance. But that provisions of this nature, found in contracts for the sale of real estate, do not, prior to any default, alter this general rule in regard to the equitable conversion of the realty into personality, so far as to prevent the ordinary result flowing from such conversion; though the court said that after the happening of the default in the performance of conditions precedent a very different case is made.

The doctrine that the vendee takes an equitable title, the vendor holding the legal title in trust for the vendee from the date of the execution of the contract, is not affected by the fact that the contract prescribes a later date for the execution of the conveyance. Atcherley v. Veron, 10 Mod. 518.

This doctrine is also applied although the money is not paid at the time of the execution of the contract. Hampson v. Edelen, 2 Harr. & J. 64, 3 Am. Dec. 530; Siter's Appeal, 28 Pa. 180; Wehn v. Fall, 55 Neb. 547, 76 N. W. 13.

In Siter's Appeal, 28 Pa. 180, where it was held that the purchaser takes an equitable title, even though the purchase money has not been paid, the premises had been sold under a judgment entered against the vendor prior to the execution of the contract. The amount realized on the sale exceeded the purchase price, and it was held that the purchaser was entitled to the surplus.

In Dunn v. Yakish, 10 Okla. 388, 61 Pac. 926, the contract stated that the vendor "has this day sold and agreed to convey" to the purchaser the land involved, but it provided that possession was not to be given or the deed executed until a later date. The court held that the equitable title passed to the purchaser at the time of the execution of the contract, and he must stand the loss resulting from fire.

And in Marks v. Tichenor, 85 Ky. 536, 4 S. W. 225, it was held that a provision in a contract for sale whereby the vendor agreed to paint the house and deliver possession at a designated day did not show an intention to postpone the vesting of the equitable title, and the vendee must stand the loss resulting from the destruction of the building by fire.

But in Gould v. Murch, 70 Me. 288, 35 Am. Rep. 325, where the vendor agreed to convey at a future date on payment of the purchase money, it was held that the equitable title did not pass until such future date, and the vendor must bear the loss resulting from fire.

In Douglas County v. Union P. R. Co. 5 Kan. 615, the question involved was whether the railroad company, having made a conditional purchase of land from the government and Indians, had acquired an equitable title so as to make it subject to taxation. The contract provided that the purchaser was not to receive a deed until the conditions were performed. One of the conditions was that the railroad company should construct 25 miles of its line within a stated period. The court held that the land was not taxable, as it was the evident intention of the vendor that the title should not pass until the conditions were performed, and that the construction of the road within the stated time was a substantial consideration for the sale, and that time was of the essence of the contract. The court also stated that a purchaser does not take an equitable title until the conditions have been so far performed that the land cannot be forfeited.

This latter statement of the court is not in accord with the weight of authority, and the case must be considered as limited in its effect to the peculiar conditions named in the contract.

And in Lombard v. Chicago Sinai Congregation, 64 Ill. 477, where the contract contained a provision making it optional with the vendor, in case of a defect in the title, to return the earnest money and declare the agreement canceled, or to make the title good, and at the time of the destruction of a portion of the premises by fire legal objection had been made to the title, and the purchaser had not received notice of the vendor's election to complete the title,—the court held that the equitable title had not passed to the purchaser, and that the loss must fall on the vendor.

And in Flower v. Cruikshank, 77 Iowa, 110, 41 N. W. 587, where the owner of land entered into an agreement with his daughter and her husband by which they were to occupy and cultivate his farm during his life and support him from the proceeds thereof, and that, in consideration of such services, he was to give his daughter an undivided one-half interest in the place, the court held that the daughter did not take an equitable interest upon the making of the contract, but would be entitled to receive that interest only when she and her husband should have performed their undertakings under it.

And in Walters v. Walters, 132 Ill. 477, 23 N. E. 1120, where a father entered into a contract with his son by which the son was to have a home on the father's farm and support therefrom for himself and family during his father's life, and was to have the farm at the death of his father, in consideration of his staying on the farm and cultivating it, and supporting his father, and paying a stated sum to his 57 L. R. A.

brothers at his father's death, it was held on the death of the son prior to that of the father that he did not take an equitable title to the farm, as he had not performed his part of the contract.

And in Smith v. Jones, 21 Utah, 270, 60 Pac. 1104, the contract was for the sale of certain mining property, and it provided for a conveyance upon the payment of the purchase money, and contained a further provision that the purchasers, who are spoken of as the parties of the second part, should not sell their interest until the contract was fully satisfied. The purchasers never performed, and subsequently abandoned the contract. The court held that they would not take an equitable title until the purchase price was fully paid, and hence the vendor was entitled to a judgment quieting his title.

All of the above decisions which hold that the equitable title does not pass until the conditions named in the contract are fully performed rest upon the construction of the particular contract involved, and merely hold that the rule that the conversion takes place at the time of the execution of the contract shall not apply so as to overrule the apparent intention of the parties.

b. Effect of vendee's failure to take possession.

In Johnston v. Jones, 12 B. Mon. 328, where, under the terms of the contract, the vendor and vendee were to have joint possession until a specified date, the building was destroyed by fire during such joint possession, and it was held that the equitable title was in the purchaser, and he must bear the loss.

In Marks v. Tichenor, 85 Ky. 536, 4 S. W. 225, it was held that the equitable title passed to the vendee, although he had not taken possession, and that he must bear the loss resulting from fire.

And in Rangler's Appeal, 3 Pa. St. 377, it was held that where the vendor died at a date prior to that fixed by the contract for the vendee to take possession the vendor's interest constituted personality.

In Harris v. King, 16 Ark. 126, where it was held that the vendee took an equitable title, he had not been in possession.

The equitable title was vested in the vendee at the time of the execution of a contract where it authorized him to take possession immediately, although he did not at that time take possession, and did not pay the purchase money, which under the contract was payable on demand. McKee v. Sterling, 48 Barb. 330.

Under a contract reciting that "the vendor has this day sold to the vendee," the purchaser took an equitable title at the time of its execution, though by its terms possession was not to be given until a later date, and the purchase money was not to be paid until that time; and the loss resulting from the burning of a building between the time of the execution of the contract and the surrendering of possession to the purchaser falls on the purchaser. Brewer v. Herbert, 30 Md. 301, 98 Am. Dec. 582.

In Marvel v. Ortlip, 3 Del. Ch. 9, the contract did not authorize the purchaser to take possession, and, although the court held that, in the absence of a provision to that effect, the purchaser was not entitled to possession, it said that he took an equitable title.

But in Phinix v. Guernsey, 111 Ga. 346, 50 L. R. A. 680, 38 S. E. 790, it was held that the rule that the vendee takes an equitable title, and will stand the loss occurring from the burning of a building located on the land involved, did not apply where the vendee had not gone into possession prior to the fire, and the vendors were not, prior to that occurrence, in a position where they could convey a good title to the vendee. The court, in deciding this case, did not pass separately on the two grounds of its decision, and it cannot be told how much weight they attached to the fact that the vendee had not taken possession, and therefore the case cannot be considered an authority against the proposition sustained by the preceding cases, as the inability of the vendor to convey a good title was sufficient to have prevented the equitable ownership from passing to the vendee. See supra, III.

c. Optional contracts.

Where the payment of the purchase money is optional, and the vendor agrees to convey if the purchase money is paid in a limited time, the contract constitutes an option of purchase, and an equitable title does not vest until the option is exercised, and it must be exercised within the limit fixed by the terms of the agreement, as time is of the essence of the contract. Stembridge v. Stembridge, 87 Ky. 91, 7 S. W. 611.

And where the owner of lands covenants with another that by making certain payments within a period named he may have an equal interest in the lands, and the latter does not agree to purchase and never makes a payment, he does not take an equitable title. Richardson v. Hardwick, 106 U. S. 252, 27 L. ed. 145, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

An option to purchase real estate does not convert it into personality until the option has been exercised. Ex parte Hardy, 30 Beav. 206.

And until the lessee exercises the option of purchase contained in his lease, he has no equitable interest which can be reached by a judgment against him. Bras v. Sheffield, 49 Kan. 702, 31 Pac. 308.

In Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, it was held that where the lessee of land under a lease containing an option to purchase at any time during the term of the lease exercises such option after the death of the lessor, it works an equitable conversion which relates back to the date of the execution of the lease, and the lessor's interest goes to his next of kin, and not to his heirs at law.

This question again arose in Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. Jr. 590, where the Lord Chancellor followed Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, supra, though he admitted that a great deal might be urged against it, but said that where there is a decision precisely in point it is better to follow it.

The Lawes Case was again followed in Collingwood v. Row, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 649, 3 Jur. N. S. 785, where precisely the same question arose. Kindersley, V. C., saying that if the question were res integra he might entertain doubts upon the subject, but that, finding the question decided by so great a judge as Lord Kindersley, and his decision followed by Lord Eldon, in Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. Jr. 590, supra, he was bound to follow it.

In Weeding v. Weeding, 1 Johns. & H. 424, where a testator, after making his will, executed a lease of a portion of the demised premises containing an option to purchase, which the lessee exercised after the testator's death, the court held that the case could not be distinguished from the Lawes Case, and followed it.

Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167 was again followed in Isaacs v. Reginald [1894] 3 Ch. 506, where the lessor died intestate and the lease made the option to purchase exercisable only after the death of the vendor. The 57 L. R. A.

court, in referring to Lawes v. Bennett, said: "It may be open to question whether [it] . . . could not have been decided otherwise than it was, but the question, decided nearly a century ago, has stood the test of time, and stands as a landmark upon this subject."

In Re Crofton, 1 Ir. Eq. Rep. 204, where there had been a lease for lives renewable forever, and containing a covenant that if the lessee should at any time pay a stated sum he should hold the premises the remainder of the term free from any rent whatsoever, it was held that upon his exercising such option after the death of the lessor the sum paid by him would constitute personality, and go to the vendor's personal representatives.

The Master of the Rolls, in rendering this decision, followed the case of Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, without comment or discussion of the principle involved.

In Re Graves, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 357, infra, the court expressed a doubt as to the correctness of the decision in the above case, saying that no English case establishes such a proposition, and it distinguished the case from Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, and the cases following that one, upon the ground that the option in those cases was to be exercised within a few years, while the option in the Crofton Case might not be exercised for several centuries, and if exercised at that remote time the purchase money would, according to the decision, become part of the personal estate of a person dying several hundred years before the payment.

But in Re Graves, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 357, where the lease provided that the purchase money was to be paid to the person who should be the owner of the estate or the rent at the time of the option, the court for this reason distinguished the case from that of Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, and held that the lessor's interest—that is, the purchase money—passed to his heirs at law, he being dead. And it will be seen from this distinction that the case is not in conflict with Lawes v. Bennett, but the decision is placed on the construction of the instrument, as, of course, there can be no equitable conversion against the express direction of the vendor.

And in Einuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 723, where, after the making of a lease, testator entered into a contract giving another an option to purchase part of the devised property, and subsequently republished his will, the court held that, considering the language of the will and the contract, coupled with the fact of the republication, the exercise of the option after the testator's death did not work an equitable conversion so as to deprive the devisee of the purchase moneys received on the sale of the land under the contract.

And where the lessee exercised, after the death of the lessor, an option to purchase contained in the lease, the court held that the devisee under a devise contained in the lessor's will, expressly devising to him the demised premises, was entitled to the purchase money due under the contract. The court placed this decision upon the express ground that the testator's will showed his intention, and that therefore the case was distinguishable from Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, of the soundness of which, the court said, it did not mean to suggest the slightest doubt. Drant v. Vause, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 580, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 170, 6 Jur. 313.

The doctrine laid down in these cases has been followed in this country in the case of Newport Waterworks v. Sisson, 18 R. I. 411, 28 Atl. 336, where it was held that the exercise of the option by the vendee after the death of the vendor relates back to the date of the execution of the lease, and the vendor's interest does not pass under a devise of the land.

But in Smith v. Loewenstein, 50 Ohio St. 346, 34 N. E. 159, it was held that where the lessee exercises an option to purchase after the death of the lessor the conversion takes place at the time that the exercise of the option is declared, and does not relate back to the time of the execution of the lease, and the lessor's interest descends to his heirs, and not to his next of kin. In so holding the court declared that the doctrine of Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, did not rest upon a firm foundation, and that there were no adjudications by that court in which the doctrine of equitable conversion, as applied to optional contracts, was given a retrospective operation, and also distinguished the Lawes Case on the ground that the lease in that case was for but seven years, and therefore likely to be exercised during the life of the lessor; while in the case in hand the lease being given for ninety-nine years with a privilege of a perpetual renewal, and therefore rendering probable the exercise of the option at a time long subsequent to the death of the lessor, it could not be presumed that he intended that a conversion should relate back so as to defeat his heirs at law, who might already be in possession.

The case of Re Adams, L. R. 27 Ch. Div. 394, 54 L. J. Ch. N. S. 87, 51 L. T. N. S. 382, 32 Week. Rep. 883, differed from Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, supra, in that the lessee, instead of the lessor, died. And the court held that the exercise of the option by his administrator did not relate back so as to work an equitable conversion; the court saying that in the Lawes Case, the owner of the realty having created the option, the contract would, as between his heirs and personal representatives, have a retrospective action, and relate back to the time that he created the option. But, as regards the death of the vendee without exercising the option, his personal representatives could not subsequently exercise it and have such exercise relate back so as to change the character of his estate as it existed at the time of his death.

The same question was involved in the following cases, where it was likewise held that on the death of the lessee without exercising the option of purchase his interest under the contract constituted personality, and passed to his personal representatives: Sutherland v. Parkins, 75 Ill. 338; Gustin v. Union School Dist. 94 Mich. 502, 54 N. W. 156; McCormick v. Stephany, 57 N. J. Eq. 257, 41 Atl. 840.

That the exercise of the option does not relate back to the date of the execution of the contract, so as to operate as an equitable conversion from that date for all purposes, is shown by the case of Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. Jr. 590, supra, where it was held that, although it worked an equitable conversion so that the lessor's interest was distributable among his next of kin, it did not deprive his heirs of the rents and profits accruing prior to the exercise of such option.

And so, in Edwards v. West, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 858, 28 Week. Rep. 507, 38 L. T. N. S. 481, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 463, where there was a lease containing an option to purchase, and before the time for exercising the option the buildings demised were burned, after which the tenant exercised his option to purchase, and claimed the insurance money, the court held against his contention on the ground that the contract could not have been specifically enforced prior to the exercise of the option, and that consequently the equitable conversion could not relate back to a time prior to such exercise of 57 L. R. A.

the option. And the court, in referring to Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, Ch. Cas. 167, supra, says, that that case had been criticized; and although the court would implicitly follow it in a case between the real and personal representatives of the person who granted the option, it did not feel at liberty to extend it to a case between the vendor and the purchaser.

In Gilbert v. Port, 28 Ohio St. 276, the same question arose, and the court there held that the lessee acquired an equitable title at the time he exercised his option, but that it did not relate back so as to entitle him to the insurance money.

But the contrary was held in People's Street R. Co. v. Spencer, 156 Pa. 85, 27 Atl. 113.

And in Williams v. Lilley, 67 Conn. 50, 37 L. R. A. 150, 34 Atl. 765, where a similar question arose, the court held that the vendee's title related back to the time of the execution of the lease, and entitled him to insurance money collected by the vendor. The court in so deciding said that the provisions of the lease were so exceptional and peculiar that the decision was largely based upon them, and should not be regarded as laying down general principles applicable to all contracts of option. The agreement involved demised to the lessee the upper floors of the building, with a grant to him of the right to purchase all of the premises, the sums paid by him by way of rent to be credited on the purchase price, he to pay all taxes and insurance and to operate the elevator and heat the entire building from the time of the execution of the lease. The provisions, the court said, made the lessee's relation to the premises as lessee subordinate and incidental to his broader relation as an inchoate or initiate purchaser thereof.

And in Caldwell v. Frazier (Kan.) 68 Pac. 1076, where the lessee exercised the option after a portion of the property had been destroyed by fire, it was held his title to the property dated from the time of the exercise of the option, and did not relate back to the date of the execution of the lease; and if he took the property he would have to take it in the condition in which it was at the time of his election to take, under the option, and he could not compel the vendor to restore the premises and convey them to him, or to convey them to him with an abatement in price equal in value to the lost improvements.

In Kerr v. Day, 14 Pa. 112, 53 Am. Dec. 526, it was held that where one in possession of land under a lease containing an option of purchase exercises the option it relates back to the date of the execution of the lease, as against an intervening purchaser from the vendor.

V. Reconversion.

Where time is of the essence of the contract the purchaser has no title after default. Petersen v. Davis, 63 Kan. 672, 66 Pac. 623.

The vendee under a land contract becomes the equitable owner of the land, although he did not pay or tender the purchase price until after the date named in the contract, unless time was of the essence of the contract. King v. Ruckman, 21 N. J. Eq. 599.

In Davis v. Vass, 47 W. Va. 811, 35 S. E. 826, where the vendee, who was in possession, had defaulted in paying the purchase price and the vendor had subsequently sold the land to the vendee's wife by contract, allowing her the amount that had already been paid by her husband on his contract, it was held that the husband, not having surrendered possession, held the equitable title to the land which was subject to a lien of a judgment which had been entered against him.

But in Williams v. Haddock, 145 N. Y. 144, 89 N. E. 825, where the court held that a land contract works a conversion from the date of its execution, although by reason of a condition precedent the legal conveyance was not to be made until the performance of the condition, the court said that a failure to perform the condition would work a reconversion from the date of the default.

And where a purchaser fails to perform the contract on his part, and it is forfeited, the vendor's interest again becomes realty, and his devisee takes it discharged from the equitable rights of the purchaser. McCarty v. Myers, 5 Hun, 83.

The vendee's equitable estate which he acquires by his entry under a contract of purchase is defeated by his refusal to comply with the terms of the contract, and he becomes a trespasser, and the vendor may maintain ejectment. Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238.

And in Thorne v. Hammond, 46 Cal. 532, where the defendant had been in default for more than two years, and had unqualifiedly refused to perform, it was held that he had lost his equitable title, and could not set up the contract as a defense to an action of ejectment.

Whether or not a purchaser's interest under a land contract constitutes realty so as to descend to his heirs must be determined from the situation of things at the time of his death, for nothing happening subsequently can alter the rights of his real and personal representatives. Garnett v. Acton, 28 Beav. 333.

Where the vendor's widow, who is entitled to his personality, surrenders the purchase-money notes to the purchaser in consideration of his transfer of the bond for title to her, she does not thereby work a reconversion so as to entitle the heirs to retain the realty, but she may compel them to convey to her. Fuller v. Bradley, 160 Ill. 51, 43 N. E. 732.

A similar question was involved in Lelper's Appeal, 85 Pa. 420, 78 Am. Dec. 347, where, after the death of the vendor, the purchaser made default and forfeited the property. It was held that the forfeiture did not work a reconversion, and that the property went to the vendor's personal representatives. This was on the ground that the personal representatives, being entitled to the purchase money, were also entitled to the realty forfeited in lieu of it.

And in Tate v. Conner, 17 N. C. (2 Dev. Eq.) 224, it was held that the rescission of the contract by the vendor after the death of the vendee did not work a reconversion so as to entitle the personal representatives of the vendee to recover the purchase money paid by him. The court said that the heir was entitled to the land, and if she could not get that she was entitled to the purchase money in lieu of it.

And in Young v. Young, 81 N. C. 91, it was also held that when the contract is rescinded after the death of the vendee the right of action to recover the purchase money paid goes to his heirs.

But in Lauffer v. Ashley, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 748, it was held by a divided court that where the vendor rescinds after the death of the vendee the cause of action to recover the purchase money paid by him is in the personal representatives.

And where, under the provisions of the contract, the vendor was authorized to declare it forfeited on the failure of the vendee to pay the purchase price within the stipulated time, and he dies in default, his interest is not realty. Loddell v. Hayes, 4 Allen, 187.

Where one holding land as trustee executed a contract of sale which provided that he might rescind it on the default of the purchaser, a subsequent rescission by him operated as a reconversion of his estate, and the interest of the cestui que trust, who had died prior to the rescission, constituted realty. Lelper v. Irvine, 26 Pa. 54.

VI. Application of doctrine in actions at law.

